27. On 25th December, 2012, at 1:00 p.m., P.W. 30, Shri Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate, went to the hospital to record the dying declaration of the prosecutrix. The attending doctors opined that the prosecutrix was not in a position to speak but she was otherwise conscious and responded by way of gestures. Accordingly, P.W. 30 put questions in such a manner as to enable her to narrate the incident by way of gestures or writing. Her statement, Ex. P.W. 30/D, was recorded by P.W. 30 in the form of dying declaration by putting her questions in the nature of multiple choice questions. The prosecutrix gave her statement/dying declaration through gestures and writings, Exhibit P.W. 30/D, the contents of which will be discussed later.

28. At this juncture, the cure looked quite distant. The health condition was examined on 26th December 2012 by a team of doctors comprising of Dr. Sandeep Bansal, Cardiologist, Dr. Raj Kumar Chejara, Dr. Sunil Kumar, Dr. Arun Batra and Dr. P.K. Verma and since the condition of the prosecutrix was critical, it was decided that she be shifted abroad for further treatment and fostering oasis of hope on 27th December, 2012, she was shifted to Mt. Elizabeth Hospital, Singapore, for her further treatment. The hope and expiration became a visible mirage as the prosecutrix died on 29th December, 2012 at Mt. Elizabeth Hospital, Singapore. Dr. Paul Chui, P.W. 34, Forensic Pathologist, Health Sciences Authority, Singapore, deposed that her exact time of death was 4:45 a.m. on 29th December, 2012. The death occurred at Mt. Elizabeth Hospital and the cause of her death was sepsis with multiple organ failure following multiple injuries. The original post mortem report is Ex. P.W. 34/A and its scanned copy is Ex. P.W. 34/B; the Toxicology Report dated 4th January, 2013 is Exhibit P.W. 34/C. In the post- mortem report, Ex. P.W. 34/A, besides other serious injuries, various bite marks have been observed on her face, lips, jaw, rear ear, on the right and left breasts, left upper arm, right lower limb, right upper inner thigh (groin), right lower thigh, left thigh lateral and left leg lower anterior.

29. It is apt to note here that during the course of investigation (keeping in mind that the vehicle was identified), the investigating agency went around to collect the electronic evidence. A CCTV footage produced by P.W. 25, Rajender Singh Bisht, in a CD, Ex. P.W. 25/C- 1 and P.W. 25/C- 2, and the photographs, Ex. P.W. 25/B- 1 to Ex. P.W. 25/B- 7, were collected from the Mall, Select City Walk, Saket to ascertain the presence of P.W. 1 and the prosecutrix at the Mall. The certificate Under Section 65- B of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 (for short, "Evidence Act") with respect to the said footage is proved by P.W. 26, Shri Sandeep Singh, vide Ex. P.W. 26/A. Another important evidence is the CCTV footage of Hotel Delhi 37 situated near the dumping spot. The said footage showed a bus matching the description given by the informant at 9:34 p.m. and again at 9:53 p.m. The said bus had the word "Yadav" written on one side. Its exterior was of white colour having yellow and green stripes and its front tyre on the left side did not have a wheel cap. The description of the bus was affirmed by P.W. 1's statement. The CCTV footage stored in the pen drive, Ex. P- 67/1, and the CD, Ex. P- 67/2, were seized by the I.O. vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 67/A from P.W. 67, Pramod Kumar Jha, the owner of Hotel Delhi 37. The same were identified by P.W. 67, Pramod Jha, P.W. 74, SI Subhash, and P.W. 76, Gautam Roy, from CFSL during their examination in Court. P.W. 78, SHO, Inspector Anil Sharma, had testified that the said CCTV footage seized vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 67/A was sent to the CFSL through S.I. Sushil Sawaria and P.W. 77, the MHC(M). Thereafter, on 01.01.2013, the report of the CFSL was received.

30. As the prosecution story would further undrape, in the course of investigation, the test identification parade was carried out. We shall advert to the same at a later stage.

31. We had indicated in the beginning that the investigating team had taken aid of modern methods to strengthen its case. The process undertaken, the method adopted and the results are severely criticized by the learned Counsel for the Appellants to which we shall later on revert to but presently to the steps taken by the investigating agency during investigation. With the intention to cover the case from all possible spheres and to establish the allegations with the proof of conclusivity and not to give any chance of doubt, the prosecution thought that it was its primary duty to ascertain the identity of the accused persons; and for the said purpose, it carried out DNA analysis and fingerprint and bite mark analysis.

Collection of samples and identity of accused persons

32. The blood sample of the informant was collected by Dr. Kamran Faisal, P.W. 15, Safdarjung Hospital, on 25.12.2012 and was handed over to SI Pratibha Sharma, P.W. 80, vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 15/A by Constable Suresh Kumar, P.W. 42. Similarly, as mentioned earlier, P.W. 49, Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, had collected certain samples from the person of the prosecutrix which are reflected in Ex. P.W. 49/A from point B to B. All the samples were collected by Inspector Raj Kumari, P.W. 59, vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 59/A and were handed over to P.W. 80, SI Pratibha Sharma, at Safdarjung Hospital in the morning of 17.12.2012. Also the samples of gangrenous bowels of the prosecutrix were taken on 24.12.2012 and were handed over to SI Gajender Singh, P.W. 55, who seized the same vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 11/A. All the samples were deposited with the MHC(M) and were not tampered with in any manner. A specimen of scalp hair of the prosecutrix was also taken on 24.12.2012 by Dr. Ranju Gandhi, P.W. 29, and was handed over to P.W. 80, SI Pratibha Sharma, vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 29/A.

33. The accused were also subjected to medical examination and samples were taken from their person which were sent for DNA analysis.

34. DNA analysis was done at the behest of P.W. 45, Dr. B.K. Mohapatra, Sr. Scientific Officer, Biology, CFSL, CBI, and Biological Examination and DNA profiling reports were prepared which are exhibited as Ex. P.W. 45/A- C. The report, after analysing the DNA profiles generated from the known samples of the prosecutrix, the informant, and each of the accused, concluded that:

An analysis of the above shows that the samples were authentic and established the identities of the persons mentioned above beyond reasonable doubt.

35. On 17.12.2012 and 18.12.2012, a team of experts from the CFSL went to Thyagraj Stadium and lifted chance prints from the bus in question, Ex. P- 1. On 28.12.2012, P.W. 78, Inspector Anil Sharma of P.S. Vasant Vihar, the then S.H.O. of Police Station Vasant Vihar, requested the Director, CFSL, for taking digital palm prints and foot prints of all the accused persons vide his letter Ex. P.W. 46/C. Pursuant to the said request made by P.W. 78, Inspector Anil Sharma, the CFSL, on 31.12.2012, took the finger/palm prints and foot prints of the accused persons at Tihar Jail. After comparing the chance prints lifted from the bus with the finger prints/palm prints and foot prints of all the accused persons, P.W. 46, Shri A.D. Shah, Senior Scientific Officer (Finger Prints), CFSL, CBI submitted his report Ex. P.W. 46/D. In the report, the chance prints of accused Vinay Sharma were found to have matched with those on the bus in question.

36. Bite mark analysis was also undertaken by the investigative team to establish the identity and involvement of the accused persons. P.W. 66, Asghar Hussain, on the instructions of the I.O., S.I. Pratibha Sharma, had taken 10 photographs of different parts of the body of the prosecutrix at SJ Hospital on 20.12.2012 between 4:30 p.m. and 5:00 p.m. which were marked as Ex. P.W. 66/B (Colly.) [10 photographs of 5" x 7" each] and Ex. P.W. 66/C (Colly.) [10 photographs of 8" x 12" each]. P.W. 66 also proved in Court the certificate provided by him in terms of Section 65- B of the Evidence Act in respect of the photographs, Ex. P.W. 66/A. Thereafter, P.W. 18, SI Vishal Choudhary, collected the photographs and the dental models from Safdarjung Hospital on 01.01.2013 and duly deposited the same in the malkhana after he, P.W. 18, had handed them over to the S.H.O. Anil Sharma, P.W. 78. The same were later entrusted to S.I. Vishal Choudhary, P.W. 18 on 02.01.2013, which is proved vide RC No. 183/21/12 and exhibited as Ex. P.W. 77/V. P.W. 71, Dr. Ashith B. Acharya, submitted the final report in this regard which is exhibited as Ex. P.W. 71/C. In the said report, he has concluded that at least three bite marks were caused by accused Ram Singh whereas one bite mark has been identified to have been most likely caused by accused Akshay.

37. It is seemly to note here that on completion of the investigation, the chargesheet came to be filed on 03.01.2013 Under Section 365/376(2)(g)/377/307/395/397/302/396/412/201/120/34 Indian Penal Code and supplementary chargesheet was filed on 04.02.2013.

38. After the case was committed to the Court of Session, all the accused were charged for the following offences:

1. Under Section 120B Indian Penal Code;

2. Under Sections 365/366/307/376(2)(g) Indian Penal Code/377 Indian Penal Code read with Section 120- B Indian Penal Code;

3. Under Section 396 Indian Penal Code read with Section 120- B Indian Penal Code and/or;

During the course of trial, accused Ram Singh committed suicide and the proceedings qua him stood abated vide order dated 12.10.2013.

39. It is worthy to mention here that in order to bring home the charge, the prosecution initially examined 82 witnesses and thereafter, the statements of the accused persons were recorded and they abjured their guilt. Accused Pawan Gupta @ Kaalu examined Lal Chand, DW- 1, Heera Lal, DW- 2, Ram Charan, DW- 3, Gyan Chand, DW- 4, and Hari Kishan Sharma, DW- 16, in support of his plea. Accused Vinay Sharma examined Smt. Champa Devi, DW- 5, Hari Ram Sharma, DW- 6, Kishore Kumar Bhat, DW- 7, Sri Kant, DW- 8, Manu Sharma, DW- 9, Ram Babu, DW- 10, and Dinesh, DW- 17, to establish his stand. Accused Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur examined Chavinder, DW- 11, Sarju Singh, DW- 12, Raj Mohan Singh, DW- 13, Punita Devi, DW- 14, and Sarita Devi, DW- 15. As the factual matrix would reveal, subsequently three more prosecution witnesses were examined and on behalf of the defence, two witnesses were examined.

40. Learned Sessions Judge, vide judgment dated 10.09.2013, convicted all the accused persons, namely, Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur, Vinay Sharma, Mukesh and Pawan Gupta @ Kaalu Under Section 120B Indian Penal Code for the offence of criminal conspiracy; Under Section 365/366 Indian Penal Code read with Section 120B Indian Penal Code for abducting the victims with an intention to force the prosecutrix to illicit intercourse; Under Section 307 Indian Penal Code read with Section 120B Indian Penal Code for attempting to kill P.W. 1, the informant; Under Section 376(2)(g) Indian Penal Code for committing gang rape with the prosecutrix in pursuance of their conspiracy; Under Section 377 Indian Penal Code read with Section 120B Indian Penal Code for committing unnatural offence with the prosecutrix; Under Section 302 Indian Penal Code read with Section 120B Indian Penal Code for committing murder of the helpless prosecutrix; Under Section 395 Indian Penal Code for conjointly committing dacoity in pursuance of the aforesaid conspiracy; Under Section 397 Indian Penal Code read with Section

120B Indian Penal Code for the use of iron rods and for attempting to kill P.W. 1 at the time of committing robbery; Under Section 201 Indian Penal Code read with Section 120B Indian Penal Code for destroying of evidence and Under Section 412 Indian Penal Code for the offence of being individually found in possession of the stolen property which they all knew was a stolen booty of dacoity committed by them.

41. After recording the conviction, as aforesaid, the learned trial Judge imposed the sentence, which we reproduce:

(a) The convicts, namely, convict Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur, convict Mukesh, convict Vinay Sharma and convict Pawan Gupta @ Kaalu are sentenced to death for offence punishable Under Section 302 Indian Penal Code. Accordingly, the convicts to be hanged by neck till they are dead. 42. Be it noted, the learned trial Judge directed the sentences Under Sections 120B/365/366/376(2)(g)/377/201/395/397/412 Indian Penal Code to run concurrently and that the benefit Under Section 428 Code of Criminal Procedure would be given wherever applicable. He further recommended that appropriate compensation Under Section 357A Code of Criminal Procedure be awarded to the legal heirs of the prosecutrix and, accordingly, sent a copy of the order to the Secretary, Delhi Legal Services Authority, New Delhi, for deciding the quantum of compensation to be awarded under the scheme referred to in Sub- section (1) of Section 357A Code of Criminal Procedure. That apart, as death penalty was imposed, he referred the matter to the High Court for confirmation Under Section 366 Code of Criminal Procedure.

The view of the High court

43. The High Court, vide judgment dated 13.03.2014, affirmed the conviction and confirmed the death penalty imposed upon the accused by expressing the opinion that under the facts and circumstances of the case, imposition of death penalty awarded by the trial court deserved to be confirmed in respect of all the four convicts. As the death penalty was confirmed, the appeals preferred by the accused faced the inevitable result, that is, dismissal.

Commencement of hearing and delineation of contentions

44. As we had stated earlier, the grievance relating to the lodging of FIR and the manner in which it has been registered has been seriously commented upon and criticized by the learned Counsel for the Appellants. Mr. Sharma, learned Counsel for the Appellants - Mukesh and Pawan Kumar Gupta, and Mr. Singh, learned Counsel for the Appellants - Vinay Sharma and Akshay Kumar Singh, have stressed with all the conviction at their command that when a matter of confirmation of death penalty is assailed before this Court, it is the duty of this Court to see every aspect in detail and not to treat it as an ordinary appeal.

45. As the argument commenced with the said note, we thought it appropriate to grant liberty to the learned Counsel for the Appellants to challenge the conviction and the imposition of death sentence from all aspects and counts and to dissect the evidence and project the irregularities in arrest and investigation. Learned Counsel for the parties argued the matter for considerable length of time and hence, we shall deal with every aspect in detail.

Delayed registration of FIR

46. The attack commences with the registration of FIR and, therefore, we shall delve into the same in detail. P.W. 57, ASI Kapil Singh, the Duty Officer at P.S. Vasant Vihar, New Delhi, on the intervening night of 16/17.12.2012, received information about the incident. He lodged DD No. 6- A, Ex. P.W. 57/A, and passed on the said DD to P.W. 74, SI Subhash Chand, who was on emergency duty that night at P.S. Vasant Vihar. Immediately thereafter, P.W. 57, ASI Kapil Singh, received yet another information qua admission of the prosecutrix and of the informant in Safdarjung Hospital and he lodged DD No. 7- A, Ex. P.W. 57/B, and also passed on the said DD to SI Subhash Chand.

47. P.W. 74, SI Subhash Chand, then left for Safdarjung Hospital where he met P.W. 59, Inspector Raj Kumari, and P.W. 62, SI Mahesh Bhargava. P.W. 59, Inspector Raj Kumari, handed over to him the MLC and the exhibits concerning the prosecutrix as given to her by the treating doctor and P.W. 62, SI Mahesh Bhargava, handed over to him the MLC of the informant. P.W. 74, SI Subhash Chand, then recorded the statement, Ex. P.W. 1/A, of the informant at 1:30 a.m. on 17.12.2012 and made his endorsement, Ex. P.W. 74/A, on it and he gave the rukka to P.W. 65, Ct. Kripal Singh, for being taken to P.S. Vasant Vihar, New Delhi and to get the FIR registered. P.W. 65, Ct. Kripal Singh, then went to P.S. Vasant Vihar, New Delhi and at 5:40 a.m. and gave the rukka to P.W. 57, ASI Kapil Singh, the Duty Officer, who, in turn, recorded the FIR, Ex. P.W. 57/D, made endorsement, Ex. P.W. 57/E, on the rukka and returned it to P.W. 65, Ct. Kripal Singh, who then handed it to P.W. 80, SI Pratibha Sharma, at P.S. Vasant Vihar to whom the investigation was entrusted.

48. SI Subhash Chand, P.W. 74, deposed that the statement of the informant might have been recorded around 3:45 a.m. although P.W. 1 deposed that his statement was recorded at 5:30 a.m. It was submitted that the original statement was recorded by HC Ram Chander, P.W. 73, and the investigation process had already begun around 1:15 a.m. and the subsequent information from the informant which is stated to be the first information was, in fact, crafted after the investigating agency decided on a course of action. It is submitted by the learned Counsel for the Appellants that the delay in the FIR raises serious doubts.

49. Delay in setting the law into motion by lodging of complaint in court or FIR at police station is normally viewed by courts with suspicion because there is possibility of concoction of evidence against an accused. Therefore, it becomes necessary for the prosecution to satisfactorily explain the delay. Whether the delay is so long as to throw a cloud of suspicion on the case of the prosecution would depend upon a variety of factors. Even a long delay can be condoned if the informant has no motive for implicating the accused.

50. In the present case, after the occurrence, the prosecutrix and P.W. 1 were admitted to the hospital at 11:05 p.m.; the victim was admitted in the Gynaecology Ward and P.W. 1, the informant, in the casualty ward. P.W. 74, SI Subhash Chand, recorded the statement of P.W. 1 at 3:45 a.m. After P.W. 1 and the prosecutrix were taken to the hospital for treatment, the statement of P.W. 1 was recorded by P.W. 74, SI Subhash Chand, at 1:37 a.m. and the same was handed over to P.W. 65, Constable Kripal Singh, to P.W. 57, Kapil Singh. In the initial stages, the intention of all concerned must have been to save the victim by giving her proper medical treatment. Even assuming for the sake of argument that there is delay, the same is in consonance with natural human conduct.

51. In this case, there is no delay in the registration of FIR. The sequence of events are natural and in the present case, after the occurrence, the victim and P.W. 1 were thrown out of the bus at Mahipalpur in semi- naked condition and were rescued by P.W. 72, Raj Kumar, and P.W. 70, Ram Pal, both EGIS Infra Management India (P) Limited employees. The victim was seriously injured and was in a critical condition and it has to be treated as a natural conduct that giving medical treatment to her was of prime importance. The admission of P.W. 1 and the victim in the hospital and the completion of procedure must have taken some time. P.W. 1 himself was injured and was admitted to the hospital at 11:05 p.m. No delay can be said to have been caused in examining P.W. 1, the informant.

52. In the context of belated FIR, we may usefully refer to certain authorities in the field. In Ram Jag and Ors. v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0150/1973 : (1974) 4 SCC 201 : AIR 1974 SC 606, it was held as that witnesses cannot be called upon to explain every hour's delay and a commonsense view has to be taken in ascertaining whether the first information report was lodged after an undue delay so as to afford enough scope for manipulating evidence. Whether the delay is so long as to throw a cloud of suspicion on the seeds of the prosecution case must depend upon a variety of factors which would vary from case to case. Even a long delay in filing report of an occurrence can be condoned if the witnesses on whose evidence the prosecution relies have no motive for implicating the accused. On the other hand, prompt filing of the report is not an unmistakable guarantee of the truthfulness of the version of the prosecution.

53. In State of Himachal Pradesh v. Rakesh Kumar MANU/SC/0901/2009 : (2009) 6 SCC 308, the Court repelled the submission pertaining to delay in lodging of the FIR on the ground that the first endeavour is always to take the person to the hospital immediately so as to provide him medical treatment and only thereafter report the incident to the police. The Court in the said case further held that every minute was precious and, therefore, it is natural that the witnesses accompanying the deceased first tried to take him to the hospital so as to enable him to get immediate medical treatment. Such action was definitely in accordance with normal human conduct and psychology. When their efforts failed and the deceased died they immediately reported the incident to the police. The Court, under the said circumstances ruled that in fact, it was a case of quick reporting to the police.

Judged on the anvil of the aforesaid decisions, we have no hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that there was no delay in lodging of the FIR.

Non- mentioning of assailants in the FIR

54. An argument was advanced assailing the FIR to the effect that the FIR does not contain: (i) the names of the assailants either in the MLC, Ex. P.W. 51/A, or in the complaint, Ex. P.W. 1/A, (ii) the description of the bus and (iii) the use of iron rods.

55. As far as the argument that the FIR does not contain the names of all the accused persons is concerned, it has to be kept in mind that it is settled law that FIR is not an encyclopedia of facts and it is not expected from a victim to give details of the incident either in the FIR or in the brief history given to the doctors. FIR is not an encyclopedia which is expected to contain all the details of the prosecution case; it may be sufficient if the broad facts of the prosecution case alone appear. If any overt act is attributed to a particular accused among the assailants, it must be given greater assurance. In this context, reference to certain authorities would be fruitful.

56. In Rattan Singh v. State of H.P. MANU/SC/0177/1997 : (1997) 4 SCC 161, the Court, while repelling the submission for accepting the view of the trial court took note of the fact that there had been omission of the details and observed that the criminal courts should not be fastidious with mere omissions in the first information statement since such statements can neither be expected to be a chronicle of every detail of what happened nor expected to contain an exhaustive catalogue of the events which took place. The person who furnishes the first information to the authorities might be fresh with the facts but he need not necessarily have the skill or ability to reproduce details of the entire story without anything missing therefrom. Some may miss even important details in a narration. Quite often, the police officer, who takes down the first information, would record what the informant conveys to him without resorting to any elicitatory exercise. It is voluntary narrative of the informant without interrogation which usually goes into such statement and hence, any omission therein has to be considered along with the other evidence to determine whether the fact so omitted never happened at all. The Court also referred to the principles stated in Pedda Narayana v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/0182/1975 : (1975) 4 SCC 153; Sone Lal v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0170/1978 : (1978) 4 SCC 302; Gurnam Kaur v. Bakshish Singh MANU/SC/0125/1980 : 1980 Supp SCC 567.

57. In State of Uttar Pradesh v. Naresh and Ors. MANU/SC/0228/2011 : (2011) 4 SCC 324, reiterating the principle, the Court opined that it is settled legal proposition that FIR is not an encyclopedia of the entire case. It may not and need not contain all the details. Naming of the accused therein may be important but not naming of the accused in FIR may not be a ground to doubt the contents thereof in case the statement of the witness is found to be trustworthy. The court has to determine after examining the entire factual scenario whether a person has participated in the crime or has been falsely implicated. The informant fully acquainted with the facts may lack necessary skill or ability to reproduce details of the entire incident without anything missing from the same. Some people may miss even the most important details in narration. Therefore, in case the informant fails to name a particular accused in the FIR, this ground alone cannot tilt the balance of the case in favour of the accused. For the aforesaid purpose reliance was placed upon Rotash v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/8747/2006 : (2006) 12 SCC 64 and Ranjit Singh v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0924/2010 : (2011) 4 SCC 336.

58. In Rotash (supra) this Court while dealing with the omission of naming an accused in the FIR opined that:

14. ...We, however, although did not intend to ignore the importance of naming of an accused in the first information report, but herein we have seen that he had been named in the earliest possible opportunity. Even assuming that PW 1 did not name him in the first information report, we do not find any reason to disbelieve the statement of Mooli Devi, PW 6. The question is as to whether a person was implicated by way of an afterthought or not must be judged having regard to the entire factual scenario obtaining in the case. PW 6 received as many as four injuries.

59. While dealing with a similar issue in Animireddy Venkata Ramana v. Public Prosecutor MANU/SC/7294/2008 : (2008) 5 SCC 368, the Court held as under:

13. ...While considering the effect of some omissions in the first information report on the part of the informant, a court cannot fail to take into consideration the probable physical and mental condition of the first informant. One of the important factors which may weigh with the court is as to whether there was a possibility of false implication of the Appellants. Only with a view to test the veracity of the correctness of the contents of the report, the court applies certain well-known principles of caution.

Thus, apart from other aspects what is required to be scrutinized is that there is no attempt for false implication, application of principle of caution and evaluation of the testimonies of the witnesses as regards their trustworthiness.

60. In view of the aforesaid settled position of law, we are not disposed to accept the contention that omission in the first statement of the informant is fatal to the case. We are disposed to think so, for the omission has to be considered in the backdrop of the entire factual scenario, the materials brought on record and objective weighing of the circumstances. The impact of the omission, as is discernible from the authorities, has to be adjudged in the totality of the circumstances and the veracity of the evidence. The involvement of the accused persons cannot be determined solely on the basis of what has been mentioned in the FIR.

61. In his statement recorded in the early hours of 17.12.2012, P.W. 1 stated about going to the Select City Walk Mall, Saket alongwith the prosecutrix and boarding the bus. He has also stated about the presence of four persons sitting in the cabin of the bus and two boys sitting behind the cabin and clearly stated about the overt act. He has broadly made reference to the accused persons and also to the overt acts. There are no indications of fabrication in Ex. P.W. 1/A.

62. The victim and P.W. 1 were thrown out of the bus and after some time they were admitted to the hospital. Both the injuries on P.W. 1's person and the gruesome acts against the victim must have put him in a traumatic condition and it would not have been possible for him to recall and narrate the entire incident to the police at one instance. It cannot be said that merely because the names of the accused persons are not mentioned in the FIR, it raises serious doubts about the prosecution case.

Appreciation of the evidence of P.W. 1

63. Having dealt with the contention of delay in lodging of the FIR and omission of names in the FIR on the basis of the first statement of P.W. 1, we may now proceed to appreciate the evidentiary value to be attached to the testimony of P.W. 1 and the contentions advanced in this regard.

64. As per the evidence of P.W. 1, he alongwith the prosecutrix, on the fateful day about 3:30 p.m., took an auto from Dwarka, New Delhi to Select City Walk Mall, Saket, New Delhi, where they watched a movie till about 8:30 p.m. and, thereafter, left the Mall. As they could not get an auto for Dwarka, they hired an auto for Munirka intending to take a bus (route No. 764) thereon. About 9:00 p.m. when they reached Munirka bus stand they boarded a white colour chartered bus and JCL was calling for commuters to Dwarka/Palam Mod. While boarding the bus, P.W. 1 noted that the bus had "Yadav" written on its side; had yellow and green lines/stripes; the entry gate was ahead of its front left tyre; and its front tyre was without a wheel cover. After boarding, he saw that besides the boy (JCL) who was calling for passengers and the driver, two other persons were sitting in the driver's cabin and two persons were seated inside the bus on either side of the aisle. After the bus left the Munirka bus stand, the lights inside the bus were turned off. Then accused Ram Singh, accused Akshay Thakur and the JCL (all three identified later) came towards P.W. 1 and verbally and physically assaulted him. When P.W. 1 resisted them, accused Vinay and accused Pawan were called along with iron rods and all the accused persons started hitting P.W. 1 with the iron rods. When the prosecutrix attempted to call for help, P.W. 1 and the prosecutrix were robbed of their possessions.

65. P.W. 1 was immobilized by accused Vinay and accused Pawan Kumar; while others, viz., accused Ram Singh, Akshay and the JCL took the prosecutrix to the rear side of the bus whereafter P.W. 1 heard the prosecutrix shout out "chod do, bachao" and her cry. After the above, three accused committed the heinous act of raping the prosecutrix, accused Vinay and Pawan then went to the rear side of the bus while the other three pinned down P.W. 1. Thereafter, accused Mukesh (originally driving the bus) hit P.W. 1 with the rod and went to the rear side of the bus. P.W. 1 also heard one of the accused saying "mar gayee, mar gayee". After the incident, P.W. 1 and the prosecutrix were dragged to the front door (because the rear door was jammed) and were pushed out of the moving bus opposite Hotel Delhi 37. After being thrown outside, the bus was turned in such a manner as to crush both of them but P.W. 1 pulled the prosecutrix and himself out of the reach of the wheels of the bus and saved their lives.

66. The statement of the informant, P.W. 1, was recorded by P.W. 74 in the early hours of 17.12.12 and Ex. P.W. 1/A is the complaint. In his chief examination, P.W. 74 deposes that he had given the complaint (rukka) to Ct. Kripal Singh and sent him to the police station at 5:10 a.m. which thereby leaves the time of recording the informant's statement inconclusive. Even if the version of P.W. 74 was to be relied upon and the informant's statement had been recorded by 5:10 a.m., DD entry which forms Ex. P.W. 57/C records that till 5:30 a.m., no punishable offence has been reported to have occurred and information of well- being had been recorded despite the fact that previous DD entries had been recorded on the basis of telephonic conversations between police officers at the hospital, the scene of crime and the control room (both DD entries 6A and 7A had been recorded on the basis of phone conversations). The first supplementary statement was recorded around 7:30 a.m., on 17.12.2012 specifically with respect to the bus in question. In this statement, Ex. P.W. 80/D1, P.W. 1 merely gives a generic description of the bus. However, unlike in Ex. P.W. 1/A, in his supplementary statement, the informant states that the bus was white in colour with stripes of yellow and green, that there were 3 x 2 seats and that if he remembered anything else, he would reveal the same. At this time, the investigating agency had neither seized the bus nor arrested the accused; the statement of the informant is, therefore, silent on specific details about the same. PW's second supplementary statement, Ex. P.W. 80/D3, was recorded around noon on 17.12.2012 in which the informant, for the first time since the time of the incident, revealed details about the bus in which the crime allegedly occurred (that there was the word "Yadav" written on the side, that the front wheel cover was missing), and also revealed the names of the accused (Ram Singh, one Thakur, one Mukesh/Ramesh, Vinay and Pawan).

67. The learned amicus curiae, Mr. Hegde, submitted that at every stage, P.W. 1 made improvement in his statements. It was submitted that when P.W. 1 was confronted with the omissions Ex. P.W. 1/A, Ex. P.W. 8/D1 and Ex. P.W. 80/D3, he stated that he was unable to talk at the time of recording of his statement due to injury to the tongue. It was submitted that as per Ex. P.W. 51/A, he sustained only simple injury and it does not state that P.W. 1 suffered injury to his tongue. It was further contended that the process of improving and embellishing the informant's statement did not end with recording his statement Under Section 161 Code of Criminal Procedure. On 19.12.2012, the informant made a statement Under Section 164 Code of Criminal Procedure before the Metropolitan Magistrate, Saket Courts. This statement is the most comprehensive and contains details which had been discovered by the prosecution by then such as the names of all the accused (including the name of the JCL for the first time) and details from inside the bus (colour of the seats and curtains). It was contended that the improved version of P.W. 1 renders his evidence unreliable and merely because he is an injured witness, his evidence cannot be accepted.

68. It is urged by Mr. Hegde, learned amicus curiae, that inconsistencies and omissions amounting to contradiction in the testimony of P.W. 1 make him an untrustworthy and unreliable witness. The inconsistencies pointed out by the learned amicus curiae pertain to the number of assailants, the description of the bus and the identity of the accused. As regards the omission, it is contended by him that the said witness had not mentioned about the alleged use of rod in the FIR. He has further submitted that though he has stated that he had been assaulted by the iron rods as per his subsequent statement, yet the said statement is wholly unacceptable since he had sustained only simple injuries.

69. Mr. Hegde, in his further criticism of the evidence of P.W. 1, has put forth that the effort of the prosecution had been to highlight the consistencies instead of explaining the inconsistencies. That apart, submits Mr. Hegde, that the witness has revealed the story step by step including the gradual recognition of the identity of the accused in tandem with the process of investigation and in such a situation, his testimony has to be looked with suspicion.

70. Mr. Sharma, learned Counsel for the Appellants- Mukesh and Pawan Kumar Gupta, and Mr. Singh, learned Counsel for the Appellants - Vinay Sharma and Akshay Kumar Singh, submit that the omissions in the statement of P.W. 1 amount to contradictions in material particulars and such contradictions go to the root of the case and, in fact, materially affect the trial or the very case of the prosecution. Therefore, they submit that the testimony of P.W. 1, who is treated as a star witness, is liable to be discredited. Reliance has been placed on the authorities in State Represented by Inspector of Police v. Saravanan and Anr. MANU/SC/8113/2008 : (2008) 17 SCC 587 : AIR 2009 SC 152, Arumugam v. State Represented by Inspector of Police, Tamil Nadu MANU/SC/8108/2008 : (2008) 15 SCC 590 : AIR 2009 SC 331, Mahendra Pratap Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0279/2009 : (2009) 11 SCC 334 and Sunil Kumar Sambhudayal Gupta (Dr.) and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0947/2010 : (2010) 13 SCC 657 : JT 2010 (12) SC 287.

71. The authorities that have been commended by Mr. Sharma need to be appositely understood. In Arumugam (supra), the Court was dealing with the issue of acceptance of the version of interested witnesses. It has referred to Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0031/1953 : AIR 1953 SC 364, State of Punjab v. Jagir Singh, Baljit Singh and Karam Singh MANU/SC/0193/1973 : (1974) 3 SCC 277, Lehna v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0075/2002 : (2002) 3 SCC 76, Gangadhar Behera and Ors. v. State of Orissa MANU/SC/0875/2002 : (2002) 8 SCC 381 and State of Rajasthan v. Kalki and Anr. MANU/SC/0254/1981 : (1981) 2 SCC 752 and opined that while normal discrepancies do not corrode the credibility of a party's case, material discrepancies do so.

72. In Saravanan (supra), reiterating the principle, the Court held:

18. ...it has been said time and again by this Court that while appreciating the evidence of a witness, minor discrepancies on trivial matters without affecting the core of the prosecution case, ought not to prompt the court to reject evidence in its entirety. Further, on the general tenor of the evidence given by the witness, the trial court upon appreciation of evidence forms an opinion about the credibility thereof, in the normal circumstances the appellate court would not be justified to review it once again without justifiable reasons. It is the totality of the situation, which has to be taken note of. Difference in some minor detail, which does not otherwise affect the core of the prosecution case, even if present, that itself would not prompt the court to reject the evidence on minor variations and discrepancies.

73. In Mahendra Pratap Singh (supra), the Court referred to the authority in Inder Singh and Anr. v. State (Delhi Administration) MANU/SC/0093/1978 : (1978) 4 SCC 161 wherein it has been held thus:

2. Credibility of testimony, oral and circumstantial, depends considerably on a judicial evaluation of the totality, not isolated scrutiny. While it is necessary that proof beyond reasonable doubt should be adduced in all criminal cases, it is not necessary that it should be perfect.

In the circumstance of the case, the Court, analyzing the evidence, opined:

62. From the above discussion of the evidence of the eyewitnesses including injured witnesses, their evidence does not at all inspire confidence and their evidence is running in conflict and contradiction with the medical evidence and ballistic expert's report in regard to the weapon of offence, which was different from the one sealed in the police station. The High Court has, in our opinion, disregarded the rule of judicial prudence in converting the order of acquittal to conviction.

74. In Sunil Kumar Sambhudayal Gupta (supra), while dealing with the issue of material contradictions, the Court held:

30. While appreciating the evidence, the court has to take into consideration whether the contradictions/omissions had been of such magnitude that they may materially after the trial. Minor contradictions, inconsistencies, embellishments or improvements on trivial matters without effecting the core of the prosecution case should not be made a ground to reject the evidence in its entirety. The trial court, after going through the entire evidence, must form an opinion about the credibility of the witnesses and the appellate court in normal course would not be justified in reviewing the same again without justifiable reasons. (Vide State v. Saravanan)

31. Where the omission(s) amount to a contradiction, creating a serious doubt about the truthfulness of a witness and the other witness also makes material improvements before the court in order to make the evidence acceptable, it cannot be safe to rely upon such evidence. (Vide State of Rajasthan v. Rajendra Singh MANU/SC/0446/1998 : (2009) 11 SCC 106.)

32. The discrepancies in the evidence of eyewitnesses, if found to be not minor in nature, may be a ground for disbelieving and discrediting their evidence. In such circumstances, witnesses may not inspire confidence and if their evidence is found to be in conflict and contradiction with other evidence or with the statement already recorded, in such a case it cannot be held that the prosecution proved its case beyond reasonable doubt." (Vide Mahendra Pratap Singh v. State of U.P.)

And again:

35. The courts have to label the category to which a discrepancy belongs. While normal discrepancies do not corrode the credibility of a party's case, material discrepancies do so." (See Syed Ibrahim v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/8237/2006 : (2006) 10 SCC 601 and Arumugam v. State)

75. Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel appearing for the Respondent- State, on the other hand, has disputed the stand of the Appellants as regards the discrepancies in the statement of P.W. 1. According to him, the evidence of P.W. 1 cannot be discarded on grounds which are quite specious. The circumstances in entirety are to be appreciated. He has placed reliance on the appreciation of the trial court and contended that the appreciation and analysis are absolutely impeccable. The relied upon paragraph is as follows:

The complainant P.W. 1 in his deposition had corroborated his complaint Ex. P.W. 1/A; his statement Ex. P.W. 80/D- 1 recorded Under Section 161 Code of Criminal Procedure; his supplementary statement Ex. P.W. 80/D- 3 and his statement Ex. P.W. 1/B recorded Under Section 164 Code of Criminal Procedure; qua his visit to Select City Mall, Saket; then moving to Munirka in an auto; boarding the bus Ex. P1; the incident; throwing them out of the moving bus and attempt of accused to overrun the victims by their bus.

It was argued by the Ld. Defence Counsel that during his cross examination P.W. 1 was confronted with his statement Ex. P.W. 1/A qua the factum of not disclosing in it the user of iron rods; the description of bus, the name of the assailants either in MLC Ex. P.W. 51/A or in his complaint Ex. P.W. 1/A. However, I do not consider such omissions as fatal as it is a settled law that FIR is not an encyclopedia of facts. The victim is not precluded from explaining the facts in his subsequent statements. It is not expected of a victim to disclose all the finer aspects of the incident in the FIR or in the brief history given to the doctor; as doctor(s) are more concerned with treatment of the victims. More so the victim who suffers from an incident, obviously, is in a state of shock and it is only when we moves in his comfort zone, he starts recollecting the events one by one and thus to stop the victim from elaborating the facts to describe the finer details, if left out earlier, would be too much.

Thus if P.W. 1 had failed to give the description of the bus or of iron rods to the doctor in his MLC Ex. P.W. 51/A or in his complaint Ex. P.W. 1/A it shall not have any fatal effect on the prosecution case. What is fatal is the material omissions, if any.

76. The evidence of P.W. 1 is assailed contending that he is not a reliable witness. During the cross- examination, his evidence was assailed contending that Ex. P.W. 1/A is replete with contradictions and inconsistencies. Taking us through the evidence, Mr. Singh has submitted that in his first statement, Ex. P.W. 1/A, there were lot of omissions and contradictions and the improvements in his subsequent statements render the evidence wholly untrustworthy. The Appellants, in an attempt to assail the credibility of the testimony of P.W. 1, inter alia, raised the contentions: (i) Non- disclosure of the use of iron rod and (ii) the names of the assailants in the MLC in Ex. P.W. 51/A or in Ex. P.W. 1/A. However, the trial court held these assertions as non-fatal to P.W. 1's testimony:

... It is not expected of a victim to disclose all the finer aspects of the incident in the FIR or in the brief history given to the doctor; as doctor(s) are more concerned with treatment of the victims. More so the victim who suffers from an incident, obviously, is in a state of shock and it is only when we move in his comfort zone, he starts recollecting the events one by one and thus to stop the victim from elaborating the facts to describe the finer details, if left out earlier, would be too much.

77. The contentions assailing the evidence of P.W. 1 does not merit acceptance, for at the time when he was first examined his friend (the prosecutrix) was critically injured and he was in a shocked mental condition. The evidence of a witness is not to be disbelieved simply because he is a partisan witness or related to the prosecution. It is to be weighed whether he was present or not and whether he is telling the truth or not.

78. The informant, P.W. 1, in his deposition, has clearly spoken about the occurrence and also corroborated his complaint, Ex. P.W. 1/A. The evidence of P.W. 1 is unimpeachable in character and the roving cross- examination has not eroded his credibility. It is necessary to mention here that P.W. 1 was admitted in the casualty ward of Safdarjung Hospital. As he was injured, he was medically examined by Dr. Sachin Bajaj, P.W. 51, and as per the evidence, Ext. P.W. 51/A, the following injuries were found on his body:

(a) 1 c.m. X 1 c.m. size clean lacerated wound over the vertex of scalp (head injury);

(b) 0.5 X 1 cm size clean lacerated wound over left upper leg;

(c) 1 X 0.2 cm size abrasion over right knee.

79. The injuries found on the person of P.W. 1 and the fact that P.W. 1 was injured in the same occurrence lends assurance to his testimony that he was present at the time of the occurrence along with the prosecutrix. The evidence of an injured witness is entitled to a greater weight and the testimony of such a witness is considered to be beyond reproach and reliable. Firm, cogent and convincing ground is required to discard the evidence of an injured witness. It is to be kept in mind that the evidentiary value of an injured witness carries great weight. In Mano Dutt and Anr. v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0159/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 79, it was held as under:

31. We may merely refer to Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0702/2010 : (2010) 10 SCC 259 where this Court held as under:

28. The question of the weight to be attached to the evidence of a witness that was himself injured in the course of the occurrence has been extensively discussed by this Court. Where a witness to the occurrence has himself been injured in the incident, the testimony of such a witness is generally considered to be very reliable, as he is a witness that comes with a built- in guarantee of his presence at the scene of the crime and is unlikely to spare his actual assailant(s) in order to falsely implicate someone. 'Convincing evidence is required to discredit an injured witness.' [Vide Ramlagan Singh v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0216/1972 : (1973) 3 SCC 881, Malkhan Singh v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0164/1974 : (1975) 3 SCC 311, Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0211/1983 : (1983) 3 SCC 470, Appabhai v. State of Gujarat 1988 Supp SCC 241, Bonkya v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0066/1996 : (1995) 6 SCC 447, Bhag Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/1308/1997 : (1997) 7 SCC 712, Mohar v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0808/2002 : (2002) 7 SCC 606, Dinesh Kumar v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/7910/2008 : (2008) 8 SCC 270, Vishnu v. State of Rajasthan (2009) 10 SCC 477, Annareddy Sambasiva Reddy v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/0640/2009 : (2009) 12 SCC 546 and Balraje v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0352/2010 : (2010) 6 SCC 673.]

29. While deciding this issue, a similar view was taken in Jarnail Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/1584/2009 : (2009) 9 SCC 719 where this Court reiterated the special evidentiary status accorded to the testimony of an injured accused and relying on its earlier judgments held as under:

'28. Darshan Singh (PW 4) was an injured witness. He had been examined by the doctor. His testimony could not be brushed aside lightly. He had given full details of the incident as he was present at the time when the assailants reached the tubewell. In Shivalingappa Kallayanappa v. State of Karnataka MANU/SC/0053/1995 : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 235 this Court has held that the deposition of the injured witness should be relied upon unless there are strong grounds for rejection of his evidence on the basis of major contradictions and discrepancies, for the reason that his presence on the scene stands established in case it is proved that he suffered the injury during the said incident.

29. In State of U.P. v. Kishan Chand MANU/SC/0652/2004 : (2004) 7 SCC 629 a similar view has been reiterated observing that the testimony of a stamped witness has its own relevance and efficacy. The fact that the witness sustained injuries at the time and place of occurrence, lends support to his testimony that he was present during the occurrence. In case the injured witness is subjected to lengthy cross- examination and nothing can be elicited to discard his testimony, it should be relied upon (vide Krishan v. State of Haryana (2006) 12 SCC 459. Thus, we are of the considered opinion that evidence of Darshan Singh (PW 4) has rightly been relied upon by the courts below.'

30. The law on the point can be summarised to the effect that the testimony of the injured witness is accorded a special status in law. This is as a consequence of the fact that the injury to the witness is an inbuilt guarantee of his presence at the scene of the crime and because the witness will not want to let his actual assailant go unpunished merely to falsely implicate a third party for the commission of the offence. Thus, the deposition of the injured witness should be relied upon unless there are strong grounds for rejection of his evidence on the basis of major contradictions and discrepancies therein.

To the similar effect is the judgment of this Court in Balraje (supra).

80. As is manifest from the evidence, S.I. Pratibha Sharma, P.W. 80, recorded the First Supplementary Statement Under Section 161 Code of Criminal Procedure of the informant, P.W. 1, Awninder Pratap Singh about 7:30 a.m. on 17.12.2012. Thereafter, P.W. 1, the informant, took P.W. 80, S.I. Pratibha Sharma, to the spot from where he and the prosecutrix had boarded the bus.

81. Apart from the injuries sustained, the presence of P.W. 1 is further confirmed by the DNA analysis of:

1. the bloodstained mulberry leaves and grass that were collected from the spot in Mahipalpur where they were thrown off the bus; (Ex. 74/C)

2. the blood stains on Vinay's jacket (Ex. 68/2) (as per Seizure Memo Ex. 68/3), Pawan's sweater (Ex. P.68/6) (as per Ex. P.W. 68/F) and Akshay's jeans (Ex P.68/6) tying them to the incident; (from the trial court judgment); and

3. the unburnt cloth pieces belonging to P.W. 1 that were recovered alongwith the ashes of the prosecutrix's clothing (Ex. PW 74/M).

82. The trial court judgment was fortified by the decisions of this Court in Pudhu Raja and Anr. v. State Represented by Inspector of Police MANU/SC/0761/2012 : (2012) 11 SCC 196, Jaswant Singh v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0236/2000 : (2000) 4 SCC 484 and Akhtar and Ors. v. State of Uttaranchal MANU/SC/0556/2009 : (2009) 13 SCC 722 on the law of material omissions and contradictions. Concurringly, the High Court too observed that the defence had failed to demonstrate from the informant's testimony such discrepancies, omissions and improvements that would have caused the High Court to reject such testimony after testing it on the anvil of the law laid down by this Court:

325. ...Their throbbing injuries and the rigors of the weather coupled with the state of their minds must have at that point of time brought forth their instinct of survival and self preservation. The desire to have apprehended their assailants and to mete out just desserts to them could not have been their priority. ...

83. In this context, we may fruitfully reproduce a passage from State of U.P. v. M.K. Anthony MANU/SC/0123/1984 : (1985) 1 SCC 505:

10. While appreciating the evidence of a witness, the approach must be whether the evidence of the witness read as a whole appears to have a ring of truth. Once that impression is formed, it is undoubtedly necessary for the court to scrutinise the evidence more particularly keeping in view the deficiencies, drawbacks and infirmities pointed out in the evidence as a whole and evaluate them to find out whether it is against the general tenor of the evidence given by the witness and whether the earlier evaluation of the evidence is shaken as to render it unworthy of belief. Minor discrepancies on trivial matters not touching the core of the case, hyper- technical approach by taking sentences torn out of context here or there from the evidence, attaching importance to some technical error committed by the investigating officer not going to the root of the matter would not ordinarily permit rejection of the evidence as a whole. ...

84. In Harijana Thirupala v. Public Prosecutor, High Court of A.P. MANU/SC/0629/2002 : (2002) 6 SCC 470, it has been ruled that:

11. ...In appreciating the evidence the approach of the court must be integrated not truncated or isolated. In other words, the impact of the evidence in totality on the prosecution case or innocence of the accused has to be kept in mind in coming to the conclusion as to the guilt or otherwise of the accused. In reaching a conclusion about the guilt of the accused, the court has to appreciate, analyse and assess the evidence placed before it by the yardstick of probabilities, its intrinsic value and the animus of witnesses.

85. In Ugar Ahir v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0333/1964 : AIR 1965 SC 277, a three- Judge Bench held:

7. The maxim falsus in uno, falsu in omnibus (false in one thing, false in everything) is neither a sound rule of law nor a rule of practice. Hardly one comes across a witness whose evidence does not contain a grain of untruth or at any rate exaggerations, embroideries or embellishments. It is, therefore, the duty of the court to scrutinise the evidence carefully and, in terms of the felicitous metaphor, separate the grain from the chaff. But, it cannot obviously disbelieve the substratum of the prosecution case or the material parts of the evidence and reconstruct a story of its own out of the rest.

86. In Krishna Mochi v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0327/2002 : (2002) 6 SCC 81, the Court ruled that:

32. ...The court while appreciating the evidence should not lose sight of these realities of life and cannot afford to take an unrealistic approach by sitting in an ivory tower. I find that in recent times the tendency to acquit an accused easily is galloping fast. It is very easy to pass an order of acquittal on the basis of minor points raised in the case by a short judgment so as to achieve the yardstick of disposal. Some discrepancy is bound to be there in each and every case which should not weigh with the court so long it does not materially affect the prosecution case. In case discrepancies pointed out are in the realm of pebbles, the court should tread upon it, but if the same are boulders, the court should not make an attempt to jump over the same. These days when crime is looming large and humanity is suffering and the society is so much affected thereby, duties and responsibilities of the courts have become much more. Now the maxim "let hundred guilty persons be acquitted, but not a single innocent be convicted" is, in practice, changing the world over and courts have been compelled to accept that "society suffers by wrong convictions and it equally suffers by wrong acquittals". I find that this Court in recent times has conscientiously taken notice of these facts from time to time".

87. In Inder Singh (supra), Krishna Iyer, J. laid down that:

Proof beyond reasonable doubt is a guideline, not a fetish and guilty man cannot get away with it because truth suffers some infirmity when projected through human processes.

88. In the case of State of U.P. v. Anil Singh MANU/SC/0503/1988 : 1988 (Supp.) SCC 686, it was held that a Judge does not preside over a criminal trial merely to see that no innocent man is punished. A Judge also presides to see that a guilty man does not escape. One is as important as the other. Both are public duties which the Judge has to perform.

89. In Mohan Singh and Anr. v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0035/1999 : (1999) 2 SCC 428, this Court has held:

11. The question is how to test the veracity of the prosecution story especially when it is with some variance with the medical evidence. Mere variance of the prosecution story with the medical evidence, in all cases, should not lead to the conclusion, inevitably to reject the prosecution story. Efforts should be made to find the truth, this is the very object for which courts are created. To search it out, the courts have been removing the chaff from the grain. It has to disperse the suspicious cloud and dust out the smear of dust as all these things clog the very truth. So long as chaff, cloud and dust remain, the criminals are clothed with this protective layer to receive the benefit of doubt. So it is a solemn duty of the courts, not to merely conclude and leave the case the moment suspicions are created. It is the onerous duty of the court, within permissible limit, to find out the truth. It means on one hand, no innocent man should be punished but on the other hand, to see no person committing an offence should get scot- free. If in spite of such effort, suspicion is not dissolved, it remains writ at large, benefit of doubt has to be credited to the accused. For this, one has to comprehend the totality of the facts and the circumstances as spelled out through the evidence, depending on the facts of each case by testing the credibility of eyewitnesses including the medical evidence, of course, after excluding those parts of the evidence which are vague and uncertain. There is no mathematical formula through which the truthfulness of a prosecution or a defence case could be concretised. It would depend on the evidence of each case including the manner of deposition and his demeans (sic), clarity, corroboration of witnesses and overall, the conscience of a judge evoked by the evidence on record. So courts have to proceed further and make genuine efforts within the judicial sphere to search out the truth and not stop at the threshold of creation of doubt to confer benefit of doubt.

90. Keeping the aforesaid aspects in view, we shall now proceed to test the submission of the learned Counsel for the Appellants and the learned amicus curiae on the issue whether the testimony of P.W. 1 deserves acceptance being reliable or not. It is no doubt true that in the earlier statement of P.W. 1, that is, Ex. P.W. 1/A, there are certain omissions; but the main thing to be seen is whether the omissions go to the root of the matter or pertain to insignificant aspects. The evidence of P.W. 1 is not to be disbelieved simply because there were certain omissions. The trial Court as well as the High Court found his evidence credible and trustworthy and we find no reason to take a different view.

91. The case of the prosecution is attacked contending that P.W. 1 is a planted witness and that he keeps on improving his version. It is submitted that P.W. 1 is not reliable as had he been present at the time of occurrence, he would have endeavoured to save the victim and the nature of injuries as mentioned in Ex. P.W. 51/A on the person of P.W. 1 raises serious doubt about his presence at the time of occurrence.

92. The prosecutrix and P.W. 1 were surrounded and attacked by at least six accused persons. As narrated by P.W. 1, he was pinned down by two of the assailants while the others committed rape on the prosecutrix on the rear side of the bus. The accused persons were in a group and were also armed with iron rods. P.W. 1 was held by them. It would not have been possible for P.W. 1 to resist the number of accused persons and save the prosecutrix. The evidence of P.W. 1 cannot be doubted on the ground that he had not interfered with the occurrence. The improvements made in the supplementary statement need not necessarily render P.W. 1's evidence untrustworthy more so when P.W. 1 has no reason to falsely implicate the accused.

93. Learned Counsel for the State has highlighted that the version of P.W. 1 is absolutely consistent and the trial court as well as the High Court has correctly relied upon his testimony. He has drawn our attention to the version of P.W. 1 in the FIR, the statement recorded Under Section 164 Code of Criminal Procedure and his testimony before the trial court. We have given anxious consideration and perused the FIR, supplementary statements recorded Under Section 164 Code of Criminal Procedure and appreciated the evidence in court and we find that there is no justification or warrant to treat the version of the witness as inconsistent. The consistency is writ large and the witness, as we perceive, is credible.

94. Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel, further contested the argument advanced on behalf of the Appellants as regards the discrepancies so far as P.W. 1 is concerned. As regards the items stolen, it is recorded in the FIR that the accused persons stole the informant's Samsung Galaxy Mobile phone bearing 7827917720 and 9540034561 and his wallet containing Rs. 1000, ICICI debit card, Citi Bank Credit Card, ID Card, one silver ring, one gold ring and took off all his clothes, i.e., khakhi coloured blazer, grey sweater, black jeans, black Hush Puppies shoes and they also stole the prosecutrix's mobile phone with number 9818358144. His statement recorded Under Section 164 Code of Criminal Procedure states that the accused snatched the Samsung Galaxy S- Duos Mobile, one more mobile phone of Samsung, one purse with Rs. 1000, one Citibank credit card, ICICI Debit Card, Company I- Card, Delhi Metro Card and also snatched black jeans, one silver ring, one gold ring, Hush Puppies shoes. They also snatched the prosecutrix's Nokia mobile phone and grey colour purse and both the wrist watches. Before the trial court, he deposed that they snatched both the rings, shoes, purse containing cards and cash, socks and belt; they took off all his clothes and left him in an underwear; the accused had also taken off all the prosecutrix's clothes and snatched all her belongings including grey purse containing Axis bank card. P.W. 1 also identified Hush Puppies shoes, Ex. P- 2, Sonata watch, Ex. P- 3, metro card, Ex. P- 5, Samsung Galaxy Duos, Ex. P- 6, and currency notes, Ex. P- 7. As regards the weapon of assault, in the FIR and in the Section 164 statement, "rod" was recorded as weapon of assault and in his testimony before the trial court, P.W. 1 deposed that the weapon of assault was "iron rods". So far as throwing from the bus is concerned, it is recorded in the FIR that the other accused persons told the driver to drive the bus at a fast speed and then tried to throw the informant from the back door of the bus, however, the back door of the bus did not open. Then they threw both the informant and the prosecutrix from the moving bus near NH 8 Mahipalpur on the side of the road. His statement recorded Under Section 164 Code of Criminal Procedure states that the bus driver was driving the bus at a fast speed on being told by the other accused and he heard them saying that the girl had died and to throw her off the bus. They then took the informant and the prosecutrix to the rear door of the bus but could not open the door and, therefore, dragged them to the front door of the bus and threw them out. The bus driver turned the bus in such a manner after throwing them, that if the informant had not pulled the prosecutrix, then the bus would have run over her. P.W. 1 has deposed before the trial court that he heard one of the accused saying "mar gayee, mar gayee"; the accused were exhorting that the informant and the prosecutrix should not be left alive; the accused persons pulled the informant near the rear door and put the prosecutrix on him. The rear door was closed, so they dragged both the informant and the prosecutrix to the front door; they were thrown off opposite Hotel Delhi 37; after they were thrown, the accused persons turned the bus and tried to crush them under the wheels. As regards the naming/description of the accused, the FIR recorded that the accused were aged between 25-30 years; one of them had a flat nose and was the youngest; one of them wore a red banian and they were wearing pant and shirt; and the accused were named as Ram Singh, Thakur, Mukesh, Vinay and Pawan. In the statement, it was recorded that he saw a dark coloured man who was being called "Mukesh, Mukesh"; he over- heard them calling each other as Ram Singh, Thakur; and the other three were addressing each other Pawan and Vinay and taking the name of JCL. In his testimony, it is recorded that he identified A- 2, Mukesh, as Driver, A- 1, Ram Singh, and A- 3, Akshay, as persons sitting in the driver's cabin and identified A- 4, Vinay, and A- 5, Pawan, as persons sitting in the bus.

95. As regards the minor contradictions/omissions, the trial court has placed reliance upon Pudhu Raja (supra) and Jaswant Singh (supra) and treated the version of P.W. 1 as reliable. The testimony of P.W. 1 has been placed reliance upon by both the Courts and on an anxious and careful scrutiny of the same, we do not perceive any reason to differ with the said view.

96. As we find, the trial court has come to the conclusion that the incident has been aptly described by P.W. 1, the injured. The injuries on his person do show that he was present in the bus at the time of the incident. His presence is further confirmed by the DNA analysis. Suffice it to say for the present, the contradictions in the statement, Ex. P.W. 1/A, are not material enough to destroy the substratum of the prosecution case. From the studied analysis of the evidence of P.W. 1, it is the only inevitable conclusion because the appreciation is founded on yardstick of consideration of totality of evidence and its intrinsic value on proper assessment.

Recovery of the bus and the CCTV footage

97. The endeavour of the prosecution was to first check the route and get a clue of the bus. For the aforesaid purpose, the CCTV footage becomes quite relevant. The story starts from the Select City Walk Mall, Saket and hence, we have to start from there. As per the case of the prosecution, the informant and the prosecutrix had gone to Select City Walk Mall, Saket to see a film. The CCTV footage produced by P.W. 25, Rajender Singh Bisht, in a CD, Ex. P.W. 25/C- 1 and P.W. 25/C- 2, and the photographs, Ex. P.W. 25/B- 1 to Ex. P.W. 25/B- 7, are evident of the fact that the informant and the prosecutrix were present at Saket till 8:57 p.m. The certificate Under Section 65B of the Evidence Act with respect to the said footage is proved by P.W. 26, Shri Sandeep Singh, vide Ex. P.W. 26/A. The informant as well as the prosecutrix gave brief description of the entire incident in their MLCs which led the investigating team to the Hotel near Delhi Airport where the prosecutrix and the informant were dumped after the incident. P.W. 67, Pramod Kumar Jha, the owner of the Hotel at Delhi Airport, was examined by the investigating officers regarding the present incident. He handed over the pen drive containing the CCTV footage, Ex. P- 67/1, and the CD, Ex. P- 67/2 to the I.O. which were seized vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 67/A. The CCTV footage and the photographs were identified by P.W. 67, Pramod Jha, P.W. 74. SI Subhash Chand, and Gautam Roy, P.W. 76, from CFSL during their examination in Court. The CCTV footage twice showed a white coloured bus having yellow and green stripes at 9:34 p.m. and again at 9:53 p.m. The bus exactly matched the description of the offending bus given by the informant. It had the word "Yadav" written on one of its sides and its front tyre on the left side did not have a wheel cap. P.W. 78, the S.H.O., Inspector Anil Sharma, has further deposed that the said CCTV footage seized vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 67/A was sent to the CFSL through SI Sushil Sawariya, P.W. 54, on 02.01.2013, and this part of the testimony of P.W. 78 is corroborated by the testimony of P.W. 54, SI Sushil Sawaria, and P.W. 77, the MHC(M). Thereafter, on 03.01.2013, the report of the CFSL was received. In fact, the trial court had assured itself of the correct identification of the bus by playing the said CCTV footage shown in the pen drive, Ex. P.W. 67/1, and the CD, Ex. P.W. 67/2, during the cross- examination of P.W. 67, Pramod Jha.

98. Learned Counsel Mr. Singh has asserted that bus, Ex. P- 1, has been falsely implicated in the present case as is evidenced from the recovery of the CCTV footage. In an attempt to discredit the CCTV footage, he pointed out that only the CCTV recording alleged to be of this bus was recorded and not of all other white buses that had 'Yadav' written on them. The learned Counsel for the defence subsequently maintained that the CCTV footage cannot be relied upon as the same has been tampered with by the investigating officers.

99. P.W. 76, Gautam Roy, HOD, Computer Cell, Forensic Division, has testified that on 02.01.2013, he had received two sealed parcels sealed with the seal of PS and the seals tallied with the specimen seals provided. He marked the blue coloured pen drive found in parcel No. 1 as Ex. 1 and the Moser Baer CD found in the second parcel as Ex. 2. He further testified that both the exhibits were played by him in the computer and the bus was seen twice, at 9:34 p.m. and 9:54 p.m. He had photographed all these three by freezing the pen drive and the CD and these photographs were compared by him with the photographs taken by the photographer, P.W. 79, P.K. Gottam, which he had summoned. The witness testified that he had prepared the three comparison charts in this regard as Ex. P.W. 76/B, P.W. 76/C and P.W. 76/D, and his detailed report as Ex. P.W. 76/E. The footage taken in a CD and pen drive was sealed in P.W. 67's presence and as the recording was automatic data being fed on regular basis into the hard disk, the question of tampering with the same could not arise. P.W. 79, P.K. Gottam, from CFSL, CBI, has stated in his examination that he took photographs of the bus bearing No. DL- 1P- C- 0149 parked at Thyagraj Stadium, INA, New Delhi from different angles on 17.12.2012 and 18.12.2012 and handed over the same to P.W. 76. The said photographs were marked as B1 in Ex. P.W. 76/B; as C1 and C2 in Ex. P.W. 76/C; and as D1 in Ex. P.W. 76/D. He has deposed as to the genuineness of the photographs by deposing that the software used for developing the photographs was tamper proof.

100. Once it is proved before the court through the testimony of the experts that the photographs and the CCTV footage are not tampered with, there is no reason or justification to perceive the same with the lens of doubt. The opinion of the CFSL expert contained in the CFSL report marked as Ex. P.W. 76/E authenticates that there was no tampering or editing in both the exhibits, Ex. P- 67/1 and Ex. P- 67/2, and that a bus having identical patterns as the one parked at Thyagraj Stadium is seen in the CCTV footage, which includes the word "Yadav" written on one side, "back side dent (left)" and absence of wheel cover on the front left side. The contents of the report is also admitted to be true by its author, P.W. 76, Gautam Roy. Quite apart from that, it is perceptible that the High Court, in order to satisfy itself, had got the CCTV footage played during the hearing and found the same to be creditworthy and acceptable.

101. As the narrative proceeds, the next step was to find out the bus. The identity of the bus in the CCTV footage was known and the said knowledge could propel the prosecution to move for recovery. We may start from the beginning. The bus, Ex. P- 1, bearing registration No. DL- 1P- C- 0149, is the vehicle alleged to have been involved in the incident. P.W. 74, SI Subhash Chand, on 17.12.2012, along with P.W. 1, the informant, and P.W. 80, WSI Pratibha Singh, went to Munirka bus stand from where the victims had boarded the alleged bus, Ex. P- 1, and then to Mahipalpur to the spot where both the victims were thrown off the bus on 16.12.2012. After the collection of exhibits from the spot, P.W. 74 and P.W. 80 went to the hotels opposite the spot having CCTV cameras installed and amongst those was Hotel Delhi 37. At the said hotel, the informant/P.W. 1 identified the bus they had boarded in the CCTV footage of the road and the relevant footage of the recording was taken in a pen drive and CD and was handed over to the Investigating Officer as Ex. P.W. 67/A. Later in the day, secret information was received by P.W. 80 that the alleged bus was parked at Sector 3, R.K. Puram. P.W. 74 accompanied P.W. 80 and P.W. 65, Ct. Kripal Singh, to Ravidass Camp where a bus matching the description given by P.W. 1 was parked near the Gurudwara. It was white in colour with 'Yadav' written on the side. When the police approached the bus, A- 1, Ram Singh, got down from it and started to run; he was later apprehended in a chase by P.W. 74 and P.W. 65. From A- 1, the fitness certificate, PUC and other documents regarding the registration of the vehicle DL- 1PC- 0149 were seized as Ex. P.W. 74/I, P.W. 74/J and P.W. 74/K. The entry door of the bus was ahead of the front wheel and the wheel cap was missing from the front tyre. After recovery of the burnt clothes at the behest of A1, he was sent to the police station with P.W. 65. P.W. 42, Ct. Suresh Kumar, was called to the spot and he drove the bus to Thyagraj Stadium around 5:45 p.m. on the same day. An inspection of the bus was conducted inside the stadium and the CFSL team lifted Ex. P.W. 74/P. Thereafter, P.W. 32, SI Vishal Chaudhary, and P.W. 33, SI Vikas Rana, were called from police station Kotla Mubarakpur to guard the bus.

102. Mr. Singh has raised the following issues with respect to the identification and recovery of the alleged bus:

1. CCTV footage was not properly examined to check all possible buses plying on the said route;

2. The bus was taken to Thyagraj Stadium instead of the Police Station to avoid the media and to better facilitate the planting of evidence; and

3. P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav, owner of the Bus was in judicial custody for 6 months before his examination in the Court and he was so detained in custody to bring pressure upon him.

103. Mr. Singh has made bald allegation that the bus, Ex. P- 1, was falsely implicated and that all the DNA evidence recovered therefrom was actually planted. He contends that the bus, Ex. P- 1, was sent to Thyagraj Stadium instead of the concerned Police Station, PS Vasant Vihar, with the deliberate intention of avoiding the media attention so that the evidence could be planted easily. This argument is in furtherance of his false implication theory. He has, however, provided no further specific assertions to cast a doubt in our mind that the police has planted the evidence in the bus.

104. Mr. Luthra, in his turn, relying on the decision of the Delhi High Court in Manjit Singh v. State MANU/DE/2131/2014 : 214 (2014) DLT 646, has placed statistics before us pointing to the paucity of physical space in police stations across the city. In Manjit Singh (supra), the High Court had ordered the Delhi Police to furnish data regarding case properties with the Police. The High Court noted that there was an accumulation of "2,86,741 case properties including 25,547 vehicles, out of which as many as 2,479 properties are lying in public places outside the police stations". Given the state of affairs, the submission put forth by Mr. Luthra is acceptable. There is dearth of space inside the police stations in Delhi and the use of Thyagraj Stadium as parking lot in the present case does not necessarily mean that there was any mala fide intention on the part of the investigating agency without any specific assertion to advance the said bald allegation.

105. It may also be noted that on 17.12.2012, P.W. 42, Ct. Suresh Kumar, drove the bus from Ravidass Camp to Thyagraj Stadium around 5:45 p.m. along with P.W. 74 and P.W. 80. About 6:15 p.m., P.W. 32, SI Vishal Chaudhary, along with Ct. Amit, both of PS Kotla Mubarakpur, were sent to Thyagraj Stadium where on the instructions of P.W. 80, SI Pratibha, P.W. 32, guarded the bus till 8:00 a.m. the next day. On 18.12.2012, he handed over the charge of guarding the bus to P.W. 33, SI Vikas Rana, PS Kotla Mubarakpur, and he guarded the bus till 8:30 p.m., until after the CFSL team left. Thus, the criticism as regards the parking of the bus at Thyagraj Stadium and not at the Police Station pales into insignificance.

Reliability of the testimony of P.W. 81 (the owner of the bus)

106. Having dealt with the recovery of the bus, it is necessary to dwell upon the contention put forth by the learned Counsel for the Appellants which pertains to the acceptability and reliability of the testimony of P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav. The principal contention in this regard is that P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav, the owner of the bus, was in judicial custody and, therefore, his version in the court is under tremendous pressure as he was desirous of getting a bail order to enjoy his liberty. Highlighting this aspect, it is urged by Mr. Sharma and Mr. Singh, learned Counsel for the Appellants, that the testimony of the said witness deserves to be totally discarded.

107. P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav, is a transporter and owns 8 to 10 buses including Ex. P- 1. He runs the buses under the name 'Yadav Travels'. He was examined by the prosecution to prove that A- 1, A- 2 and A- 3 are connected with the bus, Ex. P- 1. In his examination, P.W. 81 admitted that the word 'Yadav' is written across Ex. P- 1 and that it is white in colour with yellow stripes. P.W. 81 stated that A- 1, Ram Singh (since deceased), was the driver of the said bus in December 2012, A- 3, Akshay Kumar Singh, was his helper and the bus was usually parked by A- 1, Ram Singh, in R.K. Puram, near his residence. The bus was attached to Birla Vidya Niketan School, Pushp Vihar, New Delhi to ferry students in the morning and also to a Company, M/s. Net Ambit, Sector 132, Noida, to take its employees from Delhi to Noida. On 17.12.2012, the bus went from Delhi to Sector 132, Noida to take the staff of M/s. Net Ambit to their office and P.W. 81 was informed by A- 1, Ram Singh, or A- 2, Mukesh, that the bus was checked at the DND toll plaza on their route to Noida.

108. Learned Counsel Mr. Singh has asserted that P.W. 81 was kept in judicial custody to obtain a statement favourable to the prosecution in the present case. In this aspect, it is noted that P.W. 81 also stated that he was kept in judicial custody. The arrest was, however, not made in the present case; it was in connection with another case in relation to providing incorrect address to the Transport Authority. He was lodged in jail in case FIR No. 02/2013 of PS Civil Lines Under Sections 420, 468, 471 Indian Penal Code. P.W. 81 had provided his friend's address as his own at the time of registration and was arrested on a complaint made by the Transport Authority. He was named in the charge- sheet in the present case and was cited as a witness at serial No. 36 but was dropped by the prosecution on 28.05.2013. Later on, his examination was sought by way of an application Under Section 311 Code of Criminal Procedure. The application was allowed by the trial court order dated 03.07.2013 on the ground that he was the owner of the bus and his examination was necessary to prove as to whom he had handed over the custody of the bus on the night of the incident, i.e., 16.12.2012. It is limpid from the deposition of P.W. 81 that he was in judicial custody for a separate offence and, therefore, it is difficult to accede to the argument advanced by Mr. Singh that he was under pressure to support the version of the prosecution.

109. Apart from the above, the prosecution, in order to place A- 1 as the driver of the bus, Ex. P- 1, has examined P.W. 16, Rajeev Jakhmola. P.W. 16, Manager (Admn) of Birla Vidya Niketan School, Pushp Vihar, handled their transport. In his examination, he stated that P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav, had provided the school with 7 buses on contract basis including Ex. P- 1 and that A- 1, Ram Singh, was its driver. He also submitted a copy of Ram Singh's Driving Licence to the Police along with the copy of the agreement of the school with the owner of the bus, copy of the RC, copy of the fitness certificate, certificate of third party technical inspection, pollution certificate, two copies of certificate- cum- policy schedule (Insurance), copy of certificate of training undergone by accused Ram Singh, copy of permit and list of the transporters, collectively as Ex. P.W. 16/A.

110. Thus, according to the prosecution, from the evidence of P.W. 16, Rajeev Jakhmola, and P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav, it stands proved that the bus in question was routinely driven by Ram Singh.

When an argument was raised before the High Court over the veracity of P.W. 81's testimony, it recorded as under:

270. We are constrained to say that there is no substance in the aforesaid contention of Mr. Sharma for the reason that P.W. 81 Dinesh Yadav, the owner of the bus bearing registration No. DL1PC-0149, in which the offence was committed, has categorically stated in his cross- examination that bus Ex. P- 1 was being used for ferrying the students in the morning and thereafter as a chartered bus for taking the officials of M/s. Net Ambit from Delhi to Noida. He further stated in cross-examination that on 17.12.2012, the bus took the staff of M/s. Net Ambit from Delhi to Sector 132, Noida, UP. Quite apparently, therefore, accused Ram Singh as disclosed by him had thrown the SIM card near about the bus stand of Sector 37, where according to P.W. 44 Mohd. Zeeshan, it was found at the noon hour. Since it is not in dispute that accused Ram Singh was the driver of the bus and this fact stands fully established by the evidence on record, Noida was possibly found by him to be the safest destination to dispose of the SIM card.

111. The aforesaid analysis commends our approval because we, having analysed the said aspect on our own, have arrived at the same conclusion. There is no trace of doubt that the testimony of the said witness withstands close scrutiny and there is no reason to treat it with any kind of disapproval. That apart, the evidence of P.W. 16 corroborates the testimony of the owner of the bus.

Personal search and statements of disclosure leading to recovery

112. Learned Counsel for the Appellants have seriously questioned the arrest of the accused persons and the recoveries made pursuant to the said arrest. It is the stand of the prosecution that pursuant to the arrest of all the accused A- 1 to A- 5, there were disclosure statements recorded Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act which led to recoveries of incriminating articles such as objects belonging to the victims as also objects which have been linked orally or scientifically (such as through DNA profiling) to the prosecutrix and P.W. 1. These material objects recovered are used to link the convicts with the crime and corroborate the version of the eye witness P.W. 1 and the dying declaration of the deceased victim.

113. First, we shall refer to the arrest of Ram Singh and the recoveries made at his instance. As already stated, on 17.12.2012, P.W. 80, SI Pratibha Sharma, had spotted accused Ram Singh sitting in the offending bus, Ex. P1, which was parked at Ravidass Camp, R.K. Puram, New Delhi. On seeing the police, Ram Singh got down from the bus and started running. He was chased and instantly arrested at 4:15 p.m. vide memo Ex. P.W. 74/D and subsequently, his personal search was conducted vide memo Ex. P.W. 74/E and his disclosure Ex. P.W. 74/F was recorded. Notably, Ram Singh has led to several important discoveries and seizures from inside the bus.

114. Accused Mukesh was apprehended on 18.12.2012 from village Karoli, Rajasthan, by a team headed by P.W. 58, SI Arvind. He produced accused Mukesh before P.W. 80, SI Pratibha Sharma, the Investigating Officer, at Safdarjung Hospital in muffled face alongwith a mobile, Samsung Galaxy Duos, Ex. P- 6, seized by her vide memo Ex. P.W. 58/A. The accused was arrested at 6:30 p.m. on 18- 12- 2012 by her vide memo Ex. P.W. 58/B and his personal search was conducted vide memo Ex. P.W. 58/C. The accused pointed the Munirka bus stand vide memo Ex. P.W. 68/K and the dumping spot vide memo Ex. P.W. 68/L. This Samsung Galaxy phone was identified to be that of P.W. 1, the informant.

115. On 23.12.2012, accused Mukesh led the police to Anupam Apartment, garage No. 2, Saidulajab, Saket, New Delhi, and got recovered a green colour T- shirt, Ex. P- 48/1, on which the word "play boy" was printed; a grey colour pant, Ex. P- 48/2, and a jacket, Ex. P- 48/3, of bluish grey colour, all seized vide memo Ex. P.W. 48/B. The Investigating Officer also prepared the site plan, Ex. P.W. 80/I, of the place of recovery. On 24.12.2012, accused Mukesh also got prepared a route chart Ex. P.W. 80/H.

116. On 18.12.2012, accused Ram Singh led the Investigating Officer to Ravidass Camp and pointed towards his associates, namely, accused Vinay and accused Pawan. Accused Pawan was apprehended and arrested about 1:15 p.m. vide memo Ex. P.W. 60/A; his disclosure, Ex. P.W. 60/G, was recorded and his personal search was conducted vide memo Ex. P.W. 60/C. Accused Pawan Gupta pointed out the Munirka bus stand and a pointing out memo Ex. P.W. 68/I was prepared. He also pointed the dumping spot and memo Ex. P.W. 68/J was prepared in this regard.

117. On 19.12.2012, from accused Pawan Gupta, P.W. 80, got effected the following recoveries:

(a) Wrist watch Ex. P3 seized vide memo Ex. P.W. 68/G;

(b) Two currency notes of denomination of Rs. 500/- Ex. P- 7 colly were seized vide memo Ex. P.W. 68/G;

(c) Clothes worn by the accused at the time of the incident seized vide memo Ex. P.W. 68/F; and

It may be stated here that Sonata wrist watch, Ex. P3, was identified as that of P.W. 1.

118. On 18.12.2012, about 1:30 p.m., accused Vinay Sharma was arrested in front of Ravidass Mandir, Main Road, Sector- 3, R.K. Puram, New Delhi vide arrest memo Ex. P.W. 60/B; and his disclosure Ex. P.W. 60/H was also recorded. He pointed out the Munirka bus stand from where the victims were picked up vide memo Ex. P.W. 68/I and he also pointed out Mahipalpur Flyover, the place where the victims were thrown out of the moving bus vide pointing out memo Ex. P.W. 68/J. On 19.12.2012, he led to the following recoveries:

(a) Hush Puppies shoes Ex. P- 2 seized vide memo Ex. P.W. 68/C; and

(b) Nokia mobile phone Ex. P- 68/5 of the prosecutrix seized vide memo Ex. P.W. 68/D.

Hush Puppies shoes, Ex. P2, were identified to be that of P.W. 1, the informant. Nokia Mobile Phone, Ex. P- 68/5, was identified to be that of the prosecutrix.

119. On 19.12.2012, pursuant to his supplementary disclosure statement Ex. P.W. 68/A, the following recoveries were made by the accused vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 68/B:

120. During the personal search of Vinay Sharma, the following article was recovered:

(a) Nokia mobile phone with IMEI No. 35413805830821418 belonging to the accused, which was returned to him on superdari vide order dated 4- 4- 2013

121. On 21.12.2012, about 9:15 p.m., accused Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur was arrested from village Karmalahang, P.S. Tandwa, District Aurangabad, Bihar vide memo Ex. P.W. 53/A and on 21.12.2012 and 22.12.2012, his disclosures, Ex. P.W. 53/I and Ex. P.W. 53/D, respectively were recorded. On 22.12.2012, he got effected the following recoveries from the residence of his brother, Abhay, from the rented house of one Tara Chand, village Naharpur, Gurgaon, viz;

i. Blood stained jeans (Ex. P- 53/3) worn by the accused at the time of the incident, recovered from a black bag (Ex. P- 53/2)

ii. A blue black coloured Nokia mobile phone (Ex. P- 53/1)

iii. Blood- stained red coloured banian (vest).

122. On 27.12.2012, he got recovered the informant's Metro card Ex. P- 5 and the informant's silver ring, Ex. P- 4, from House No. 1943, 3rd Floor, Gali No. 3, Rajiv Nagar, Sector- 14, Gurgaon, Haryana.

123. Learned Counsel for the Appellants and learned amicus, Mr. Hegde, have vehemently criticized the arrest and recoveries that have been made or effected. It is urged by Mr. Sharma that the Appellant Mukesh was not in custody when the recovery took place and additionally, he was not produced before the nearest Magistrate within twenty- four hours from the time of detention. Mr. Luthra, in his turn, would submit that the said accused was formally arrested at Delhi and, thereafter, the recovery on the basis of his disclosure took place. Mr. Singh, learned Counsel, contended that the disclosure statements which have been recorded by the police do tantamount to confessional statements relating to the involvement and commission of the crime. This argument requires to be squarely dealt with. For appreciating the said submission, it is necessary to appreciate the inter- se relationship between the accused persons and thereafter dwell upon the process of the arrest and judge the acceptability on the anvil of the precedents in the field.

124. As the evidence brought on record would show, the accused persons were known to each other. Mukesh, A- 2, and deceased Ram Singh, A- 1, were brothers. According to the testimony of Dinesh Yadav, P.W. 81, Ram Singh was the driver of the bus and A- 3, Akshay, was working as a helper in the bus. The same is manifest from the Attendance Register, Ex. P- 81/2, seized vide Ex. P.W. 80/K and the Driving License of A- 1, Ram Singh, Ex. P- 74/4, seized vide Ex. P.W. 74/1. From the testimony of P.W. 13, Brijesh Gupta, and P.W. 14, Jiwant Shah, it is evident that Ram Singh and Mukesh were brothers. From the evidence of Champa Devi, DW- 5, mother of Vinay, A- 4, it is quite clear that Vinay, Pawan, A- 5, and Ram Singh, A- 1, were known to each other. Mukesh, in his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure, has admitted that he and Ram Singh are brothers. A- 3, Akshay, in his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure, has admitted that he was working with Ram Singh in the bus, Ex. P- 1, as a helper. He has also admitted that he knew Ram Singh and there had been altercation on 16.12.2012 with A- 1, Ram Singh. A- 5, Pawan, in his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure, admitted that he was a witness to the quarrel between A- 4, Vinay, and A- 1, Ram Singh. From the aforesaid evidence, it is luminous that all the accused persons were closely associated with each other.

125. Having dealt with this facet, we shall now proceed to meet the criticism advanced by the learned Counsel for the Appellants with regard to the recoveries and the disclosure statements that led to the discoveries.

126. Assailing the acceptability of the arrest and the disclosure statements leading to the recoveries, Mr. Sharma and Mr. Singh have contended that the materials brought on record cannot be taken aid of for any purpose since the items seized have been planted at the places of recovery and a contrived version has been projected in court. That apart, it is submitted that the recoveries are gravely doubtful inasmuch as the prosecution has not seized all the articles from one accused on one occasion but on various dates. We have cleared the maze as regards the arrest and copiously noted the manner of arrest of the accused persons and their leading to recoveries. Be it noted, recovery is a part of investigation and permissible Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act. However, Mr. Sharma has raised a contention that this Court should take note of the fact that Section 27 of the Evidence Act has become a powerful weapon in the hands of the prosecution to rope in any citizen. The said submission, as we perceive, is quite broad and specious. It is open to the defence to find fault with recovery and the manner in which it is done and its relevance. It is not permissible to advance an argument that Section 27 of the Evidence Act is constantly abused by the prosecution or that it uses the said provision as a lethal weapon against anyone it likes. In the instant case, we have noted how the recoveries have been made and how they have been proved by the unimpeachable testimony of the prosecution witnesses.

127. Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel appearing for the State, would submit that in the present case, the material objects recovered serve as links to corroborate and they have been used as the law permits. In this regard, he has filed a chart which we think it appropriate to reproduce for better appreciation of the said aspect. It is as follows:

128. Having reproduced the chart, now we shall refer to certain authorities on how a statement of disclosure is to be appreciated. In Pulukuri Kottaya v. Emperor MANU/PR/0049/1946 : AIR 1947 PC 67, it has been observed:

It is fallacious to treat the 'fact discovered' within the section as equivalent to the object produced; the fact discovered embraces the place from which the object is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this, and the information given must relate distinctly to this fact. Information as to past user, or the past history, of the object produced is not related to its discovery in the setting in which it is discovered. Information supplied by a person in custody that 'I will produce a knife concealed in the roof of my house' does not lead to the discovery of a knife; knives were discovered many years ago. It leads to the discovery of the fact that a knife is concealed in the house of the informant to his knowledge, and if the knife is proved to have been used in the commission of the offence, the fact discovered is very relevant. But if to the statement the words be added 'with which I stabbed A', these words are inadmissible since they do not relate to the discovery of the knife in the house of the informant.

129. In Delhi Administration v. Bal Krishan and Ors. MANU/SC/0093/1971 : (1972) 4 SCC 659, the Court, analyzing the concept, use and evidentiary value of recovered articles, expressed thus:

7. ... Section 27 of the Evidence Act permits proof of so much of the information which is given by persons accused of an offence when in the custody of a police officer as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, irrespective of whether such information amounts to a confession or not. Under Sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act, no confession made to a police officer whether in custody or not can be proved as against the accused. But Section 27 is by way of a proviso to these sections and a statement, even by way of confession, which distinctly relates to the fact discovered is admissible as evidence against the accused in the circumstances stated in Section 27....

130. In Mohd. Inayatullah v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0166/1975 : (1976) 1 SCC 828, dealing with the scope and object of Section 27 of the Evidence Act, the Court held:

12. The expression "provided that" together with the phrase "whether it amounts to a confession or not" show that the section is in the nature of an exception to the preceding provisions particularly Sections 25 and 26. It is not necessary in this case to consider if this section qualifies, to any extent, Section 24, also. It will be seen that the first condition necessary for bringing this section into operation is the discovery of a fact, albeit a relevant fact, in consequence of the information received from a person accused of an offence. The second is that the discovery of such fact must be deposed to. The third is that at the time of the receipt of the information the accused must be in police custody. The last but the most important condition is that only "so much of the information" as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered is admissible. The rest of the information has to be excluded. The word "distinctly" means "directly", "indubitably", "strictly", "unmistakably". The word has been advisedly used to limit and define the scope of the provable information. The phrase "distinctly relates to the fact thereby discovered" is the linchpin of the provision. This phrase refers to that part of the information supplied by the accused which is the direct and immediate cause of the discovery. The reason behind this partial lifting of the ban against confessions and statements made to the police, is that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given by the accused, it affords some guarantee of truth of that part, and that part only, of the information which was the clear, immediate and proximate cause of the discovery. No such guarantee or assurance attaches to the rest of the statement which may be indirectly or remotely related to the fact discovered.

13. At one time it was held that the expression "fact discovered" in the section is restricted to a physical or material fact which can be perceived by the senses, and that it does not include a mental fact (see Sukhan v. Crown MANU/LA/0128/1929 : AIR 1929 Lah 344; Rex v. Ganee AIR 1932 Bom 286). Now it is fairly settled that the expression "fact discovered" includes not only the physical object produced, but also the place from which it is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this (see Palukuri Kotayya v. Emperor; Udai Bhan v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0144/1962 : AIR 1962 SC 1116).

131. Analysing the earlier decisions, in Anter Singh v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/0096/2004 : (2004) 10 SCC 657, the Court summed up the various requirements of Section 27 as follows:

(1) The fact of which evidence is sought to be given must be relevant to the issue. It must be borne in mind that the provision has nothing to do with the question of relevancy. The relevancy of the fact discovered must be established according to the prescriptions relating to relevancy of other evidence connecting it with the crime in order to make the fact discovered admissible.

(2) The fact must have been discovered.

(3) The discovery must have been in consequence of some information received from the accused and not by the accused's own act.

(4) The person giving the information must be accused of any offence.

(5) He must be in the custody of a police officer.

(6) The discovery of a fact in consequence of information received from an accused in custody must be deposed to.

(7) Thereupon only that portion of the information which relates distinctly or strictly to the fact discovered can be proved. The rest is inadmissible.

132. In State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu alias Afsan Guru MANU/SC/0465/2005 : (2005) 11 SCC 600, the Court referred to the initial prevalence of divergent views and approaches and the same being put to rest in Pulukuri Kottaya case (supra) which has been described as locus classicus, relying on the said authority, observed:

120. To a great extent the legal position has got crystallised with the rendering of this decision. The authority of the Privy Council's decision has not been questioned in any of the decisions of the highest court either in the pre- or post- independence era. Right from the 1950s, till the advent of the new century and till date, the passages in this famous decision are being approvingly quoted and reiterated by the Judges of this Apex Court. Yet, there remain certain grey areas as demonstrated by the arguments advanced on behalf of the State.

133. Explaining the said facet, the Court proceeded to state thus:

121. The first requisite condition for utilising Section 27 in support of the prosecution case is that the investigating police officer should depose that he discovered a fact in consequence of the information received from an accused person in police custody. Thus, there must be a discovery of fact not within the knowledge of police officer as a consequence of information received. Of course, it is axiomatic that the information or disclosure should be free from any element of compulsion. The next component of Section 27 relates to the nature and extent of information that can be proved. It is only so much of the information as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered that can be proved and nothing more. It is explicitly clarified in the section that there is no taboo against receiving such information in evidence merely because it amounts to a confession. At the same time, the last clause makes it clear that it is not the confessional part that is admissible but it is only such information or part of it, which relates distinctly to the fact discovered by means of the information furnished. Thus, the information conveyed in the statement to the police ought to be dissected if necessary so as to admit only the information of the nature mentioned in the section. The rationale behind this provision is that, if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of the information supplied, it affords some guarantee that the information is true and can therefore be safely allowed to be admitted in evidence as an incriminating factor against the accused. As pointed out by the Privy Council in Kottaya case:

clearly the extent of the information admissible must depend on the exact nature of the fact discovered and the information must distinctly relate to that fact.

Elucidating the scope of this section, the Privy Council speaking through Sir John Beaumont said:

Normally the section is brought into operation when a person in police custody produces from some place of concealment some object, such as a dead body, a weapon, or ornaments, said to be connected with the crime of which the informant is accused.

134. Expatriating the idea further, the Court proceeded to lay down:

121. ...We have emphasised the word "normally" because the illustrations given by the learned Judge are not exhaustive. The next point to be noted is that the Privy Council rejected the argument of the counsel appearing for the Crown that the fact discovered is the physical object produced and that any and every information which relates distinctly to that object can be proved. Upon this view, the information given by a person that the weapon produced is the one used by him in the commission of the murder will be admissible in its entirety. Such contention of the Crown's counsel was emphatically rejected with the following words:

If this be the effect of Section 27, little substance would remain in the ban imposed by the two preceding sections on confessions made to the police, or by persons in police custody. That ban was presumably inspired by the fear of the legislature that a person under police influence might be induced to confess by the exercise of undue pressure. But if all that is required to lift the ban be the inclusion in the confession of information relating to an object subsequently produced, it seems reasonable to suppose that the persuasive powers of the police will prove equal to the occasion, and that in practice the ban will lose its effect.

Then, Their Lordships proceeded to give a lucid exposition of the expression "fact discovered" in the following passage, which is quoted time and again by this Court:

In Their Lordships' view it is fallacious to treat the 'fact discovered' within the section as equivalent to the object produced; the fact discovered embraces the place from which the object is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this, and the information given must relate distinctly to this fact. Information as to past user, or the past history, of the object produced is not related to its discovery in the setting in which it is discovered. Information supplied by a person in custody that 'I will produce a knife concealed in the roof of my house' does not lead to the discovery of a knife; knives were discovered many years ago. It leads to the discovery of the fact that a knife is concealed in the house of the informant to his knowledge, and if the knife is proved to have been used in the commission of the offence, the fact discovered is very relevant. But if to the statement the words be added 'with which I stabbed A' these words are inadmissible since they do not relate to the discovery of the knife in the house of the informant.

122. The approach of the Privy Council in the light of the above exposition of law can best be understood by referring to the statement made by one of the accused to the police officer. It reads thus:

...About 14 days ago, I, Kottaya and people of my party lay in wait for Sivayya and others at about sunset time at the corner of Pulipad tank. We, all beat Beddupati China Sivayya and Subayya, to death. The remaining persons, Pullayya, Kottaya and Narayana ran away. Dondapati Ramayya who was in our party received blows on his hands. He had a spear in his hands. He gave it to me then. I hid it and my stick in the rick of Venkatanarasu in the village. I will show if you come. We did all this at the instigation of Pulukuri Kottaya.

The Privy Council held that:

14. The whole of that statement except the passage 'I hid it (a spear) and my stick in the rick of Venkatanarasu in the village. I will show if you come' is inadmissible.

There is another important observation at para 11 which needs to be noticed. The Privy Council explained the probative force of the information made admissible Under Section 27 in the following words:

Except in cases in which the possession, or concealment, of an object constitutes the gist of the offence charged, it can seldom happen that information relating to the discovery of a fact forms the foundation of the prosecution case. It is only one link in the chain of proof, and the other links must be forged in manner allowed by law.

135. In the instant case, the recoveries made when the accused persons were in custody have been established with certainty. The witnesses who have deposed with regard to the recoveries have remained absolutely unshaken and, in fact, nothing has been elicited from them to disprove their creditworthiness. Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel for the State, has not placed reliance on any kind of confessional statement made by the accused persons. He has only taken us through the statement to show how the recoveries have taken place and how they are connected or linked with the further investigation which matches the investigation as is reflected from the DNA profiling and other scientific evidence. The High Court, while analyzing the facet of Section 27 of the Evidence Act, upheld the argument of the prosecution relying on State, Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Sunil and Anr. MANU/SC/0735/2000 : (2001) 1 SCC 652, Sunil Clifford Daniel v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0740/2012 : (2012) 11 SCC 205, Ashok Kumar Chaudhary and Ors. v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/7611/2008 : (2008) 12 SCC 173, and Pramod Kumar v. State (Government of NCT of Delhi) MANU/SC/0624/2013 : (2013) 6 SCC 588.

136. On a studied scrutiny of the arrest memo, statements recorded Under Section 27 and the disclosure made in pursuance thereof, we find that the recoveries of articles belonging to the informant and the victim from the custody of the accused persons cannot be discarded. The recovery is founded on the statements of disclosure. The items that have been seized and the places from where they have been seized, as is limpid, are within the special knowledge of the accused persons. No explanation has come on record from the accused persons explaining as to how they had got into possession of the said articles. What is argued before us is that the said recoveries have really not been made from the accused persons but have been planted by the investigating agency with them. On a reading of the evidence of the witnesses who constituted the investigating team, we do not notice anything in this regard. The submission, if we allow ourselves to say so, is wholly untenable and a futile attempt to avoid the incriminating circumstance that is against the accused persons.

Test Identification Parade and the identification in Court

137. Now, we shall deal with the various facets of test identification parade. Upon application moved by P.W. 80, SI Pratibha Sharma, Investigating Officer, P.W. 17, Sandeep Garg, Metropolitan Magistrate, conducted the Test Identification Parade (TIP) for the accused Ram Singh (since deceased), who refused to participate in the TIP proceedings on the ground that he was shown to the witnesses in the police station. Since accused Ram Singh died during the trial, neither the trial court nor the High Court delved into this aspect regarding the refusal of accused Ram Singh to participate in the TIP proceedings.

138. On 19.12.2012, P.W. 17, Sandeep Garg, Metropolitan Magistrate initiated TIP proceedings for accused Vinay and Pawan, but they refused to participate in the TIP. In the TIP proceedings, the Metropolitan Magistrate has recorded the following:

.....accused Pawan Kumar @ Kalu and accused Vinay, both refused to participate in the TIP proceedings and stated that they had committed a horrible crime. I recorded their refusal and gave certificate.

139. Vinay and Pawan refused to participate in the TIP proceedings without giving any reason whatsoever. TIP of accused Mukesh was conducted on 20.12.2012 at Tihar Jail by P.W. 17, Sandeep Garg, in which P.W. 1, Awninder Pratap, identified accused Mukesh. In his testimony, the informant, P.W. 1, has identified his signature at point 'A' in TIP proceedings with respect to the accused Mukesh, Ex. P.W. 1/E. The High Court has pointed out that there was no serious challenge to the TIP proceedings of accused Mukesh in the cross- examination of the Metropolitan Magistrate, P.W. 17, or even the Investigating Officer, P.W. 80. TIP of accused Akshay was conducted on 26.12.2012 at Central Jail No. 4, Tihar Jail, where the informant, P.W. 1, identified accused Akshay. P.W. 1 identified his signature at point 'A' in the TIP proceedings of accused Akshay marked as Ex. P.W. 1/F. The accused Mukesh and Akshay were already identified in the TIP proceedings by the informant. Test Identification Proceedings corroborate and lend assurance to the dock identification of accused Mukesh and Akshay by the informant, P.W. 1.

140. Criticizing the TIP, it is urged by the learned Counsel for the Appellants and Mr. Hegde, learned amicus curiae, that refusal to participate may be considered as circumstance but it cannot by itself lead to an inference of guilt. It is also argued that there is material on record to show that the informant had the opportunity to see the accused persons after they were arrested. It is necessary to state here that TIP does not constitute substantive evidence. It has been held in Matru alias Girish Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0141/1971 : (1971) 2 SCC 75 that identification test is primarily meant for the purpose of helping the investigating agency with an assurance that their progress with the investigation of an offence is proceeding on the right lines.

141. In Santokh Singh v. Izhar Hussain and Anr. MANU/SC/0165/1973 : (1973) 2 SCC 406, it has been observed that the identification can only be used as corroborative of the statement in court.

142. In Malkhansingh v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0445/2003 : (2003) 5 SCC 746, it has been held thus:

7. ...The identification parades belong to the stage of investigation, and there is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure which obliges the investigating agency to hold, or confers a right upon the accused to claim a test identification parade. They do not constitute substantive evidence and these parades are essentially governed by Section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Failure to hold a test identification parade would not make inadmissible the evidence of identification in court. The weight to be attached to such identification should be a matter for the courts of fact. ...

And again:

16. It is well settled that the substantive evidence is the evidence of identification in court and the test identification parade provides corroboration to the identification of the witness in court, if required. However, what weight must be attached to the evidence of identification in court, which is not preceded by a test identification parade, is a matter for the courts of fact to examine. ...

143. In this context, reference to a passage from Visveswaran v. State represented by S.D.M. MANU/SC/0352/2003 : (2003) 6 SCC 73 would be apt. It is as follows:

11. ...The identification of the accused either in test identification parade or in Court is not a sine qua non in every case if from the circumstances the guilt is otherwise established. Many a time, crimes are committed under the cover of darkness when none is able to identify the accused. The commission of a crime can be proved also by circumstantial evidence. ...

144. In Sidhartha Vashisht alias Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi) MANU/SC/0268/2010 : (2010) 6 SCC 1, the Court, after referring to Munshi Singh Gautam v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0964/2004 : (2005) 9 SCC 631, Harbhajan Singh v. State of J & K MANU/SC/0127/1975 : (1975) 4 SCC 480 and Malkhansingh (supra), came to hold that the proposition of law is quite clear that even if there is no previous TIP, the court may appreciate the dock identification as being above board and more than conclusive.

145. In the case at hand, the informant, apart from identifying the accused who had made themselves available in the TIP, has also identified all of them in Court. On a careful scrutiny of the evidence on record, we are of the convinced opinion that it deserves acceptance. Therefore, we hold that TIP is not dented.

Admissibility and acceptability of the dying declaration of the prosecutrix:

146. At this stage, it would be immensely seemly to appreciate the acceptability and reliability of the dying declaration made by the prosecutrix.

147. The circumstances in this case, as is noticeable, makes the prosecution bring in three dying declarations. Mr. Sharma and Mr. Singh have been extremely critical about the manner in which they have been recorded and have highlighted the irreconcilable facets. In quintessence, their submission is that the three dying declarations have been contrived and deserve to be kept out of consideration. Mr. Hegde, learned friend of the Court, contends that the dying declarations do not inspire confidence, for variations in them relate to the number of assailants, the description of the bus, the identity of the accused and the overt acts committed by them. It is contended that the three dying declarations made by the prosecutrix vary from each other and the said variations clearly reveal the inconsistencies and the improvements in the dying declarations mirror the improvements that are brought about in P.W. 1's statements and the progress of the investigation.

148. The sudden appearance of the name 'Vipin' in the third dying declaration after the recording of Akshay's disclosure statement where he mentions a person named Vipin is alleged to be indicative of the fact that the dying declaration is, in fact, doubtful. It is contended that the prosecution has failed to explain 'Vipin', his connection with the crime and his elimination from the case. The vapourisation of Vipin has to be considered against the backdrop of repeated assertions by the prosecution that every word of the three dying declarations is correct, consciously made and worthy of implicit belief. Learned Senior Counsel has also submitted that apart from the inconsistencies, the numerous procedural irregularities in the recording of the declarations make it suspicious. In this regard, lack of an independent assessment of the mental fitness of the prosecutrix, while recording the second dying declaration, has been highlighted. The multiple choice questions in the third and final dying declaration are being nomenclatured as leading questions and it is asserted that they have not been satisfactorily explained by the prosecution. Further, the evidence by the doctors does not cure the impropriety of lack of an independent assessment by the SDM while recording her second dying declaration.

149. It is submitted that if at all any dying declaration is to be relied on, it should only be the first dying declaration made on 16.12.2012 and recorded by P.W. 49, Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, and the said dying declaration only states that there were 4 to 5 persons on the bus. It is further stated that the prosecutrix was raped by a minimum of 2 men and that she does not remember intercourse after that. It is, therefore, unsafe to proceed on the assumption that all six persons on the bus committed rape upon the prosecutrix within a span of 21 minutes.

150. Keeping the aforesaid criticism in view, we proceed to analyse the acceptability and reliability of the dying declarations. Firstly, when the prosecutrix was brought to the Gynae Casualty about 11:15 p.m., she gave a brief account of the incident to P.W. 49, Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, in her MLC on 16.12.2012. P.W. 49, Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, has deposed that on the night of 16.12.2012 about 11:15 p.m., the prosecutrix was brought to the casualty by a PCR constable and that she gave a brief history of the incident. P.W. 49, Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, recorded the same in her writing in the Casualty/GRR paper, i.e., Ex. P.W. 49/A.

151. In the instant case, as per the history told by the prosecutrix to Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, it was a case of gang rape in a moving bus by 4- 5 persons when the prosecutrix was returning after watching a film with her friend. She was slapped on her face, kicked on her abdomen and bitten over lips, cheek, breast and vulval region. She remembers intercourse two times and rectal penetration also. She was also forced to suck their penis but she refused. All this continued for half an hour and then she was thrown off from the moving bus with her friend. We have already stated about the injuries which were noted by Dr. Rashmi Ahuja in Ex. P.W. 49/A.

152. The relevant statement of the prosecutrix in the Medico Legal Expert, Ex. P.W. 49/A, reads as under:

...she went to watch movie with her boyfriend, Awnidra: she left the movie at 8:45 PM and was waiting for bus at Munirka Bus stop where a bus going to Bahadurgarh, stopped and both climbed the bus at around 9 PM. At around 9:05- 9:10 PM, around 4- 5 people in the bus started misbehaving with the girl, took her to the rear side of bus while her boyfriend was taken to the front of bus, where both were beaten up badly. Her clothes were torn over and she was beaten up, slapped repeatedly over her face, bitten over lips, cheeks, breast and Mons veneris. She was also kicked over her abdomen again and again. She was raped by at least minimum of two men, she does not remember intercourse after that. She had rectal penetration. They also forced their penis into her mouth and forced her to suck which she refused and was beaten up instead. This continued for half hour and she was then thrown away from the moving bus with her boyfriend. She was taken up by PCR Van and brought to GRR. She has history of intercourse with her boyfriend about two months back. (willfully)

153. P.W. 49, Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, had noticed number of injuries on the person of the prosecutrix and the same were noted in Ex. P.W. 49/B as under:

154. P.W. 50, Dr. Raj Kumar Chejara, and the surgery team operated the prosecutrix in the intervening night of 16/17.12.2012 and the operative findings have also been earlier noted.

155. P.W. 50, Dr. Raj Kumar Chejara, has proved the OT notes as Ex. P.W. 50/A bearing the signature of Dr. Gaurav and his own note in this regard is Ex. P.W. 50/B. As per his opinion, the condition of the small and large bowels were extremely bad for any definitive repair. After performing the operation, the patient was shifted to ICU. The first surgery was damage control surgery and it was expected that unhealthy bowel would be there.

156. The second surgery was performed on 19.12.2012 by him along with his operating team consisting of Prof. Sunil Kumar, Dr. Pintu and Dr. Siddharth. From the gynaecological side, Dr. Aruna Batra and Dr. Rekha Bharti were present along with anaesthetic team. The findings were as under:

Abdominal findings:

1. Rectum was longtitudinally torn on anterior aspect in continuation with perineal tear. This tear was continuing upward involving sigmoid colon, descending colon which was splayed open. The margin were edematous. There were multiple longitudinal tear in the mucosa of recto sigmoid area. Transverse colon was also torn and gangrenous. Hepatic flexure , ascending colon & caecum were gangrenous with multiple perforations at many places. Terminal ileum approximately one and a half feet loosely hanging in the abdominal cavity, it was avulsed from its mesentery and was non- viable. Rest of the small bowel was non- existent with only patches of mucosa at places and borders of the mesentery was contused. The contused mesentery borders initially appeared (during 1st surgery) as contused small bowel.

2. Jejunostomy stoma was gangrenous for approximately 2cm.

3. Stomach and duodenum was distended but healthy.

157. Dying Declaration was recorded by SDM, Smt. Usha Chaturvedi, P.W. 27, on 21.12.2012. The medical record of the prosecutrix shows that the prosecutrix was not found fit for recording of her statement until 21st December, 2012 about 6:00 p.m. when the prosecutrix was declared fit for recording statement by P.W. 52, Dr. P.K. Verma. P.W. 52 had examined the prosecutrix and found her to be fit, conscious, oriented and meaningfully communicative for making statement vide his endorsement at point 'A' on application, Ex. P.W. 27/DB. The second dying declaration, Ex. P.W. 27/A, was recorded by P.W. 27, Smt. Usha Chaturvedi, SDM. This dying declaration is an elaborate one where the prosecutrix has described the incident in detail including the act of insertion of rod in her private parts. She also stated that the accused were addressing each other with names like, "Ram Singh, Thakur, Raju, Mukesh, Pawan and Vinay".

158. The relevant portion of the dying declaration Ex. P.W. 27/A recorded by P.W. 27, SDM, is extracted below:

Q.1. What is your name, your father's name and your residential address?

Ans. My name is prosecutrix and my father name is Sh. ..... and we reside at .....

Q.2 Do you study or work somewhere?

Ans. I have completed my BPT (Bachelor of Physiotherapy).

Q.3 On which date and place, the incident occurred?

Ans. This happened on 16.12.12 in the midst of at about 9:00- 9:15 p.m.

Ans. I had gone to watch the movie i.e. "Life of Pi" 6.40- 8.30 p.m. to Select City Mall, Saket on the day of incident along with my friend Sh. Awninder S/o. Sh. Bhanu Pratap, R/o House No. 14, Bair Sarai, New Delhi- 16. We took an Auto Rikshaw from there and reached Munirka.

Q.5 How did you go further?

Ans. After that, I saw white colored bus whose conductor had been calling the passengers of Palam Mor and Dwarka. I had to go to Dwarka, Sec- 1. That is why both of us, I and my friend boarded the bus and gave twenty rupees (Rs. 20/-) at the fare of Rs. 10/- per passenger.

Q.6. Were there passengers inside the bus?

Ans. When I entered the bus there were 6- 7 passengers. Assuming them to be passenger, we sat outside the cabin of the bus.

Q.7 Provide the detailed information about the bus?

Ans. The bus was of the white colour and the seats were of the red colour. Yellow coloured curtains were fixed. The glasses of the bus were black and were closed. I could see outside from inside but nothing could be seen inside from outside. In one row of the bus there were two seats and in the other row, there were three seats.

Q.8 After entering the bus, did you suspect anything seeing the people occupying the seats there?

Ans. I had suspected (something amiss) but the conductor had already taken the (fare) money and the bus had started. So, I kept sitting there.

Q.9 What did happen afterwards? Please inform in detail.

Ans. After five minutes when the bus climbed the bridge of Malai Mandir, the Conductor closed the door of the bus and switched off the light inside the bus. And they came to my friend and started hitting and beating him. Three four (3- 4) people caught hold of him and the remaining people dragged me to the rear portion of the bus and tore off my clothes and took turns to rape me. They hit me on my stomach with an iron rod and bit me on my whole body. Prior to that, they snatched from me and my friend all our articles i.e. mobile phone, purse, credit card, debit card, watches, etc. All six of the persons committed oral, vaginal, anal rape on me. These people inserted the iron rod into my body through my vagina and rectum and also pulled it out. They extracted the internal private part of my body through inserting hand and iron rod into my private parts and caused hurt to me. Six persons kept committing rape on me for approximately one hour by turns. The drivers kept changing in the moving bus so that they can rape me. .....

P.W. 27 Usha Chaturvedi, SDM, when examined and recorded the dying declaration of prosecutrix come off in her dying declaration she state as under:

159. The clinical notes, Ex. P.W. 50/C, and notes prepared by the gynaecology team were proved as Ex. P.W. 50/D. The gynaecological notes were prepared on actual examination of the patient on the operation table during the surgery. P.W. 50 further operated the prosecutrix on 23.12.2012 for peritoneal lavage and placement of drain under general anaesthesia and his notes are Ex. P.W. 50/E.

160. Statement of the prosecutrix was recorded by P.W. 30, Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate, vide Ex. P.W. 30/D. On 24.12.2012, an application for recording the statement of the prosecutrix Under Section 164 Code of Criminal Procedure was moved by the Investigating Officer, which is exhibited as Ex. P.W. 30/A and, thereafter, the learned Metropolitan Magistrate fixed the date for recording of the statement as 25.12.2012 at 9:00 a.m. at Safdarjung Hospital vide his endorsement at Point "P" to "P- 1" on Ex. P.W. 30/A. On 25.12.2012, P.W. 28, Dr. Rajesh Rastogi, at 12:40 p.m., declared the prosecutrix fit for recording statement through gestures. She was found conscious, oriented, co- operative, comfortable and meaningfully communicative to make a statement through non- verbal gestures.

161. On 25.12.2012, the prosecutrix's statement, Ex. P.W. 30/D, Under Section 164 Code of Criminal Procedure was recorded by P.W. 30, Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate, in the form of questions by putting her multiple choice questions. This statement was made through gestures and writings. The statement recorded by P.W. 30 which ultimately became another dying declaration reads as under:

25/12/2012 at 01.00 p.m. at ICU Safdarjung Hospital. Statement of Prosecutrix (Name and Particulars withheld) As opined by the attending doctors the Prosecutrix is not in position to speak but she is otherwise conscious and oriented and responding by way of gestures, so I am putting question in such a manner so as to enable to narrate the incident by way of gesture or writing.

Ans: 2

As per Ex. P.W. 30/D, this answer was written by the prosecutrix in her own hand.

162. On 26.12.2012, the condition of the prosecutrix was examined and it was decided to shift her abroad for further treatment. Notes in this regard are Ex. P.W. 50/F bearing the signatures of Dr. Raj Kumar, Dr. Sunil Kumar, Dr. Aruna Batra and Dr. P.K. Verma.

163. The prosecutrix died at Mount Elizabeth Hospital, Singapore on 29.12.2012 at 4:45 a.m. The cause of death is stated as sepsis with multi organ failure following multiple injuries, as is evincible from Ex. P.W. 34/A.

164. Learned Counsel for the Appellants have objected to the admissibility of the dying declarations available on record mainly on the ground that they are not voluntary but tutored. It is argued that the second and third dying declarations are nothing but a product of tutoring and are non- voluntary and the only statement recorded is the MLC, Ex. P.W. 49/A and Ex. P.W. 49/B, prepared immediately after the incident, wherein the prosecutrix has neither named any of the accused nor mentioned the factum of iron rod being used by the accused persons and the act of the accused in committing unnatural offence. It is further alleged that the prosecutrix could not have given such a lengthy dying declaration running upto four pages on 21.12.2012 as she was on oxygen support. P.W. 27 has deposed that the prosecutrix was on oxygen support at the time of recording the second dying declaration. It is further contended that it must be taken into account that ever since the prosecutrix was admitted to the hospital, she was continuously on morphine and, thus, she could not have gained consciousness. The second dying declaration has been further assailed on the ground of being recorded at the behest of SDM, P.W. 27, instead of a Magistrate and that too after a delay of nearly four days. The third dying declaration, Ex. P.W. 30/D, recorded by the Metropolitan Magistrate, P.W. 30, on 25.12.2012 through gestures and writings is controverted by putting forth the allegations of false medical fitness certificate and absence of videography.

165. Another argument advanced by the learned Counsel raising suspicion on the genuineness of the second and third dying declarations is that the dates on which the dying declarations were recorded have been manipulated. The counsel asseverated that the second dying declaration, i.e., Ex. P.W. 27/A, purported to have been recorded by P.W. 27 on 21.12.2012 was, in fact, recorded on the previous day as evidenced from the overwriting of the date in Ex. P.W. 27/B. The counsel also pointed to the overwriting of the date in the third dying declaration, i.e., Ex. P.W. 30/C, recorded by P.W. 30. It is propounded by them that the date was modified thrice in order to fit in the fake chain of circumstances contrived by the prosecution.

166. Resisting the said submissions, Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel for the State, astutely contended that all the three dying declarations recorded at the instance of the prosecutrix are consistent and well corroborated by medical evidence as well as by P.W. 1's testimony, and other scientific evidence. The prosecutrix's first statement, Ex. P.W. 49/A, given to P.W. 49 was only a brief account of the heinous act committed on her and in that state of shock, nothing more could be legitimately expected of her. Only after receiving medical attention, she was declared fit to record statement and on 21.12.2012, P.W. 52 had examined the prosecutrix and found her to be fit, conscious, oriented and meaningfully communicative for making statement vide his endorsement at point 'A' on application Ex. P.W. 27/DB. P.W. 27, Smt. Usha Chaturvedi, SDM, recorded her statement in which the prosecutrix described the incident in detail and also named the accused persons. In fact, P.W. 27 has also deposed before the court that the prosecutrix was in a fit mental condition to give the statement on 21.12.2012. Moreover, the prosecutrix's third statement, Ex. P.W. 30/D, which was recorded in question- answer form through gestures and writings by P.W. 30, Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate, is consistent with the earlier two dying declarations and that adds to the credibility and conclusively establishes reliability.

167. In the first dying declaration made to P.W. 49, Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, recorded in Ex. P.W. 49/A and in MLC, Ex. P.W. 49/B, due to her medical condition, though the prosecutrix broadly described the incident of gang rape committed on her and injuries caused to her and P.W. 1, yet she failed to vividly describe the incident of inserting iron rod, etc. As soon as the prosecutrix was brought to the hospital, she gave a brief description of the incident to P.W. 49, Dr. Rashmi Ahuja. As it appears from the record, the prosecutrix had lost sufficient quantity of blood due to which she was drowsy and could only give a brief account of the incident and injuries caused to her and the informant. Even though the prosecutrix has given only a brief account of the occurrence, yet she was responding to verbal command and hence, the same is natural and trustworthy and furthermore, Ex. P.W. 49/A is also consistent with the other dying declarations.

168. By virtue of the second dying declaration recorded as Ex. P.W. 27/A on 21.12.2012 about 9:10 p.m. by the SDM, Smt. Usha Chaturvedi, the exact details of the incident and the injuries caused to the prosecutrix have come on record. The learned SDM has satisfied herself that the prosecutrix was fit to make the statement. While recording the dying declaration of the prosecutrix, Ex. P.W. 27/A, Dr. P.K. Verma, P.W. 52, had found her conscious, oriented and meaningfully communicative vide his endorsement at point 'A' on the application, Ex. P.W. 27/DB. It was only thereafter that P.W. 27, Smt. Usha Chaturvedi, SDM, recorded the statement, Ex. P.W. 27/A, of the prosecutrix. The prosecutrix not only signed it but even wrote the date and time in this statement. She narrated the entire incident specifying the role of each accused; gang rape/unnatural sex committed upon her; the injuries caused in her vagina and rectum by use of iron rod and by inserting of hands by the accused; description of the bus, robbery and lastly throwing of both the victims out of the moving bus, Ex. P1, in naked condition at the footfall of Mahipalpur flyover.

169. As it appears from the record, P.W. 27, after recording the statement of the prosecutrix, as contained in Ex. P.W. 27/A, forwarded the statement alongwith the forwarding letter, Ex. P.W. 27/B, to the ACP, Vasant Vihar undersigned by herself. Ex. P.W. 27/A, which contains the statement of the prosecutrix, is duly signed by the prosecutrix on all the pages and also signed by P.W. 27, SDM. P.W. 27 has certified in Ex. P.W. 27/A that the signature of the prosecutrix was obtained in her presence at 9:00 p.m. on 21.12.2012 after which she has signed the same. No overwriting of date is evidenced in Ex. P.W. 27/A. However, so far as the forwarding letter, i.e., Ex. P.W. 27/B, is concerned, the date mentioned by P.W. 27 after putting her signature is overwritten as 21.12.2012. When cross- examined on this aspect, P.W. 27 has stated that she had herself overwritten the date and, thus, overruled the possibility of any falsification of the document at the behest of the investigating team. P.W. 27 explained the overwriting of date as a 'human error' and the same has been rightly construed by the trial court and accepted by the High Court as a complete explanation. The relevant statement of P.W. 27 is as under:

It is correct that in Ex. P.W. 27/B there is an over writing on the date under my signature. VOL: It was a human error. The statement was recorded on 21- 12- 2012, so for all purpose this date will be 21- 12- 2012.

170. Agian on 25.12.2012 on an application, Ex. P.W. 28/A, though Dr. P.K. Verma, P.W. 52, opined that the prosecutrix was unable to speak as she was having endotracheal tube, i.e., in larynx and trachea and was on ventilator, yet P.W. 28, Dr. Rajesh Rastogi, declared her to be conscious, oriented and meaningfully communicative through non- verbal gestures and fit to give statement. P.W. 30, Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate, also satisfied himself qua fitness and ability of the prosecutrix to give rational answers by gestures to his multiple choice questions. The opinion of the doctors obtained prior to recording of the statements, Ex. P.W. 27/A and Ex. P.W. 30/D- 1, as also the observations made by the SDM and Metropolitan Magistrate qua her fitness cannot be disregarded completely on the basis of surmises of the learned Counsel for the Appellants.

171. Adverting to the third dying declaration, Ex. P.W. 30/C, we are able to appreciate that P.W. 30, after recording the statement of the prosecutrix, has signed the document. The date mentioned therein is overwritten as 25.12.2012. However, in the forwarding note to the investigating officer which is contained in continuation of the prosecutrix's statement annexed as Ex. P.W. 30/C, the signature and date mentioned by P.W. 30 is very clear and no overwriting is visible. Be it noted, P.W. 30 was never cross- examined on the aspect of overwriting of the date in Ex. P.W. 30/C. The learned Counsel has, for the first time, raised this issue before us merely to substantiate his suspicion of manipulation on the part of the prosecution. We hold that pointing at insignificant errors is inconsequential so far as cogent evidence produced by the prosecution stand on a terra firma. It is beyond human prudence to discard the detailed and well signed statements of the prosecutrix, in spite of clear date put by herself, merely because P.W. 30 erred at one point of time in correctly recording the date. Moreover, the testimony of P.W. 52, Dr. P.K. Verma, who was incharge of the ICU and in whose supervision the entire treatment and recording of statements by the prosecutrix was done, cannot be discarded on account of meagre technical errors.

172. Another line of argument developed by the learned Counsel is that there has been failure on the part of the prosecutrix to disclose the names of any of the accused persons in the brief history given by her to the doctor in MLC, Ex. P.W. 49/A, and so, her dying declarations, Ex. P.W. 27/A and Ex. P.W. 30/D- 1, where she had given the names of the accused persons, are tutored versions and cannot form the basis of conviction. This argument, however, is completely unjustified in the light of the medical condition of the prosecutrix when she was brought to the hospital. As per the records, the prosecutrix was brought to the hospital in a state of sub- consciousness and sheer trauma. In her MLC, Ex. P.W. 49/B, her condition is described as drowsy responding only to verbal commands and hence, not completely alert due to the shock and excessive loss of blood. The prosecutrix was declared fit to make statements, Ex. P.W. 27/A and Ex. P.W. 30/D- 1, only when she was operated thrice. Her dying declarations, Ex. P.W. 27/A and Ex. P.W. 30/D- 1, also stand corroborated by the medical evidence as well as the testimony of P.W. 1.

173. A dying declaration is an important piece of evidence which, if found veracious and voluntary by the court, could be the sole basis for conviction. If a dying declaration is found to be voluntary and made in fit mental condition, it can be relied upon even without any corroboration. However, the court, while admitting a dying declaration, must be vigilant towards the need for 'Compos Mentis Certificate' from a doctor as well as the absence of any kind of tutoring. In Laxman v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0707/2002 : (2002) 6 SCC 710, the law relating to dying declaration was succinctly put in the following words:

3. ... A dying declaration can be oral or in writing and any adequate method of communication whether by words or by signs or otherwise will suffice provided the indication is positive and definite. In most cases, however, such statements are made orally before death ensues and is reduced to writing by someone like a Magistrate or a doctor or a police officer. When it is recorded, no oath is necessary nor is the presence of a Magistrate absolutely necessary, although to assure authenticity it is usual to call a Magistrate, if available for recording the statement of a man about to die. There is no requirement of law that a dying declaration must necessarily be made to a Magistrate and when such statement is recorded by a Magistrate there is no specified statutory form for such recording. Consequently, what evidential value or weight has to be attached to such statement necessarily depends on the facts and circumstances of each particular case. What is essentially required is that the person who records a dying declaration must be satisfied that the deceased was in a fit state of mind. Where it is proved by the testimony of the Magistrate that the declarant was fit to make the statement even without examination by the doctor the declaration can be acted upon provided the court ultimately holds the same to be voluntary and truthful. A certification by the doctor is essentially a rule of caution and therefore the voluntary and truthful nature of the declaration can be established otherwise.

174. The legal position regarding the admissibility of a dying declaration is settled by this Court in several judgments. This Court, in Atbir v. Government of NCT of Delhi MANU/SC/0576/2010 : (2010) 9 SCC 1, taking into consideration the earlier judgment of this Court in Paniben v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0346/1992 : (1992) 2 SCC 474 and another judgment of this Court in Panneerselvam v. State of Tamil Nadu MANU/SC/7726/2008 : (2008) 17 SCC 190, has exhaustively laid down the following guidelines with respect to the admissibility of dying declaration:

22. (i) Dying declaration can be the sole basis of conviction if it inspires the full confidence of the court.

(ii) The court should be satisfied that the deceased was in a fit state of mind at the time of making the statement and that it was not the result of tutoring, prompting or imagination.

(iii) Where the court is satisfied that the declaration is true and voluntary, it can base its conviction without any further corroboration.

(iv) It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that the dying declaration cannot form the sole basis of conviction unless it is corroborated. The rule requiring corroboration is merely a rule of prudence.

(v) Where the dying declaration is suspicious, it should not be acted upon without corroborative evidence.

(vi) A dying declaration which suffers from infirmity such as the deceased was unconscious and could never make any statement cannot form the basis of conviction.

(vii) Merely because a dying declaration does not contain all the details as to the occurrence, it is not to be rejected.

(viii) Even if it is a brief statement, it is not to be discarded.

(ix) When the eyewitness affirms that the deceased was not in a fit and conscious state to make the dying declaration, medical opinion cannot prevail.

(x) If after careful scrutiny, the court is satisfied that it is true and free from any effort to induce the deceased to make a false statement and if it is coherent and consistent, there shall be no legal impediment to make it the basis of conviction, even if there is no corroboration.

175. It is well settled that dying declaration can form the sole basis of conviction provided that it is free from infirmities and satisfies various other tests. In a case where there are more than one dying declaration, if some inconsistencies are noticed between one and the other, the court has to examine the nature of inconsistencies as to whether they are material or not. The court has to examine the contents of the dying declarations in the light of the various surrounding facts and circumstances. In Shudhakar v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0590/2012 : (2012) 7 SCC 569, this Court, after referring to the landmark decisions in Laxman (supra) and Chirra Shivraj v. State of Andhra Pradesh MANU/SC/0992/2010 : (2010) 14 SCC 444, has dealt with the issues arising out of multiple dying declarations and has gone to the extent of declining the first dying declaration and accepting the subsequent dying declarations. The Court found that the first dying declaration was not voluntary and not made by free will of the deceased; and the second and third dying declarations were voluntary and duly corroborated by other prosecution witnesses and medical evidence. In the said case, the accused was married to the deceased whom he set ablaze by pouring kerosene in the matrimonial house itself. The smoke arising from the house attracted the neighbours who rushed the victim to the hospital where she recorded three statements before dying. In her first statement given to the Naib Tehsildar, she did not implicate her husband, but in the second and third statements, which were also recorded on the same day, she clearly stated that the accused poured kerosene on her and set her on fire. The accused was convicted Under Section 302 Indian Penal Code. In this regard, the Court made the following observations:

21. Having referred to the law relating to dying declaration, now we may examine the issue that in cases involving multiple dying declarations made by the deceased, which of the various dying declarations should be believed by the court and what are the principles governing such determination. This becomes important where the multiple dying declarations made by the deceased are either contradictory or are at variance with each other to a large extent. The test of common prudence would be to first examine which of the dying declarations is corroborated by other prosecution evidence. Further, the attendant circumstances, the condition of the deceased at the relevant time, the medical evidence, the voluntariness and genuineness of the statement made by the deceased, physical and mental fitness of the deceased and possibility of the deceased being tutored are some of the factors which would guide the exercise of judicial discretion by the court in such matters.

176. Recently, a two- Judge Bench of this Court in Sandeep and Anr. v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0654/2015 : (2015) 11 SCC 154 : (2015) 2 SCR 1999 SC was faced with a similar situation where the first dying declaration given to a police officer was more elaborate and the subsequent dying declaration recorded by the Judicial Magistrate lacked certain information given earlier. After referring to the two dying declarations, this Court examined whether there was any inconsistency between the two dying declarations. After examining the contents of the two dying declarations, this Court held that there was no inconsistency between the two dying declarations and non- mention of certain features in the dying declaration recorded by the Judicial Magistrate does not make both the dying declarations incompatible.

177. In this regard, it will be useful to reproduce a passage from Babulal and Ors. v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0855/2003 : (2003) 12 SCC 490 wherein the value of dying declaration in evidence has been stated:

7. ... A person who is facing imminent death, with even a shadow of continuing in this world practically non- existent, every motive of falsehood is obliterated. The mind gets altered by most powerful ethical reasons to speak only the truth. Great solemnity and sanctity is attached to the words of a dying person because a person on the verge of death is not likely to tell lies or to concoct a case so as to implicate an innocent person. The maxim is "a man will not meet his Maker with a lie in his mouth" (nemo moriturus praesumitur mentire). Mathew Arnold said, "truth sits on the lips of a dying man". The general principle on which the species of evidence is admitted is that they are declarations made in extremity, when the party is at the point of death, and when every hope of this world is gone, when every motive to falsehood is silenced and mind induced by the most powerful consideration to speak the truth; situation so solemn that law considers the same as creating an obligation equal to that which is imposed by a positive oath administered in a court of justice. ...

178. Dealing with oral dying declaration, a two- Judge Bench in Prakash and Anr. v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0005/1993 : (1992) 4 SCC 225 has ruled thus:

11. ... In the ordinary course, the members of the family including the father were expected to ask the victim the names of the assailants at the first opportunity and if the victim was in a position to communicate, it is reasonably expected that he would give the names of the assailants if he had recognised the assailants. In the instant case there is no occasion to hold that the deceased was not in a position to identify the assailants because it is nobody's case that the deceased did not know the accused persons. It is therefore quite likely that on being asked the deceased would name the assailants. In the facts and circumstances of the case the High Court has accepted the dying declaration and we do not think that such a finding is perverse and requires to be interfered with. ...

179. In Vijay Pal v. State (Government of NCT of Delhi) MANU/SC/0230/2015 : (2015) 4 SCC 749, after referring to the Constitution Bench decision in Laxman (supra) and the two- Judge Bench decisions in Babulal (supra) and Prakash (supra), the Court held:

22. Thus, the law is quite clear that if the dying declaration is absolutely credible and nothing is brought on record that the deceased was in such a condition, he or she could not have made a dying declaration to a witness, there is no justification to discard the same. In the instant case, PW 1 had immediately rushed to the house of the deceased and she had told him that her husband had poured kerosene on her. The plea taken by the Appellant that he has been falsely implicated because his money was deposited with the in- laws and they were not inclined to return, does not also really breathe the truth, for there is even no suggestion to that effect.

23. It is contended by the learned Counsel for the Appellant that when the deceased sustained 100% burn injuries, she could not have made any statement to her brother. In this regard, we may profitably refer to the decision in Mafabhai Nagarbhai Raval v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0425/1992 : (1992) 4 SCC 69 wherein it has been held that a person suffering 99% burn injuries could be deemed capable enough for the purpose of making a dying declaration. The Court in the said case opined that unless there existed some inherent and apparent defect, the trial court should not have substituted its opinion for that of the doctor. In the light of the facts of the case, the dying declaration was found to be worthy of reliance.

24. In State of M.P. v. Dal Singh MANU/SC/0550/2013 : (2013) 14 SCC 159, a two- Judge Bench placed reliance on the dying declaration of the deceased who had suffered 100% burn injuries on the ground that the dying declaration was found to be credible.

180. In the case at hand, the first statement of the prosecutrix was recorded by P.W. 49, Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, on the night of 16.12.2012 and the second statement was recorded by the SDM on 21.12.2012 after a delay of five days. In the present facts and circumstances of the case, we do not find that there is any inconsistency in the dying declarations to raise suspicion as to the genuinity and voluntariness of the subsequent dying declarations. The prosecutrix had been under constant medical attention and was reported to be fit for giving a statement on 21.12.2012 only. On the night of the incident itself, she underwent first surgery conducted by P.W. 50, Dr. Raj Kumar Chejara, Surgical Specialist, Department of Surgery, Safdarjung Hospital, New Delhi and his surgery team comprising of himself, Dr. Gaurav and Dr. Piyush, and the prosecutrix was shifted to ICU. The second surgery was performed on her on 19.12.2012. Ex. P.W. 50/C, OT notes dated 19.12.2012 show that the prosecutrix was put on ventilation after the surgery. Considering the facts and circumstances and the law laid down above, a mere omission on the part of the prosecutrix to state the entire factual details of the incident in her very first statement does not make her subsequent statements unworthy, especially when her statements are duly corroborated by other prosecution witnesses including the medical evidence.

181. The contention that no dying declaration could have been recorded on 21.12.2012 as the prosecutrix was administered morphine does not hold good as P.W. 52, Dr. P.K. Verma, has deposed that morphine was injected at 6:00 p.m. on 20.12.2012 and its effect would have lasted for only 3- 4 hours. P.W. 52 has denied that the prosecutrix was unconscious and had difficulty in breathing at the time when she made the statement to P.W. 27, SDM, on 21.12.2012.

182. Yet another objection raised by the learned Counsel for the Appellants concerning the medical fitness of the prosecutrix, while recording the third dying declaration is that when P.W. 30, Metropolitan Magistrate, Pawan Kumar, recorded the dying declaration of the prosecutrix, she was not in a position to speak as per the endorsement made by P.W. 52, Dr. P.K. Verma, and, therefore, no weight could be attached to the dying declaration recorded by P.W. 30. In this regard, reliance is placed upon Ex. P.W. 30/B1. This contention was raised before the High Court as well as the trial court and while considering the contention, we find that:

On 25.12.2012, application [Ex. P.W. 30/B] moved by P.W. 80 S.I. Pratibha Sharma between 9:30 a.m. to 10:00 a.m. seeking opinion regarding fitness of prosecutrix to get statement recorded. P.W. 52 Dr. P.K. Verma examined the prosecutrix and opined at 12:35 p.m. that "patient has endotracheal tube in place (i.e. in her larynx and trachea) and was on ventilator and hence she could not speak.

183. P.W. 28, Dr. Rajesh Rastogi, opined vide Ex. P.W. 28/A at 12:40 p.m. on 25.12.2012 that the prosecutrix was conscious, cooperative, meaningfully communicative through non- verbal gestures, oriented and fit to give statement. P.W. 28, Dr. Rajesh Rastogi, examined the prosecutrix around 12 noon and finished it by 12:00- 12:30 p.m. On 25.12.2012 at 12:35 p.m., Dr. P.K. Verma had endorsed on the document Exhibit P.W. 30/B that the victim could not speak as she had endotracheal tube in place (that is, in larynx and trachea) and was on ventilator. However, subsequently, at 12:40 p.m. on the same day, P.W. 28, Dr. Rajesh Rastogi, had endorsed on the said document, Ex. P.W. 30/B, to the effect that the victim was conscious, cooperative, meaningfully communicative, oriented, responding through non- verbal gestures and fit to give statement. The learned Counsel contended that it is inconceivable that the prosecutrix who was on life support system at 12:35 p.m. could be opined to be conscious, cooperative and fit to give statement within five minutes, i.e., at 12:40 p.m.

184. The said contention, as we find, has been appropriately dealt with by both courts below by adverting to the depositions of P.W. 52, Dr. P.K. Verma, and P.W. 28, Dr. Rajesh Rastogi. Regarding the fit mental condition of the prosecutrix and as to the different endorsements made by P.W. 52, Dr. P.K. Verma, and P.W. 28, Rajesh Rastogi, P.W. 52 was questioned suggesting that the prosecutrix was not in a fit mental condition to give the dying declaration. P.W. 52 has clearly deposed in his cross- examination that he had never endorsed that the victim was unfit to give statement at 12:35 p.m., rather he had said that she was on ventilator and hence, could not speak. The aforesaid explanation of P.W. 52, Dr. P.K. Verma, who was incharge of the ICU in Safdarjung Hospital at the relevant time makes it limpid that even though the prosecutrix was not able to speak, yet she was conscious and oriented and was in a position to make the statement by gestures.

185. The contention that the third dying declaration made through gestures lacks credibility and that the same ought to have been videographed, in our view, is totally sans substance. The dying declaration recorded on the basis of nods and gestures is not only admissible but also possesses evidentiary value, the extent of which shall depend upon who recorded the statement. In the instant case, the dying declaration was recorded by P.W. 30, Mr. Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate. A perusal of the questions and the simple answers by way of multiple choice put to the prosecutrix is manifest of the fact that those questions and answers were absolutely simple, effective and indispensable. The dying declaration recorded by P.W. 30, Ex. P.W. 30/D, though by nods and gestures and writings, inspires confidence and has been rightly relied upon by the trial Court as well as the High Court. Videography of the dying declaration is only a measure of caution and in case it is not taken care of, the effect of it would not be fatal for the case and does not, in any circumstance, compel the court to completely discard that particular dying declaration.

186. In Meesala Ramakrishan v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/0709/1994 : (1994) 4 SCC 182, this Court, while admitting the dying declaration made through gestures, made the following observations:

20. ... that dying declaration recorded on the basis of nods and gestures is not only admissible but possesses evidentiary value, the extent of which shall depend upon who recorded the statement, what is his educational attainment, what gestures and nods were made, what were the questions asked - - whether they were simple or complicated - - and how effective or understandable the nods and gestures were.

187. In B. Shashikala v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/0052/2004 : (2004) 13 SCC 249, it was observed that:

13. The evidence of PW 8 is absolutely clear and unambiguous as regards the manner in which he recorded the statement of the deceased with the help of PW 4. It is also evident that he also has knowledge of Hindi although he may not be able to read and write or speak in the said language. His evidence also shows that he has taken all precautions and care while recording the statement. Furthermore, he had the opportunity of recording the statement of the deceased upon noticing her gesture. The court in a situation of this nature is also entitled to take into consideration the circumstances which were prevailing at the time of recording the statement of the deceased.

188. Appreciating the third dying declaration recorded on the basis of gestures, nods and writings on the base of aforesaid pronouncements, we have no hesitation in holding that the dying declaration made through signs, gestures or by nods are admissible as evidence, if proper care was taken at the time of recording the statement. The only caution the court ought to take is that the person recording the dying declaration is able to notice correctly as to what the declarant means by answering by gestures or nods. In the present case, this caution was aptly taken, as the person who recorded the prosecutrix's dying declaration was the Metropolitan Magistrate and he was satisfied himself as regards the mental alertness and fitness of the prosecutrix, and recorded the dying declaration of the prosecutrix by noticing her gestures and by her own writings.

189. Considering the facts and circumstances of the present case and upon appreciation of the evidence and the material on record, in our view, all the three dying declarations are consistent with each other and well corroborated with other evidence and the trial court as well as the High Court has correctly placed reliance upon the dying declarations of the prosecutrix to record the conviction.

Insertion of the iron rod:

190. Presently, we shall advert to the contentions raised as regards the use of iron rod for causing recto- vaginal injury. The case of the prosecution is that the accused, in most inhumane and unfeeling manner, inserted iron rod in the rectum and vagina of the prosecutrix and took out the internal organs of the prosecutrix from the vaginal and anal opening while pulling out the said iron rod. They also took out the internal organs of the prosecutrix by inserting iron rod in the vagina of the prosecutrix thereby causing dangerous injuries. Two iron rods, Ex. P- 49/1 and Ex. P- 49/2, were recovered vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 74/G by the Investigating Officer, P.W. 80, at the instance of accused Ram Singh (since deceased). As per Ex. P.W. 49/A, the internal injuries sustained by the victim were like vaginal tear, profused bleeding from vagina, rectal tear communicating with vaginal tear and other injuries.

191. P.W. 50, Dr. Raj Kumar Chejara, and the surgery team operated the prosecutrix in the intervening night of 16/17.12.2012 and the operative findings are as under:

a. collection of around 500ml of blood in peritoneal cavity

b. stomach pale,

c. duodenum contused

d. jejunum contused & bruised at whole of the length and lacerated & transected at many places. First transaction was 5cm away from DJ junction. Second one was 2 feet from the DJ, after that there was transaction and laceration at many places. Jejunal loop was of doubtful viability. Lieum - whole lieum was totally contused and it was of doubtful viability. Distal ileum was completely detached from the mesentery till ICJ (ileocaecal junction). It was completely devascularized.

e. Large bowel was also contused, bruised and of doubtful viability. Descending colon was lacerated vertically downward in such a manner that it was completely opened.

f. Sigmoid colon & rectum was lacerated at many places. Linearlyu, mucosa was detached completely at places, a portion of it around 10cm was prolapsing through perineal wound.

g. Liver and spleen was normal.

h. Both sides retro peritoneal (posterior wall of the abdomen) haematoma present.

i. Mesentery and omentum was totally contused and bruised.

j. Vaginal tear present, recto vaginal septum was completely torn.

192. P.W. 80, SI Pratibha Sharma, the Investigating Officer, deposed before the trial court that accused Ram Singh had led her inside the bus, Ex. P1 and had taken out two iron rods from the shelf of the driver's cabin. One of the rods, 59 cm in length, was primarily used for changing punctured tyres; it was hooked from one end and chiseled from the other. It also had multiple serrations on both the ends. The other rod was of silver colour, hollow and 70 cm long. This rod formed part of a hydraulic jack and was used as its lever, Ex. P.W. 49/G. The rods were blood stained and the recovered rods were sealed with the seal of PS and were deposited in the Malkhana. On 24.12.2012, the said iron rods along with the sample seal were sent to CFSL, CBI for examination through SI Subhash, P.W. 74, vide RC No. 178/21/12, proved as Ex. P.W. 77/R. The DNA report prepared by Dr. B.K. Mohapatra, P.W. 45, suggests that the DNA profile developed from the bloodstains from both the iron rods is consistent with the DNA profile of the prosecutrix.

193. Mr. Sharma, learned Counsel for the Appellants, has countered the prosecution case on the use of iron rods. He has drawn support from the medical records and the testimony of the witnesses as also the prosecutrix to assert the aforesaid submission. He submits that the prosecution has fabricated the story as regards the use of iron rods only to falsely implicate all the accused in the death of the prosecutrix. The defence has refuted the use of iron rods by the accused on the ground that the informant as well as the prosecutrix did not mention about the use of iron rods in their first statements. The main contention of the accused is that the prosecutrix herself, in her first statement given to Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, P.W. 49, Ex. P.W. 49/A, failed to disclose the use of iron rods. He relies on the absence of the words 'iron rods' in Ex. P.W. 49/A to fortify this submission. He contends that as recorded by P.W. 49, the prosecutrix was in a fit state of mind for she even gave her residential address after undergoing the traumatic experience, but she failed to mention that the accused persons also used the iron rods on her, a fact that would have had a bearing on her treatment.

194. The aforesaid proponement is not sustainable as MLC, Ex. P.W. 49/A, of the prosecutrix suggests that she was brought to the hospital in a traumatized state with grievous injuries and she was cold and clammy, i.e., whitish (due to vasoconstriction) and had lost a lot of blood. As per Ex. P.W. 49/A, the prosecutrix was sure of intercourse to have been committed twice along with rectal penetration whereafter she did not remember intercourse. It is worthy to note that she was oscillating between consciousness and unconsciousness at the time of the incident and there was loss of lot of blood by the time she had reached the hospital which is evident from Ex. P.W. 49/B- MLC. A victim who has just suffered a ghastly and extremely frightening incident cannot be expected to immediately come out of the state of shock and state the finest details of the incident. The subsequent dying declarations of the prosecutrix corroborated by the medical evidence cannot be disregarded merely on the ground that the use of iron rods is not substantiated by the prosecutrix's first statement.

195. The gravity and hideousness of the injuries caused to the prosecutrix, as has already been discussed above, clearly shows the use of iron rods by the accused. The injuries caused to the prosecutrix by incessantly and abominably injuring her private parts using the concerned iron rods were so grave that death was the inevitable consequence. As already noted, both the iron rods, Ex. P- 49/1 and Ex. P- 49/2, were recovered at the instance of accused Ram Singh from inside the concerned bus. The DNA profile developed from the blood stains obtained from the iron rods is also consistent with the DNA profile of the prosecutrix. In such circumstances, merely because the finger prints of the accused were not obtained from the iron rods, it cannot be concluded that the accused were not linked with the concerned iron rods. Accused Ram Singh himself had the iron rods recovered to the Investigating Officer. Furthermore, the dying declaration of the prosecutrix, which is highly reliable, clearly establishes the horrendous use of iron rods by the accused persons.

196. The iron rods were sent for forensic examination to the CFSL. The DNA profile developed from the blood stains obtained from the iron rods recovered at the instance of accused Ram Singh was found to be of female origin and were found to be consistent with the DNA profile of the prosecutrix. Hence, the factum of insertion of iron rods in the private parts of the prosecutrix is also fortified by the scientific evidence.

197. P.W. 1, in his chief examination, deposed that he was severely assaulted by the accused with iron rods on his head and the rest of his body. It is submitted that as per MLC of P.W. 1, Ex. P.W. 51/A, the nature of injuries sustained by P.W. 1 were simple. It is contended that if P.W. 1 was beaten with the iron rod in the manner alleged by him, he would have sustained more serious injuries. It is canvassed that P.W. 1 sustained only simple injuries which leads to an inference that the iron rod was not used in the manner stated by the prosecution. Of course, as per Ex. P.W.

51/A, P.W. 1 sustained simple injuries but as seen from Ex. P.W. 51/A, there was also nasal bleeding from his nose and P.W. 1 was also vomiting. Merely because the injuries sustained by P.W. 1 were opined to be of simple nature, the use of iron rods cannot be doubted.

198. Learned Counsel for the Appellants further stressed on the point that P.W. 1 neither in his MLC, Ex. P.W. 51/A, nor in his complaint, Ex. P.W. 1/A, mentioned the use of iron rod; the description of bus or the names of the accused. In this regard, it has to be kept in mind that the purpose of FIR is mainly to set the criminal law in motion and not to lay down every minute detail and the entire gamut of the evidence relating to the case and, therefore, non- mention of use of iron rods in the FIR does not remotely create a dent in the case of the prosecution. When the subsequent statements of the prosecutrix well corroborated by the medical evidence are available, it is completely immaterial that the statement of P.W. 1 does not mention the use of iron rods. Thus, P.W. 1's omission to state the factum of use of iron rods in his complaint or MLC is not fatal to the case of the prosecution.

199. It is apposite to state here that non- mention of the use of iron rods in P.W. 1's statement has been a ground for giving rise to suspicion of his testimony. We find it difficult to comprehend as to how P.W. 1 could have been aware of any use of iron rods against the prosecutrix. P.W. 1 was being held by the accused towards the front of the bus, while the prosecutrix was being raped at the rear side of the bus and the lights of the bus also had been turned off. His statement in his complaint, Ex. P.W. 1/A, that he heard the prosecutrix shouting and crying and that her voice was oscillating is consistent with the narration of facts as also the medical records.

200. The second statement of the prosecutrix recorded in Ex. P.W. 27/A by P.W. 27, Smt. Usha Chaturvedi, has detailed the account of the entire incident specifying the role of each accused; gang rape/unnatural sex committed upon her; and the injuries caused in her vagina and rectum by use of iron rod and by inserting of hands by the accused are mentioned. This statement, in fact, bears the date and signature of the prosecutrix and records that the accused committed gang rape on her, inserted iron rod in the vagina and through anal opening causing injuries to the internal organs of the prosecutrix. The subsequent statement of the prosecutrix also affirms the above facts. That apart, as per the medical opinion Ex. P.W. 49/G given by P.W. 49, the recto-vaginal injury of the prosecutrix could be caused by the rods recovered from the bus.

Anatomy argument

201. Learned Counsel for the Appellants also submitted that if the rods purported to be used had actually been inserted through the vagina, it would have first destroyed the uterus before the intestines were pulled out. It was submitted that there were no rods related injuries in her uterus and medical science too does not assist the prosecution in their claim that the iron rods were used as a weapon for penetration. Mr. Sharma placed reliance on:

1. the first OT notes, Ex. P.W. 50/A that were made following the first operation of the prosecutrix on 17.12.2012 and where the following was recorded:

uterus, B/L tubes and ovaries seen and healthy

2. the case sheet of the operation conducted on 19.12.2012, presented as Ex. P.W. 50/D, wherein the following was recorded:

Gynae findings

... Cx, vaginal vault and ant vaginal wall (H)...

3. the post- mortem report, Ex. P.W. 34/A, that was prepared in Mount Elizabeth Hospital, Health Science Authority, Singapore, by the Autopsy doctor, Dr. Paul Chui on 29.12.2012 and where the following was recorded:

Uterus, Tubes and Ovaries

Uterus, tubes and ovaries were present in their normal anatomical positions. The uterus measured 8 cm x 5 cm x 3.5 cm. Thin fibrinopurulent adhesions were present on the serosal surfaces of the uterus and the adnexae. Cervix appeared normal and the os was closed. There were no cervical erosions and no haemorrhages on the intra- vaginal aspect of the cervix. Cut sections showed thin endometrium and normal myometrium. Tubes were normal. Both ovaries were normal in size. Cut sections of both ovaries showed corpus lutea, the largest of which was present in the right ovary.

The learned Counsel for the Appellants submit that that if the doctors in the surgery team did not find the uterus damaged, then it cannot be claimed that the rod was inserted in her private parts and intestines were pulled out.

202. The aforesaid submission can be singularly rejected without much discussion on the foundation that a question to that effect was not put to the doctors in their respective cross-examinations. However, instead of summary rejection, we shall deal with it for the sake of our satisfaction and also to meet the contention. While it may be so that the uterus, tubes and the cervix were not damaged, that does not mean that the intestines could not have been damaged as they have been. It stands to reason based on common understanding and medical science to allay this contention. First, it is nowhere the stance that the rod was inserted only through the vagina. The prosecutrix herself had stated in her dying declarations that she was raped through the vagina as also the anus, Ex. P.W. 27/A. The anus is directly connected to the intestines via the rectum and, thus, deep penetration by use of a rod or other long object could have caused injuries to the bowels/intestines.

203. To appreciate the above contention, it is necessary to understand the anatomy and position of the uterus. We may profitably refer to the following excerpts from 'Gray's Anatomy: Descriptive and Applied', 34th Edn. [Orient Longman Publication] at pages 1572 and 1579:

THE UTERUS: The uterus, or womb, is a hollow, thick- walled, muscular organ situated in the lesser pelvis between the urinary bladder in front and the rectum behind. Into its upper part the uterine tubes open one on each side, while below, its cavity communicates with that of the vagina. When the ova are discharged from the ovaries, they are carried to the uterine cavity through the uterine tubes. If an ovum be fertilized it embeds itself in the uterine wall and is normally retained in the uterus until prenatal development is completed, the uterus undergoing changes in size and structure to accommodate itself to the needs of the growing embryo. After parturition the uterus returns almost to its former condition, though it is somewhat larger than in the virgin state. For general descriptive purposes the adult virgin uterus is taken as the type form.

In the virgin state the uterus is flattened from before backwards and is pear- shaped, with the narrow end directed downwards and backwards. It lies between the bladder below and in front, and the sigmoid colon and rectum above and behind, and is completely below the level of the pelvic inlet.

The long axis of the uterus usually lies approximately in the axis of the pelvic inlet (p. 440), but as the organ is freely movable its position varies with the state of distension of the bladder and rectum. Except when much displaced by a distended bladder, it forms almost a right angle with the vagina, since the axis of the vagina correspond to the axes of the cavity and outlet of the lesser pelvis (p. 440)" (at page 1572)

THE VAGINA: The vagina is a canal which extends from the vestibule, or cleft between the labia minora, to the uterus, and is situated, behind the bladder and urethra, and in front of the rectum and anal canal; it is directed upwards and backwards, its axis forming with that of the uterus an angle of over ninety degrees, opening forwards..." (at page 1579)

.....

Relations: Its anterior surface is concave, and in relation with the base of the bladder, and with the urethra. Its posterior surface is convex, and connected to the anterior wall of the rectum, for the lower three- fourths of its extent....

The aforesaid excerpts establish that the vagina and uterus are almost at right angles to each other and the rectum is only separated by a wall of tissue. The pelvic cavity as set forth in the diagram in the book supports the same.

204. The exhibits relating to injuries may be noted. OT notes from 17.12.2012 and 19.12.2012 read as under:

OT Notes:

PW 50/B: Call received from Dr. Gaurav and Dr. Piyush at approx. 4.00 a.m. from noty OT.

Immediately reached OT and reviewed the details of internal injury (as mentioned in OT notes) the condition of the small and large bowel extremely bad for any definitive repair. The condition explained to the mother of the patient and the police officials present. Case discussed with Dr. S.K. Jain. Int. I/C telephonically.

205. The operative findings which are seen from the examination done by the Gynaecologist and the Surgeons are:

Perineal

• Abdominal findings: Rectum is longitudinally torn on anterior aspect in continuation with tear. This tear is continuing upward involving sigmoid colon descending colon which is splayed open. The margins are edematous.

• There are multiple longitudinal tear in the mucosa of rectosigmoid area.

• Transverse colon was also torn and gangrenous.

• Hepatic flexure ascending colon and caecum were gangrenous and multiple perforation at many places.

• Terminal item approximately 1 1/2 feet loosely hanging in the abdominal cavity. It was avulsed from its mesentery and was nonviable.

• Rest of small bowel was nonenlistend with only patens of mucosa at places and border of the mesentery was contused. This contused mesentery border initially appeared (during first surgery) as contused small bowel.

• Jejunostomy stoma was gangrenous for approximately 2 cm.

• Stomach and duodenum was distended but healthy.

Surgical Procedure:

• Resection of gangrenous terminal ileum, caecum, appendix, ascending colon, hepatic flexure and transverse colon was done.

• Resection of necrotic jejunal stoma with closure of duodenojejunal flexure in two layers by 3- 0 viaeny.

• Tube gastrostomy was added as another decompressive measures (28 size apotere tube was used) Tube gastrostomy was brought and from previous jejunostomy site.

• Abdominal drain placed in pelvis.

- Rectal sheath closed by using No. 1 prolene interrupted sutures.
- Skin closed by using 1- 0 nylon.
- Perineal wound packed with Betadine soaked gauze piece.
- T- Bandage applied
- ASD done for abdominal wound.
- Patient tolerated procedure and was shifted back to ICU- I.

8. Rest of the treatment as advised by ICU team.

206. From the nature of the injuries noted in the OT Notes, the rectum was longitudinally torn and transverse colon was torn. From the Post- Mortem Certificate, the uterus was found in position (no injuries to uterus). If the rod was inserted in the vagina, having regard to the fact that the injury within the vagina was only in the posterior surface, it indicates that the rod was pushed inside with a downward force and not upward (which could have resulted in injury to the uterus) and it perhaps tunneled its way through the vagina into the rectal cavity and the bowels. Therefore, merely because no injuries to the uterus of the victim were noticed, that does not lead to the conclusion that iron rod was not used. Thus, the submission that has been raised with immense enthusiasm and ambition to create a concavity in the case of the prosecution on this score deserves to be repelled and we do so.

Analysis of evidence pertaining to DNA

207. Having dealt with the aspect pertaining to insertion of rod, it is apposite to advert to the medical evidence and post mortem report. We have, while dealing with other aspects, referred to certain aspects including DNA analysis of medical evidence but the same requires to be critically dealt with as the prosecution has placed heavy reliance upon it.

208. DNA is the abbreviation of Deoxyribo Nucleic Acid. It is the basic genetic material in all human body cells. It is not contained in red blood corpuscles. It is, however, present in white corpuscles. It carries the genetic code. DNA structure determines human character, behavior and body characteristics. DNA profiles are encrypted sets of numbers that reflect a person's DNA makeup which, in forensics, is used to identify human beings. DNA is a complex molecule. It has a double helix structure which can be compared with a twisted rope 'ladder'.

209. The nature and characteristics of DNA had been succinctly explained by Lord Justice Phillips in Regina v. Alan James Doheny & Gary Adams 1997 (1) Criminal Appeal Reports 369. In the above case, the accused were convicted relying on results obtained by comparing DNA profiles obtained from a stain left at the scene of the crime with DNA profiles obtained from a sample of blood provided by the Appellant. In the above context, with regard to DNA, the following was stated by Lord Justice Phillips:

Deoxyribonucleic acid, or DNA, consists of long ribbon- like molecules, the chromosomes, 46 of which lie tightly coiled in nearly every cell of the body. These chromosomes - 23 provided from the mother and 23 from the father at conception, form the genetic blueprint of the body. Different sections of DNA have different identifiable and discrete characteristics. When a criminal leaves a stain of blood or semen at the scene of the crime it may prove possible to extract from that crime stain sufficient sections of DNA to enable a comparison to be made with the same sections extracted from a sample of blood provided by the suspect. This process is complex and we could not hope to describe it more clearly or succinctly than did Lord Taylor C.J. in the case of Deen (transcript:December 21, 1993), so we shall gratefully adopt his description.

The process of DNA profiling starts with DNA being extracted from the crime stain and also from a sample taken from the suspect. In each case the DNA is cut into smaller lengths by specific enzymes. The fragments produced are sorted according to size by a process of electrophoresis. This involves placing the fragments in a gel and drawing them electromagnetically along a track through the gel. The fragments with smaller molecular weight travel further than the heavier ones. The pattern thus created is transferred from the gel onto a membrane. Radioactive DNA probes, taken from elsewhere, which bind with the sequences of most interest in the sample DNA are then applied. After the excess of the DNA probe is washed off, an X- ray film is placed over the membrane to record the band pattern. This produces an auto radiograph which can be photographed. When the crime stain DNA and the sample DNA from the suspect have been run in separate tracks through the gel, the resultant auto- radiographs can be compared. The two DNA profiles can then be said either to match or not.

210. In the United States, in an early case Frye v. United States 54 App. D.C. 46 (1923), it was laid down that scientific evidence is admissible only if the principle on which it is based is substantially established to have general acceptance in the field to which it belonged. The US Supreme Court reversed the above formulation in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc. MANU/USSC/0103/1993 : 113 S.CT. 2786 (1993) stating thus:

11. Although the Frye decision itself focused exclusively on "novel" scientific techniques, we do not read the requirements of Rule 702 to apply specially or exclusively to unconventional evidence. Of course, well- established propositions are less likely to be challenged than those that are novel, and they are more handily defended. Indeed, theories that are so firmly established as to have attained the status of scientific law, such as the laws of thermodynamics, properly are subject to judicial notice under Fed. Rule Evid. 201.

13. This is not to say that judicial interpretation, as opposed to adjudicative fact finding, does not share basic characteristics of the scientific endeavor: "The work of a judge is in one sense enduring and in another ephemeral... In the endless process of testing and retesting, there is a constant rejection of the dross and a constant retention of whatever is pure and sound and fine." B. Cardozo, The nature of the Judicial Process 178, 179 (1921).

211. The principle was summarized by Blackmun, J., as follows:

To summarize: "general acceptance" is not a necessary precondition to the admissibility of scientific evidence under the Federal Rules of Evidence, but the Rules of Evidence- - especially Rule 702- - do assign to the trial judge the task of ensuring that an expert's testimony both rests on a reliable foundation and is relevant to the task at hand. Pertinent evidence based on scientifically valid principles will satisfy those demands.

The inquiries of the District Court and the Court of Appeals focused almost exclusively on "general acceptance," as gauged by publication and the decisions of other courts. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is vacated and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

212. After the above judgment, the DNA Test has been frequently applied in the United States of America. In District Attorney's Office for the Third Judicial District et al. v. William G. Osborne 129 Supreme Court Reporter 2308, Chief Justice Roberts of the Supreme Court of United States, while referring to the DNA Test, stated as follows:

DNA testing has an unparalleled ability both to exonerate the wrongly convicted and to identify the guilty. It has the potential to significantly improve both the criminal justice system and police investigative practices. The Federal Government and the States have recognized this, and have developed special approaches to ensure that this evidentiary tool can be effectively incorporated into established criminal procedure- usually but not always through legislation.

Modern DNA testing can provide powerful new evidence unlike anything known before. Since its first use in criminal investigations in the mid- 1980s, there have been several major advances in DNA technology, culminating in STR technology. It is now often possible to determine whether a biological tissue matches a suspect with near certainty. While of course many criminal trials proceed without any forensic and scientific testing at all, there is no technology comparable to DNA testing for matching tissues when such evidence is at issue.

213. DNA technology as a part of Forensic Science and scientific discipline not only provides guidance to investigation but also supplies the Court accrued information about the tending features of identification of criminals. The recent advancement in modern biological research has regularized Forensic Science resulting in radical help in the administration of justice. In our country also like several other developed and developing countries, DNA evidence is being increasingly relied upon by courts. After the amendment in the Code of Criminal Procedure by the insertion of Section 53A by Act 25 of 2005, DNA profiling has now become a part of the statutory scheme. Section 53A relates to the examination of a person accused of rape by a medical practitioner.

214. Similarly, Under Section 164A inserted by Act 25 of 2005, for medical examination of the victim of rape, the description of material taken from the person of the woman for DNA profiling is must. Section 53A Sub- section (2) as well as Section 164(A) Sub- section (2) are to the following effect:

Section 53A. Examination of person accused of rape by Medical Practitioner.-

(1)... ... ...

(2) The registered medical practitioner conducting such examination shall, without delay, examine such person and prepare a report of his examination giving the following particulars, namely:

(i) the name and address of the accused and of the person by whom he was brought,

(ii) the age of the accused,

(iii) marks of injury, if any, on the person of the accused,

(iv) the description of material taken from the person of the accused for DNA profiling, and

(v) other material particulars in reasonable detail.

Section 164A. Medical Examination of the victim of rape.-

(1)... ... ...

(2) The registered medical practitioner, to whom such woman is sent, shall, without delay, examine her person and prepare a report of his examination giving the following particulars, namely:

(i) the name and address of the woman and of the person by whom she was brought;

(ii) the age of the woman;

(iii) the description of material taken from the person of the woman for DNA profiling;

(iv) marks of injury, if any, on the person of the woman;

(v) general mental condition of the woman; and

(vi) other material particulars in reasonable detail.

215. This Court had the occasion to consider various aspects of DNA profiling and DNA reports. K.T. Thomas, J. in Kamti Devi (Smt.) and Anr. v. Poshi Ram MANU/SC/0335/2001 : (2001) 5 SCC 311, observed:

10. We may remember that Section 112 of the Evidence Act was enacted at a time when the modern scientific advancements with deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) as well as ribonucleic acid (RNA) tests were not even in contemplation of the legislature. The result of a genuine DNA test is said to be scientifically accurate. ...

216. In Pantangi Balarama Venkata Ganesh v. State of Andhra Pradesh MANU/SC/1306/2009 : (2009) 14 SCC 607, a two- Judge Bench had explained as to what is DNA in the following manner:

41. Submission of Mr. Sachar that the report of DNA should not be relied upon, cannot be accepted. What is DNA? It means:

Deoxyribonucleic acid, which is found in the chromosomes of the cells of living beings is the blueprint of an individual. DNA decides the characteristics of the person such as the colour of the skin, type of hair, nails and so on. Using this genetic fingerprinting, identification of an individual is done like in the traditional method of identifying fingerprints of offenders. The identification is hundred per cent precise, experts opine.

There cannot be any doubt whatsoever that there is a need of quality control. Precautions are required to be taken to ensure preparation of high molecular weight DNA, complete digestion of the samples with appropriate enzymes, and perfect transfer and hybridization of the blot to obtain distinct bands with appropriate control. (See article of Lalji Singh, Centre for Cellular and Molecular Biology, Hyderabad in DNA profiling and its applications.) But in this case there is nothing to show that such precautions were not taken.

42. Indisputably, the evidence of the experts is admissible in evidence in terms of Section 45 of the Evidence Act, 1872. In cross- examination, PW 46 had stated as under:

If the DNA fingerprint of a person matches with that of a sample, it means that the sample has come from that person only. The probability of two persons except identical twins having the same DNA fingerprint is around 1 in 30 billion world population.

217. In Santosh Kumar Singh v. State Through CBI MANU/SC/0801/2010 : (2010) 9 SCC 747, which was a case of a young girl who was raped and murdered, the DNA reports were relied upon by the High Court which were approved by this Court and it was held thus:

71. We feel that the trial court was not justified in rejecting the DNA report, as nothing adverse could be pointed out against the two experts who had submitted it. We must, therefore, accept the DNA report as being scientifically accurate and an exact science as held by this Court in Kamti Devi v. Poshi Ram (supra). In arriving at its conclusions the trial court was also influenced by the fact that the semen swabs and slides and the blood samples of the Appellant had not been kept in proper custody and had been tampered with, as already indicated above. We are of the opinion that the trial court was in error on this score. We, accordingly, endorse the conclusions of the High Court on Circumstance 9.

218. In Inspector of Police, Tamil Nadu v. John David MANU/SC/0461/2011 : (2011) 5 SCC 509, a young boy studying in MBBS Course was brutally murdered by his senior. The torso and head were recovered from different places which were identified by the father of the deceased. For confirming the said facts, the blood samples of the father and mother of the deceased were taken which were subject to DNA test. From the DNA, the identification of the deceased was proved. Paragraph 60 of the decision is reproduced below:

60. ... The said fact was also proved from the DNA test conducted by PW 77. PW 77 had compared the tissues taken from the severed head, torso and limbs and on scientific analysis he has found that the same gene found in the blood of P.W. 1 and Baby Ponnusamy was found in the recovered parts of the body and that therefore they should belong to the only missing son of PW 1.

219. In Krishan Kumar Malik v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0718/2011 : (2011) 7 SCC 130, in a gang rape case when the prosecution did not conduct DNA test or analysis and matching of semen of the Appellant- accused with that found on the undergarments of the prosecutrix, this Court held that after the incorporation of Section 53- A in Code of Criminal Procedure, it has become necessary for the prosecution to go in for DNA test in such type of cases. The relevant paragraph is reproduced below:

44. Now, after the incorporation of Section 53- A in the Code of Criminal Procedure w.e.f. 23.06.2006, brought to our notice by the learned Counsel for the Respondent State, it has become necessary for the prosecution to go in for DNA test in such type of cases, facilitating the prosecution to prove its case against the accused. Prior to 2006, even without the aforesaid specific provision in Code of Criminal Procedure the prosecution could have still restored to this procedure of getting the DNA test or analysis and matching of semen of the Appellant with that found on the undergarments of the prosecutrix to make it a foolproof case, but they did not do so, thus they must face the consequences.

220. In Surendra Koli v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Ors. MANU/SC/0119/2011 : (2011) 4 SCC 80, the Appellant, a serial killer, was awarded death sentence which was confirmed by the High Court. While confirming the death sentence, this Court relied on the result of the DNA test conducted on the part of the body of the deceased girl. Para 12 is reproduced below:

12. The DNA test of Rimpa by CDFD, a pioneer institute in Hyderabad matched with that of blood of her parents and brother. The doctors at AIIMS have put the parts of the deceased girls which have been recovered by the doctors of AIIMS together. These bodies have been recovered in the presence of the doctors of AIIMS at the pointing out by the accused Surendra Koli. Thus, recovery is admissible Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act.

221. In Mohammed Ajmal Mohammad Amir Kasab alias Abu Mujahid v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0681/2012 : (2012) 9 SCC 1, the accused was awarded death sentence on charges of killing large number of innocent persons on 26th November, 2008 at Bombay. The accused with others had come from Pakistan using a boat 'Kuber' and several articles were recovered from 'Kuber'. The stains of sweat, saliva and other bodily secretions on those articles were subjected to DNA test and the DNA test matched with several accused. The Court observed:

333. It is seen above that among the articles recovered from Kuber were a number of blankets, shawls and many other items of clothing. The stains of sweat, saliva and other bodily secretions on those articles were subjected to DNA profiling and, excepting Imran Babar (deceased Accused 2), Abdul Rahman Bada (deceased Accused 5), Fahadullah (deceased Accused 7) and Shoaib (deceased Accused 9), the rest of six accused were connected with various articles found and recovered from the Kuber. The Appellant's DNA matched the DNA profile from a sweat stain detected on one of the jackets. A chart showing the matching of the DNA of the different accused with DNA profiles from stains on different articles found and recovered from the Kuber is annexed at the end of the judgment as Schedule III.

222. In Sandeep v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0422/2012 : (2012) 6 SCC 107, the facts related to the murder of pregnant paramour/girlfriend and unborn child of the accused. The DNA report confirmed that the Appellant was the father of the unborn child. The Court, relying on the DNA report, stated as follows:

67. In the light of the said expert evidence of the Junior Scientific Officer it is too late in the day for the Appellant Sandeep to contend that improper preservation of the foetus would have resulted in a wrong report to the effect that the accused Sandeep was found to be the biological father of the foetus received from the deceased Jyoti. As the said submission is not supported by any relevant material on record and as the Appellant was not able to substantiate the said argument with any other supporting material, we do not find any substance in the said submission. The circumstance, namely, the report of DNA in having concluded that accused Sandeep was the biological father of the recovered foetus of Jyoti was one other relevant circumstance to prove the guilt of the said accused.

223. In Rajkumar v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0136/2014 : (2014) 5 SCC 353, the Court was dealing with a case of rape and murder of a 14 year old girl. The DNA report established the presence of semen of the Appellant in the vaginal swab of the prosecutrix. The conviction was recorded relying on the DNA report. In the said context, the following was stated:

8. The deceased was 14 years of age and a student in VIth standard which was proved from the school register and the statement of her father Iknis Jojo (P.W. 1). Her age has also been mentioned in the FIR as 14 years. So far as medical evidence is concerned, it was mentioned that the deceased prosecutrix was about 16 years of age. So far as the analysis report of the material sent and the DNA report is concerned, it revealed that semen of the Appellant was found on the vaginal swab of the deceased. The clothes of the deceased were also found having Appellant's semen spots. The hair which were found near the place of occurrence were found to be that of the Appellant.

224. In Nandlal Wasudeo Badwaik v. Lata Nandlal Badwaik and Anr. MANU/SC/0006/2014 : (2014) 2 SCC 576, the Appellant, father of the child born to his wife, questioned the paternity of the child on the ground that she did not stay with him for the last two years. The Court directed for DNA test. The DNA result opined that the Appellant was not the biological father of the child. The Court also had the occasion to consider Section 112 of the Evidence Act which raises a presumption that birth during marriage is conclusive proof of legitimacy. The Court relied on the DNA test holding the DNA test to be scientifically accurate. The pertinent observations are extracted below:

19. The husband's plea that he had no access to the wife when the child was begotten stands proved by the DNA test report and in the face of it, we cannot compel the Appellant to bear the fatherhood of a child, when the scientific reports prove to the contrary. We are conscious that an innocent child may not be bastardised as the marriage between her mother and father was subsisting at the time of her birth, but in view of the DNA test reports and what we have observed above, we cannot forestall the consequence. It is denying the truth. "Truth must triumph" is the hallmark of justice.

20. As regards the authority of this Court in Kamti Devi, this Court on appreciation of evidence came to the conclusion that the husband had no opportunity whatsoever to have liaison with the wife. There was no DNA test held in the case. In the said background i.e. non- access of the husband to the wife, this Court held that the result of DNA test "is not enough to escape from the conclusiveness of Section 112 of the Act." The judgment has to be understood in the factual scenario of the said case. The said judgment has not held that DNA test is to be ignored. In fact, this Court has taken note of the fact that DNA test is scientifically accurate. We hasten to add that in none of the cases referred to above, this Court confronted with a situation in which a DNA test report, in fact, was available and was in conflict with the presumption of conclusive proof of legitimacy of the child Under Section 112 of the Evidence Act. In view of what we have observed above, these judgments in no way advance the case of the Respondents.

From the aforesaid authorities, it is quite clear that DNA report deserves to be accepted unless it is absolutely dented and for non- acceptance of the same, it is to be established that there had been no quality control or quality assurance. If the sampling is proper and if there is no evidence as to tampering of samples, the DNA test report is to be accepted.

225. In order to establish a clear link between the accused persons and the incident at hand, the prosecution has also adduced scientific evidence in the form of DNA, fingerprint and bite mark analysis.

226. Various samples, for the purpose of DNA profiling, were lifted from the person of the prosecutrix; the informant; the accused, their clothes/articles; the dumping spot; the iron rods; the ashes of partly burnt clothes; as well as from the offending bus. P.W. 45, Dr. B.K. Mohapatra, analysed the said DNA profiles and submitted his report thereof. In his report, he concluded that the samples were authentic and capable of establishing the identities of the persons concerned beyond reasonable doubt.

227. After establishing the identities of each of the accused persons, the informant and the prosecutrix through DNA analysis, the DNA profiles generated from the remaining samples, where the identity of biological material found thereon needed to be ascertained, were matched with the DNA profiles of the prosecutrix, the informant and the accused, generated earlier from known samples. Such an analysis cogently linked each of the accused with the victims as also with the crime scene. A summary of the findings in the report submitted by P.W. 45, Dr. B.K. Mohapatra, is as under:

228. Further, a summary of the DNA analysis of the biological samples lifted from the material objects such as the bus, the iron rods, and the ash and unburnt pieces of clothes is also worth producing here:

229. P.W. 45, Dr. B.K. Mohapatra, has clearly testified in his cross- examination that all the experiments conducted by him confirmed to the guidelines and methodology documented in the Working Procedure Manuals of the laboratory which have been validated and recommended for use in the laboratory. He further added that once a DNA profile is generated, its accuracy is 100%. The trial court and the High Court have consistently noted that the counsel for the defence did not raise any substantial ground to challenge the DNA report during the cross- examination of P.W. 45. In such circumstances, there is no reason to declare the DNA report as inaccurate, especially when it clearly links the accused persons with the incident.

230. Mr. Sharma, learned Counsel appearing for Appellants - Mukesh and Pawan Kumar Gupta, submitted that in the instant case, the DNA test cannot be treated to be accurate, for there was blood transfusion as the prosecutrix required blood and when there is mixing of blood, the DNA profiling is likely to differ. It is seemly to note, nothing had been put to the expert in his cross-examination in this regard. As the authorities relating to DNA would show, if the quality control is maintained, it is treated to be quite accurate and as the same has been established, we are compelled to repel the said submission of Mr. Sharma.

The evidence relating to finger print analysis:

231. Next aspect that is required to be adverted is the evidence of fingerprint analysis adduced by the prosecution to establish the identity of the accused persons. By virtue of the finger print analysis, the prosecution has tried mainly to establish the presence of the accused in the offending bus. On 17.12.2012 and 18.12.2012, a team of experts from the CFSL had lifted chance finger prints from the concerned bus, Ex. P- 1, at Thyagraj Stadium. On 28.12.2012, P.W. 78, Inspector Anil Sharma of P.S. Vasant Vihar, the then S.H.O. of Police Station Vasant Vihar, requested the Director, CFSL for taking digital palm prints and foot prints of all the accused persons vide his letter Ex. P.W. 46/C. Pursuant to the said request made by P.W. 78, Inspector Anil Sharma, the CFSL on 31.12.2012 took the finger/palm prints and foot prints of the accused persons at Tihar Jail. After comparing the chance prints lifted from the bus with the finger prints/palm prints and foot prints of all the accused persons, P.W. 46, Shri A.D. Shah, Senior Scientific Officer (Finger Prints), CFSL, CBI, submitted his report, Ex. P.W. 46/D.

232. As per the report, Ex. P.W. 46/D, the result of the aforesaid examination of the Finger Print Division of the CFSL, CBI, New Delhi was that the chance prints of accused Vinay Sharma were found on the bus in question. The relevant portion of the report is as under:

RESULT OF EXAMINATION:

I. The chance print marked as Q.1 is identical with left palmprint specimen of Vinay Sharma S/o. Sh. Hari Ram Sharma marked here as LPS- 28 on the slip marked here as S.28 (Matching ridge characteristics have been found in their relative positions in the chance palmprint and specimen palm print. This forms the basis of the opinion that these prints are identical. Eight of them have been marked with projected red lines with their detailed description are placed at Annexure- 1)

II. The chance print marked as Q.4 is identical with right thumb impression of Vinay Sharma S/o. Sh. Hari Ram Sharma marked here as RTS- 23 on the slip marked here as S.23 (Matching ridge characteristics have been found in their relative positions in the chance print and specimen finger print. This forms the basis of the opinion that these prints are identical. Eight of them have been marked with projected red lines with their detailed description are placed at Annexure- 2).

The above report incontrovertibly proves that accused Vinay was present in the bus at the time of the incident. Be it noted, the other chance prints were found to be unfit for comparison or different from specimen print.

The Odontology report

233. Now, we shall analyse the Odontology report. In today's world, Odontology is a branch of forensic science in which dental knowledge is applied to assist the criminal justice delivery system. S. Keiser- Nielsen, an authority on Forensic Odontology defines the basic concept of Forensic Odontology in the following words:

A. Forensic odontology is that branch of odontology which in the interests of justice deals with the proper handling and examination of dental evidence and with the proper evaluation and presentation of dental findings. Only a dentist can handle and examine dental evidence with any degree of accuracy; therefore, this field is above all a dental field.

234. Professor Neilsen, elaborating on Forensic Odontology, further states:

B. There are three reasons for considering forensic odontology a well- defined and more or less independent subject:1) it has objectives different from those at which conventional dental education aims; 2) forensic dental work requires investigations and considerations different from those required in ordinary dental practice; and 3) forensic dental reports and statements have to be presented in accordance with certain legal formalities in order to be of value to those requesting aid.

The area of forensic odontology consists of three major fields of activity: 1) the examination and evaluation of injuries to teeth, jaws, and oral tissues from various causes: 2) the examination of bite marks with a view to the subsequent elimination or possible identification of a suspect as the originator; and 3) the examination of dental remains (whether fragmentary or complete, and including all types of dental restoration) from unknown persons or bodies for the purpose of identification.

235. In the instant case, the prosecution has relied upon the odontology report, i.e., bite mark analysis report prepared by P.W. 71, Dr. Ashith B. Acharya, to link the incident with the accused persons. The Odontology report links accused Ram Singh and accused Akshay with the crime in question.

236. Dr. K.S. Narayan Reddy, in his book, Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology (Law, Practice and Procedure), Third Edition, 2010, Chapter VIII page 268, has extensively dealt with human bites, their patterns, the manner in which they should be lifted with a swab and moistened with sterile water and the manner in which such swabs need to be handled is delineated along with their usefulness in identification. The High Court has also referred to the same. It is as follows:

They are useful in identification because the alignment of teeth is peculiar to the individual. Bite marks may be found in materials left at the place of crime e.g., foodstuffs, such as cheese, bread, butter, fruit, or in humans involved in assaults, when either the victim or the accused may show the marks, usually on the hands, fingers, forearms, nose and ears.

237. After making the aforesaid observations, the author dwells upon the various methods used for bite mark analysis including the photographic method, which method was utilized in the instant case. The photographic method is described as under:

Photographic method: The bite mark is fully photographed with two scales at right angle to one another in the horizontal plane. Photographs of the teeth are taken by using special mirrors which allow the inclusion of all the teeth in the upper or lower jaws in one photograph. The photographs of the teeth are matched with photographs or tracings of the teeth. Tracings can be made from positive casts of a bite impression, inking the cutting edges of the front teeth. These are transferred to transparent sheets, and superimposed over the photographs, or a negative photograph of the teeth is superimposed over the positive photograph of the bite. Exclusion is easier than positive matching.

238. In the present case, the photographs of bite marks taken by P.W. 66, Shri Asghar Hussein, of different parts of the body of the prosecutrix were examined by P.W. 71, Dr. Ashith B. Acharya. The photographs depicted the bite marks on the body of the prosecutrix. The said bite marks found on the body of the victim were compared with the dental models of the suspects. The analysis showed that at least three bite marks were caused by accused Ram Singh, whereas one bite mark has been identified to have been most likely caused by accused Akshay. An excerpt from the report, Ex. P.W. 71/C, of P.W. 71, Dr. Ashith B. Acharya, has been extracted by the High Court. It reads thus:

..... There is absence of any unexplainable discrepancies between the bite marks on Photograph No. 4 and the biting surfaces of one of the accused person's teeth, namely Ram Singh. Therefore, there is reasonable medical certainty that the teeth on the dental models of the accused person named Ram Singh caused the bite marks visible on Photograph No. 4; also the bite marks on Photograph Nos. 1 and 2 show some degree of specificity to this accused person's teeth by virtue of a sufficient number of concordant points, including some corresponding unconventional/individual characteristics. Therefore, the teeth on the dental models of the accused person with the name Ram Singh probably also caused the bite marks visible on Photograph Nos. 1 and 2.....

x x x x x The comparison also shows that there is a concordance in terms of general alignment and angulation of the biting surfaces of the teeth of the lower jaw on the dental models of the accused person with the name Akshay and the corresponding bite marks visible on Photograph No. 5. In particular, the comparison revealed concordance between the biting surface of the teeth on the lower jaw of the dental models of the accused person with the name Akshay and the bite mark visible on Photograph No. 5 in relation to the rotated left first incisor whose mesial surface pointed towards the tongue. Overall, the bite mark shows some degree of specificity to the accused person's teeth by virtue of a number of concordant points, including one corresponding unconventional/individual characteristic. There is an absence of any unexplainable discrepancies between the bite mark and the biting surfaces of this accused person's teeth. Therefore, the teeth on the dental models of the accused person with the name Akshay probably caused the bite marks visible on Photograph No. 5.

239. Be it noted, the present is a case where the victim's body contained various white bite marks. Bite mark analysis play an important role in the criminal justice system. Advanced development of technology such as laser scanning, scanning electron microscopy or cone beam computed tomography in forensic odontology is utilized to identify more details in bite marks and in the individual teeth of the bite. Unlike fingerprints and DNA, bite marks lack the specificity and durability as the human teeth may change over time. However, bite mark evidence has other advantages in the criminal justice system that links a specific individual to the crime or victim. For a bite mark analysis, it must contain abundant information and the tooth that made the mark must be quite distinctive.

240. Bite marks in skin are photographed in cases where the suspect is apprehended. A thorough dental combination is administered after dental examination of the suspect. Final comparison of the details of the original mark with the dentation of the suspect is done by experts.

241. The bite marks generally include only a limited number of teeth. The teeth and oral structure of the accused are examined by experts and, thereafter, bite marks are compared and reports are submitted. Forensic Odontology is a science and the most common application of Forensic Odontology is for the purpose of identification of persons from their tooth structure.

242. Forensic Odontology has established itself as an important and indispensable science in medico- legal matters and expert evidence through various reports which have been utilized by courts in the administration of justice. In the case at hand, the report is wholly credible because of matching of bite marks with the tooth structure of the accused persons and there is no reason to view the same with any suspicion. Learned Counsel for the Appellants would only contend that the whole thing has been stage- managed. We are not impressed by the said submission, for the evidence brought on record cogently establish the injuries sustained by the prosecutrix and there is consistency between the injuries and the report. We are not inclined to accept the hypothesis that bite marks have been managed.

Acceptability of the plea of alibi

243. Presently, we shall deal with the plea of alibi as the same has been advanced with immense conviction. It is well settled in law that when a plea of alibi is taken by an accused, the burden is upon him to establish the same by positive evidence after the onus as regards the presence on the spot is established by the prosecution. In this context, we may usefully reproduce a few paragraphs from Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0088/1997 : (1997) 1 SCC 283:

22. We must bear in mind that an alibi is not an exception (special or general) envisaged in the Indian Penal Code, 1860 or any other law. It is only a rule of evidence recognised in Section 11 of the Evidence Act that facts which are inconsistent with the fact in issue are relevant. Illustration (a) given under the provision is worth reproducing in this context:

The question is whether A committed a crime at Calcutta on a certain date. The fact that, on that date, A was at Lahore is relevant.

23. The Latin word alibi means 'elsewhere' and that word is used for convenience when an accused takes recourse to a defence line that when the occurrence took place he was so far away from the place of occurrence that it is extremely improbable that he would have participated in the crime. It is a basic law that in a criminal case, in which the accused is alleged to have inflicted physical injury to another person, the burden is on the prosecution to prove that the accused was present at the scene and has participated in the crime. The burden would not be lessened by the mere fact that the accused has adopted the defence of alibi. The plea of the accused in such cases need be considered only when the burden has been discharged by the prosecution satisfactorily. But once the prosecution succeeds in discharging the burden it is incumbent on the accused, who adopts the plea of alibi, to prove it with absolute certainty so as to exclude the possibility of his presence at the place of occurrence. When the presence of the accused at the scene of occurrence has been established satisfactorily by the prosecution through reliable evidence, normally the court would be slow to believe any counter- evidence to the effect that he was elsewhere when the occurrence happened. But if the evidence adduced by the accused is of such a quality and of such a standard that the court may entertain some reasonable doubt regarding his presence at the scene when the occurrence took place, the accused would, no doubt, be entitled to the benefit of that reasonable doubt. For that purpose, it would be a sound proposition to be laid down that, in such circumstances, the burden on the accused is rather heavy. It follows, therefore, that strict proof is required for establishing the plea of alibi. ...

244. The said principle has been reiterated in Gurpreet Singh v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0770/2002 : (2002) 8 SCC 18, Shaikh Sattar v. State of Maharashtra

MANU/SC/0649/2010 : (2010) 8 SCC 430, Jitender Kumar v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0532/2012 : (2012) 6 SCC 204 and Vijay Pal (supra).

245. We had earlier indicated that in their Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure statements, the accused have advanced the plea of alibi. Accused Pawan Kumar Gupta @ Kaalu has taken the plea of alibi stating, inter alia, that throughout the evening of 16.12.2012 till late night, he was in the DDA District Park, Hauz Khas, Opposite IIT Gate, New Delhi, watching a musical event organised in connection with Christmas Celebration and that he was never in the bus, Ex. P1, and had not committed any offence with the prosecutrix or with the informant.

246. Before coming to the defence evidence led by him, we may refer to the answers given by him in response to the questions put to him in his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure wherein he has admitted that mobile No. 9711927157 belongs to him. He further stated that he had consumed liquor in the evening of 16.12.2012 and had accompanied accused Vinay Sharma to the musical event at DDA District Park where he took more liquor and fell unconscious and was later brought to his house by his father and uncle. He stated that he went out in the evening of 16.12.2012 and saw a quarrel between accused Vinay Sharma and accused Ram Singh (since deceased). Then he returned to his jhuggi. After sometime, he came out of his jhuggi and saw accused Vinay Sharma, his sister, mother and others going to a musical party and so, he also went with them and took more liquor in the party and even lost his mobile phone. Strangely enough, in his supplementary statement recorded on 16.08.2013 Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure, he stated that he was present in the said party with his family members and friends and that a video clip was prepared by one Ram Babu, DW- 13, and that he does not remember if he had accompanied accused Vinay Sharma to the said park on that evening. It is in contradiction to the stand taken by him in his earlier statement recorded Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure.

247. Accused Pawan examined his father, DW- 2, Shri Hira Lal Ram, who deposed that on 16.12.2012 about 7:15 p.m., when he came to his house, he was informed by his daughter that accused Pawan had gone to DDA District Park, Hauz Khas. It is in contradiction to the deposition made by the other defence witnesses who have said that accused Vinay Sharma and his family members had left Ravi Dass Camp, Sector- 3, R.K. Puram, New Delhi, about 8:00/8:30 p.m. and that accused Pawan had accompanied them. Accused Pawan also said so in his initial statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure.

248. DW- 4, Shri Gyan Chand, the maternal uncle of accused Pawan, deposed that he brought accused Pawan Gupta @ Kaalu to the jhuggi from the DDA District Park and saw one Ram Charan warming his hands on a bonfire just outside his jhuggi who came and asked him about the well-being of accused Pawan. Ram Charan, DW- 3, however, deposed that about 8:30/9:00 p.m., he was sitting inside his jhuggi with its door open and he saw accused Pawan being brought by his uncle in drunken state. This is yet again in contradiction to what has been deposed by the other defence witnesses who said that accused Pawan Gupta and accused Vinay Sharma had rather left Ravi Dass Camp, Sector- 3, R.K. Puram, New Delhi about 8:00/8:30 p.m. for the DDA District Park.

249. DW- 16, a shopkeeper of the locality, had deposed that he had seen the vehicle of Shri Gyan Chand about 9:00/9:30 p.m. on 16.12.2012 when accused Pawan Gupta was brought in drunken condition and was taken to his jhuggi. Initially, he failed to mention if Shri Hira Ram was accompanying Shri Gyan Chand.

250. Though the witnesses have also deposed about the taking away of accused Pawan by 3/4 persons on 17.12.2012, yet that plea too is in contradiction to the arrest memo Ex. P.W. 60/A wherein the accused is stated to have been arrested on 18.12.2012 about 1:15 p.m. at the instance of accused Ram Singh (since deceased).

251. Hence, there exist contradictions in the statements of the defence witnesses produced on behalf of accused Pawan Gupta (a): qua the timing when the accused had left his jhuggi at Ravi Dass Camp on the fateful night of 16.12.2012 inasmuch as some of the witnesses deposed that accused Pawan left for DDA District Park at 8:00/8:30 p.m. and some others deposed that they saw him being brought to his jhuggi about 8:30/9:00 p.m.; (b) qua the fact if DW- 2 had gone with DW- 1 to the park to fetch his son; and (c) qua the fact if accused Pawan went to the park with accused Vinay Sharma or not.

252. Accused Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur, in his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure, stated that he was not in Delhi on the fateful night and that on 15.12.2012, he had left Delhi for his village in Mahabodhi Express on the ticket of his brother, Abhay, along with his brother's wife and nephew. He produced certain witnesses in his defence. DW- 11, Shri Chavinder, an auto driver from his village, deposed that he had brought accused Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur and his family members from Anugrah Narayan Railway Station, District Aurangabad, Bihar to his native village Karmalahang, P.S. Tandwa, in his own auto on 16.12.2012 at 10:00 a.m. It is interesting to note that he does not remember about any other passenger/native who shared his auto on that day. DW- 13, Sh. Raj Mohan Singh, the father- in- law of the accused, deposed that when he reached accused Akshay's house, he found his son- in- law being implicated in a rape case allegedly committed on 16.12.2012. It probably shows that DW- 13 had gone to meet Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur only when he had come to know about his implication in the rape case and when accused Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur was on the run. It is an admitted fact that the Chowkidar of P.S. Tandwa had met father- in- law of the accused on 20.12.2012 and had informed him about the implication of accused Akshay for the first time. If it was so, then DW- 13, Shri Raj Mohan, must have visited the house of accused Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur either on 20.12.2012 or on 21.12.2012.

253. DW- 12, DW- 14 and DW- 15 are all relatives of accused Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur and, as observed by both the courts, they tried to wriggle him out of the messy situation, as is the natural instinct of the family members. However, it is to be seen that during the evidence of DW-14, wife of accused Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur, she was interrupted from answering by accused Akshay from behind on more than one occasion. Similarly, DW- 15, the sister- in- law of the accused, who had allegedly accompanied the accused to her native village, mysteriously, was not aware as to why her husband Abhay who was to accompany her on 15.12.2012 to the native village did not accompany her. She was not aware of the reason which made her husband stay behind in Delhi. Being the wife, she was expected to know this, at least.

254. While weighing the plea of 'alibi', the same has to be weighed against the positive evidence led by the prosecution, i.e., not only the substantive evidence of P.W. 1 and the dying declarations, Ex. P.W. 27/A and Ex. P.W. 30/D- 1, but also against the scientific evidence, viz., the DNA analysis, finger print analysis and bite marks analysis, the accuracy of which is scientifically acclaimed. Considering the inconsistent and contradictory nature of the evidence of 'alibi' led by the accused against the positive evidence of the prosecution, including the scientific one, we hold that the accused have miserably failed to discharge their burden of absolute certainty qua their plea of 'alibi'. The plea taken by them appears to be an afterthought and rather may be read as an additional circumstance against them.

255. In response to the questions put to him in his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure, accused Vinay had admitted that mobile No. 8285947545, Ex. D.W. 10/1, belongs to his mother and its SIM was lost prior to 16.12.2012 and that on 16.12.2012, at 9:30 p.m., his friend Vipin had taken his phone to the DDA District Park and had returned it the next morning without SIM card and memory card.

256. In response to question No. 221, he stated that about 8:00/8:30 p.m., he went to see accused Ram Singh and he had a scuffle/exchange of fist blow and then he returned to his jhuggi. Thereafter, he left for musical party with his sister, mother and others. He did not say if his father had accompanied them. He also told that about 11:30 p.m., he had returned to his jhuggi.

257. It is worthy to note that the prosecution had proved the Call Detail Record, Ex. P.W. 22/B, of the phone of accused Vinay Sharma, having SIM No. 8285947545, admittedly in the name of his mother, Smt. Champa Devi, but in the possession of accused Vinay Sharma in the evening of 16.12.2012 and allegedly snatched by one Vipin in the said music party and returned to him in the morning of 17.12.2012 without SIM card and memory card. The Call Detail Record Ex. P.W. 22/B does show that the accused had been making calls to one particular number, viz., 8601274533 from 15.12.2012 till 20:19:37 of 17.12.2012. The authenticity of the CDR is proved Under Section 65- B of the Indian Evidence Act. If the accused was not having a SIM card in his phone No. 8285947545, then how could he have called from this SIM on 15.12.2012, then on 16.12.2012 and in the morning of 17.12.2012 till about 8:23:42 p.m.

258. The accused rather said that his SIM and memory card were not in his phone when it was returned by his friend Vipin and that the phone was not with him at 9:55:21 when it registered a call for 58 seconds and when his location was found near IGI Airport, i.e., the road covered by the Route Map, Ex. P.W. 80/H, where the bus, Ex. P1, was moving on that night. Further, if as per accused Vinay Sharma he had no memory card and SIM card in his mobile phone, then the question of making of a video clip from his mobile phone by his friend DW- 10, Shri Ram Babu, does not arise. Even his personal search memo Ex. P.W. 60/D does not show that the said mobile phone, when seized, had any memory card in it. The intention of the accused appears to be to wriggle himself out of explaining the receipt of call on his mobile at 9:55 p.m. on 16.12.2012.

259. After referring to the decision in Ram Singh and Ors. v. Col. Ram Singh MANU/SC/0176/1985 : 1985 (Supp.) SCC 611, the trial Court has held that accused Vinay had miserably failed to prove the authenticity of the video clip in terms of the above judgment. The accused had failed to show if DW- 10, Ram Babu, aged 15 years, was ever competent to record the clip and how such device was preserved. Admittedly by him, the memory card was not in the phone when returned to him by his friend, Vipin. It is also not shown in the seizure memo Ex. P.W. 60/D that the mobile, Ex. DW- 10/1, was seized along with memory card. Thus, it raises a doubt as to how and by whom this memory card was later inserted in his phone, Ex. DW- 10/1, and how and when the video clip was taken and whether there was any tampering, etc. and thus, the compliance of Section 65- B of the Indian Evidence Act was mandatory in these circumstances to ensure the purity of the evidence and in its absence, it would be difficult to rely upon such evidence.

260. Even otherwise, in the alternative, the properties of mobile Ex. DW- 10/1 show the timing of the video clip as 8:16 p.m. of 16.12.2012 which is patently false because as per the defence witnesses, accused Vinay Sharma with his family had left Ravi Dass Camp at 8:00/8:30 p.m. and as per Smt. Champa Devi, DW- 5, it takes about one hour on foot to reach the DDA District Park and, thus, even if we believe their theory, then also accused Vinay Sharma and accused Pawan Gupta @ Kaalu were not in the park at 8:16 p.m. on 16.12.2012.

261. Vinay Sharma's mother, Smt. Champa Devi, DW- 5, deposed that her son, accused Vinay Sharma, had gone to meet accused Ram Singh (since deceased), about 8:00 p.m. on 16.12.2012 and he had a quarrel with Ram Singh, he was beaten and then the accused returned to his jhuggi. Thereafter, accused Vinay Sharma accompanied her to DDA District Park, Hauz Khas, Opposite IIT Gate, New Delhi to watch a musical programme and stayed in the park till late in the night. His mother does not speak if her husband had also accompanied her to the said DDA District Park but DW- 6 deposed that his son had returned about 8:00 p.m. after the quarrel and then they had gone to the said DDA District Park. DW- 7, Shri Kishore Kumar Bhat, also deposed that about 8:00/8:30 p.m., he was in his jhuggi when the father of accused Vinay Sharma with his children came to his jhuggi and they all went to DDA District Park. He has also stated that a musical programme was organized by St. Thomas Church, Sector- 2, R.K. Puram, New Delhi, in the said DDA District Park, Hauz Khas, on that night.

262. DW- 9, Shri Manu Sharma, deposed that he went with accused Vinay Sharma to reason with accused Ram Singh (since deceased) but accused Vinay Sharma had stated that his brother had accompanied him to meet accused Ram Singh (since deceased). Further, DW- 9, Manu Sharma, stated that he had accompanied accused Vinay Sharma to the musical event but accused Vinay Sharma did not say so.

263. Hence, as per the statement of accused Vinay Sharma (Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure) and as per the statements of the defence witnesses, accused Vinay Sharma and his family with accused Pawan Gupta @ Kaalu had left Ravi Dass Camp about 8:15 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. and as per DW- 5, Smt. Champa Devi, it takes about an hour to reach the DDA District Park, Hauz Khas, on foot, so even according to them, they allegedly reached the park about 9:15 p.m. or 9:30 p.m. Thus, from this angle too, the video clip showing the accused in the park on 16.12.2012 about 8:16 p.m. appears to have been tampered.

264. P.W. 83, Shri Angad Singh, the Deputy Director (Horticulture), DDA, had deposed that no such permission was ever granted by any authority to organize any such function in the evening of 16.12.2012 in the said DDA District Park, Hauz Khas, New Delhi and that no function was ever organized in the park on 16.12.2012 by anyone. P.W. 84, Father George Manimala of St. Thomas Church, as also P.W. 85, Brother R.P. Samual, Secretary, Ebenezer Assembly Church, deposed that their Church(es) never organized any musical programme/event in the DDA District Park, Hauz Khas, in the evening of Sunday, i.e., on 16.12.2012. Rather, they deposed that on Sundays, there is always a mass prayer in the church and there is no question of organizing any programme outside the Church premises and that even otherwise, they have their own space/lawn within the Church premises where they can hold such type of programmes/functions.

265. Though Shri Singh, learned Counsel for the respective Appellants, tried to press upon a document, Ex. P.W. 84/B, a programme pamphlet of St. Thomas Church wherein it was mentioned that the Church was holding programmes of "Carol Singing" from 10.12.2012 to 23.12.2012 at 7:00 p.m. at public places, yet in view of the categorical denial by P.W. 84 and P.W. 85 that any such programme was organized by the Church on 16.12.2012 in the DDA District Park, opposite IIT Gate, Hauz Khas, New Delhi, the plea has no substance.

266. It is settled in law that while raising a plea of 'alibi', the burden squarely lies upon the accused person to establish the plea convincingly by adducing cogent evidence. The plea of 'alibi' that accused Vinay Sharma and accused Pawan Gupta @ Kaalu had attended the alleged musical programme in the evening of 16.12.2012 in the DDA District Park, Hauz Khas, opposite IIT Gate, New Delhi, has been rightly rejected by the trial court which has been given the stamp of approval by the High Court.

Criminal conspiracy

267. The next aspect that we intend to address pertains to criminal conspiracy. The accused persons before us were charge- sheeted for the offence of criminal conspiracy within the meaning of Section 120A Indian Penal Code apart from other offences. The trial court found all the accused guilty of the offence Under Section 120B Indian Penal Code and awarded life imprisonment alongwith a fine of Rs. 5,000/- to each of the convicts. The High Court has also affirmed their conviction Under Section 120B after recording concurrent findings.

268. Before analysing the present facts with reference to Section 120A Indian Penal Code in order to find out whether the charge of criminal conspiracy is proved in respect of each of the accused, it is pertinent to note the actual nature and purport of Section 120A Indian Penal Code and allied provisions. Section 120A Indian Penal Code as contained in Chapter V- A defines the offence of criminal conspiracy. The provision was inserted in the Indian Penal Code by virtue of Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1913. Section 120A Indian Penal Code reads as under:

120A. Definition of criminal conspiracy: When two or more persons agree to do, or cause to be done,- (1) an illegal act, or (2) an act which is not illegal by illegal means, such an agreement is designated a criminal conspiracy: Provided that no agreement except an agreement to commit an offence shall amount to a criminal conspiracy unless some act besides the agreement is done by one or more parties to such agreement in pursuance thereof.

Explanation- It is immaterial whether the illegal act is the ultimate object of such agreement, or is merely incidental to that object.

269. Section 120B being pertinent is reproduced below:

120B. Punishment of criminal conspiracy- (1) Whoever is a party to a criminal conspiracy to commit an offence punishable with death, imprisonment for life or rigorous imprisonment for a term of two years or upwards, shall, where no express provision is made in this Code for the punishment of such a conspiracy, be punished in the same manner as if he had abetted such offence.

(2) Whoever is a party to a criminal conspiracy other than a criminal conspiracy to commit an offence punishable as aforesaid shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding six months, or with fine or with both.

270. The underlying purpose for the insertion of Sections 120A and 120B Indian Penal Code was to make a mere agreement to do an illegal act or an act which is not illegal by illegal means punishable under law. The criminal thoughts in the mind when take concrete shape of an agreement to do or cause to be done an illegal act or an act which is not illegal by illegal means than even if nothing further is done an agreement is designated as a criminal conspiracy. The proviso to Section 120A engrafts a limitation that no agreement except an agreement to commit an offence shall amount to a criminal conspiracy unless some act besides the agreement is done by one or more parties to such agreement in pursuance thereof.

271. By insertion of Chapter V- A in Indian Penal Code, the understanding of criminal conspiracy in the Indian context has become akin to that in England. The illegal act may or may not be done in pursuance of an agreement but the mere formation of an agreement is an offence and is punishable. The law relating to conspiracy in England has been put forth in Halsbury's Laws of England (vide 5th Ed. Vol. 25, page 73) as under:

73. Matters common to all conspiracies. There are statutory common law offences of conspiracy. The essence of the offences of both statutory and common law conspiracy is the fact of combination by agreement. The agreement may be express or implied, or in part express and in part implied. The conspiracy arises and the offence is committed as soon as the agreement is made; and the offence continues to be committed so long as the combination persists, that is until the conspiratorial agreement is terminated by completion of its performance or by abandonment or frustration or however it may be. The actus reus in a conspiracy is therefore the agreement for the execution of the unlawful conduct, not the execution of it. It is not enough that two or more persons pursued the same unlawful object at the same time or in the same place; it is necessary to show a meeting of minds, a consensus to effect an unlawful purpose. It is not, however, necessary that each conspirator should have been in communication with every other.

272. The English law on 'conspiracy' has been succinctly explained by Russell on Crimes (12th Ed. Vol. 1 page 202) in the following passage:

The gist of the offence of conspiracy then lies, not in doing the act, or effecting the purpose for which the conspiracy is formed, nor in attempting to do them, nor in inciting others to do them, but in the forming of the scheme or agreement between the parties. Agreement is essential. Mere knowledge, or even discussion, of the plan is not, per se enough.

273. Coleridge J. in R. v. Murphy (1837) 173 ER 508 explained 'conspiracy' in the following words:

... I am bound to tell you, that although the common design is the root of the charge, it is not necessary to prove that these two parties came together and actually agreed in terms to have this common design, and to pursue it by common means, and so to carry it into execution. This is not necessary, because in any cases of the most clearly established conspiracies there are no means of proving any such thing and neither law nor common sense requires that it should be proved. If you find that these two persons pursued by their acts the same object, often by the same means, one performing one part of an act, and the other another part of the same act, so as to complete it, with a view to the attainment of the object which they were pursuing, you will be at liberty to draw the conclusion that they have been engaged in a conspiracy to effect that object. The question you have to ask yourselves is, 'had they this common design, and did they pursue it by these common means the design being unlawful?

274. Lord Brampton of the House of Lords in Quinn v. Leatham (1901) AC 495 had aptly defined conspiracy which definition was engrafted in Sections 120A and 120B Indian Penal Code. Following was stated by the House of Lords:

'A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more, to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. So long as such a design rests in intention only, it is not indictable. When two agree to carry it into effect, the very plot is an act in itself, and the act of each of the parties, promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced, if lawful; and punishable if for a criminal object, or for the use of criminal means'.

275. A perusal of the above shows that in order to constitute an offence of criminal conspiracy, two or more persons must agree to do an illegal act or an act which if not illegal by illegal means. This Court on several occasions has explained and elaborated the element of conspiracy as contained in our penal law. In Noor Mohammad Mohd. Yusuf Momin v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0157/1970 : AIR 1971 SC 885, this Court has observed:

Criminal conspiracy postulates an agreement between two or more persons to do, or cause to be done an illegal act or an act which is not illegal, by illegal means. It differs from other offences in that mere agreement is made an offence even if no step is taken to carry out that agreement. Though there is close association of conspiracy with incitement and abetment the substantive offence of criminal conspiracy is somewhat wider in amplitude than abetment by conspiracy as contemplated by Section 107, Indian Penal Code. A conspiracy from its very nature is generally hatched in secret. It is, therefore, extremely rare that direct evidence in proof of conspiracy can be forthcoming from wholly disinterested, quarters or from utter strangers. But, like other offences, criminal conspiracy can be proved by circumstantial evidence.

276. In E.G. Barsay v. State of Bombay MANU/SC/0123/1961 : AIR 1961 SC 1762, the following was stated:

.....The gist of the offence is an agreement to break the law. The parties to such an agreement will be guilty of criminal conspiracy, though the illegal act agreed to be done has not been done. So too, it is not an ingredient of the offence that all the parties should agree to do a single illegal act. It may comprise the commission of a number of acts. Under Section 43 of the Indian Penal Code, an act would be illegal if it is an offence or if it is prohibited by law. Under the first charge the accused are charged with having conspired to do three categories of illegal acts, and the mere fact that all of them could not be convicted separately in respect of each of the offences has no relevancy in considering the question whether the offence of conspiracy has been committed. They are all guilty of the offence of conspiracy to do illegal acts, though for individual offences all of them may not be liable.

277. A three- Judge Bench in Yash Pal Mittal v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0169/1977 : (1977) 4 SCC 540 had noted the ingredients of the offence of criminal conspiracy and held:

10. The main object of the criminal conspiracy in the first charge is undoubtedly cheating by personation. The other means adopted, inter alia, are preparation or causing to be prepared spurious passports; forging or causing to be forged entries and endorsements in that connection; and use of or causing to be used forged passports as genuine in order to facilitate travel of persons abroad. The final object of the conspiracy in the first charge being the offence of cheating by personation, as we find, the other offences described therein are steps, albeit, offences themselves, in aid of the ultimate crime. The charge does not connote plurality of objects of the conspiracy. That the Appellant himself is not charged with the ultimate offence, which is the object of the criminal conspiracy, is beside the point in a charge Under Section 120- B Indian Penal Code as long as he is a party to the conspiracy with the end in view. Whether the charges will be ultimately established against the accused is a completely different matter within the domain of the trial court.

11. The principal object of the criminal conspiracy in the first charge is thus "cheating by personation", and without achieving that goal other acts would be of no material use in which any person could be necessarily interested. That the Appellant himself does not personate another person is beside the point when he is alleged to be a collaborator of the conspiracy with that object. We have seen that some persons have been individually and specifically charged with cheating by personation Under Section 419 Indian Penal Code. They were also charged along with the Appellant Under Section 120- B Indian Penal Code. The object of criminal conspiracy is absolutely clear and there is no substance in the argument that the object is merely to cheat simpliciter Under Section 417, Indian Penal Code.

278. Certainly, entering into an agreement by two or more persons to do an illegal act or legal act by illegal means is essential to the offence of criminal conspiracy as has been rightly emphasized by this Court in Kehar Singh and Ors. v. State (Delhi Administration) MANU/SC/0241/1988 : (1988) 3 SCC 609. In the said case, the court further stressed upon the relevance of circumstantial evidence in proving conspiracy as direct evidence in such cases is almost impossible to adduce.

279. In the said case, K. Jagannatha Shetty, J., in his concurring opinion, has also elaborated the concept of conspiracy to the following effect:

274. It will be thus seen that the most important ingredient of the offence of conspiracy is the agreement between two or more persons to do an illegal act. The illegal act may or may not be done in pursuance of agreement, but the very agreement is an offence and is punishable. Reference to Sections 120- A and 120- B Indian Penal Code would make these aspects clear beyond doubt. Entering into an agreement by two or more persons to do an illegal act or legal act by illegal means is the very quintessence of the offence of conspiracy.

275. Generally, a conspiracy is hatched in secrecy and it may be difficult to adduce direct evidence of the same. The prosecution will often rely on evidence of acts of various parties to infer that they were done in reference to their common intention. The prosecution will also more often rely upon circumstantial evidence. The conspiracy can be undoubtedly proved by such evidence direct or circumstantial. But the court must enquire whether the two persons are independently pursuing the same end or they have come together in the pursuit of the unlawful object. The former does not render them conspirators, but the latter does. It is, however, essential that the offence of conspiracy requires some kind of physical manifestation of agreement. The express agreement, however, need not be proved. Nor actual meeting of two persons is necessary. Nor it is necessary to prove the actual words of communication. The evidence as to transmission of thoughts sharing the unlawful design may be sufficient. Gerald Orchard of University of Canterbury, New Zealand explains the limited nature of this proposition:

Although it is not in doubt that the offence requires some physical manifestation of agreement, it is important to note the limited nature of this proposition. The law does not require that the act of agreement take any particular form and the fact of agreement may be communicated by words or conduct. Thus, it has been said that it is unnecessary to prove that the parties 'actually came together and agreed in terms' to pursue the unlawful object; there need never have been an express verbal agreement, it being sufficient that there was 'a tacit understanding between conspirators as to what should be done'.

276. I share this opinion, but hasten to add that the relative acts or conduct of the parties must be conscientious and clear to mark their concurrence as to what should be done. The concurrence cannot be inferred by a group of irrelevant facts artfully arranged so as to give an appearance of coherence. The innocuous, innocent or inadvertent events and incidents should not enter the judicial verdict. We must thus be strictly on our guard.

280. In Saju v. State of Kerala MANU/SC/0688/2000 : (2001) 1 SCC 378, explaining the concept of conspiracy, this Court stated the following:

7. To prove the charge of criminal conspiracy the prosecution is required to establish that two or more persons had agreed to do or caused to be done, an illegal act or an act which is not legal, by illegal means. It is immaterial whether the illegal act is the ultimate object of such crime or is merely incidental to that object. To attract the applicability of Section 120- B it has to be proved that all the accused had the intention and they had agreed to commit the crime. There is no doubt that conspiracy is hatched in private and in secrecy for which direct evidence would rarely be available...

10. It has thus to be established that the accused charged with criminal conspiracy had agreed to pursue a course of conduct which he knew was leading to the commission of a crime by one or more persons to the agreement, of that offence. Besides the fact of agreement the necessary mens rea of the crime is also required to be established.

281. In Mir Nagvi Askari v. Central Bureau of Investigation MANU/SC/1412/2009 : (2009) 15 SCC 643, this Court reiterated the various facets of 'criminal conspiracy' and laid down as follows:

60. Criminal conspiracy, it must be noted in this regard, is an independent offence. It is punishable separately. A criminal conspiracy must be put to action; for so long as a crime is generated in the mind of the accused, the same does not become punishable. Thoughts even criminal in character, often involuntary, are not crimes but when they take a concrete shape of an agreement to do or caused to be done an illegal act or an act which is not illegal, by illegal means then even if nothing further is done, the agreement would give rise to a criminal conspiracy.

61. The ingredients of the offence of criminal conspiracy are:

(i) an agreement between two or more persons;

(ii) an agreement must relate to doing or causing to be done either (a) an illegal act; (b) an act which is not illegal in itself but is done by illegal means.

Condition precedent for holding the accused persons to be guilty of a charge of criminal conspiracy must, therefore, be considered on the anvil of the fact which must be established by the prosecution viz. meeting of minds of two or more persons for doing or causing to be done an illegal act or an act by illegal means.

62. The courts, however, while drawing an inference from the materials brought on record to arrive at a finding as to whether the charges of the criminal conspiracy have been proved or not, must always bear in mind that a conspiracy is hatched in secrecy and it is difficult, if not impossible, to obtain direct evidence to establish the same. The manner and circumstances in which the offences have been committed and the accused persons took part are relevant. For the said purpose, it is necessary to prove that the propounders had expressly agreed to it or caused it to be done, and it may also be proved by adduction of circumstantial evidence and/or by necessary implication. (See Mohd. Usman Mohammad Hussain Maniyar v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0180/1981 : (1981) 2 SCC 443.)

282. In Pratapbhai Hamirbhai Solanki v. State of Gujrat and Anr. MANU/SC/0854/2012 : (2013) 1 SCC 613, this Court explained the ingredients of 'criminal conspiracy' as under:

21. At this stage, it is useful to recapitulate the view this Court has expressed pertaining to criminal conspiracy. In Damodar v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/0726/2003 : (2004) 12 SCC 336, a two- Judge Bench after referring to the decision in Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.) and State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa MANU/SC/0451/1996 : (1996) 4 SCC 659, has stated thus:

15. ... The most important ingredient of the offence being the agreement between two or more persons to do an illegal act. In a case where criminal conspiracy is alleged, the court must inquire whether the two persons are independently pursuing the same end or they have come together to pursue the unlawful object. The former does not render them conspirators but the latter does. For the offence of conspiracy some kind of physical manifestation of agreement is required to be established. The express agreement need not be proved. The evidence as to the transmission of thoughts sharing the unlawful act is not (sic*-) sufficient. A conspiracy is a continuing offence which continues to subsist till it is executed or rescinded or frustrated by choice of necessity. During its subsistence whenever any one of the conspirators does an act or a series of acts, he would be held guilty Under Section 120- B of the Penal Code, 1860.

22. In Ram Narayan Popli v. CBI MANU/SC/0017/2003 : (2003) 3 SCC 641 while dealing with the conspiracy the majority opinion laid down that:

342. ... The elements of a criminal conspiracy have been stated to be: (a) an object to be accomplished, (b) a plan or scheme embodying means to accomplish that object, (c) an agreement or understanding between two or more of the accused persons whereby, they become definitely committed to cooperate for the accomplishment of the object by the means embodied in the agreement, or by any effectual means, and (d) in the jurisdiction where the statute required an overt act.

It has been further opined that:

342. ... The essence of a criminal conspiracy is the unlawful combination and ordinarily the offence is complete when the combination is framed. ... no overt act need be done in furtherance of the conspiracy, and that the object of the combination need not be accomplished, in order to constitute an indictable offence. Law making conspiracy a crime is designed to curb immoderate power to do mischief which is gained by a combination of the means. The encouragement and support which co- conspirators give to one another rendering enterprises possible which, if left to individual effort, would have been impossible, furnish the ground for visiting conspirators and abettors with condign punishment. The conspiracy is held to be continued and renewed as to all its members wherever and whenever any member of the conspiracy acts in furtherance of the common design.

The two- Judge Bench proceeded to state that:

342. ... For an offence punishable Under Section 120- B, the prosecution need not necessarily prove that the perpetrators expressly agree to do or cause to be done illegal act; the agreement may be proved by necessary implication. Offence of criminal conspiracy has its foundation in an agreement to commit an offence. A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act by unlawful means.

23. In the said case it has been highlighted that in the case of conspiracy there cannot be any direct evidence. The ingredients of offence are that there should be an agreement between persons who are alleged to conspire and the said agreement should be for doing an illegal act or for doing by illegal means an act which itself may not be illegal. Therefore, the essence of criminal conspiracy is an agreement to do an illegal act and such an agreement can be proved either by direct evidence or by circumstantial evidence or by both, and it is a matter of common experience that direct evidence to prove conspiracy is rarely available. Therefore, the circumstances proved before, during and after the occurrence have to be considered to decide about the complicity of the accused.

283. As already stated, in a criminal conspiracy, meeting of minds of two or more persons for doing an illegal act is the sine qua non but proving this by direct proof is not possible. Hence, conspiracy and its objective can be inferred from the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the accused. Moreover, it is also relevant to note that conspiracy being a continuing offence continues to subsist till it is executed or rescinded or frustrated by the choice of necessity. In K.R. Purushothaman v. State of Kerala MANU/SC/1518/2005 : (2005) 12 SCC 631, the Court has made the following observations with regard to the formation and rescission of an agreement constituting criminal conspiracy:

To constitute a conspiracy, meeting of minds of two or more persons for doing an illegal act or an act by illegal means is the first and primary condition and it is not necessary that all the conspirators must know each and every detail of the conspiracy. Neither is it necessary that every one of the conspirators takes active part in the commission of each and every conspiratorial acts. The agreement amongst the conspirators can be inferred by necessary implication. In most of the cases, the conspiracies are proved by the circumstantial evidence, as the conspiracy is seldom an open affair. The existence of conspiracy and its objects are usually deduced from the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the accused involved in the conspiracy. While appreciating the evidence of the conspiracy, it is incumbent on the court to keep in mind the well-known rule governing circumstantial evidence viz. each and every incriminating circumstance must be clearly established by reliable evidence and the circumstances proved must form a chain of events from which the only irresistible conclusion about the guilt of the accused can be safely drawn, and no other hypothesis against the guilt is possible. Criminal conspiracy is an independent offence in the Penal Code. The unlawful agreement is sine qua non for constituting offence under the Penal Code and not an accomplishment. Conspiracy consists of the scheme or adjustment between two or more persons which may be express or implied or partly express and partly implied. Mere knowledge, even discussion, of the plan would not per se constitute conspiracy. The offence of conspiracy shall continue till the termination of agreement.

284. After referring to a catena of judicial pronouncements and authorities, a three- Judge Bench of this Court in State through Superintendent of Police, CBI/SIT v. Nalini and Ors. MANU/SC/0945/1999 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 summarised the principles relating to criminal conspiracy as under:

Some of the broad principles governing the law of conspiracy may be summarized though, as the name implies, a summary cannot be exhaustive of the principles.

1. Under Section 120A Indian Penal Code offence of criminal conspiracy is committed when two or more persons agree to do or cause to be done an illegal act or legal act by illegal means. When it is legal act by illegal means overt act is necessary. Offence of criminal conspiracy is exception to the general law where intent alone does not constitute crime. It is intention to commit crime and joining hands with persons having the same intention. Not only the intention but there has to be agreement to carry out the object of the intention, which is an offence. The question for consideration in a case is did all the accused had the intention and did they agree that the crime be committed. It would not be enough for the offence of conspiracy when some of the accused merely entertained a wish, howsoever, horrendous it may be, that offence be committed.

2. Acts subsequent to the achieving of object of conspiracy may tend to prove that a particular accused was party to the conspiracy. Once the object of conspiracy has been achieved, any subsequent act, which may be unlawful, would not make the accused a part of the conspiracy like giving shelter to an absconder.

3. Conspiracy is hatched in private or in secrecy. It is rarely possible to establish a conspiracy by direct evidence. Usually, both the existence of the conspiracy and its objects have to be inferred from the circumstances and the conduct of the accused.

4. Conspirators may, for example, be enrolled in a chain - A enrolling B, B enrolling C, and so on; and all will be members of a single conspiracy if they so intend and agree, even though each member knows only the person who enrolled him and the person whom he enrolls. There may be a kind of umbrella- spoke enrollment, where a single person at the center doing the enrolling and all the other members being unknown to each other, though they know that there are to be other members. These are theories and in practice it may be difficult to tell whether the conspiracy in a particular case falls into which category. It may, however, even overlap. But then there has to be present mutual interest. Persons may be members of single conspiracy even though each is ignorant of the identity of many others who may have diverse role to play. It is not a part of the crime of conspiracy that all the conspirators need to agree to play the same or an active role.

5. When two or more persons agree to commit a crime of conspiracy, then regardless of making or considering any plans for its commission, and despite the fact that no step is taken by any such person to carry out their common purpose, a crime is committed by each and every one who joins in the agreement. There has thus to be two conspirators and there may be more than that. To prove the charge of conspiracy it is not necessary that intended crime was committed or not. If committed it may further help prosecution to prove the charge of conspiracy.

6. It is not necessary that all conspirators should agree to the common purpose at the same time. They may join with other conspirators at any time before the consummation of the intended objective, and all are equally responsible. What part each conspirator is to play may not be known to everyone or the fact as to when a conspirator joined the conspiracy and when he left.

7. A charge of conspiracy may prejudice the accused because it is forced them into a joint trial and the court may consider the entire mass of evidence against every accused. Prosecution has to produce evidence not only to show that each of the accused has knowledge of object of conspiracy but also of the agreement. In the charge of conspiracy court has to guard itself against the danger of unfairness to the accused. Introduction of evidence against some may result in the conviction of all, which is to be avoided. By means of evidence in conspiracy, which is otherwise inadmissible in the trial of any other substantive offence prosecution tries to implicate the accused not only in the conspiracy itself but also in the substantive crime of the alleged conspirators. There is always difficulty in tracing the precise contribution of each member of the conspiracy but then there has to be cogent and convincing evidence against each one of the accused charged with the offence of conspiracy. As observed by Judge Learned Hand that "this distinction is important today when many prosecutors seek to sweep within the dragnet of conspiracy all those who have been associated in any degree whatever with the main offenders".

8. As stated above it is the unlawful agreement and not its accomplishment, which is the gist or essence of the crime of conspiracy. Offence of criminal conspiracy is complete even though there is no agreement as to the means by which the purpose is to be accomplished. It is the unlawful agreement, which is the graham of the crime of conspiracy. The unlawful agreement which amounts to a conspiracy need not be formal or express, but may be inherent in and inferred from the circumstances, especially declarations, acts, and conduct of the conspirators. The agreement need not be entered into by all the parties to it at the same time, but may be reached by successive actions evidencing their joining of the conspiracy.

9. It has been said that a criminal conspiracy is a partnership in crime, and that there is in each conspiracy a joint or mutual agency for the prosecution of a common plan. Thus, if two or more persons enter into a conspiracy, any act done by any of them pursuant to the agreement is in contemplation of law, the act of each of them and they are jointly responsible therefore. This means that everything said, written or done by any of the conspirators in execution or furtherance of the common purpose is deemed to have been said, done, or written by each of them. And this joint responsibility extends not only to what is done by any of the conspirators pursuant to the original agreement but also to collateral acts incident to and growing out of the original purpose. A conspirator is not responsible, however, for acts done by a co- conspirator after termination of the conspiracy. The joinder of a conspiracy by a new member does not create a new conspiracy nor does it change the status of the other conspirators, and the mere fact that conspirators individually or in groups perform different tasks to a common end does not split up a conspiracy into several different conspiracies.

10. A man may join a conspiracy by word or by deed. However, criminal responsibility for a conspiracy requires more than a merely passive attitude towards an existing conspiracy. One who commits an overt act with knowledge of the conspiracy is guilty. And one who tacitly consents to the object of a conspiracy and goes along with other conspirators, actually standing by while the others put the conspiracy into effect, is guilty though he intends to take no active part in the crime.

285. The rationale of conspiracy is that the required objective manifestation of disposition of criminality is provided by the act of agreement. Conspiracy is a clandestine activity. Persons generally do not form illegal covenants openly. In the interest of security, a person may carry out his part of a conspiracy without even being informed of the identity of his co- conspirators. An agreement of this kind can rarely be shown by direct proof; it must be inferred from the circumstantial evidence of co- operation between the accused. What people do is, of course, evidence of what lies in their minds. To convict a person of conspiracy, the prosecution must show that he agreed with others that they would together accomplish the unlawful object of the conspiracy. [See: Firozuddin Basheeruddin and Ors. v. State of Kerala MANU/SC/0471/2001 : (2001) 7 SCC 596]

286. In Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0500/1994 : 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80, this Court reiterated that the essential ingredient of criminal conspiracy is the agreement to commit an offence. After referring to the judgments in Noor Mohd. Mohd. Yusuf Momi (supra) and V.C. Shukla v. State (Delhi Admn.) MANU/SC/0545/1980 : (1980) 2 SCC 665, it was held in S.C. Bahri (supra) as under:

[A] cursory look to the provisions contained in Section 120- A reveals that a criminal conspiracy envisages an agreement between two or more persons to commit an illegal act or an act which by itself may not be illegal but the same is done or executed by illegal means. Thus the essential ingredient of the offence of criminal conspiracy is the agreement to commit an offence. In a case where the agreement is for accomplishment of an act which by itself constitutes an offence, then in that event no overt act is necessary to be proved by the prosecution because in such a fact-situation criminal conspiracy is established by proving such an agreement. In other words, where the conspiracy alleged is with regard to commission of a serious crime of the nature as contemplated in Section 120- B read with the proviso to Sub- section (2) of Section 120- A Indian Penal Code, then in that event mere proof of an agreement between the accused for commission of such a crime alone is enough to bring about a conviction Under Section 120- B and the proof of any overt act by the accused or by any one of them would not be necessary. The provisions in such a situation do not require that each and every person who is a party to the conspiracy must do some overt act towards the fulfillment of the object of conspiracy, the essential ingredient being an agreement between the conspirators to commit the crime and if these requirements and ingredients are established the act would fall within the trapping of the provisions contained in Section 120- B since from its very nature a conspiracy must be conceived and hatched in complete secrecy, because otherwise the whole purpose may be frustrated and it is common experience and goes without saying that only in very rare cases one may come across direct evidence of a criminal conspiracy to commit any crime and in most of the cases it is only the circumstantial evidence which is available from which an inference giving rise to the conclusion of an agreement between two or more persons to commit an offence may be legitimately drawn.

287. From the law discussed above, it becomes clear that the prosecution must adduce evidence to prove that:

(i) the accused agreed to do or caused to be done an act;

(ii) such an act was illegal or was to be done by illegal means within the meaning of Indian Penal Code;

(iii) irrespective of whether some overt act was done by one of the accused in pursuance of the agreement.

288. In the case at hand, the prosecution has examined P.W. 82 to prove the charges of conspiracy and for further identification of all the accused persons in the bus on the date of the incident. He has also been presented to support the prosecution case that immediately preceding the fateful incident, all the accused persons had, in execution of their conspiracy, been robbing/merry-making with passengers on the road.

289. The defence has controverted the testimony of P.W. 82 on several aspects which has already been discussed before. It has been alleged that Ram Adhar, P.W. 82, is a planted witness who was brought in by the investigators to fill the lacunae, if any, in their investigation and to further make a strong case against the accused persons. The defence has further denied the presence of accused Mukesh at the scene of the crime. Accused Vinay and accused Akshay have also raised the plea of alibi which has been dealt with separately by us. Regardless of the fact that we have found the testimony of P.W. 82 to be creditworthy, even if the same is not taken into account for the purpose of establishing that the accused acted in concert with each other to commit heinous offences against the victim, the testimony of P.W. 1 coupled with the dying declarations of the prosecutrix irrefragably establish the charge Under Section 120B against all the accused persons.

290. First of all, in order to prove the presence of all the accused on board the bus where the entire incident took place, the prosecution has relied upon the testimony of P.W. 1, P.W. 82, P.W. 16 and, most importantly, the dying declarations of the prosecutrix.

291. As per the records, P.W. 82 has testified to the effect that on the date of the incident, about 8:30 p.m., he had boarded the concerned bus from Munirka Bus Stand, New Delhi, on noticing that the conductor of the bus sought commuters for Khanpur. However, he was later informed that he would be dropped at Nehru Place instead of Khanpur. When P.W. 82 tried to get down the bus, he was wrongfully confined, attacked by the persons inside the bus who robbed him of his belongings, viz., Rs. 1500/- in cash and a mobile phone, and he was then thrown out of the moving bus. During the trial, P.W. 82 has identified all the four accused persons, viz., Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur, Pawan Gupta, Vinay Sharma and accused Mukesh, present in the concerned bus at the time of the incident. P.W. 82 had lodged the complaint on 18.12.2012 on the basis of which FIR No. 414 of 2012 was registered at P.S. Vasant Vihar, New Delhi Under Sections 365, 397, 342 Indian Penal Code.

292. Learned Senior Counsel for the State, Mr. Luthra, has submitted that P.W. 82 had been examined to establish the conduct of the accused on the aspect of conspiracy and also to establish the identity of the accused persons before the trial court. It was further submitted that P.W. 82, Ram Adhar, identified all the four accused in the court, namely, Akshay Kumar Singh @ Thakur, Pawan Gupta, Vinay Sharma and Mukesh besides two others present inside the bus and also identified Mukesh as driving the bus and stated that others took him inside the bus and robbed him and attacked him.

293. The contention of the Appellants is that the testimony of P.W. 82 is not bereft of doubt for several reasons, namely, a) delay in lodging FIR, b) non- examination of Sanjiv Bhai as a witness, c) he has stated that he heard the person with the burnt hand say "Mukesh, tez chalao", d) apart from that, he does not mention that he heard the names of any of the accused, and e) he had not visited a doctor/hospital despite stating that he had injuries on his face which prevented him from registering an FIR.

294. Regarding the alleged incident of attack on P.W. 82 by the accused, it was submitted that the said case against the accused ended in conviction and the same is pending in appeal. In respect of the credibility of the testimony of P.W. 82 as to the commission of the offence, we are not inclined to take into account the evidence of P.W. 82 except on one limited aspect, that is, the presence of the accused in the bus, Ex. P1, on the night of 16.12.2012 since P.W. 82's presence in the bus on the night of 16.12.2012 is admitted. In his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure, Mukesh- A2 admitted that P.W. 82 had boarded the offending bus prior to the boarding of the bus by the informant and the victim. The relevant portion of his statement is extracted as under:

Q.211: It is in evidence against you that P.W. 82 Shri Ram Adhar deposed that on 16.12.2012 after finishing his carpenter's work at a shop at Munirka till about 8:30 PM, he boarded a white colour bus from sabji Market across the road of my work place. The helper of the bus was calling the passenger by saying "khanpur- khanpur". As P.W. 82 boarded the bus, one of the occupants told him that the bus is going to Nehru Place. As P.W. 82 tried to get down, one person whose one limb was having burn injuries, gave beating to him. The other person pulled him inside the bus towards the back side and they all gave beating to him and removed his belongings i.e. one mobile with two sims and Rs. 1500/- . The sim card numbers were 9999095739 and 9971612554. What do you have to say?

Ans: It is correct that P.W. 82 Shri Ram Adhar had boarded the bus Ex. P1 on 16.12.2012 prior to the boarding of the bus Ex. P1 by the complainant and the victim. He boarded the bus from Sabji Mandi at Sector- 4 on the main road. He went on the back side of the bus but after sometime he was made to deboard the bus at IIT flyover by accused Akshay as he had no money to pay the fare. At that time accused Akshay, accused Ram Singh, since deceased, accused Vinay accused Pawan along with JCL were present in the bus and I was driving it.

The presence of P.W. 82 in Ex. P1 bus prior to the boarding of the bus by the informant, P.W. 1, and the victim and the presence of all the accused in the bus is, thus, established by the prosecution.

295. The evidence of P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav, the owner of the offending bus, indicates accused Ram Singh, A- 1, (since deceased) as the driver of the bus and Akshay Kumar as the cleaner of the bus which is further shown in the attendance register of the bus exhibited as Ex. P.W. 80/K. The evidence of P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav, is corroborated by the entries made in the attendance register where in the driver's page at Sl. No. 5, the name of accused Ram Singh (since deceased) is written against bus No. 0149 and at Sl. No. 15, the name of Akshay is written as helper against bus No. 0149. As stated earlier, the bus bearing Registration No. DL- 1PC- 0149 was one of the buses hired by Birla Vidya Niketan School, Pushp Vihar, New Delhi and the fact that the driver of the bus at the relevant time was Ram Singh is sought to be proved by the prosecution through the testimony of P.W. 16, Rajeev Jakhmola, Manager (Administration) of the said school. The said witness has testified that one Dinesh Yadav, P.W. 81, had provided seven buses to the school including bus bearing No. DL- 1PC- 0149 for the purpose of ferrying the children of the school.

The driver of this bus was one Ram Singh, son of Mange Lal. The documents relating to the bus including the photocopies of the agreement between the school and the bus contractor, copy of the driving licence of Ram Singh, A- 1, and the letter of termination dated 18.12.2012 with "Yadav Travels" were furnished to the Investigating Officer, SI Pratibha Sharma, vide his letter dated 25.12.2012, exhibited as Ex. P.W. 16/A (colly.). From the evidence of P.W. 16, Rajeev Jakhmola, it stands proved that the bus in question was routinely driven by Ram Singh (since deceased). The statement of P.W. 16, Rajeev Jakhmola, is corroborated by the testimony of P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav. Significantly, P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav, further testified:

This bus was being parked by accused Ram Singh near his house because this bus was attached with the school and also with an office as a chartered bus and that the accused used to pick up the students early in the morning.

296. The testimony of P.W. 13, Brijesh Gupta, who was an auto driver and also resident of jhuggi at Ravi Dass Camp from where the offending bus was seized is also relevant to prove the presence of the accused in the bus. He stated in his evidence that A- 1, Ram Singh (since deceased), is the brother of A- 2, Mukesh, and that both resided in the jhuggi at Ravi Dass camp and that Ram Singh used to drive the said bus and park it in the night near his jhuggi. P.W. 13, in his evidence, deposed that on the night of 16.12.2012, about 11:30 p.m., when he returned to his jhuggi after plying his auto, he saw accused Mukesh, A- 2, taking water in some can inside a white colour bus and washing it from inside. He also noticed some clothes and pieces of curtains being burnt in the fire.

297. In his questioning Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure, Mukesh, A- 2, has admitted that he and A- 1, Ram Singh (since deceased), are brothers. He has also admitted that on the night of 16.12.2012, he was driving the bus and that accused Pawan and Vinay Sharma were seated on the backside of the driver's seat, whereas Akshay and Ram Singh were sitting in the driver's cabin. The relevant portion of his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure reads as under:

Q2. It is in evidence against you that P.W. 1 further deposed that they inquired from 4- 5 auto rickshaw- walas to take them to Dwarka, but they all refused. At about 9 PM they reached at Munirka bus stand and found a white colour bus on which "Yadav" was written. A boy in the bus was calling for commuters for Dwarka/Palam Mod. P.W. 1 noticed yellow and green line/strips on the bus and that the entry gate of the bus was ahead of its front tyre, as in luxury buses and that the front tyre was not having a wheel cover. What do you have to say?

Ans: I was driving the bus while my brother Ram Singh, since deceased and JCL, Raju was calling for passengers by saying "Palam/Dwarka Mod".

Q4: It is in evidence against you that during the course of his deposition, complainant, P.W. 1 has identified you accused Mukesh to be the person who was sitting on the driver's seat and was driving the bus; P.W. 1 further identified your co- accused Ram Singh (since deceased), and Akshay Kumar to be the person who were sitting in the driver's cabin alongwith the driver; P.W. 1 had also identified your co- accused Pawan Kumar who was sitting in front of him in two seats row of the bus; P.W. 1 had also identified your co- accused Vinay Sharma to be the person who was sitting in three seats row just behind the Driver's cabin, when P.W. 1 entered the bus; P.W. 1 has also deposed before the court that the conductor who was calling him and his friend/prosecutrix to board the bus Ex. P1 was not among the accused person being tried in this Court.

Ans: Accused Pawan and accused Vinay Sharma were sitting on my back side of the driver's seat and whereas accused Akshay was sitting in the driver's cabin while my brother Ram Singh, since deceased was asking for passengers.

Q5: It is in evidence against you that after entering the bus P.W. 1 noticed that seats cover of the bus were of red colour and it had yellow colour curtains and the windows of the bus had black film on it. The windows were at quite a height as in luxury buses. As P.W. 1 sat down inside the bus, he noticed that two of you accused were sitting in the driver's cabin were coming and returning to the driver's cabin. P.W. 1 paid an amount of Rs. 20/- as bus fare to the conductor i.e. Rs. 10/- per head. What do you have to say?

Ans: It is correct that the windows of the bus Ex. P1 were having black film on it but I cannot say if the seats of the bus were having red covers or that the curtains were of yellow colour as my brother Ram Singh, since deceased, only used to drive the bus daily and that on that day since he was drunk heavily so I had gone to Munirka to bring him to my house and hence, I was driving the bus on that day. I had gone to Munirka with my nephew on my cycle to fetch Ram Singh since deceased and that the other boys alongwith Ram Singh had already taken the bus from R.K. Puram. I was called by Ram Singh on phone to come at Munirka.

298. A- 3, Akshay @ Thakur, in his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure, has admitted that he was working with A- 1, Ram Singh (since deceased), in the offending bus, Ex. P1, as a helper. He has also admitted therein that he had joined A- 1, Ram Singh (since deceased), on 03.11.2012. The relevant portion of his statement Under Section 313 Code of Criminal Procedure is extracted hereunder:

Q.210: It is in evidence against you that P.W. 81 Shri Dinesh Yadav is the owner of the bus Ex. P1 and that he has employed accused Ram Singh, since deceased, as the driver of the bus in the month of December, 2012 and you accused Akshay was working as helper in the said bus. Further, he deposed that on 25.12.2012 he had handed over the documents relating to the bus to the investigating officer, seized vide memo Ex. P.W. 80/K. The copy of the challan and copy of the notice are collectively Ex. P- 81/1 and the register on which "Yadav Travels 2012" is written is Ex. P- 81/2. He also identified the driving license Ex. P- 74/1 of his driver, accused Ram Singh, since deceased. He further deposed that the bus Ex. P1 used to ply in Birla Vidya Niketan as well as chartered bus and used to take the office- goers from Delhi and drop them at Noida every morning and evening. What do you have to say?

Ans: It is correct that I was working as a helper in the bus Ex. P1. I joined Ram Singh, since deceased as helper on 3.11.2012 but I left the company of Ram Singh on 15.12.2012 at about 10.30 AM and I left for my village at 11:30 am and I went to New Delhi Railway Station and I left Delhi in the train at about 2:30 P.M.

299. DW- 5, Smt. Champa Devi, is the mother of Vinay Sharma, A- 4. She has stated in her evidence that her son, Vinay Sharma, A- 4, who returned home at 4:00 p.m. on 16.12.2012, went in search of A- 1 on hearing about the misbehaviour of A- 1, Ram Singh (since deceased), with his sister and was able to trace him by 8:00 p.m. and that her son Vinay Sharma, A- 4, had quarreled with Ram Singh, A- 1. She has deposed in her evidence that her son Vinay Sharma returned bleeding from his mouth and after some time they had left to the DDA District Park to attend a musical programme where they had met A- 5, Pawan alias Kaalu, alongwith two others.

300. The prosecution has, thus, established that the accused were associated with each other. The criminal acts done in furtherance of conspiracy is established by the sequence of events and the conduct of the accused. An important facet of the law of conspiracy is that apart from it being a distinct offence, all conspirators are liable for the acts of each other of the crime or crimes which have been committed as a result of the conspiracy. Section 10 of the Indian Evidence Act which reads as under is relevant in this context:

10. Things said or done by conspirator in reference to common design.- Where there is reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence or an actionable wrong, anything said, done or written by any one of such persons in reference to their common intention, after the time when such intention was first entertained by any one of them, is a relevant fact as against each of the persons believed to so conspiring, as well for the purpose of proving the existence of the conspiracy as for the purpose of showing that any such person was a party to it.

301. Section 10 of the Indian Evidence Act begins with the phrase "where there is reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence" which implies that if prima facie evidence of the existence of a conspiracy is given and accepted, the evidence of acts and statements made by any one of the conspirators in furtherance of the common intention is admissible against all. In the facts of the present case, the prima facie evidence of the existence of conspiracy is well established.

302. The informant, P.W. 1, has also deposed as to the clarity of the entire incident. He has identified all the accused to be present in the bus when he had boarded the same with the prosecutrix. He has maintained that he saw three persons sitting in the driver's cabin who were moving in and out of the cabin. Both the informant and the prosecutrix had sensed some sort of hostility and strangeness in the behavior of the accused. But, as they had paid for the ticket, they quietly kept sitting. Soon they found that the lights in the bus were put off and the accused Ram Singh (since deceased) and accused Akshay came near them to ask where P.W. 1 was heading with the prosecutrix at that odd time of the evening. P.W. 1, on objecting to such a query, was beaten and pinned down by the accused. Thereafter, all the accused, one after the other, committed rape and unnatural sex on the prosecutrix using iron rods which has been explicitly described by the prosecutrix herself in her dying declarations recorded by P.W. 27, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and P.W. 30, Metropolitan Magistrate. The relevant portion of the second dying declaration of the prosecutrix as contained in Ex. P.W. 27/A is as under:

Ans. 09 Paanch minute baad jab bus Malai Mandir ke pul par chadi toh conductor ne bus ke darwaze bandh kar diye aur andar ki batiya bujha di aur mere dost ke paas akar galiyan dene lage aur marne lage. Usko 3- 4 logo ne pakad liya aur mujh ko baki log mujhe bus ke peechey hisey mein le gaye aur mere kapde faad diye aur bari- 2 se rape kiya. Lohey ki rod se mujhe mere paet par maara aur poore shareer par danto se kata. Is se pehle mere dost ka saman - mobile phone, purse, credit card & debit card, ghadi aadi cheen liye. But total chhey (6) log the jinhoney bari- bari se oral (oral) vaginal (through vagina) aur pichhey se (anal) balatkar kiya. In logo ne lohe ki rod ko mere shareer ke andar vaginal/guptang aur guda (pichhey se) (through rectum) dala aur phir bahar bhi nikala. Aur mere guptango haath aur lohe ki rod dal kar mere shareer ke andruni hisson ko bahar nikala aur chot pahunchayi. Chhey logo ne bari- bari se mere saath kareeb ek ghante tak balatkar kiya. Chalti huyi bus mein he driver badalta raha taaki woh bhi balatkar kar sake.

303. The chain of events described by the prosecutrix in her dying declarations coupled with the testimonies of the other witnesses clearly establish that as soon as the informant and the prosecutrix boarded the bus, the accused persons formed an agreement to commit heinous offences against the victim. Forcefully having sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, one after the other, inserting iron rod in her private parts, dragging her by her hair and then throwing her out of the bus all establish the common intent of the accused to rape and murder the prosecutrix. The trial court has rightly recorded that the prosecutrix's alimentary canal from the level of duodenum upto 5 cm of anal sphincter was completely damaged. It was beyond repair. Causing of damage to the jejunum is indicative of the fact that the rod was inserted through the vagina and/or anus upto the level of jejunum. Further, septicemia was the direct result of multiple internal injuries. Moreover, the prosecutrix has also maintained in her dying declaration that the accused persons were exhorting that the prosecutrix had died and she be thrown out of the bus. Ultimately, both the prosecutrix as well as the informant were thrown out of the moving bus through the front door by the accused after having failed to throw them through the rear door.

The conduct of the accused in committing heinous offences with the prosecutrix in concert with each other and thereafter throwing her out of the bus in an unconscious state alongwith P.W. 1 unequivocally bring home the charge Under Section 120B in case of each of them. The criminal acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy is evident from the acts and also the words uttered during the commission of the offence. Therefore, we do not have the slightest hesitation in holding that the trial court and the High Court have correctly considered the entire case on the touchstone of well- recognised principles for arriving at the conclusion of criminal conspiracy. The prosecution has been able to unfurl the case relating to criminal conspiracy by placing the materials on record and connecting the chain of circumstances. The relevant evidence on record lead to a singular conclusion that the accused persons are liable for criminal conspiracy and their confessions to counter the same deserve to be repelled.

Summary of conclusions:

304. From the critical analysis, keen appreciation of the evidence and studied scrutiny of the oral evidence and other materials, we arrive at the following conclusions:

i. The evidence of P.W. 1 is unimpeachable and it deserves to be relied upon.

ii. The accused persons alongwith the juvenile in conflict with law were present in the bus when the prosecutrix and her friend got into the bus.

iii. There is no reason or justification to disregard the CCTV footage, for the same has been duly proved and it clearly establishes the description and movement of the bus.

iv. The arrest of the accused persons from various places at different times has been clearly proven by the prosecution.

v. The personal search, recoveries and the disclosure leading to recovery are in consonance with law and the assail of the same on the counts of custodial confession made under torture and other pleas are highly specious pleas and they do not remotely create a dent in the said aspects.

vi. The contention raised by the accused persons that the recoveries on the basis of disclosure were a gross manipulation by the investigating agency and deserve to be thrown overboard does not merit acceptance.

vii. The relationship between the parties having been clearly established, their arrest gains more credibility and the involvement of each accused gains credence.

viii. The dying declarations, three in number, do withstand close scrutiny and they are consistent with each other.

ix. The stand that the deceased could not have given any dying declaration because of her health condition has to be repelled because the witnesses who have stated about the dying declarations have stood embedded to their version and nothing has been brought on record to discredit the same. That apart, the dying declaration by gestures has been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

x. There is no justification in any manner whatsoever to think that P.W. 1 and the deceased would falsely implicate the accused- Appellants and leave the real culprits.

xi. The dying declarations made by the deceased have received corroboration from the oral and documentary evidence and also enormously from the medical evidence.

xii. The DNA profiling, which has been done after taking due care for quality, proves to the hilt the presence of the accused persons in the bus and their involvement in the crime. The submission that certain samples were later on taken from the accused and planted on the deceased to prove the DNA aspect is noted only to be rejected because it has no legs to stand upon.

xiii. The argument that the transfusion of blood has the potentiality to give rise to two categories of DNA or two DNAs is farthest from truth and there is no evidence on that score. On the contrary, the evidence in exclusivity points to the matching of the DNA of the deceased with that of the accused on many aspects. The evidence brought on record with regard to finger prints is absolutely impeccable and the trial court and the High Court have correctly placed reliance on the same and we, in our analysis, have found that there is no reason to disbelieve the same.

xiv. The scientific evidence relating to odontology shows how far the accused have proceeded and where the bites have been found and definitely, it is extremely impossible to accept the submission that it has been a manipulation by the investigating agency to rope in the accused persons.

xv. The evidence brought on record as regards criminal conspiracy stands established.

In view of the aforesaid summation, the inevitable conclusion is that the prosecution has proved the charges leveled against the Appellants beyond reasonable doubt.

Sentencing procedure and compliance of Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure:

305. Now we shall proceed to sentencing. A submission was raised that provisions of Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure was not complied with. The said provision reads as follows:

235. Judgment of acquittal or conviction

(1) .....

(2) If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of Section 360, hear the accused on the question of sentence, and then pass sentence on him according to law.

306. While discussing Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure, this Court, in Santa Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0167/1976 : (1976) 4 SCC 190, observed as follows:

4. .... the hearing contemplated by Section 235(2) is not confined merely to hearing oral submissions, but it is also intended to give an opportunity to the prosecution and the accused to place before the court facts and material relating to various factors bearing on the question of sentence and if they are contested by either side, then to produce evidence for the purpose of establishing the same.

307. A three- Judge Bench in Dagdu and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0086/1977 : (1977) 3 SCC 68 considered the object and scope of Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure and held that:

79. But we are unable to read the judgment in Santa Singh as laying down that the failure on the part of the Court, which convicts an accused, to hear him on the question of sentence must necessarily entail a remand to that Court in order to afford to the accused an opportunity to be heard on the question us sentence. The Court, on convicting an accused, must unquestionably hear him on the question of sentence. But if, for any reason, it omits to do so and the accused makes a grievance of it in the higher court, it would be open to that Court to remedy the breach by giving a hearing to the accused on the question of sentence. That opportunity has to be real and effective, which means that the accused must be permitted to adduce before the Court all the data which he desires to adduce on the question of sentence. The accused may exercise that right either by instructing his counsel to make oral submissions to the Court or he may, on affidavit or otherwise, place in writing before the Court whatever he desires to place before it on the question of sentence. The Court may, in appropriate cases, have to adjourn the matter in order to give to the accused sufficient time to produce the necessary data and to make his contentions on the question of sentence. That, perhaps, must inevitably happen where the conviction is recorded for the first time by a higher court.

80. Bhagwati, J. has observed in his judgment that care ought to be taken to ensure that the opportunity of a hearing on the question of sentence is nut abused and turned into an instrument for unduly protracting the proceedings. The material on which the accused proposes to rely may therefore, according to the learned Judge, be placed before the Court by means of an affidavit. Fazal Ali, J., also observes that the courts must be vigilant to exercise proper control over their proceedings, that the accused must not be permitted to adopt dilatory tactics under the cover of the new right and that what Section 235(2) contemplates is a short and simple opportunity to place the necessary material before the Court. These observations show that for a proper and effective implementation of the provision contained in Section 235(2), it is not always necessary to remand the matter to the court which has recorded the conviction. The fact that in Santa Singh this Court remanded the matter to the Sessions Court does not spell out the ratio of the judgment to be that in every such case there has to be a remand. Remand is an exception, not the rule, and ought therefore to be avoided as far as possible in the interests of expeditious, though fair, disposal of cases.

308. Mr. Raju Ramachandran, learned amicus curiae, submitted that the sentence passed by the trial court that has been confirmed by the High Court ought to be set aside as they have not followed the fundamental norms of sentencing and have not been guided by the paramount beacons of legislative policy discernible from Section 354(3) and Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure. It is urged by him that the import of Section 235 Code of Criminal Procedure is not only to hear the submissions orally but also to afford an opportunity to the prosecution and the defence to place the relevant material having bearing on the question of sentence. Learned amicus curiae would submit that the trial court as well as the High Court has failed to put any of the accused persons to notice on the question of imposition of death sentence; that sufficient time was not granted to reflect on the question of death penalty; that none of the accused persons were heard in person; that the learned trial Judge has failed to elicit those circumstances of the accused which would have a bearing on the question of sentence, especially the mitigating factors in a case where death penalty is imposed; that no separate reasons were ascribed for the imposition of death penalty on each of the accused; and that it was obligatory on the part of the learned trial Judge to individually afford an opportunity to the accused persons. Learned amicus curiae would submit that the learned trial Judge has pronounced the sentence in a routine manner which vitiates the sentence inasmuch as the solemn duty of the sentencing court has not been kept in view. Mr. Ramachandran had emphatically put forth that denial of an individualized sentencing process results in the denial of Articles 14 and 21 of the Constitution of India. Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel for the Respondent- State, submitted that the learned trial Judge had heard the accused persons and there has been compliance with Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure and the High Court has appositely concurred with the same.

309. Be it stated, after hearing the learned Counsel for the both sides and the learned amicus curiae, the Court, on 03.02.2017, passed the following order:

After the argument for the accused persons by Mr. M.L. Sharma and Mr. A.P. Singh, learned Counsel were advanced, we thought it appropriate to hear the learned friends of the Court and, accordingly, we have heard Mr. Raju Ramachandran and Mr. Sanjay R. Hegde, learned Senior Counsel. It is worthy to note here that Mr. Hegde, learned Senior Counsel argued on the sustainability of the conviction on many a ground and submitted a written note of submission. Mr. Ramachandran, learned Senior Counsel, inter alia, emphasized on the aspect of sentence imposed by the trial court which has been confirmed Under Section 366 Code of Criminal Procedure. While arguing with regard to the imposition of the capital punishment on the accused persons, one of the main submissions of Mr. Ramachandran was that neither the trial court nor the High Court has followed the mandate enshrined Under Section 235(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure reads as follows:

235. Judgment of acquittal or conviction.- (1) After hearing arguments and points of law (if any), the Judge shall give a judgment in the case. (2) If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of Section 360, hear the accused on the question of sentence, and then pass sentence on him according to law.

Referring to the procedure adopted by the trial court, it was urged by Mr. Ramachandran that the learned trial Judge had not considered the aggravating and mitigating circumstances, as are required to be considered in view of the Constitution Bench decision in Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0055/1982 : (1980) 2 SCC 684, and further there has been a failure of the substantive law, inasmuch as there has been weighing of the mitigating or the aggravating circumstances in respect of each individual accused. Learned Senior Counsel contended that Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure is not a mere formality and in a case when there are more than one accused, it is obligatory on the part of the learned trial Judge to hear the accused individually on the question of sentence and deal with him. As put forth by Mr. Ramachandran, the High Court has also failed to take pains in that regard. To bolster his submission, he has commended us to the authority in Santa Singh v. The State of Punjab. In the said case, Bhagwati, J. dealt with the anatomy of Section 235 Code of Criminal Procedure, the purpose and purport behind it and, eventually, came to hold that:

Law strives to give them social and economic justice and it has, therefore, necessarily to be weighted in favour of the weak and the exposed. This is the new law which judges are now called upon to administer and it is, therefore, essential that they should receive proper training which would bring about an orientation in their approach and outlook, stimulate sympathies in them for the vulnerable sections of the community and inject a new awareness and sense of public commitment in them. They should also be educated in the new trends in penology and sentencing procedures so that they may learn to use penal law as a tool for reforming and rehabilitating criminals and smoothening out the uneven texture of the social fabric and not as a weapon, fashioned by law, for protecting and perpetuating the hegemony of one class over the other. Be that as it may, it is clear that the learned Sessions Judge was not aware of the provision in Section 235(2) and so also was the lawyer of the Appellant in the High Court unaware of it. No inference can, therefore, be drawn from the omission of the Appellant to raise this point, that he had nothing to Say in regard to the sentence and that consequently no prejudice was caused to him.

Thereafter, the learned Judge opined that non- compliance goes to the very root of the matter and it results in vitiating the sentence imposed. Eventually, Bhagwati, J. set aside the sentence of death and remanded the case to the court of session with a direction to pass appropriate sentence after giving an opportunity to the Appellant therein to be heard in regard to the question of sentence in accordance with the provision contained in Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure as interpreted by him.

In the concurring opinion, Fazal Ali, J., ruled thus:

The last point to be considered is the extent and import of the word "hear" used in Section 235(2) of the 1973 Code. Does it indicate, that the accused should enter into a fresh trial by producing oral and documentary evidence on the question of the sentence which naturally will result in further delay of the trial? The Parliament does not appear to have intended that the accused should adopt dilatory tactics under the cover of this new provision but contemplated that a short and simple opportunity has to be given to the accused to place materials if necessary by leading evidence before the Court bearing on the question of sentence and a consequent opportunity to the prosecution to rebut those materials. The Law Commission was fully aware of this anomaly and it accordingly suggested thus:

We are aware that a provision for an opportunity to give evidence in this respect may necessitate an adjournment; and to avoid delay adjournment, for the purpose should, ordinarily be for not more than 14 days. It may be so provided in the relevant clause. It may not be practicable to keep up to the time- limit suggested by the Law Commission with mathematical accuracy but the Courts must be vigilant to exercise proper control over the proceedings so that the trial is not unavoidably or unnecessarily delayed.

The said decision was considered by a three- Judge Bench in Dagdu and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0086/1977 : (1977) 3 SCC 68. The three- Judge Bench referred to the law laid down in Santa Singh (supra) and opined that the mandate of Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure has to be obeyed in letter and spirit. However, the larger Bench thought that Santa Singh (supra) does not lay down as a principle that failure on the part of the Court which convicts an accused, to hear him on the question of sentence must necessarily entail a remand to that Court in order to afford the accused an opportunity to be heard on the question of sentence. Chandrachud, J. (as His Lordship then was) speaking for the Bench ruled thus:

The Court, on convicting an accused, must unquestionably hear him on the question of sentence. But if, for any reason, it omits to do so and the accused makes a grievance of it in the higher court, it would be open to that Court to remedy the breach by giving a hearing to the accused on the question of sentence. That opportunity has to be real and effective, which means that the accused must be permitted to adduce before the Court all the data which he desires to adduce on the question of sentence. The accused may exercise that right either by instructing his counsel to make oral submissions to the Court or he may, on affidavit or otherwise, place in writing before the Court whatever he desires to place before it on the question of sentence. The Court may, in appropriate cases, have to adjourn the matter in order to give to the accused sufficient time to produce the necessary data and to make his contentions on the question of sentence. That, perhaps, must inevitably happen where the conviction is recorded for the first time by a higher court.

It is seemly to note here that Mr. Ramachandran has also commended us to a three- Judge Bench decision in Malkiat Singh and Ors. v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0622/1991 : (1991) 4 SCC 341, wherein the three- Judge Bench ruled that sufficient time has to be given to the accused or the prosecution on the question of sentence, to show the grounds on which the prosecution may plead or the accused may show that the maximum sentence of death may be the appropriate sentence or the minimum sentence of life imprisonment may be awarded, as the case may be.

Learned Senior Counsel has also drawn our attention to a two- Judge Bench decision in Ajay Pandit alias Jagdish Dayabhai Patel and Anr. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0562/2012 : (2012) 8 SCC 43, wherein the matter was remanded to the High Court. Mr. Ramachandran has drawn our attention to paragraph 47 of the said authority. It reads as follows:

Awarding death sentence is an exception, nor the rule, and only in the rarest of rare cases, the court could award death sentence. The state of mind of a person awaiting death sentence and the state of mind of a person who has been awarded life sentence may not be the same mentally and psychologically. The court has got a duty and obligation to elicit relevant facts even if the accused has kept totally silent in such situations. In the instant case, the High Court has not addressed the issue in the correct perspective bearing in mind those relevant factors, while questioning the accused and, therefore, committed a gross error of procedure in not properly assimilating and understanding the purpose and object behind Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure.

Having considered all the authorities, we find that there are two modes, one is to remand the matter or to direct the accused persons to produce necessary data and advance the contention on the question of sentence. Regard being had to the nature of the case, we think it appropriate to adopt the second mode. To elaborate, we would like to give opportunity before conclusion of the hearing to the accused persons to file affidavits along with documents stating about the mitigating circumstances. Needless to say, for the said purpose, it is necessary that the learned Counsel, Mr. M.L. Sharma and his associate Ms. Suman and Mr. A.P. Singh and his associate Mr.

V.P. Singh should be allowed to visit the jail and communicate with the accused persons and file the requisite affidavits and materials.

At this juncture, Mr. M.L. Sharma, learned Counsel has submitted that on many a occasion, he has faced difficulty as he had to wait in the jail to have a dialogue with his clients. Mr. Sidharth Luthra, learned Senior Counsel has submitted that if this Court directs, Mr. M.L. Sharma and Mr. A.P. Singh, learned Counsel and their associate Advocates can visit the jail at 2.45 p.m. each day and they shall be allowed to enter the jail between 3.00 p.m. to 3.15 p.m. and can spend time till 5.00 p.m. Needless to say, they can commence their visits from 7th February, 2017, and file the necessary separate affidavits and documents. After the affidavits are made ready by the learned Counsel for the accused persons, they can intimate about the same to Mr. Luthra, who in his turn, shall intimate the same to the Superintendent of Jail, who shall make arrangement for a Notary so that affidavits can be notarized, treating this as a direction of this Court. Needless to say, while the learned Counsel will be discussing with the accused persons, the meeting shall be held in separate rooms inside the jail premises so that they can have a free discussion with the accused persons. Needless to say, they can reproduce in verbatim what the accused persons tell them in the affidavit. The affidavits shall be filed by 23rd February, 2017.

We may hasten to add that after the affidavits come on record, a date shall be fixed for hearing of the affidavits and pertaining to quantum of sentence if, eventually, the conviction is affirmed. The learned Counsel for the prosecution, needless to say, is entitled to file necessary affidavits with regard to the circumstances or reasons for sustenance of the sentence. Additionally, the prosecution is given liberty to put forth in the affidavit any refutation, after the copies of the affidavits by the learned Counsel for the accused persons are served on him. For the said purpose, a week's time is granted. Needless to say, the matter shall be heard on sentence, after affidavits from both the sides are brought on record. The date shall be given at 2.00 p.m. on 6th February, 2017. For the present, the matter stands adjourned to 4th February, 2017, for hearing.

Let a copy of the order be handed over to Mr. Sidharth Luthra by 4th February, 2017, who shall get it translated in Hindi and give it to the Superintendent of Jail, who in his turn, shall hand over it to the accused persons and, simultaneously, explain the purport and effect of the order.

The Superintendent of Jail is also directed to submit a report with regard to the conduct of the accused persons while they are in custody.

310. After passing of the said order, the hearing continued and on 13.02.2017, the following order was passed:

Mr. A.P. Singh, learned Counsel has concluded his arguments. After his conclusion of the arguments, as per our order, dated 3.2.2017, affidavits are required to be filed by 23.2.2017. Let the affidavits be filed by that date. Mr. Siddharth Luthra, learned Senior Counsel appearing for the State shall file the affidavit by 2nd March, 2017. Registry is directed to hand over copies of the affidavits to Mr. K. Parameshwar, learned Counsel assisting Mr. Raju Ramachandran, learned Senior Counsel and Mr. Anil Kumar Mishra- I, learned Counsel assisting Mr. Sanjay Kumar Hegde, learned Senior Counsel (Amicus Curiae).

Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel shall make arrangements for visit of Mr. A.P. Singh and Mr. Manohar Lal Sharma, learned Counsel for the Petitioners even on Saturday and sunday. He shall intimate our order to the jail authorities so that they can arrange the visit of Mr. A.P. Singh and Mr. Manohar Lal Sharma on Saturday and Sunday.

Let the matter be listed on 3.3.2017 for hearing on the question of sentence, aggravating and mitigating circumstances on the basis of the materials brought on record by learned Counsel for the parties.

311. In pursuance of the aforesaid order, affidavits on behalf of the Appellants have been filed. It is necessary to note that the learned Counsel for the Appellants addressed the Court on the basis of affidavits on 06.03.2017 and the order passed on that date is extracted hereunder:

Mr. A.P. Singh, learned Counsel has filed affidavits on behalf of the three accused persons, namely, Pawan Kumar Gupta, Vinay Sharma and Akshay Kumar Singh and Mr. M.L. Sharma, learned Counsel has filed the affidavit on behalf of Mukesh. Be it noted, Mr. A.P. Singh, learned Counsel has filed the translated version of the affidavits and Mr. Manohar Lal Sharma, learned Counsel has filed the original version in Hindi as well as the translated one.

At this juncture, Mr. Raju Ramachandran, learned Senior Counsel who has been appointed as Amicus Curiae to assist the Court, submitted that two aspects are required to be further probed to comply with the order dated 3.2.2017 inasmuch as this Court has taken the burden on itself for compliance of Section 235(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Learned Senior Counsel would point out that the affidavit filed by Mukesh does not cover many aspects, namely, socio- economic background, criminal antecedents, family particulars, personal habits, education, vocational skills, physical health and his conduct in the prison.

Mr. Manohar Lal Sharma, learned Counsel submits that a report was asked for from the Superintendent of Jail with regard to the conduct of the accused persons while they are in custody, but the same has not directly been filed by the Superintendent of Jail.

Mr. Siddharth Luthra, learned Senior Counsel for the Respondent- State, would, per contra, contend that he has filed the affidavit and the affidavit contains the report of the Superintendent of Jail.

In our considered opinion, the Superintendent of Jail should have filed the report with regard to the conduct of the accused persons since they are in custody for almost four years. That would have thrown light on their conduct. Let the report with regard to their conduct be filed by the Superintendent of Jail in a sealed cover in the Court on the next date of hearing.

As far as the affidavit filed by Mukesh is concerned, Mr. Sharma, learned Counsel stated that he will keep the aspects which are required to be highlighted in mind and file a further affidavit within a week hence.

The direction issued on the earlier occasion with regard to the visit of jail by the learned Counsel for the parties shall remain in force till the next date of hearing.

Let the matter be listed at 2.00 p.m. on 20.3.2017. The report of the Superintendent of Jail, as directed hereinabove, shall be filed in Court on that date.

312. Thereafter, the matter was heard on 20.03.2017 and the following order came to be passed:

Mr. M.L. Sharma, learned Counsel has filed an additional affidavit of the Petitioner, Mukesh and Mr. A.P. Singh, learned Counsel has filed affidavits for the Petitioners, Pawan Kumar Gupta, Vinay Kumar Sharma, and Akshay Kumar Singh.

Mr. Siddharth Luthra, learned Senior Counsel has produced two sealed covers containing the reports submitted by Superintendent of the Central Jail No. 2 and the Superintendent of Central Jail No. 4 in respect of the Petitioners who are in the respective jails. Two sealed covers are opened in presence of the learned Counsel for the parties. They be kept on record.

Registry is directed to supply a copy of the aforesaid reports to Mr. M.L. Sharma and Mr. A.P. Singh, learned Counsel for the Petitioners. Registry shall also supply a copy thereof to Mr. K. Parameshwar, learned Counsel assisting Mr. Raju Ramachandran, learned Amicus Curiae and Mr. Anil Kumar Mishra- I, learned Counsel assisting Mr. Sanjay R. Hegde, learned Amicus Curiae. A copy of the report shall also be handed over to Ms. Supriya Juneja, learned Counsel assisting Mr. Siddharth Luthra, learned Senior Counsel, for he does not have a copy as the reports have been produced before us in the sealed covers.

Mr. Siddharth Luthra, learned Senior Counsel prays for and is granted three days time to file a status report and argue the matter.

Delineation as regards the imposition of sentence

313. Be it noted, we have heard the learned Counsel appearing for the parties, Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel for the Respondent- State, Mr. Ramachandran and Mr. Hegde on the question of sentence. Before we advert to the principles for imposition of sentence, we think it appropriate to deal with the affidavits filed by the accused. For the sake of convenience, it is necessary to make a summary of the affidavits.

314. Accused Mukesh, A- 2, filed his statement, written in his own hand- writing in Hindi, denying his involvement in the occurrence and pleading innocence. He stated that on 17.12.2012, he was picked up from his house at Karoli, Rajasthan and brought to Delhi where the police tortured him and threatened to kill him. Therefore, he acted as per the direction of the police and V.K. Anand, Advocate. He further stated that he is uneducated and poor, but not a criminal and if he is acquitted, he would go back to Karoli, Rajasthan and would take care of his parents.

315. Accused Akshay Kumar Singh, A- 3, has stated that he hails from a naxal affected area in District Aurangabad, Bihar and due to poverty, he could not continue his studies beyond 9th class. He has stated that his aged father Shri Saryu Singh and mother, Smt. Malti Devi, are dependent on him. He has further stated that he is married to Punita Devi since 2010 and they have a son, now aged about six years. He further stated that due to poverty and lack of adequate opportunity in home town, he came to Delhi in the month of November 2012 to earn his livelihood. To maintain his dependants which include his parents, wife and child, he started working as a cleaner in the concerned bus at a wage of Rs. 50/- per day. He reiterated his plea of alibi asserting that he had left Delhi on 15.12.2012 in Mahabodhi Express accompanied by his sister- in- law, Sarita Devi, and went to his native place Karmalahang where he was arrested. He further stated that after his confinement in Tihar Jail, he has been maintaining good behavior and is working hard as a labourer in the prison to maintain his family.

316. Accused Vinay Sharma, A- 4, in his affidavit stated that he was born in Kapiya Kalan, Tehsil Rudra Nagar, District Basti, Uttar Pradesh and that his parents used to work as labourers and that his family is very poor. The accused stated that he used to take care of his grandfather who was a religious saint and up to July, 2012, he was studying at his native place in Uttar Pradesh and only after July, 2012, he came to Delhi to pursue his further studies. He has stated that he got himself admitted to the University of Delhi, School of Open Learning, Delhi and to earn his livelihood, he worked as a part- time instructor in gym and also as a seasonal waiter in hotels and marriage ceremonies at night. Accused Vinay Sharma further stated that he has to take care of his ailing parents and also his younger sisters and younger brother, who are totally dependent on him. In his affidavit, he reiterated his plea of alibi asserting that on the fateful day, he had participated in the Christmas celebration and was enjoying there with his family. The accused has further stated that he has no criminal antecedents and after his confinement in Tihar Jail, he has maintained good behavior and has also organized various musical programmes and his paintings are displayed in Tihar Jail.

317. Accused Pawan Gupta, A- 5, filed his affidavit stating that he comes from a very poor family where his father used to sell fruits on the road for their living. He further stated that he is a resident of Cluster Jhuggi Basti and was assisting his father in selling fruits on a cart. The accused also illustrated the ailing condition of his family stating that his parents are heart patients and his mother is a handicapped person suffering from BP and thyroid. He also stated that his younger sister, Dimple Gupta, was under depression on account of the false implication of her brother in the present case and could not tolerate humiliation by the society and she has committed suicide on 09.02.2013. Apart from that, he has to look after his dependant parents and two other sisters, one married and the other unmarried and aged 17 years, and one younger brother. On behalf of accused Pawan Gupta, fervent plea was made that he has no prior criminal antecedent and after being confined to Central Jail, Tihar, he is trying to reform himself into a better person.

318. Mr. Ramachandran, learned amicus curiae, criticized the sentence, placed reliance on Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0055/1982 : (1980) 2 SCC 684 and submitted that the trial court and the High Court have committed the error of not applying the doctrine of equality which prescribes similar treatment to similar persons and stated that the Court in Bachan Singh (supra) has categorically held that the extreme penalty can be inflicted only in gravest cases of extreme culpability; in making the choice of sentence, in addition to the circumstances of the offence, due regard must be paid to the circumstances of the offender also; and that the mitigating circumstances referred therein are undoubtedly relevant and must be given great weight in the determination of sentence. Further placing reliance on Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0211/1983 : (1983) 3 SCC 470, it is submitted by learned amicus curiae that in the said case, the Court held that a balance sheet of the aggravating and mitigating circumstances should be drawn up and the mitigating circumstances should be accorded full weightage and a just balance should be struck between the aggravating and mitigating circumstances. He further pointed out number of decisions wherein this Court has given considerable weight to the circumstances of the criminal and commuted the sentence to life imprisonment.

319. Mr. Ramachandran further urged that in the present case, the decision in Bachan Singh (supra) was completely disregarded and the trial court, while sentencing the accused, only placed emphasis on the brutal and heinous nature of the crime and the mitigating factors including the possibility of reform and rehabilitation were ruled out on the basis of the nature of the crime and not on its own merits. It is further contended by him that in Sangeet and Anr. v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0989/2012 : (2013) 2 SCC 452 and Shankar Kisanrao Khade v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0476/2013 : (2013) 5 SCC 546, the decisions, i.e., Shiv v. High Court of Karnataka MANU/SC/7103/2007 : (2007) 4 SCC 713, B.A. Umesh v. Registrar General, High Court of Karnataka MANU/SC/0082/2011 : (2011) 3 SCC 85 and Dhananjoy Chaterjee v. State of West Bengal MANU/SC/0626/1994 : (1994) 2 SCC 220, relied upon by the Special Public Prosecutor and the High Court, have been doubted by this Court.

320. Learned amicus curiae has further propounded that sentencing and non- consideration of the mitigating circumstances are violative of Articles 14 and 21 of the Constitution. It is his submission that the prosecution's argument on aggravating circumstances gets buttressed by the material on record while the plea of mitigating circumstances rests solely on arguments and this imbalance is a serious violation of the doctrine of fairness and reasonableness enshrined in Article 14 of the Constitution; that there should be a fair and principle- based sentencing process in death penalty cases by which a genuine and conscious attempt is made to investigate and evaluate the circumstances of the criminal; that the fair and principled approaches are facets of Article 14; and that if the enumeration and evaluation of mitigating factors are left only to the accused or his counsel and the Court does not accord a principle- based treatment, the imposition of death penalty will be rendered the norm and not the exception, which is an inversion of the Bachan Singh (supra) logic and a serious violation of Article 21 of the Constitution.

321. Mr. Ramachandran submitted that the trial court and the High Court failed to pay due regard to the mitigating factors; that the courts have committed the mistake of rejecting the mitigating factors by reasoning that it may not be sufficient for awarding life sentence; and that the courts have not considered all the mitigating factors cumulatively to arrive at the conclusion whether the case fell within the rarest of rare category. He has referred to the Constitution Bench decision in Triveniben v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0520/1989 : (1989) 1 SCC 678 wherein Shetty, J. in his concurring opinion, opined that death sentence cannot be given if there is any one mitigating circumstance in favour of the accused and all circumstances of the case should be aggravating and submitted that this line of judicial thought has been completely ignored by the High Court and the trial court.

322. Learned amicus curiae further contended that the attribution of individual role with respect to the iron rod, which was a crucial consideration in convicting the accused Under Section 302 Indian Penal Code, was not considered by the trial court or the High Court in the sentencing process and stressed that when life imprisonment is the norm and death penalty the exception, the lack of individual role has to be regarded as a major mitigating circumstance. In this regard, reliance has been placed by him on Karnesh Singh v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0051/1968 : AIR 1968 SC 1402, Ronny v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0199/1998 : (1998) 3 SCC 625, Nirmal Singh v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0178/1999 : (1999) 3 SCC 670 and Sahdeo v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0423/2004 : (2004) 10 SCC 682.

323. Mr. Ramachandran has also contended that subsequent to the pronouncement in Machhi Singh (supra), there are series of decisions by this Court where the Court has given considerable weight to the concept of reformation and rehabilitation and commuted the sentence to life imprisonment. According to him, young age is a mitigating factor and this Court has taken note of the same in Raghubir Singh v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0185/1974 : (1975) 3 SCC 37, Harnam Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0129/1975 : (1976) 1 SCC 163, Amit v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0567/2003 : (2003) 8 SCC 93, Rahul v. State of Maharashtra (2005) 10 SCC 322, Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0663/2009 : (2009) 5 SCC 740, Santosh Kumar Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0801/2009 : (2009) 6 SCC

498, Sebastian v. State of Kerala MANU/SC/1717/2009 : (2010) 1 SCC 58, Santosh Kumar Singh (supra), Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod II v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0075/2011 : (2011) 2 SCC 764, Amit v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0133/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 107 and Lalit Kumar Yadav v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0368/2014 : (2014) 11 SCC 129. That apart, it is urged by him that when the crime is not pre- meditated, the same becomes a mitigating factor and that has been taken note of by this Court in the authorities in Akhtar v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/1008/1999 : (1999) 6 SCC 60, Raju v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0324/2001 : (2001) 9 SCC 50 and Amrit Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/8642/2006 : (2006) 12 SCC 79.

324. Learned amicus curiae would further urge that when the criminal antecedents are lacking and the prosecution has not been able to say about that the Appellants deserve imposition of lesser sentence. For the said purpose, he has commended us to the authorities in Nirmal Singh (supra), Raju v. State of Haryana (supra), Amit v. State of Maharashtra (supra), Surender Pal v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0794/2004 : (2005) 3 SCC 127, Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod II (supra), Amit v. State of Uttar Pradesh (supra), Anil v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0124/2014 : (2014) 4 SCC 69 and Lalit Kumar Yadav v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0368/2014 : (2014) 11 SCC 129.

325. Learned Senior Counsel has emphasized on the reform, rehabilitation and absence of any continuing threat to the collective which are factors to be taken into consideration for the purpose of commutation of death penalty to life imprisonment. In this regard, learned Senior Counsel has drawn inspiration from the decisions in Ronny (supra), Nirmal Singh (supra), Bantu v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0684/2001 : (2001) 9 SCC 615, Lehna (supra), Rahul (supra), Santosh Kumar Bariyar (supra), Santosh Kumar Singh (supra), Rajesh Kumar v. State MANU/SC/1130/2011 : (2011) 13 SCC 706, Amit v. State of Uttar Pradesh (supra), Ramnaresh v. State of Chhattisgarh MANU/SC/0163/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 257, Sandesh v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/1128/2012 : (2013) 2 SCC 479 and Lalit Kumar Yadav (supra).

326. Mr. Ramachandran has also submitted that the present case should be treated as a special category as has been held in Swamy Shradhananda (2) v. State of Karnataka MANU/SC/3096/2008 : (2008) 13 SCC 767 and the recent Constitution Bench decision in Union of India v. Sriharan MANU/SC/1377/2015 : (2016) 7 SCC 1. It is urged by him that in many a case, this Court has exercised the said discretion. Learned Senior Counsel in that regard has drawn our attention to the pronouncements in Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod (supra), Neel Kumar v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0416/2012 : (2012) 5 SCC 766, Ram Deo Prasad v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0360/2013 : (2013) 7 SCC 725, Chhote Lal v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0935/2011 : (2013) 9 SCC 795, Anil v. State of Maharashtra (supra), Rajkumar (supra) and Selvam v. State MANU/SC/0401/2014 : (2014) 12 SCC 274.

327. Mr. Hegde, learned friend of the Court, canvassed that the theory of reformation cannot be ignored entirely in the obtaining factual matrix in view of the materials brought on record. Learned Senior Counsel would contend that imposition of death penalty would be extremely harsh and totally unwarranted inasmuch as the case at hand does not fall in the category of rarest of rare case. That apart, it is contended by him that the entire incident has to be viewed from a different perspective, that is, the accused persons had the bus in their control, they were drunk, and situation emerged where the poverty- stricken persons felt empowered as a consequence of which the incident took place and considering the said aspect, they may be imposed substantive custodial sentence for specific years but not death penalty. Additionally, it is submitted by him that in the absence of pre- meditation to commit a crime of the present nature, it would not invite the harshest punishment.

328. Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel, has referred to the reports of the Superintendent of Jail that the conduct of the accused persons in the jail has been absolutely non- satisfactory and non-cooperative and the diabolic nature of the crime has shaken the collective conscience. According to him, the diabolic nature of the crime has nothing to do with poverty, for it was not committed for alleviation of poverty but to satiate their sexual appetite and enormous perversity. He would submit that this would come in the category of rarest of the rare cases in view of the law laid down in Sevaka Perumal v. State of Tamil Nadu MANU/SC/0338/1991 : (1991) 3 SCC 471, Kamta Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0722/1996 : (1996) 6 SCC 250, State of U.P. v. Satish MANU/SC/0090/2005 : (2005) 3 SCC 114, Holiram Bordoloi v. State of Assam MANU/SC/0271/2005 : (2005) 3 SCC 793, Ankush Maruti Shinde v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0700/2009 : (2009) 6 SCC 667, Sundar v. State MANU/SC/0105/2013 : (2013) 3 SCC 215 and Mohfil Khan v. State of Jharkhand MANU/SC/0915/2014 : (2015) 1 SCC 67.

329. It is also submitted by Mr. Luthra that mitigating circumstances are required to be considered in the light of the offence and not alone on the backdrop of age and family background. For this purpose, he has relied upon Deepak Rai v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0965/2013 : (2013) 10 SCC 421 and Purshottam Dashrath Borate v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0583/2015 : (2015) 6 SCC 652.

330. Mr. Sharma and Mr. Singh, learned Counsel for the Appellants, would submit that the conduct of the accused persons shows reformation as there are engaged in educating themselves and also they have been participating in affirmative and constructive activities adopted in jail and so, death penalty should not be affirmed and should be commuted. Mr. Sharma, learned Counsel appearing for the accused Mukesh, submits that he is not connected with the crime in question. It is put forth that the case at hand cannot be regarded as rarest of the rare cases and, therefore, the maximum punishment that can be given should be for a specific period.

331. Presently, we shall proceed to analyse the aforesaid aspect. In Bachan Singh (supra), the Court held thus:

(a) The normal rule is that the offence of murder shall be punished with the sentence of life imprisonment. The court can depart from that rule and impose the sentence of death only if there are special reasons for doing so. Such reasons must be recorded in writing before imposing the death sentence.

(b) While considering the question of sentence to be imposed for the offence of murder Under Section 302 of the Penal Code, the court must have regard to every relevant circumstance relating to the crime as well as the criminal. If the court finds, but not otherwise, that the offence is of an exceptionally depraved and heinous character and constitutes, on account of its design and the manner of its execution, a source of grave danger to the society at large, the court may impose the death sentence.

332. In the said case, the Court, after referring to the authority in Furman v. Georgia MANU/USSC/0008/1972 : 33 L Ed 2d 346 : 408 US 238 (1972), noted the suggestion given by the learned Counsel about the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances. The aggravating circumstances suggested by the counsel read as follows:

Aggravating circumstances: A court may, however, in the following cases impose the penalty of death in its discretion:

(a) if the murder has been committed after previous planning and involves extreme brutality; or

(b) if the murder involves exceptional depravity; or

(c) if the murder is of a member of any of the armed forces of the Union or of a member of any police force or of any public servant and was committed- -

(i) while such member or public servant was on duty; or

(ii) in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by such member or public servant in the lawful discharge of his duty as such member or public servant whether at the time of murder he was such member or public servant, as the case may be, or had ceased to be such member or public servant; or

(d) if the murder is of a person who had acted in the lawful discharge of his duty Under Section 43 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, or who had rendered assistance to a Magistrate or a police officer demanding his aid or requiring his assistance Under Section 37 and Section 129 of the said Code.

After reproducing the same, the Court opined:

Stated broadly, there can be no objection to the acceptance of these indicators but as we have indicated already, we would prefer not to fetter judicial discretion by attempting to make an exhaustive enumeration one way or the other.

333. Thereafter, the Court referred to the suggestions pertaining to mitigating circumstances:

Mitigating circumstances.- In the exercise of its discretion in the above cases, the court shall take into account the following circumstances:

(1) That the offence was committed under the influence of extreme mental or emotional disturbance.

(2) The age of the accused. If the accused is young or old, he shall not be sentenced to death.

(3) The probability that the accused would not commit criminal acts of violence as would constitute a continuing threat to society.

(4) The probability that the accused can be reformed and rehabilitated. The State shall by evidence prove that the accused does not satisfy the conditions (3) and (4) above.

(5) That in the facts and circumstances of the case the accused believed that he was morally justified in committing the offence.

(6) That the accused acted under the duress or domination of another person.

(7) That the condition of the accused showed that he was mentally defective and that the said defect impaired his capacity to appreciate the criminality of his conduct.

The Court then observed:

We will do no more than to say that these are undoubtedly relevant circumstances and must be given great weight in the determination of sentence.

334. In the said case, the Court has also held thus:

It is, therefore, imperative to voice the concern that courts, aided by the broad illustrative guidelines indicated by us, will discharge the onerous function with evermore scrupulous care and humane concern, directed along the highroad of legislative policy outlined in Section 354(3) viz. that for persons convicted of murder, life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence an exception. A real and abiding concern for the dignity of human life postulates resistance to taking a life through law's instrumentality. That ought not to be done save in the rarest of rare cases when the alternative option is unquestionably foreclosed.

335. In Machhi Singh (supra), a three- Judge Bench has explained the concept of 'rarest of the rare cases' by observing thus:

The reasons why the community as a whole does not endorse the humanistic approach reflected in 'death sentence- in- no- case' doctrine are not far to seek. In the first place, the very humanistic edifice is constructed on the foundation of 'reverence for life' principle. When a member of the community violates this very principle by killing another member, the society may not feel itself bound by the shackles of this doctrine. Secondly, it has to be realised that every member of the community is able to live with safety without his or her own life being endangered because of the protective arm of the community and on account of the rule of law enforced by it. The very existence of the rule of law and the fear of being brought to book operates as a deterrent for those who have no scruples in killing others if it suits their ends. Every member of the community owes a debt to the community for this protection.

336. Thereafter, the Court has adverted to the aspects of the feeling of the community and its desire for self- preservation and opined that the community may well withdraw the protection by sanctioning the death penalty. What has been ruled in this regard is worth reproducing:

But the community will not do so in every case. It may do so 'in the rarest of rare cases' when its collective conscience is so shocked that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retaining death penalty.

337. It is apt to state here that in the said case, stress was laid on certain aspects, namely, the manner of commission of the murder, the motive for commission of the murder, anti- social or socially abhorrent nature of the crime, magnitude of the crime and personality of the victim of murder.

338. After so enumerating, the propositions that emerged from Bachan Singh (supra) were culled out which are as follows:

The following propositions emerge from Bachan Singh case:

(i) The extreme penalty of death need not be inflicted except in gravest cases of extreme culpability.

(iii) Life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence is an exception. In other words death sentence must be imposed only when life imprisonment appears to be an altogether inadequate punishment having regard to the relevant circumstances of the crime, and provided, and only provided, the option to impose sentence of imprisonment for life cannot be conscientiously exercised having regard to the nature and circumstances of the crime and all the relevant circumstances.

(iv) A balance sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn up and in doing so the mitigating circumstances have to be accorded full weightage and a just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised.

339. The three- Judge Bench further opined that to apply the said guidelines, the following questions are required to be answered:

(a) Is there something uncommon about the crime which renders sentence of imprisonment for life inadequate and calls for a death sentence?

(b) Are the circumstances of the crime such that there is no alternative but to impose death sentence even after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances which speak in favour of the offender?

In the said case, the Court upheld the extreme penalty of death in respect of three accused persons.

340. The Court in Haresh Mohandas Rajput v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/1099/2011 : (2011) 12 SCC 56, while dealing with the situation where the death sentence is warranted, referred to the guidelines laid down in Bachan Singh (supra) and the principles culled out in Machhi Singh (supra) and opined as follows:

19. In Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab this Court expanded the "rarest of rare" formulation beyond the aggravating factors listed in Bachan Singh to cases where the "collective conscience" of the community is so shocked that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict the death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retaining the death penalty, such a penalty can be inflicted. But the Bench in this case underlined that full weightage must be accorded to the mitigating circumstances in a case and a just balance had to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances.

After so stating, the Court ruled thus:

20. The rarest of the rare case" comes when a convict would be a menace and threat to the harmonious and peaceful coexistence of the society. The crime may be heinous or brutal but may not be in the category of "the rarest of the rare case". There must be no reason to believe that the accused cannot be reformed or rehabilitated and that he is likely to continue criminal acts of violence as would constitute a continuing threat to the society. The accused may be a menace to the society and would continue to be so, threatening its peaceful and harmonious coexistence. The manner in which the crime is committed must be such that it may result in intense and extreme indignation of the community and shock the collective conscience of the society. Where an accused does not act on any spur- of- the- moment provocation and indulges himself in a deliberately planned crime and meticulously executes it, the death sentence may be the most appropriate punishment for such a ghastly crime. The death sentence may be warranted where the victims are innocent children and helpless women. Thus, in case the crime is committed in a most cruel and inhuman manner which is an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting and dastardly manner, where his act affects the entire moral fibre of the society e.g. crime committed for power or political ambition or indulging in organised criminal activities, death sentence should be awarded. (See C. Muniappan v. State of T.N. MANU/SC/0655/2010 : (2010) 9 SCC 567, Dara Singh v. Republic of India MANU/SC/0062/2011 : (2011) 2 SCC 490, Surendra Koli v. State of U.P. Ibid, Mohd. Mannan MANU/SC/0460/2011 : (2011) 5 SCC 317 and Sudam v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0850/2011 : (2011) 7 SCC 125s.)

21. Thus, it is evident that for awarding the death sentence, there must be existence of aggravating circumstances and the consequential absence of mitigating circumstances. As to whether the death sentence should be awarded, would depend upon the factual scenario of the case in hand.

341. This Court, while dealing with the murder of a young girl of about 18 years in Dhananjoy Chatterjee (supra), took note of the fact that the accused was a married man of 27 years of age, the principles stated in Bachan Singh's case and further took note of the rise of violent crimes against women in recent years and, thereafter, on consideration of the aggravating factors and mitigating circumstances, opined that:

In our opinion, the measure of punishment in a given case must depend upon the atrocity of the crime; the conduct of the criminal and the defenceless and unprotected state of the victim. Imposition of appropriate punishment is the manner in which the courts respond to the society's cry for justice against the criminals. Justice demands that courts should impose punishment befitting the crime so that the courts reflect public abhorrence of the crime. The courts must not only keep in view the rights of the criminal but also the rights of the victim of crime and the society at large while considering imposition of appropriate punishment.

342. After so stating, the Court took note of the fact that the deceased was a school- going girl and it was the sacred duty of the Appellant, being a security guard, to ensure the safety of the inhabitants of the flats in the apartment but to gratify his lust, he had raped and murdered the girl in retaliation which made the crime more heinous. Appreciating the manner in which the barbaric crime was committed on a helpless and defenceless school- going girl of 18 years, the Court came to hold that the case fell in the category of rarest of the rare cases and, accordingly, affirmed the capital punishment imposed by the High Court.

343. In Laxman Naik v. State of Orissa MANU/SC/0264/1995 : (1994) 3 SCC 381, the Court commenced the judgment with the following passage:

The present case before us reveals a sordid story which took place sometime in the afternoon of February 17, 1990, in which the alleged sexual assault followed by brutal and merciless murder by the dastardly and monstrous act of abhorrent nature is said to have been committed by the Appellant herein who is none else but an agnate and paternal uncle of the deceased victim Nitma, a girl of the tender age of 7 years who fell a prey to his lust which sends shocking waves not only to the judicial conscience but to everyone having slightest sense of human values and particularly to the blood relations and the society at large.

344. It is worthy to note that in the said case, the High Court had dismissed the Appellant's appeal and confirmed the death sentence awarded to him. While discussing as regards the justifiability of the sentence, the Court referred to the decision in Bachan Singh's case and opined that there were absolutely no mitigating circumstances and, on the contrary, the facts of the case disclosed only aggravating circumstances against the Appellant. Elaborating further, the Court held thus:

The hard facts of the present case are that the Appellant Laxman is the uncle of the deceased and almost occupied the status and position that of a guardian. Consequently the victim who was aged about 7 years must have reposed complete confidence in the Appellant and while reposing such faith and confidence in the Appellant must have believed in his bona fides and it was on account of such a faith and belief that she acted upon the command of the Appellant in accompanying him under the impression that she was being taken to her village unmindful of the preplanned unholy designs of the Appellant. The victim was a totally helpless child there being no one to protect her in the desert where she was taken by the Appellant misusing her confidence to fulfill his lust. It appears that the Appellant had preplanned to commit the crime by resorting to diabolical methods and it was with that object that he took the girl to a lonely place to execute his dastardly act.

After so stating, the Court, while affirming the death sentence, opined that:

.....The victim of the age of Nitma could not have even ever resisted the act with which she was subjected to. The Appellant seems to have acted in a beastly manner as after satisfying his lust he thought that the victim might expose him for the commission of the offence of forcible rape on her to the family members and others, the Appellant with a view to screen the evidence of his crime also put an end to the life of innocent girl who had seen only seven summers. The evidence on record is indicative of the fact as to how diabolically the Appellant had conceived of his plan and brutally executed it and such a calculated, cold- blooded and brutal murder of a girl of a very tender age after committing rape on her would undoubtedly fall in the category of rarest of the rare cases attracting no punishment other than the capital punishment and consequently we confirm the sentence of death imposed upon the Appellant for the offence Under Section 302 of the Penal Code.

345. Kamta Tiwari (supra) is a case where the Appellant was convicted for the offences punishable Under Sections 363, 376, 302 and 201 of Indian Penal Code and sentenced to death by the learned trial Judge and the same was affirmed by the High Court. In appeal, the two- Judge Bench referred to the propositions culled out in Machhi Singh (supra) and expressed thus:

Taking an overall view of all the facts and circumstances of the instant case in the light of the above propositions we are of the firm opinion that the sentence of death should be maintained. In vain we have searched for mitigating circumstances - but found aggravating circumstances aplenty. The evidence on record clearly establishes that the Appellant was close to the family of Parmeshwar and the deceased and her siblings used to call him Tiwari Uncle'. Obviously her closeness with the Appellant encouraged her to go to his shop, which was near the saloon where she had gone for a haircut with her father and brother, and ask for some biscuits. The Appellant readily responded to the request by taking her to the nearby grocery shop of Budhsen and handing over a packet of biscuits apparently as a prelude to his sinister design which unfolded in her kidnapping, brutal rape and gruesome murder - - as the numerous injuries on her person testify; and the finale was the dumping of her dead body in a well. When an innocent hapless girl of 7 years was subjected to such barbaric treatment by a person who was in a position of her trust his culpability assumes the proportion of extreme depravity and arouses a sense of revulsion in the mind of the common man. In fine, the motivation of the perpetrator, the vulnerability of the victim, the enormity of the crime, the execution thereof persuade us to hold that this is a "rarest of rare" cases where the sentence of death is eminently desirable not only to deter others from committing such atrocious crimes but also to give emphatic expression to society's abhorrence of such crimes.

346. In Bantu v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/7863/2008 : (2008) 11 SCC 113, a five year old minor girl was raped and murdered and the Appellant was awarded death sentence by the trial Court which was affirmed by the High Court. This Court found the Appellant guilty of the crime and, thereafter, referred to the principles stated in Bachan Singh, Machhi Singh (supra) and Devender Pal Singh v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/0217/2002 : (2002) 5 SCC 234 and eventually came to hold that the said case fell in the rarest of the rare category and the capital punishment was warranted. Being of this view, the Court declined to interfere with the sentence.

347. In Rajendra Pralhadrao Wasnik v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0160/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 37, the Appellant was awarded sentence of death by the learned trial Judge which was confirmed by the High Court, for he was found guilty of the offences punishable Under Sections 376(2)(f), 377 and 302 Indian Penal Code. In the said case, the prosecution had proven that the Appellant had lured a three year old minor girl child on the pretext of buying her biscuits and then raped her and eventually, being apprehensive of being identified, killed her. In that context, while dismissing the appeal, the Court ruled thus:

37. When the Court draws a balance sheet of the aggravating and mitigating circumstances, for the purposes of determining whether the extreme sentence of death should be imposed upon the accused or not, the scale of justice only tilts against the accused as there is nothing but aggravating circumstances evident from the record of the Court. In fact, one has to really struggle to find out if there were any mitigating circumstances favouring the accused.

38. Another aspect of the matter is that the minor child was helpless in the cruel hands of the accused. The accused was holding the child in a relationship of "trust- belief" and "confidence", in which capacity he took the child from the house of PW 2. In other words, the accused, by his conduct, has belied the human relationship of trust and worthiness. The accused left the deceased in a badly injured condition in the open fields without even clothes. This reflects the most unfortunate and abusive facet of human conduct, for which the accused has to blame no one else than his own self.

348. At this stage, it is fruitful to refer to some authorities where in cases of rape and murder, the death penalty was not awarded. In State of T.N. v. Suresh and Anr. MANU/SC/0939/1998 : (1998) 2 SCC 372, the Court, while unsettling the judgment of acquittal recorded by the High Court and finding that the accused was guilty of rape of a pregnant woman and also murder, awarded the sentence of life imprisonment by observing:

The above discussion takes us to the final conclusion that the High Court has seriously erred in upsetting the conviction entered by the Sessions Court as against A- 2 and A- 3. The erroneous approach has resulted in miscarriage of justice by allowing the two perpetrators of a dastardly crime committed against a helpless young pregnant housewife who was sleeping in her own apartment with her little baby sleeping by her side and during the absence of her husband. We strongly feel that the error committed by the High Court must be undone by restoring the conviction passed against A- 2 and A- 3, though we are not inclined, at this distance of time, to restore the sentence of death passed by the trial court on those two accused.

From the aforesaid authority, it is seen that the Court did not think it appropriate to restore the death sentence passed by the trial court regard being had to the passage of time.

349. In Akhtar v. State of U.P. (supra), the Appellant was found guilty of murder of a young girl after committing rape on her and was sentenced to death by the learned Sessions Judge and the said sentence was confirmed by the High Court. The two- Judge Bench referred to the decisions in Laxman Naik (supra) and Kamta Tiwari (supra) and addressed itself whether the case in hand was one of the rarest of the rare case for which punishment of death could be awarded. The Court distinguished the two decisions which have been referred to hereinabove and ruled:

In the case in hand on examining the evidence of the three witnesses it appears to us that the accused- Appellant has committed the murder of the deceased girl not intentionally and with any premeditation. On the other hand the accused- Appellant found a young girl alone in a lonely place, picked her up for committing rape; while committing rape and in the process by way of gagging the girl has died. The medical evidence also indicates that the death is on account of asphyxia. In the circumstances we are of the considered opinion that the case in hand cannot be held to be one of the rarest of rare cases justifying the punishment of death.

350. In State of Maharashtra v. Barat Fakira Dhiwar MANU/SC/0700/2001 : (2002) 1 SCC 622, a three- year old girl was raped and murdered by the accused. The learned trial Judge convicted the accused and awarded the death sentence. The High Court had set aside the order of conviction and acquitted him for the offences. This Court, on scrutiny of the evidence, found the accused guilty of rape and murder. Thereafter, the Court proceeded to deal with the sentence and, in that context, observed:

Regarding sentence we would have concurred with the Sessions Court's view that the extreme penalty of death can be chosen for such a crime. However, as the accused was once acquitted by the High Court we refrain from imposing that extreme penalty in spite of the fact that this case is perilously near the region of "rarest of the rare cases", as envisaged by the Constitution Bench in Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab. However, the lesser option is not unquestionably foreclosed and so we alter the sentence, in regard to the offence Under Section 302 Indian Penal Code, to imprisonment for life.

351. Keeping in view the aforesaid authorities, the Court, in Vasanta Sampat Dupare v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/1098/2014 : (2015) 1 SCC 253, proceeded to adumbrate what is the duty of the Court when the collective conscience is shocked because of the crime committed and observed:

... When the crime is diabolical in nature and invites abhorrence of the collective, it shocks the judicial conscience and impels it to react keeping in view the collective conscience, cry of the community for justice and the intense indignation the manner in which the brutal crime is committed. We are absolutely conscious that Judges while imposing sentence, should never be swayed away with any kind of individual philosophy and predilections. It should never have the flavour of Judge- centric attitude or perception. It has to satisfy the test laid down in various precedents relating to rarest of the rare case. We are also required to pose two questions that has been stated in Machhi Singh's case.

352. In the said case, the Court dwelt upon the manner in which the crime was committed and how a minor girl had become a prey of the sexual depravity and was injured by the despicable act of the accused to silence the voice so that there would be no evidence. Dealing with the same, the Court referred to earlier judgments and held:

58. Presently, we shall proceed to dwell upon the manner in which the crime was committed. Materials on record clearly reveal that the Appellant was well acquainted with the inhabitants of the locality and as is demonstrable he had access to the house of the father of the deceased and the children used to call him "uncle". He had lured the deceased to go with him to have chocolates. It is an act of taking advantage of absolute innocence. He had taken the deceased from place to place by his bicycle and eventually raped her in a brutal manner, as if he had an insatiable and ravenous appetite. The injuries caused on the minor girl are likely to send a chill in the spine of the society and shiver in the marrows of human conscience. He had battered her to death by assaulting her with two heavy stones. The injured minor girl could not have shown any kind of resistance. It is not a case where the accused had a momentary lapse. It is also not a case where the minor child had died because of profuse bleeding due to rape but because of the deliberate cruel assault by the Appellant. After the savage act was over, the coolness of the Appellant is evident, for he washed the clothes on the tap and took proper care to hide things. As is manifest, he even did not think for a moment the trauma and torture that was caused to the deceased. The gullibility and vulnerability of the four year girl, who could not have nurtured any idea about the maladroitly designed biological desires of this nature, went with the uncle who extinguished her life- spark. The barbaric act of the Appellant does not remotely show any concern for the precious life of a young minor child who had really not seen life. The criminality of the conduct of the Appellant is not only depraved and debased, but can have a menacing effect on the society. It is calamitous.

59. In this context, we may fruitfully refer to a passage from Shyam Narain v. State (NCT of Delhi) MANU/SC/0543/2013 : (2013) 7 SCC 77, wherein it has been observed as follows:

1. The wanton lust, vicious appetite, depravity of senses, mortgage of mind to the inferior endowments of nature, the servility to the loathsome beast of passion and absolutely unchained carnal desire have driven the Appellant to commit a crime which can bring in a 'tsunami' of shock in the mind of the collective, send a chill down the spine of the society, destroy the civilised stems of the milieu and comatose the marrows of sensitive polity.

In the said case, while describing the rape on an eight- year- old girl, the Court observed: (Shyam Narain case, SCC p. 88, para 26)

26. ... Almost for the last three decades, this Court has been expressing its agony and distress pertaining to the increased rate of crimes against women. The eight- year- old girl, who was supposed to spend time in cheerfulness, was dealt with animal passion and her dignity and purity of physical frame was shattered. The plight of the child and the shock suffered by her can be well visualised. The torment on the child has the potentiality to corrode the poise and equanimity of any civilised society. The age- old wise saying that 'child is a gift of the providence' enters into the realm of absurdity. The young girl, with efflux of time, would grow with a traumatic experience, an unforgettable shame. She shall always be haunted by the memory replete with heavy crush of disaster constantly echoing the chill air of the past forcing her to a state of nightmarish melancholia. She may not be able to assert the honour of a woman for no fault of hers.

Elucidating further, the Court held:

60. In the case at hand, as we find, not only was the rape committed in a brutal manner but murder was also committed in a barbaric manner. The rape of a minor girl child is nothing but a monstrous burial of her dignity in the darkness. It is a crime against the holy body of a girl child and the soul of society and such a crime is aggravated by the manner in which it has been committed. The nature of the crime and the manner in which it has been committed speaks about its uncommonness. The crime speaks of depravity, degradation and uncommonality. It is diabolical and barbaric. The crime was committed in an inhuman manner. Indubitably, these go a long way to establish the aggravating circumstances.

61. We are absolutely conscious that mitigating circumstances are to be taken into consideration. The learned Counsel for the Appellant pointing out the mitigating circumstances would submit that the Appellant is in his mid- fifties and there is possibility of his reformation. Be it noted, the Appellant was aged about forty- seven years at the time of commission of the crime. As is noticeable, there has been no remorse on the part of the Appellant. There are cases when this Court has commuted the death sentence to life finding that the accused has expressed remorse or the crime was not premeditated. But the obtaining factual matrix when unfolded stage by stage would show the premeditation, the proclivity and the rapacious desire. The learned Counsel would submit that the Appellant had no criminal antecedents but we find that he was a history-sheeter and had a number of cases pending against him. That alone may not be sufficient. The appalling cruelty shown by him to the minor girl child is extremely shocking and it gets accentuated, when his age is taken into consideration. It was not committed under any mental stress or emotional disturbance and it is difficult to comprehend that he would not commit such acts and would be reformed or rehabilitated. As the circumstances would graphically depict, he would remain a menace to society, for a defenceless child has become his prey. In our considered opinion, there are no mitigating circumstances.

62. As we perceive, this case deserves to fall in the category of the rarest of rare cases. It is inconceivable from the perspective of the society that a married man aged about two scores and seven makes a four- year minor innocent girl child the prey of his lust and deliberately causes her death. A helpless and defenceless child gets raped and murdered because of the acquaintance of the Appellant with the people of the society. This is not only betrayal of an individual trust but destruction and devastation of social trust. It is perversity in its enormity. It irrefragably invites the extreme abhorrence and indignation of the collective. It is an anathema to the social balance. In our view, it meets the test of the rarest of the rare case and we unhesitatingly so hold.

353. In the said case, a review petition bearing Review Petition (Criminal) Nos. 637- 638 of 2015 was filed which has been recently dismissed. U.U. Lalit, J., authoring the judgment, has held:

19. It is thus well settled, "the Court would consider the cumulative effect of both the aspects (namely aggravating factors as well as mitigating circumstances) and it may not be very appropriate for the Court to decide the most significant aspect of sentencing policy with reference to one of the classes completely ignoring other classes under other heads and it is the primary duty of the Court to balance the two." Further, "it is always preferred not to fetter the judicial discretion by attempting to make excessive enumeration, in one way or another; and that both aspects namely aggravating and mitigating circumstances have to be given their respective weightage and that the Court has to strike the balance between the two and see towards which side the scale/balance of justice tilts." With these principles in mind we now consider the present review petition.

20. The material placed on record shows that after the Judgment under review, the Petitioner has completed Bachelors Preparatory Programme offered by the Indira Gandhi National Open University enabling him to prepare for Bachelor level study and that he has also completed the Gandhi Vichar Pariksha and had participated in drawing competition organized sometime in January 2016. It is asserted that the jail record of the Petitioner is without any blemish. The matter is not contested as regards Conditions 1, 2, 5, 6 and 7 as stated in paragraph 206 of the decision in Bachan Singh but what is now being projected is that there is a possibility of the accused being reformed and rehabilitated. Though these attempts on part of the Petitioner are after the judgment under review, we have considered the material in that behalf to see if those circumstances warrant a different view. We have given anxious consideration to the material on record but find that the aggravating circumstances namely the extreme depravity and the barbaric manner in which the crime was committed and the fact that the victim was a helpless girl of four years clearly outweigh the mitigating circumstances now brought on record. Having taken an overall view of the matter, in our considered view, no case is made out to take a different view in the matter. We, therefore, affirm the view taken in the Judgment under review and dismiss the present Review Petition.

354. The mitigating factors which have been highlighted before us on the basis of the affidavits filed by the Appellants pertain to the strata to which they belong, the aged parents, marital status and the young children and the suffering they would go through and the calamities they would face in case of affirmation of sentence, their conduct while they are in custody and the reformative path they have chosen and their transformation and the possibility of reformation. That apart, emphasis has been laid on their young age and rehabilitation.

355. Now, we shall focus on the nature of the crime and manner in which it has been committed. The submission of Mr. Luthra, learned Senior Counsel, is that the present case amounts to devastation of social trust and completely destroys the collective balance and invites the indignation of the society. It is submitted by him that that a crime of this nature creates a fear psychosis and definitely falls in the category of rarest of the rare cases.

356. It is necessary to state here that in the instant case, the brutal, barbaric and diabolic nature of the crime is evincible from the acts committed by the accused persons, viz., the assault on the informant, P.W. 1 with iron rod and tearing off his clothes; assaulting the informant and the deceased with hands, kicks and iron rod and robbing them of their personal belongings like debit cards, ring, informant's shoes, etc.; attacking the deceased by forcibly disrobing her and committing violent sexual assault by all the Appellants; their brutish behavior in having anal sex with the deceased and forcing her to perform oral sex; injuries on the body of the deceased by way of bite marks (10 in number); and insertion of rod in her private parts that, inter alia, caused perforation of her intestine which caused sepsis and, ultimately, led to her death. The medical history of the prosecutrix (as proved in the record in Ex. P.W. 50/A and Ex. P.W. 50) demonstrates that the entire intestine of the prosecutrix was perforated and splayed open due to the repeated insertion of the rod and hands; and the Appellants had pulled out the internal organs of the prosecutrix in the most savage and inhuman manner that caused grave injuries which ultimately annihilated her life. As has been established, the prosecutrix sustained various bite marks which were observed on her face, lips, jaws, near ear, on the right and left breast, left upper arm, right lower limb, right inner groin, right lower thigh, left thigh lateral, left lower anterior and genitals. These acts itself demonstrate the mental perversion and inconceivable brutality as caused by the Appellants. As further proven, they threw the informant and the deceased victim on the road in a cold winter night. After throwing the informant and the deceased victim, the convicts tried to run the bus over them so that there would be no evidence against them. They made all possible efforts in destroying the evidence by, inter alia, washing the bus and burning the clothes of the deceased and after performing the gruesome act, they divided the loot among themselves. As we have narrated the incident that has been corroborated by the medical evidence, oral testimony and the dying declarations, it is absolutely obvious that the accused persons had found an object for enjoyment in her and, as is evident, they were obsessed with the singular purpose sans any feeling to ravish her as they liked, treat her as they felt and, if we allow ourselves to say, the gross sadistic and beastly instinctual pleasures came to the forefront when they, after ravishing her, thought it to be just a matter of routine to throw her alongwith her friend out of the bus and crush them. The casual manner with which she was treated and the devilish manner in which they played with her identity and dignity is humanly inconceivable. It sounds like a story from a different world where humanity has been treated with irreverence. The appetite for sex, the hunger for violence, the position of the empowered and the attitude of perversity, to say the least, are bound to shock the collective conscience which knows not what to do. It is manifest that the wanton lust, the servility to absolutely unchained carnal desire and slavery to the loathsome beastility of passion ruled the mindset of the Appellants to commit a crime which can summon with immediacy "tsunami" of shock in the mind of the collective and destroy the civilised marrows of the milieu in entirety.

357. When we cautiously, consciously and anxiously weigh the aggravating circumstances and the mitigating factors, we are compelled to arrive at the singular conclusion that the aggravating circumstances outweigh the mitigating circumstances now brought on record. Therefore, we conclude and hold that the High Court has correctly confirmed the death penalty and we see no reason to differ with the same.

358. Before we part with the case, we are obligated to record our unreserved appreciation for the assistance rendered by Mr. Raju Ramachandran and Mr. Sanjay R. Hegde, learned amicus curiae appointed by the Court. We must also record our uninhibited appreciation for Mr. M.L. Sharma and Mr. A.P. Singh, learned Counsel for the Appellants, for they, keeping the tradition of the Bar, defended the Appellants at every stage.

359. In view of our preceding analysis, the appeals are bound to pave the path of dismissal, and accordingly, we so direct.

R. Banumathi, J.

360. I have gone through the judgment of my esteemed Brother Justice Dipak Misra. I entirely agree with the reasoning adopted by him and the conclusions arrived at. However, in view of the significant issues involved in the matter, in the light of settled norms of appreciation of evidence in rape cases and the role of Judiciary in addressing crime against women, I would prefer to give my additional reasoning for concurrence.

361. Honesty, pride, and self- esteem are crucial to the personal freedom of a woman. Social progress depends on the progress of everyone. Following words of the father of our nation must be noted at all times:

To call woman the weaker sex is a libel; it is man's injustice to woman. If by strength is meant moral power, then woman is immeasurably man's superior. Has she not greater intuition, is she not more self- sacrificing, has she not greater powers of endurance, has she not greater courage? Without her, man could not be. If non- violence is the law of our being, the future is with woman. Who can make a more effective appeal to the heart than woman?

362. Crimes against women - an area of concern: Over the past few decades, legal advancements and policy reforms have done much to protect women from all sources of violence and also to sensitize the public on the issue of protection of women and gender justice. Still, the crimes against women are on the increase. As per the annual report of National Crime Records Bureau titled, 'Crime in India 2015' available at http://ncrb.nic.in/StatePublications/CII/CII2015/FILES/Compendium- 15.11.16.pdf, a total of 3,27,394 cases of crime against women were reported in the year 2015, which shows an increase of over 43% in crime against women since 2011, when 2,28,650 cases were reported. A percentage change of 110.5% in the cases of crime against women has been witnessed over the past decade (2005 to 2015), meaning thereby that crime against women has more than doubled in a decade. An overall crime rate under the head, 'crime against women' was reported as 53.9% in 2015, with Delhi UT at the top spot.

363. As per the National Crime Records Bureau, a total of 34,651 cases of rape Under Section 376 Indian Penal Code were registered during 2015 (excluding cases under the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012). An increasing trend in the incidence of rape has been observed during the period 2011- 2014. These cases have shown an increase of 9.2% in the year 2011 (24,206 cases) over the year 2010 (22,172 cases), an increase of 3.0% in the year 2012 (24,923 cases) over 2011, with further increase of 35.2% in the year 2013 (33,707 cases) over 2012 and 9.0% in 2014 (36,735 cases) over 2013. A decrease of 5.7% was reported in 2015 (34,651 cases) over 2014 (36,735 cases). 12.7% (4,391 out of 34,651 cases) of total reported rape cases in 2015 were reported in Madhya Pradesh followed by Maharashtra (4,144 cases), Rajasthan (3,644 cases), Uttar Pradesh (3,025 cases) and Odisha (2,251 cases) accounting for 11.9%, 10.5%, 8.7% and 6.5% of total cases respectively. NCT of Delhi reported highest crime rate of 23.7% followed by Andaman & Nicobar Islands at 13.5% as compared to national average of 5.7%. In order to combat increasing crime against women, as depicted in the statistics of National Crime Records Bureau, the root of the problem must be studied in depth and the same be remedied through stringent legislation and other steps. In order to secure social order and security, it is imperative to address issues concerning women, in particular crimes against women on priority basis.

364. Stringent legislation and punishments alone may not be sufficient for fighting increasing crimes against women. In our tradition bound society, certain attitudinal change and change in the mind- set is needed to respect women and to ensure gender justice. Right from childhood years' children ought to be sensitized to respect women. A child should be taught to respect women in the society in the same way as he is taught to respect men. Gender equality should be made a part of the school curriculum. The school teachers and parents should be trained, not only to conduct regular personality building and skill enhancing exercise, but also to keep a watch on the actual behavioral pattern of the children so as to make them gender sensitized. The educational institutions, Government institutions, the employers and all concerned must take steps to create awareness with regard to gender sensitization and to respect women. Sensitization of the public on gender justice through TV, media and press should be welcomed. On the practical side, few of the suggestions are worthwhile to be considered. Banners and placards in the public transport vehicles like autos, taxis and buses etc. must be ensured. Use of street lights, illuminated bus stops and extra police patrol during odd hours must be ensured. Police/security guards must be posted at dark and lonely places like parks, streets etc. Mobile apps for immediate assistance of women should be introduced and effectively maintained. Apart from effective implementation of the various legislation protecting women, change in the mind set of the society at large and creating awareness in the public on gender justice, would go a long way to combat violence against women.

365. Factual Matrix: The entire factual matrix of the concerned horrendous incident has already been fairly set out in the judgment of my esteemed brother Justice Dipak Misra, the High Court and the trial Court. Suffice only to briefly recapitulate the facts, for my reference purpose and for completion.

366. In the wintry night of 16.12.2012, when the entire Delhi was busy in its day- to- day affair, embracing the joy of year- end, two youths were bravely struggling to save their dignity and life. It is a case of barbaric sexual violence against women, in fact against the society at large, where the accused and juvenile in conflict with law picked up a 23 year old physiotherapy student and her male friend (P.W. 1) accompanying her, from a busy place in Delhi- Munirka Bus stop and subjected them to heinous offences. The accused gang- raped the prosecutrix in the moving bus and completely ravished her in front of her helpless friend, Awninder Pratap (P.W. 1). The accused, on satisfaction of their lust, threw both the victims, half naked, outside the bus, in December cold near Mahipalpur flyover. The prosecutrix and P.W. 1 were noticed in miserable condition near Mahipalpur flyover, where they were thrown, by P.W. 72 Raj Kumar, who was on patrolling duty that night in the area and P.W. 73 Ram Chandar, Head Constable, rushed the prosecutrix and P.W. 1 to Safdarjung Hospital owing to the need of immediate medical attention. Law was set in motion by the statement of P.W. 1, which was recorded after giving primary medical treatment to him. Statement/Dying declaration of the prosecutrix was also recorded by P.W. 49 Doctor, P.W. 27 Sub- Divisional Magistrate and P.W. 30 Metropolitan Magistrate. After intensive care and treatment in ICU in Delhi, the victim was airlifted to a hospital in Singapore by an air- ambulance where she succumbed to her injuries on 29.12.2012.

367. The incident shocked the nation and generated public rage. A Committee headed by Justice J.S. Verma, Former Chief Justice of India was constituted to suggest amendments to deal with sexual offences more sternly and effectively in future. The suggestions of the Committee led to the enactment of Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 2013 which, inter alia, brought in substantive as well as procedural reforms in the core areas of rape law. The changes brought in, inter alia, can broadly be titled as under: (i) Extension of the definition of the offence of rape in Section 375 Indian Penal Code; (ii) Adoption of a more pragmatic approach while dealing with the issue of consent in the offence of rape; and (iii) Introduction of harsher penalty commensurating with the gravity of offence. These subsequent events though not relevant for the purpose of this judgment, I have referred to it for the sake of factual completion.

368. Both the courts below, by recording concurrent findings, have found all the accused guilty of the offences they were charged with and owing to the gravity and manner of committing the heinous offences held that the acts of the accused shake the conscience of the society falling within the category of rarest of rare cases and awarded death penalty. Briefly put, the courts below have found that the prosecution has established the guilt of the accused inter alia on the following:

1. Three dying declarations of the prosecutrix, complementing each other, corroborated by medical evidence and other direct as well as circumstantial evidence.

2. Testimony of eye witness - P.W. 1, corroborated by circumstantial evidence as well as scientific evidence.

3. Recovery of the bus in which incident took place and recovery of the concerned iron rod therefrom, completing the chain of circumstantial evidence, by proof of scientific evidence like DNA analysis, finger print analysis etc.

4. Arrest of the accused and their identification by P.W. 1, recovery of articles belonging to the prosecutrix and P.W. 1 from the accused, pursuant to their disclosure statement, substantiated by proof of DNA analysis.

5. Conspiracy of the accused in the commission of offence.

369. While concurring with the majority, I have recorded my reasoning by considering the evidence on record in the light of settled legal principles and also analysed the justifiability of the punishment awarded to the accused. For proper appreciation of evidence, it is apposite to first refer to the settled principles and norms of appreciation of evidence of prosecutrix and other evidence in a rape case.

370. Duty of court in appreciation of evidence while dealing with cases of rape: Crime against women is an unlawful intrusion of her right to privacy, which offends her self- esteem and dignity. Expressing concern over the increasing crime against women, in State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh and Ors. MANU/SC/0366/1996 : (1996) 2 SCC 384, this Court held as under:

21. Of late, crime against women in general and rape in particular is on the increase. It is an irony that while we are celebrating woman's rights in all spheres, we show little or no concern for her honour. It is a sad reflection on the attitude of indifference of the society towards the violation of human dignity of the victims of sex crimes. We must remember that a rapist not only violates the victim's privacy and personal integrity, but inevitably causes serious psychological as well as physical harm in the process. Rape is not merely a physical assault - - it is often destructive of the whole personality of the victim. A murderer destroys the physical body of his victim, a rapist degrades the very soul of the helpless female. The courts, therefore, shoulder a great responsibility while trying an accused on charges of rape. They must deal with such cases with utmost sensitivity. The courts should examine the broader probabilities of a case and not get swayed by minor contradictions or insignificant discrepancies in the statement of the prosecutrix, which are not of a fatal nature, to throw out an otherwise reliable prosecution case.....

371. The above principle of law, declared in Gurmeet Singh's case is reiterated in various cases viz., State of Rajasthan v. N.K. The Accused MANU/SC/0218/2000 : (2000) 5 SCC 30; State of H.P. v. Lekh Raj and Anr. MANU/SC/0714/1999 : (2000) 1 SCC 247; State of H.P. v. Asha Ram MANU/SC/1902/2005 : (2005) 13 SCC 766.

372. Clause (g) of Sub- section (2) of Section 376 Indian Penal Code (prior to 2013 Amendment Act 13 of 2013) deals with cases of gang rape. In order to establish an offence Under Section 376(2)(g) Indian Penal Code, read with Explanation I thereto, the prosecution must adduce evidence to indicate that more than one accused had acted in concert and in such an event, if rape is committed by even one, all the accused are guilty, irrespective of the fact that only one or more of them had actually committed the act. Section 376(2)(g) read with Explanation I thus embodies a principle of joint liability. But so far as appreciation of evidence is concerned, the principles concerning the cases falling under Sub- section (1) of Section 376 Indian Penal Code apply.

373. In a case of rape, like other criminal cases, onus is always on the prosecution to prove affirmatively each ingredients of the offence. The prosecution must discharge this burden of proof to bring home the guilt of the accused and this onus never shifts. In Narender Kumar v. State (NCT of Delhi) MANU/SC/0481/2012 : (2012) 7 SCC 171, it was held as under:

29. However, even in a case of rape, the onus is always on the prosecution to prove, affirmatively each ingredient of the offence it seeks to establish and such onus never shifts. It is no part of the duty of the defence to explain as to how and why in a rape case the victim and other witnesses have falsely implicated the accused. The prosecution case has to stand on its own legs and cannot take support from the weakness of the case of defence. ..... There is an initial presumption of innocence of the accused and the prosecution has to bring home the offence against the accused by reliable evidence. The accused is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt.

374. At the same time while dealing with cases of rape, the Court must act with utmost sensitivity and appreciate the evidence of prosecutrix in lieu of settled legal principles. Courts while trying an accused on the charge of rape, must deal with the case with utmost sensitivity, examining the broader probabilities of a case and it should not be swayed by minor contradictions and discrepancies in appreciation of evidence of the witnesses which are not of a substantial character. It is now well- settled that conviction for an offence of rape can be based on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix corroborated by medical evidence and other circumstantial evidence such as the report of chemical examination, scientific examination etc., if the same is found natural and trustworthy.

375. Persisting notion that the testimony of victim has to be corroborated by other evidence must be removed. To equate a rape victim to an accomplice is to add insult to womanhood. Ours is a conservative society and not a permissive society. Ordinarily a woman, more so, a young woman will not stake her reputation by levelling a false charge, concerning her chastity. In State of Karnataka v. Krishnappa MANU/SC/0210/2000 : (2000) 4 SCC 75, it was held as under:

15. Sexual violence apart from being a dehumanising act is an unlawful intrusion of the right to privacy and sanctity of a female. It is a serious blow to her supreme honour and offends her self-esteem and dignity - - it degrades and humiliates the victim and where the victim is a helpless innocent child, it leaves behind a traumatic experience. The courts are, therefore, expected to deal with cases of sexual crime against women with utmost sensitivity. Such cases need to be dealt with sternly and severely. .....

16. A socially sensitised Judge, in our opinion, is a better statutory armour in cases of crime against women than long clauses of penal provisions, containing complex exceptions and provisos.

376. There is no legal compulsion to look for corroboration of the prosecutrix's testimony unless the evidence of the victim suffers from serious infirmities, thereby seeking corroboration. In Bharwada Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0090/1983 : (1983) 3 SCC 217, it was held as under:

9. In the Indian setting, refusal to act on the testimony of a victim of sexual assault in the absence of corroboration as a rule, is adding insult to injury. Why should the evidence of the girl or the woman who complains of rape or sexual molestation be viewed with the aid of spectacles fitted with lenses tinged with doubt, disbelief or suspicion? To do so is to justify the charge of male chauvinism in a male dominated society. We must analyze the argument in support of the need for corroboration and subject it to relentless and remorseless cross- examination. And we must do so with a logical, and not an opinionated, eye in the light of probabilities with our feet firmly planted on the soil of India and with our eyes focussed on the Indian horizon. We must not be swept off the feet by the approach made in the western world which has its own social milieu, its own social mores, its own permissive values, and its own code of life. Corroboration may be considered essential to establish a sexual offence in the backdrop of the social ecology of the western world. It is wholly unnecessary to import the said concept on a turnkey basis and to transplant it on the Indian soil regardless of the altogether different atmosphere, attitudes, mores, responses of the Indian society, and its profile. The identities of the two worlds are different. .....

10. By and large these factors are not relevant to India, and the Indian conditions. Without the fear of making too wide a statement, or of overstating the case, it can be said that rarely will a girl or a woman in India make false allegations of sexual assault on account of any such factor as has been just enlisted. The statement is generally true in the context of the urban as also rural society. It is also by and large true in the context of the sophisticated, not so sophisticated, and unsophisticated society. Only very rarely can one conceivably come across an exception or two and that too possibly from amongst the urban elites. Because (1) A girl or a woman in the tradition- bound non- permissive society of India would be extremely reluctant even to admit that any incident which is likely to reflect on her chastity had ever occurred. (2) She would be conscious of the danger of being ostracized by the society or being looked down by the society including by her own family members, relatives, friends, and neighbours. (3) She would have to brave the whole world. (4) .....

11. ..... On principle the evidence of a victim of sexual assault stands on par with evidence of an injured witness. Just as a witness who has sustained an injury (which is not shown or believed to be self- inflicted) is the best witness in the sense that he is least likely to exculpate the real offender, the evidence of a victim of a sex offence is entitled to great weight, absence of corroboration notwithstanding. And while corroboration in the form of eyewitness account of an independent witness may often be forthcoming in physical assault cases, such evidence cannot be expected in sex offences, having regard to the very nature of the offence. .....

It was further held in Bharwada Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai (supra) that if the evidence of the victim does not suffer from any basic infirmity and the "probabilities- factor" does not render it unworthy of credence, there is no reason to insist on corroboration except corroboration by the medical evidence. The same view was taken in Krishan Lal v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0147/1980 : (1980) 3 SCC 159.

377. It is well- settled that conviction can be based on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix if it is implicitly reliable and there is a ring of truth in it. Corroboration as a condition for judicial reliance on the testimony of a prosecutrix is not requirement of law but a guidance of prudence under given circumstances. In Rajinder alias Raju v. State of Himachal Pradesh MANU/SC/1122/2009 : (2009) 16 SCC 69, it was held as under:

19. In the context of Indian culture, a woman- - victim of sexual aggression- - would rather suffer silently than to falsely implicate somebody. Any statement of rape is an extremely humiliating experience for a woman and until she is a victim of sex crime, she would not blame anyone but the real culprit. While appreciating the evidence of the prosecutrix, the courts must always keep in mind that no self- respecting woman would put her honour at stake by falsely alleging commission of rape on her and therefore, ordinarily a look for corroboration of her testimony is unnecessary and uncalled for. But for high improbability in the prosecution case, the conviction in the case of sex crime may be based on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix. It has been rightly said that corroborative evidence is not an imperative component of judicial credence in every case of rape nor the absence of injuries on the private parts of the victim can be construed as evidence of consent.

378. In Raju and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/8353/2008 : (2008) 15 SCC 133, it was held as under:

10. .....that ordinarily the evidence of a prosecutrix should not be suspected and should be believed, more so as her statement has to be evaluated on a par with that of an injured witness and if the evidence is reliable, no corroboration is necessary. .....

11. It cannot be lost sight of that rape causes the greatest distress and humiliation to the victim but at the same time a false allegation of rape can cause equal distress, humiliation and damage to the accused as well. The accused must also be protected against the possibility of false implication, particularly where a large number of accused are involved. It must, further, be borne in mind that the broad principle is that an injured witness was present at the time when the incident happened and that ordinarily such a witness would not tell a lie as to the actual assailants, but there is no presumption or any basis for assuming that the statement of such a witness is always correct or without any embellishment or exaggeration.

379. In State of H.P. v. Asha Ram MANU/SC/1902/2005 : (2005) 13 SCC 766, this Court highlighted the importance of, and the weight to be attached to, the testimony of the prosecutrix. In para (5), it was held as under:

5. ..... It is now a well- settled principle of law that conviction can be founded on the testimony of the prosecutrix alone unless there are compelling reasons for seeking corroboration. The evidence of a prosecutrix is more reliable than that of an injured witness. The testimony of the victim of sexual assault is vital, unless there are compelling reasons which necessitate looking for corroboration of her statement, the courts should find no difficulty in acting on the testimony of a victim of sexual assault alone to convict an accused where her testimony inspires confidence and is found to be reliable. It is also a well- settled principle of law that corroboration as a condition for judicial reliance on the testimony of the prosecutrix is not a requirement of law but a guidance of prudence under the given circumstances. The evidence of the prosecutrix is more reliable than that of an injured witness. Even minor contradictions or insignificant discrepancies in the statement of the prosecutrix should not be a ground for throwing out an otherwise reliable prosecution case.

380. As held in the case of State of Punjab v. Ramdev Singh MANU/SC/1063/2003 : (2004) 1 SCC 421, there is no rule of law that the testimony of the prosecutrix cannot be acted upon without corroboration in material particulars. She stands at a higher pedestal than an injured witness. However, if the Court of facts finds it difficult to accept the version of the prosecutrix on its face value, it may search for evidence, direct or circumstantial, which would lend assurance to her testimony. The above judgment of Ramdev Singh (supra) has been approvingly quoted in State of U.P. v. Munshi MANU/SC/7982/2008 : (2008) 9 SCC 390.

381. In a catena of decisions, this Court has held that conviction can be based on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix, provided it is natural, trustworthy and worth being relied upon vide State of H.P. v. Gian Chand MANU/SC/0312/2001 : (2001) 6 SCC 71, State of Rajasthan v. N.K. The Accused MANU/SC/0218/2000 : (2000) 5 SCC 30; State of H.P. v. Lekh Raj and Anr. MANU/SC/0714/1999 : (2000) 1 SCC 247, Wahid Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/1850/2009 : (2010) 2 SCC 9, Dinesh Jaiswal v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0104/2010 : (2010) 3 SCC 232; Om Prakash v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0756/2011 : (2011) 14 SCC 309.

382. Observing that once the statement of the prosecutrix inspires confidence, conviction can be based on the solitary evidence of the prosecutrix and that corroboration of testimony of a prosecutrix is not a requirement of law but only a rule of prudence, in Narender Kumar's case (supra), this Court held as under:

20. It is a settled legal proposition that once the statement of the prosecutrix inspires confidence and is accepted by the court as such, conviction can be based only on the solitary evidence of the prosecutrix and no corroboration would be required unless there are compelling reasons which necessitate the court for corroboration of her statement. Corroboration of testimony of the prosecutrix as a condition for judicial reliance is not a requirement of law but a guidance of prudence under the given facts and circumstances. Minor contradictions or insignificant discrepancies should not be a ground for throwing out an otherwise reliable prosecution case.

21. A prosecutrix complaining of having been a victim of the offence of rape is not an accomplice after the crime. Her testimony has to be appreciated on the principle of probabilities just as the testimony of any other witness; a high degree of probability having been shown to exist in view of the subject- matter being a criminal charge. However, if the court finds it difficult to accept the version of the prosecutrix on its face value, it may search for evidence, direct or substantial (sic circumstantial), which may lend assurance to her testimony. (Vide Vimal Suresh Kamble v. Chaluverapinake Apal S.P. MANU/SC/0015/2003 : (2003) 3 SCC 175 and Vishnu v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/2156/2005 : (2006) 1 SCC 283.)

383. Courts should not attach undue importance to discrepancies, where the contradictions sought to be brought up from the evidence of the prosecutrix are immaterial and of no consequence. Minor variations in the testimony of the witnesses are often the hallmark of truth of the testimony. Trivial discrepancies ought not to obliterate an otherwise acceptable evidence. Due to efflux of time, there are bound to be minor contradictions/discrepancies in the statement of the prosecutrix but such minor discrepancies and inconsistencies are only natural since when truth is sought to be projected through human, there are bound to be certain inherent contradictions. But as held in Om Prakash v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/8150/2006 : (2006) 9 SCC 787, the Court should examine the broader probabilities of a case.

384. There is no quarrel over the proposition that the evidence of the prosecutrix is to be believed by examining the broader probabilities of a case. But where there are serious infirmities and inherent inconsistencies in evidence; the prosecutrix making deliberate improvement on material point with a view to rule out consent on her part, no reliance can be placed upon the testimony of the prosecutrix. In Tameezuddin v. State (NCT of Delhi) MANU/SC/1621/2009 : (2009) 15 SCC 566, it was held as under:

9. It is true that in a case of rape the evidence of the prosecutrix must be given predominant consideration, but to hold that this evidence has to be accepted even if the story is improbable and belies logic, would be doing violence to the very principles which govern the appreciation of evidence in a criminal matter. We are of the opinion that the story is indeed improbable.

The same view was taken in Suresh N. Bhusare v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0529/1998 : (1999) 1 SCC 220 and Jai Krishna Mandal v. State of Jharkhand MANU/SC/1347/2010 : (2010) 14 SCC 534.

385. On the anvil of the above principles, let us test the case of prosecution and version of the prosecutrix as depicted in her dying declaration.

386. Dying Declaration: Prosecution relies upon three dying declarations of the victim: (i) Statement of victim recorded by P.W. 49 Dr. Rashmi Ahuja (Ex. P.W. 49/A) when the victim was brought to Safdarjung Hospital and admitted in the Gynae casualty at about 11:15 p.m. on 16.12.2012 - the victim gave a brief account of the incident stating that she went to a movie with her friend Awnindra (P.W. 1) and that after the movie, they together boarded the bus from Munirka bus stop in which she was gang- raped and that she was thrown away from the moving bus thereafter, along with her friend; (ii) Second dying declaration recorded by P.W. 27 Usha Chaturvedi, SDM (Ex. P.W. 27/A) on 21.12.2012 at about 09:00 p.m. - the victim gave the details of the entire incident specifying the role of each accused: gang- rape, unnatural sex committed on her, the injuries inflicted by accused on her vagina and rectum, by use of iron rod and by insertion of hands in her private parts; description of the bus, robbery and lastly throwing both the victim and also her boyfriend out of the moving bus in naked condition near Mahipalpur flyover; (iii) Third dying declaration recorded by P.W. 30 Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate (Ex. P.W. 30/D) on 25.12.2012 at 1:00 PM at ICU, Safdarjung Hospital by putting questions in multiple choice and recording answers through such questions by gestures or writings - the victim wrote the names of the accused in the third dying declaration. Evidence of P.W. 28 Dr. Rajesh Rastogi and the certificate (Ex. P.W. 28/A) given by him establishes that the victim was in a fit mental condition to give the statement through gestures. Furthermore, P.W. 75 Asha Devi, mother of the victim in her cross- examination also deposed that she had a talk with her daughter on the night of 25.12.2012, which shows that the victim was conscious, communicative and oriented. Contentions urged, assailing the fit mental condition of the victim have no merit.

387. With regard to the contention that there were improvements in the dying declarations, I am of he view, the victim was gang- raped and iron rod was inserted in her private parts in the incident and the victim must have been pushed to deep emotional crisis. Rape deeply affects the entire psychology of the woman and humiliates her, apart from leaving her in a trauma. The testimony of the rape victim must be appreciated in the background of the entire case and the trauma which the victim had undergone. As a matter of record, P.W. 49 Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, at around 11:15 p.m. on the night of 16.12.2012, had attended to the prosecutrix as soon as she was brought to the hospital and had prepared casualty/OPD Card of the prosecutrix (Ex. P.W. 49/A), as well as her MLC (Ex. P.W. 49/B). At that time, P.W. 49 had found her cold and clammy due to vaso- constriction. The prosecutrix was found shivering, for which she was administered IV line and warm saline in order to stabilize her pulse and BP. When the victim was in such a condition, the victim cannot be expected to give minute details of the occurrence like overt act played by the accused, insertion of iron rod etc. There is no justification for blowing up such omission out of proportion in the statement recorded by P.W. 49 Dr. Rashmi Ahuja and doubt the same. In the occurrence, physical and emotional balance of the victim must have been greatly disturbed. Startled by the incident, whatever the victim was able to momentarily recollect, she narrated to P.W. 49 and placed in that position non- mention of minute details in Ex. P.W. 49/A cannot be termed as a material omission.

388. Dying declaration is a substantial piece of evidence provided it is not tainted with malice and is not made in an unfit mental state. Each case of dying declaration has to be considered in its own facts and circumstances in which it is made. However, there are some well- known tests to ascertain as to whether the statement was made in reference to cause of death of its maker and whether the same could be relied upon or not. The Court also has to satisfy as to whether the deceased was in a fit mental state to make the statement. The Court must scrutinize the dying declaration carefully and ensure that the declaration is not the result of tutoring, prompting or imagination. Once the Court is satisfied that the declaration is true and voluntary, it can base its conviction without any further corroboration. It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that the dying declaration cannot form the sole basis of conviction unless it is corroborated. The rule requiring corroboration is merely a rule of prudence. That the deceased had the opportunity to observe and identify the assailants and was in a fit state to make the declaration. [K. Ramachandra Reddy and Anr. v. Public Prosecutor MANU/SC/0127/1976 : (1976) 3 SCC 618]

389. The principles governing dying declarations have been exhaustively laid down in several judicial pronouncements. In Paniben (Smt.) v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0346/1992 : (1992) 2 SCC 474, this Court referred to a number of judgments laying down the principles governing dying declaration. In this regard, I find it apposite to quote the following from Paniben (supra) as under:

18. Though a dying declaration is entitled to great weight, it is worthwhile to note that the accused has no power of cross- examination. Such a power is essential for eliciting the truth as an obligation of oath could be. This is the reason the Court also insists that the dying declaration should be of such a nature as to inspire full confidence of the Court in its correctness. The Court has to be on guard that the statement of deceased was not as a result of either tutoring, prompting or a product of imagination. The Court must be further satisfied that the deceased was in a fit state of mind after a clear opportunity to observe and identify the assailants. Once the Court is satisfied that the declaration was true and voluntary, undoubtedly, it can base its conviction without any further corroboration. It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that the dying declaration cannot form the sole basis of conviction unless it is corroborated. The rule requiring corroboration is merely a rule of prudence. This Court has laid down in several judgments the principles governing dying declaration, which could be summed up as under:

(i) There is neither rule of law nor of prudence that dying declaration cannot be acted upon without corroboration. (Munnu Raja v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0174/1975 : (1976) 3 SCC 104)

(ii) If the Court is satisfied that the dying declaration is true and voluntary it can base conviction on it, without corroboration. (State of U.P. v. Ram Sagar Yadav MANU/SC/0118/1985 : (1985) 1 SCC 522; Ramawati Devi v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0135/1983 : (1983) 1 SCC 211).

(iii) This Court has to scrutinise the dying declaration carefully and must ensure that the declaration is not the result of tutoring, prompting or imagination. The deceased had opportunity to observe and identify the assailants and was in a fit state to make the declaration. (K. Ramachandra Reddy v. Public Prosecutor MANU/SC/0127/1976 : (1976) 3 SCC 618).

(iv) Where dying declaration is suspicious it should not be acted upon without corroborative evidence. (Rasheed Beg v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0160/1973 : (1974) 4 SCC 264)

(v) Where the deceased was unconscious and could never make any dying declaration the evidence with regard to it is to be rejected. (Kake Singh v. State of M.P. (1981) Supp. SCC 25)

(vi) A dying declaration which suffers from infirmity cannot form the basis of conviction. (Ram Manorath v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0207/1981 : (1981) 2 SCC 654)

(vii) Merely because a dying declaration does not contain the details as to the occurrence, it is not to be rejected. (State of Maharashtra v. Krishnamurti Laxmipati Naidu (1980) Supp. SCC 455)

(viii) Equally, merely because it is a brief statement, it is not be discarded. On the contrary, the shortness of the statement itself guarantees truth. Surajdeo Oza v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0269/1979 : (1980) Supp. SCC 769)

(ix) Normally the court in order to satisfy whether deceased was in a fit mental condition to make the dying declaration look up to the medical opinion. But where the eye witness has said that the deceased was in a fit and conscious state to make this dying declaration, the medical opinion cannot prevail. (Nanahau Ram v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0334/1988 : (1988) Supp. SCC 152)

(x) Where the prosecution version differs from the version as given in the dying declaration, the said declaration cannot be acted upon. (State of U.P. v. Madan Mohan MANU/SC/0565/1989 : (1989) 3 SCC 390)

The above well- settled tests relating to dying declarations and the principles have been elaborately considered in a number of judgments. [Vide Khushal Rao v. State of Bombay MANU/SC/0107/1957 : AIR 1958 SC 22; State of Uttar Pradesh v. Ram Sagar Yadav MANU/SC/0118/1985 : (1985) 1 SCC 552; State of Orissa v. Bansidhar Singh MANU/SC/0248/1996 : (1996) 2 SCC 194; Panneerselvam v. State of Tamil Nadu MANU/SC/7726/2008 : (2008) 17 SCC 190; Atbir v. 390. Multiple Dying Declarations: In cases where there are more than one dying declarations, the Court should consider whether they are consistent with each other. If there are inconsistencies, the nature of the inconsistencies must be examined as to whether they are material or not. In cases where there are more than one dying declaration, it is the duty of the Court to consider each one of them and satisfy itself as to the voluntariness and reliability of the declarations. Mere fact of recording multiple dying declarations does not take away the importance of each individual declaration. Court has to examine the contents of dying declaration in the light of various surrounding facts and circumstances. This Court in a number of cases, where there were multiple dying declarations, consistent in material particulars not being contradictory to each other, has affirmed the conviction. [Vide Vithal v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/8618/2006 : (2006) 13 SCC 54].

391. In Amol Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/7724/2008 : (2008) 5 SCC 468, while discarding the two inconsistent dying declarations, laid down the principles for consideration of multiple dying declarations as under:

13. Law relating to appreciation of evidence in the form of more than one dying declaration is well settled. Accordingly, it is not the plurality of the dying declarations but the reliability thereof that adds weight to the prosecution case. If a dying declaration is found to be voluntary, reliable and made in fit mental condition, it can be relied upon without any corroboration. The statement should be consistent throughout. If the deceased had several opportunities of making such dying declarations, that is to say, if there are more than one dying declaration they should be consistent. (See Kundula Bala Subrahmanyam v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/0508/1993 : (1993) 2 SCC 684) However, if some inconsistencies are noticed between one dying declaration and the other, the court has to examine the nature of the inconsistencies, namely, whether they are material or not. While scrutinising the contents of various dying declarations, in such a situation, the court has to examine the same in the light of the various surrounding facts and circumstances.

392. In Ganpat Mahadeo Mane v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0167/1993 : (1993) Supp. (2) SCC 242, there were three dying declarations. One recorded by the doctor; the second recorded by the police constable and also attested by the doctor and the third dying declaration recorded by the Executive Magistrate which was endorsed by the doctor. Considering the third dying declaration, this Court held that all the three dying declarations were consistent and corroborated by medical evidence and other circumstantial evidence and that they did not suffer from any infirmity.

393. In Lakhan v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0577/2010 : (2010) 8 SCC 514, this Court considered a similar situation where in the first dying declaration given to a police officer was more elaborate and the subsequent dying declaration recorded by the Judicial Magistrate lacked certain information given earlier. After examining the contents of the two dying declarations, this Court held that there was no inconsistency between two dying declarations and non- mention of certain features in the dying declarations recorded by the Judicial Magistrate does not make both the dying declarations inconsistent.

394. In the light of the above principles, I now advert to analyze the facts of the present case. The victim made three dying declarations: (i) statement recorded by P.W. 49 Dr. Rashmi Ahuja immediately after the victim was admitted to the hospital; (ii) Dying declaration (Ex. P.W. 27/A) recorded by P.W. 27 SDM Usha Chaturvedi on 21.12.2012; and (iii) dying declaration (Ex. P.W. 30/D) recorded by P.W. 30 Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate on 25.12.2012 at 1:00 P.M. by multiple choice questions and recording answers by gestures and writing. In the first dying declaration (Ex. P.W. 49/A), the prosecutrix has stated that more than two men committed rape on her, bit her on lips, cheeks and breast and also subjected her to unnatural sex. In the second dying declaration (Ex. P.W. 27/A) recorded by P.W. 27, the victim has narrated the entire incident in great detail, specifying the role of each accused, rape committed by number of persons, insertion of iron rod in her private parts, description of the bus, robbery committed and throwing of both the victims out of the moving bus in naked condition. In the second dying declaration, she has also stated that the accused were addressing each other with the names like, "Ram Singh, Thakur, Raju, Mukesh, Pawan and Vinay". In the second dying declaration, though there are improvements in giving details of the incident, names of the accused etc., there are no material contradictions between the first and second dying declaration (Ex. P.W. 49/A and Ex. P.W. 27/A).

395. On 25.12.2012 at 1:00 P.M., P.W. 30 Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate recorded the statement by putting multiple choice questions to the victim and by getting answers through gestures and writing. The third dying declaration (Ex. P.W. 30/D) is found consistent with the earlier two declarations. It conclusively establishes that the victim was brutally gang- raped, beaten by iron rod, subjected to other harsh atrocities and was finally dumped at an unknown place. While making the third declaration, the victim also tried to reveal the names of the accused by writing in her own handwriting viz. Ram Singh, Mukesh, Vinay, Akshay, Vipin, Raju.

396. As per the settled law governing dying declarations, even if there are minor discrepancies in the dying declarations, in the facts and circumstances of the case, the Court can disregard the same as insignificant. A three- Judge Bench of this Court in Abrar v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/1062/2010 : (2011) 2 SCC 750, held that it is practical that minor discrepancies in recording dying declarations may occur due to pain and suffering of the victim, in case the declaration is recorded at multiple intervals and thus, such discrepancies need not be given much emphasis.

12. It is true that there are some discrepancies in the dying declarations with regard to the presence or otherwise of a light or a torch. To our mind, however, these are so insignificant that they call for no discussion. It is also clear from the evidence that the injured had been in great pain and if there were minor discrepancies inter se the three dying declarations, they were to be accepted as something normal. The trial court was thus clearly wrong in rendering a judgment of acquittal solely on this specious ground. We, particularly, notice that the dying declaration had been recorded by the Tahsildar after the doctor had certified the victim as fit to make a statement. The doctor also appeared in the witness box to support the statement of the Tahsildar. We are, therefore, of the opinion, that no fault whatsoever could be found in the dying declarations.

397. When a dying declaration is recorded voluntarily, pursuant to a fitness report of a certified doctor, nothing much remains to be questioned unless, it is proved that the dying declaration was tainted with animosity and a result of tutoring. Especially, when there are multiple dying declarations minor variations does not affect the evidentiary value of other dying declarations whether recorded prior or subsequent thereto. In Ashabai and Anr. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0011/2013 : (2013) 2 SCC 224, it was held as under:

15. ....As rightly observed by the High Court, the law does not insist upon the corroboration of dying declaration before it can be accepted. The insistence of corroboration to a dying declaration is only a rule of prudence. When the Court is satisfied that the dying declaration is voluntary, not tainted by tutoring or animosity, and is not a product of the imagination of the declarant, in that event, there is no impediment in convicting the accused on the basis of such dying declaration. When there are multiple dying declarations, each dying declaration has to be separately assessed and evaluated and assess independently on its own merit as to its evidentiary value and one cannot be rejected because of certain variation in the other.

398. Considering the present case on the anvil of the above principles, I find that though there was time gap between the declarations, all the three dying declarations are consistent with each other and there are no material contradictions. All the three dying declarations depict truthful version of the incident, particularly the detailed narration of the incident concerning the rape committed on the victim, insertion of iron rod and the injuries caused to her vagina and rectum, unnatural sex committed on the victim and throwing the victim and P.W. 1 out of the moving bus. All the three dying declarations being voluntary, consistent and trustworthy, satisfy the test of reliability.

399. Dying Declaration by gestures and nods: Adverting to the contention that the third dying declaration made through gestures lacks credibility, it is seen that the multiple choice questions put to the prosecutrix by P.W. 30 Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate, were simple and easily answerable through nods and gestures. That apart, before recording the dying declaration, P.W. 30 Pawan Kumar, Metropolitan Magistrate had satisfied himself about fit mental state of the victim to record dying declaration through nods and gestures. There is nothing proved on record to show that the mental capacity of the victim was impaired, so as to doubt the third dying declaration. As the victim was conscious, oriented and meaningfully communicative, it is natural that the victim was in a position to write the names of the accused persons and also about the use of long iron rod. The third dying declaration recorded through nods and gestures and also by the victim's own writing, writing the names of the accused inspires confidence in the Court; the same was rightly relied upon by the trial Court as well as the High Court.

400. Dying declaration made through signs, gesture or by nods are admissible as evidence, if proper care was taken at the time of recording the statement. The only caution the Court ought to take is to ensure that the person recording the dying declaration was able to correctly notice and interpret the gestures or nods of the declarant. While recording the third dying declaration, signs/gestures made by the victim, in response to the multiple choice questions put to the prosecutrix are admissible in evidence.

401. A dying declaration need not necessarily be by words or in writing. It can be by gesture or by nod. In Meesala Ramakrishan v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/0709/1994 : (1994) 4 SCC 182, this Court held as under:

20. .....that dying declaration recorded on the basis of nods and gestures is not only admissible but possesses evidentiary value, the extent of which shall depend upon who recorded the statement, what is his educational attainment, what gestures and nods were made, what were the questions asked - - whether they were simple or complicated - - and how effective or understandable the nods and gestures were.

The same view was reiterated in B. Shashikala v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/0052/2004 : (2004) 13 SCC 249.

402. In the case of rape and sexual assault, the evidence of prosecutrix is very crucial and if it inspires confidence of the court, there is no requirement of law to insist upon corroboration of the same for convicting the accused on the basis of it. Courts are expected to act with sensitivity and appreciate the evidence of the prosecutrix in the background of the entire facts of the case and not in isolation. In the facts and circumstances of the present case as the statements of the prosecutrix in the form of three dying declarations are consistent with each other and there are no material contradiction, they can be completely relied upon without corroboration. In the present case, the prosecutrix has made a truthful statement and the prosecution has established the case against the Respondents beyond reasonable doubt. The victim also wrote the names of the accused persons in her own hand- writing in the dying declaration recorded by P.W. 30 (Ex. P.W. 30/D). Considering the facts and circumstances of the present case and upon appreciation of the evidence and material on record, I find all the three dying declarations consistent, true and voluntary, satisfying the test of probabilities factor. That apart, the dying declarations are well-corroborated by medical and scientific evidence adduced by the prosecution. Moreover, the same has been amply corroborated by the testimony of eye witness- P.W. 1.

403. Corroboration of Dying declaration by Medical Evidence: The dying declaration is amply corroborated by medical evidence depicting injuries to vagina and internal injuries to rectum and recto- vaginal septum as noted by P.W. 49 Dr. Rashmi Ahuja and P.W. 50 Dr, Raj Kumar Chejara. On the night of 16.12.2012, the prosecutrix was medically examined by P.W. 49 who recorded her injuries and statement in the MLC (Ex. P.W. 49/B). On local examination, a sharp cut over right labia and a 6 cm long tag of vagina was found hanging outside the introitus. Vaginal examination showed bleeding and about 7 to 8 cm long posterior vaginal wall tear. A rectal tear of about 4 to 5 cm was also noticed communicating with the vaginal tear. Apart from the said injuries to the private parts of the prosecutrix, guarding and rigidity was also found in her abdomen and several bruises and marks on face were noticed. Bruises and abrasions around both the eyes and nostrils were also found. Lips were found edematous and left side of the mouth was injured by a small laceration. Bite marks over cheeks and breast, below areola, were also present. Bruises over the left breast and bite mark in interior left quadrant were prominent.

404. During surgery, conducted on 16/17.12.2012 P.W. 50 Dr. Raj Kumar Chejara (Ex. P.W. 50/A and Ex. P.W. 50/B) noted contusion and bruising of jejunum, large bowel, vaginal tear, and completely torn recto- vaginal septum. Small and large bowels were affected and were extremely bad for any definitive repair. It was also noted that rectum was longitudinally torn and the tear was continuing upward involving sigmoid colon, descending colon which was splayed open. There were multiple perforations at many places of ascending colon and calcum. Terminal ileum approximately one and a half feet loosely hanging in the abdominal cavity avulsed from its mesentery. Rest of the small bowel was non- existent with only patches of mucosa at places and borders of the mesentery were contused. While performing second surgery on 19th December, 2012, surgery team also recorded findings that rectum was longitudinally torn on anterior aspect in continuation with peritorial tear and other internal injuries. On 26- 12- 2012 the condition of the prosecutrix was examined and it was decided to shift her abroad for further treatment and she was shifted by an air- ambulance to Singapore Mount Elizabeth Hospital. The prosecutrix died at Mount Elizabeth Hospital, Singapore on 29- 12- 2012 at 04:45 AM. Cause of death is stated as sepsis with multi organ failure following multiple injuries. (Ex. P.W. 34/A)

405. Injuries to vagina, rectum and recto- vaginal septum as noted by P.W. 49 Dr. Rashmi Ahuja and P.W. 50 Dr. Raj Kumar Chejara; and the injuries as depicted in the post- mortem certificate, including the other external injuries which are evidently marks of violence during the incident, exhibit the cruel nature of gang rape committed on the victim. The profused bleeding from vagina and tag of vagina hanging outside; completely recto- vaginal septum clearly demonstrate the violent act of gang rape committed on the victim. The medical reports including the operation theatre notes (Ex. P.W. 50/A and 50/B) and the injuries thereon indicates the pain and suffering which the victim had undergone due to multiple organ failure and other injuries caused by insertion of iron rod.

406. If considered on the anvil of settled legal principles, injuries on the person of a rape victim is not even a sine qua non for proving the charge of rape, as held in Joseph v. State of Kerala MANU/SC/0313/2000 : (2000) 5 SCC 197. The same principle was reiterated in State of Maharashtra v. Suresh MANU/SC/0765/1999 : (2000) 1 SCC 471. As rightly held in State of Rajasthan v. N.K., The Accused MANU/SC/0218/2000 : (2000) 5 SCC 30, absence of injury on the person of the victim is not necessarily an evidence of falsity of the allegations of rape or evidence of consent on the part of the prosecutrix. In the present case, the extensive injuries found on the vagina/private parts of the body of the victim and injuries caused to the internal organs and all over the body, clearly show that the victim was ravished.

407. Corroboration of dying declaration by scientific evidence: The DNA profile generated from blood- stained pants, t- shirts and jackets recovered at the behest of A- 2 Mukesh matched with the DNA profile of the victim. Likewise, the DNA profile generated from the blood- stained jeans and banian recovered at the behest of A- 3 Akshay matched with the DNA profile of the victim. DNA profile generated from the blood- stained underwear, chappal and jacket recovered at the behest of A- 4 Vinay matched with the DNA profile of the victim. DNA profiles generated from the clothes of the accused recovered at their behest consistent with that of the victim is an unimpeachable evidence incriminating the accused in the occurrence. As submitted by the prosecution, there is no plausible explanation from the accused as to the matching of DNA profile of the victim with that of the DNA profile generated from the clothes of the accused. The courts below rightly took note of the DNA analysis report in finding the accused guilty.

408. Bite marks on the chest of the victim and Odontology Report: It is also to be noted that the photographs of bite marks found on the body of the victim, lifted by P.W. 66 Shri Asghar Hussain were examined by P.W. 71 Dr. Ashith B. Acharya. The analysis shows that at least three bite marks were caused by accused Ram Singh whereas one bite mark has been identified to have been most likely caused by accused Akshay. This aspect of Odontology Report has been elaborately discussed by the High Court in paragraphs (91) to (94) of its judgment. Odontology Report which links accused Ram Singh and accused Akshay, with the case, strengthens the prosecution case as to their involvement.

409. Going by the version of the prosecutrix, as per the dying declaration and the evidence adduced, in particular medical evidence and scientific evidence, I find the evidence of the prosecutrix being amply corroborated. As discussed earlier, in rape cases, Court should examine the broader probabilities of a case and not get swayed by discrepancies. The conviction can be based even on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix. However, in this case, dying declarations recorded from the prosecutrix are corroborated in material particulars by: (i) medical evidence; (ii) evidence of injured witness P.W. 1; (iii) matching of DNA profiles, generated from blood-stained clothes of the accused, iron rod recovered at the behest of deceased accused Ram Singh and various articles recovered from the bus with the DNA profile of the victim; (iv) recovery of belongings of the victim at the behest of the accused, viz. debit card recovered from A- 1 Ram Singh and Nokia mobile from A- 4 Vinay. The dying declarations well corroborated by medical and scientific evidence strengthen the case of the prosecution by conclusively connecting the accused with the crime.

410. Use of Iron Rod and death of the victim: Case of the prosecution is that the accused brutally inserted iron rod in the vagina of the prosecutrix and pulled out internal organs of the prosecutrix. The defence refuted the use of iron rod by the accused on the ground that the complainant as well as the victim did not mention the use of iron rods in their first statements. Contention of the Appellants is that when the victim had given details of the entire incident to P.W. 49 Dr. Rashmi Ahuja, if iron rod had been used, she would not have omitted to mention the use of iron rods in the incident. We do not find force in such a contention, as ample reliable evidence are proved on record which lead to the irresistible conclusion that iron rod was used and it was not a mere piece of concoction.

411. Use of iron rods and insertion of the same in the private parts of the victim is established by the second dying declaration recorded by SDM P.W. 27 Usha Chaturvedi, where the victim has given a detailed account of the incident, role of the accused, gang rape committed on her and other offences including the use of iron rods. The brutality with which the accused persons inserted iron rod in the rectum and vagina of the victim and took out her internal organs from the vaginal and anal opening is reflected in Ex. P.W. 49/A. Further, medical opinion of P.W. 49 (Ex. P.W. 49/G) stating that the recto- vaginal injury could be caused by the rods recovered from the bus, strengthens the statement of the victim and the prosecution version. When the second and third dying declarations of the prosecutrix are well corroborated by the medical evidence, non- mention of use of iron rods in prosecutrix's statement to P.W. 49 Dr. Rashmi Ahuja (Ex. P.W. 49/A), does not materially affect the credibility of the dying declaration. Insertion of iron rod in the private parts of the prosecutrix is amply established by the nature of multiple injuries caused to jejunum and rectum which was longitudinally torn, tag of vagina hanging out; and completely torn recto- vaginal septum.

412. At the behest of accused Ram Singh two iron rods (Ex. P- 49/1 and Ex. P- 49/2) were recovered from the shelf of the driver's cabin vide seizure Memo Ex. P.W. 74/G. The blood-stained rods deposited in the Malkhana were thereafter sent for chemical analysis. The DNA report prepared by P.W. 45 Dr. B.K. Mohapatra, indicates that the DNA profile developed from the blood- stained iron rods is consistent with the DNA profile of the victim. Presence of blood on the iron rods and the DNA profile of which is consistent with the DNA profile of the victim establishes the prosecution case as to the alleged use of iron rods in the incident.

413. Evidence of P.W. 1: In his first statement made on 16.12.2012, eye witness P.W. 1 stated that he accompanied the prosecutrix to Select City Mall, Saket, New Delhi in an auto from Dwarka, New Delhi where they watched a movie till about 08:30 p.m. After leaving the Mall, P.W. 1 and the victim took an auto to Munirka from where they boarded the fateful bus. After the prosecutrix and P.W. 1 boarded the bus, the accused surrounded P.W. 1 and pinned him down in front side of the bus. While the accused Vinay and Pawan held P.W. 1, the other three accused committed rape on the victim on the rear side of the bus. Thereafter, other accused held P.W. 1, while Vinay and Pawan committed rape on the victim. Later accused Mukesh who was earlier driving the bus, committed rape on the victim. After the incident, P.W. 1 and the prosecutrix were thrown out of the moving bus, near Mahipalpur flyover. In the incident, P.W. 1 himself sustained injuries which lends assurance to his credibility.

414. That P.W. 1 accompanied the victim to Select City Mall and that he was with the victim till the end, is proved by ample evidence. As per the case of the prosecution, on the fateful day, the complainant and the prosecutrix had gone to Saket Mall to see a movie. CCTV footage produced by P.W. 25 Rajender Singh Bisht in two CDs (Ex. P.W. 25/C- 1 and P.W. 25/C- 2) and seven photographs (Ex. P.W. 25/B- 1 to Ex. P.W. 25/B- 7) corroborate the version of P.W. 1 that the complainant and the victim were present at Saket Mall till 8:57 p.m. The certificate Under Section 65- B of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 with respect to the said footage is proved by P.W. 26 Shri Sandeep Singh (Ex. P.W. 26/A) who is the CCTV operator at Select City Mall.

415. The computer generated electronic record in evidence, admissible at a trial is proved in the manner specified in Section 65- B of the Evidence Act. Sub- section (1) of Section 65 of the Evidence Act makes electronic records admissible as a document, paper print out of electronic records stored in optical or magnetic media produced by a computer, subject to the fulfillment of the conditions specified in Sub- section (2) of Section 65- B of the Evidence Act. When those conditions are satisfied, the electronic record becomes admissible in any proceeding without further proof or production of the original, as evidence of any of the contents of the original or any fact stated therein of which direct evidence is admissible. Secondary evidence of contents of document can also be led Under Section 65 of the Evidence Act.

416. Having carefully gone through the deposition of P.W. 1, I find that his evidence, even after lengthy cross examination, remains unshaken. The evidence of a witness is not to be disbelieved simply because of minor discrepancies. It is to be examined whether he was present or not at the crime scene and whether he is telling the truth or not. P.W. 1 has clearly explained as to how he happened to be with the victim and considering the cogent evidence adduced by the prosecution, presence of P.W. 1 cannot be doubted in any manner. P.W. 1 himself was injured in the incident and he was admitted in the Casualty Ward, where P.W. 51 Dr. Sachin Bajaj examined him. As per

Ex. P.W. 51/A, lacerated wound over the vertex of scalp, lacerated wound over left upper lip and abrasion over right knee were found on the person of P.W. 1. Testimony of P.W. 1 being testimony of an injured witness lends credibility to his evidence and prosecution's case. As rightly pointed out by the Courts below, no convincing grounds exist to discard the evidence of P.W. 1, an injured witness.

417. The question of the weight to be attached to the evidence of an injured witness has been extensively discussed by this Court in Mano Dutt and Anr. v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0159/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 79. After exhaustively referring to various judgments on this point, this Court held as under:

31. We may merely refer to Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0702/2010 : (2010) 10 SCC 259 where this Court held as under: (SCC pp. 271- 72, paras 28- 30)

28. The question of the weight to be attached to the evidence of a witness that was himself injured in the course of the occurrence has been extensively discussed by this Court. Where a witness to the occurrence has himself been injured in the incident, the testimony of such a witness is generally considered to be very reliable, as he is a witness that comes with a built- in guarantee of his presence at the scene of the crime and is unlikely to spare his actual assailant(s) in order to falsely implicate someone. 'Convincing evidence is required to discredit an injured witness.' [Vide Ramlagan Singh v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0216/1972 : (1973) 3 SCC 881, Malkhan Singh v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0164/1974 : (1975) 3 SCC 311, Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0211/1983 : (1983) 3 SCC 470, Appabhai v. State of Gujarat 1988 Supp SCC 241, Bonkya v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0066/1996 : (1995) 6 SCC 447, Bhag Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/1308/1997 : (1997) 7 SCC 712, Mohar v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0808/2002 : (2002) 7 SCC 606 (SCC p. 606b- c), Dinesh Kumar v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/7910/2008 : (2008) 8 SCC 270, Vishnu v. State of Rajasthan (2009) 10 SCC 477, Annareddy Sambasiva Reddy v. State of A.P. MANU/SC/0640/2009 : (2009) 12 SCC 546 and Balraje v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0352/2010 : (2010) 6 SCC 673.]

29. While deciding this issue, a similar view was taken in Jarnail Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/1584/2009 : (2009) 9 SCC 719 where this Court reiterated the special evidentiary status accorded to the testimony of an injured accused and relying on its earlier judgments held as under: (SCC pp. 726- 27, paras 28- 29)

'28. Darshan Singh (PW 4) was an injured witness. He had been examined by the doctor. His testimony could not be brushed aside lightly. He had given full details of the incident as he was present at the time when the assailants reached the tubewell. In Shivalingappa Kallayanappa v. State of Karnataka MANU/SC/0053/1995 : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 235 this Court has held that the deposition of the injured witness should be relied upon unless there are strong grounds for rejection of his evidence on the basis of major contradictions and discrepancies, for the reason that his presence on the scene stands established in case it is proved that he suffered the injury during the said incident.

29. In State of U.P. v. Kishan Chand MANU/SC/0652/2004 : (2004) 7 SCC 629 a similar view has been reiterated observing that the testimony of a stamped witness has its own relevance and efficacy. The fact that the witness sustained injuries at the time and place of occurrence, lends support to his testimony that he was present during the occurrence. In case the injured witness is subjected to lengthy cross- examination and nothing can be elicited to discard his testimony, it should be relied upon (vide Krishan v. State of Haryana (2006) 12 SCC 459). Thus, we are of the considered opinion that evidence of Darshan Singh (PW 4) has rightly been relied upon by the courts below.'

30. The law on the point can be summarised to the effect that the testimony of the injured witness is accorded a special status in law. This is as a consequence of the fact that the injury to the witness is an inbuilt guarantee of his presence at the scene of the crime and because the witness will not want to let his actual assailant go unpunished merely to falsely implicate a third party for the commission of the offence. Thus, the deposition of the injured witness should be relied upon unless there are strong grounds for rejection of his evidence on the basis of major contradictions and discrepancies therein.

418. After the accused were arrested, they made disclosure statements. Pursuant to the said disclosure statements, recoveries of various articles were effected which included clothes of the accused and articles belonging to P.W. 1 and the prosecutrix. The Samsung Galaxy Duos mobile phone recovered from A- 2 was identified by the complainant in the court as belonging to him and testimony of the complainant was further fortified by the testimony of P.W. 56 Sandeep Dabral, Manager, Spice Mobile Shop, who stated that the said Samsung Mobile bearing the respective IMEI number was sold in the name of the complainant. Also, the metro card and silver ring recovered at the behest of A- 3 Akshay were identified by P.W. 1 in court as belonging to him. The silver ring was also identified by the complainant in the TIP proceedings conducted on 28.12.2012. Likewise, the Hush- Puppies shoes recovered at the behest of A- 4 Vinay and wrist watch of Sonata make recovered at the behest of A- 5 Pawan were identified by P.W. 1 in TIP proceedings as belonging to him. Recoveries of articles of P.W. 1 and other scientific evidence, irrebutably establish the presence of P.W. 1 at the crime scene and strengthens the credibility of P.W. 1's testimony.

419. Apart from the recoveries made at the behest of the accused, presence of P.W. 1 is also confirmed by DNA profile generated from the blood- stained mulberry leaves and grass collected from Mahipalpur (seized vide Memo Ex. P.W. 74/C) where both the victims were thrown after the incident. As per the Chemical Analysis Report, DNA profile generated from the blood-stained murberry leaves collected from the Mahipalpur flyover were found to be of male origin and consistent with the DNA profile of P.W. 1. This proves that P.W. 1 was present with the victim at the time of the incident and both of them were together thrown out of the bus at Mahipalpur.

420. Further, as discussed infra, pursuant to the disclosure statement of the accused, clothes of accused, some of which were blood- stained and other incriminating articles were recovered. P.W. 45 Dr. B.K. Mohapatra matched the DNA profiles of the blood detected on the clothes of the accused with that of the complainant and the victim. One set of DNA profile generated from jeans- pant of the accused Akshay (A- 3) matched the DNA profile of P.W. 1. Likewise, one set of DNA profile generated from the sports jacket of accused Vinay (A- 4) was found consistent with the DNA profile of P.W. 1. Also, one set of DNA profile generated from black coloured sweater of Accused Pawan Gupta (A- 5) was found consistent with the DNA profile of P.W. 1. Result of DNA analysis further corroborates the version of P.W. 1 and strengthens the prosecution case. DNA Analysis Report, as provided by P.W. 45 is a vital piece of evidence connecting the accused with the crime.

422. Contention of the Appellants is that there are vital contradictions in the statements of P.W. 1. It is contended that initially P.W. 1 did not give the names of the accused in the FIR and that he kept on improving his version, in particular, in the second supplementary statement recorded on 17.12.2012 in which he gave the details of the bus involved. To contend that testimony of P.W. 1 is not trustworthy, reliance is placed on Kathi Bharat Vajsur and Anr. v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0413/2012 : (2012) 5 SCC 724. In Kathi Bharat Vajsur's case, this Court has observed that when there are inconsistencies or contradictions in oral evidence and the same is found to be in contradiction with other evidence then it cannot be held that the prosecution has proved the case beyond reasonable doubt.

423. While appreciating the evidence of a witness, the approach must be to consider the entire evidence and analyze whether the evidence as a whole gives a complete chain of facts depicting truth. Once that impression is formed, it is necessary for the court to scrutinize evidence particularly keeping in view the prosecution case. Any minor discrepancies or improvements not touching the core of the prosecution case and not going to the root of the matter, does not affect the trustworthiness of the witness. Insofar as the contention that P.W. 1 kept on improving his version in his statement recorded at various point of time, it is noted that there are indeed some improvements in his version but, the core of his version as to the occurrence remains consistent. More so, when P.W. 1 and the victim faced such a traumatic experience, immediately after the incident, they cannot be expected to give minute details of the incident. It would have taken some time for them to come out of the shock and recollect the incident and give a detailed version of the incident. It is to be noted that in the present case, the statements of P.W. 1 recorded on various dates are not contradictory to each other. The subsequent statements though are more detailed as compared to the former ones, in the circumstances of the case, it cannot be said to be unnatural affecting the trustworthiness of P.W. 1's testimony. There is hardly any justification for doubting the evidence of P.W. 1, especially when it is corroborated by recovery of P.W. 1's articles from the accused and scientific evidence.

424. The trial Court as well as the High Court found P.W. 1's evidence credible and trustworthy and I find no reason to take a different view. The view of the High Court and the trial court is fortified by the decisions of this Court in Pudhu Raja and Anr. v. State Rep. by Inspector of Police MANU/SC/0761/2012 : (2012) 11 SCC 196, Jaswant Singh v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0236/2000 : (2000) 4 SCC 484 and Akhtar and Ors. v. State of Uttaranchal MANU/SC/0556/2009 : (2009) 13 SCC 722. Further, the evidence of P.W. 1 is amply strengthened by scientific evidence and recovery of the incriminating articles from the accused. The alleged omissions and improvements in the evidence of P.W. 1 pointed out by the defence do not materially affect the evidence of P.W. 1.

425. Recovery of the bus and its Involvement in the incident: Description of the entire incident by P.W. 1 and the victim led the investigating team to the Hotel named "Hotel Delhi Airport", where P.W. 1 and the victim were dumped after the incident. P.W. 67 P.K. Jha, owner of Hotel Delhi Airport handed over the pen drive containing CCTV footage (Ex. P- 67/1) and CD (Ex. P- 67/2) to the Investigating Officer which were seized. From the CCTV footage, the offending bus bearing registration No. DL- 1PC- 0149 was identified by P.W. 1. The bus was seized from Ravi Dass Camp and Ram Singh (A- 1) was also arrested.

426. P.W. 81 Dinesh Yadav is the owner of the bus bearing Registration No. DL- 1PC- 0149 (Ex. P- 1). P.W. 81 runs buses under the name and style "Yadav Travels". On interrogation, P.W. 81 Dinesh Yadav stated that A- 1 Ram Singh was the driver of the bus No. DL- 1PC- 0149 in December, 2012 and A- 3 Akshay Kumar Singh was his helper in the bus. P.W. 81 also informed the police that the bus was attached to Birla Vidya Niketan School, Pushp Vihar, New Delhi to ferry students to the school in the morning and that it was also engaged by a Company named M/s. Net Ambit in Noida, to take its employees from Delhi to Noida. P.W. 81 also informed the police that after daily routine trip, A- 1 Ram Singh used to park the bus at Ravi Dass Camp, R.K. Puram, near his residence. P.W. 81 further informed that on 17.12.2012, the bus as usual went from Delhi to Noida to take the Staff of M/s. Net Ambit to their office. The recovery of the bus (Ex. P- 1) and evidence of P.W. 81 led to a breakthrough in the investigation that A- 1 Ram Singh was the driver of the bus and A- 3 Akshay was the cleaner of the bus.

427. Furthermore, in order to prove that A1 Ram Singh (Dead) was the driver of the bus No. DL- 1PC- 0149 (Ex. P- 1), P.W. 16 Rajeev Jakhmola, Manager (Administration) of Birla Vidya Niketan School, Pushp Vihar, New Delhi was examined. In his evidence, P.W. 16 stated that P.W. 81, Dinesh Yadav had provided the school with seven buses on contract basis including the bus No. DL- 1PC- 0149 (Ex. P- 1) and that A- 1 Ram Singh was its driver. In his interrogation by the police, P.W. 16 had also handed over Ram Singh's driving licence alongwith copy of agreement of the school with the owner of the bus and other documents. By adducing the evidence of P.W. 81 Dinesh Yadav and P.W. 16 Rajeev Jakhmola, the prosecution has established that the bus in question was routinely driven by A- 1 Ram Singh (Dead) and A- 3 Akshay Kumar was the helper in the bus.

428. On 17.12.2012, a team of experts from CFSL comprising P.W. 45 Dr. B.K. Mohapatra, P.W. 46 A.D. Shah, P.W. 79 P.K. Gottam and others, went to the Thyagraj Stadium and inspected the bus Ex. P1. On inspection, certain articles were seized from the said bus vide seizure memo Ex. P.W. 74/P. It is brought on record that the samples were diligently collected and taken to CFSL, CBI by SI Subhash (P.W. 74) vide RC No. 178/21/12 for examination. The DNA profile of material objects lifted from the bus bearing No. DL- 1PC- 0149 were found consistent with that of the victim and the complainant. Matching of the DNA profile developed from the articles seized from the bus DL- 1PC- 0149 like hair recovered from the third row of the bus on the left side with the DNA profile of P.W. 1, strengthens the prosecution case as to the involvement of the offending bus bearing registration No. DL- 1PC- 0149. DNA profile developed from the blood- stained curtains of the bus and blood- stained seat covers of bus and the bunch of hair recovered from the floor of the bus below sixth row matched with the DNA profile of the victim. The evidence of DNA analysis is an unimpeachable evidence as to the involvement of the offending bus in the commission of offence and also strong unimpeachable evidence connecting the accused with the crime.

429. The accused neither rebutted this evidence nor offered any convincing explanation except making feeble attempt by stating that everything was concocted. P.W. 46, A.D. Shah, Senior Scientific Officer (Finger Prints), CFSL, CBI examined the chance prints lifted from the bus. Chance print marked as 'Q.1' lifted from the bus (Ex. P- 1) was found identical with the left palm print of accused Vinay Sharma. Further chance print marked as 'Q.4' was found identical with right thumb impression of accused Vinay Sharma. A finger print expert report (Ex. P.W. 46/D) states that the chance print lifted from the bus being identical with the finger print of accused Vinay Sharma, establishes the presence of accused Vinay Sharma in the bus, thereby strengthening prosecution case.

430. Arrest and Recovery Under Section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act: Prosecution very much relies upon disclosure statements of the accused, pursuant to which articles of the victim and also of P.W. 1 were recovered. Accused being in possession of the articles of the victim and that of P.W. 1, is a militating circumstance against the accused and it is for the accused to explain as to how they came in possession of these articles. Details of arrest of accused and articles recovered from the accused are as under:

431. As noted in the above tabular form, various articles of the complainant and the victim were recovered from the accused viz., Samsung Galaxy Phone (recovered at the behest of A- 2 Mukesh); silver ring (recovered at the behest of A- 3 Akshay); Hush Puppies shoes (recovered at the behest of A- 4 Vinay) and Sonata Wrist Watch (recovered at the behest of A- 5 Pawan). Recovery of belongings of P.W. 1 and that of the victim, at the instance of the accused is a relevant fact duly proved by the prosecution. Notably the articles recovered from the accused thereto have been duly identified by the complainant in test identification proceedings. Recovery of articles of complainant (P.W. 1) and that of the victim at the behest of accused is a strong incriminating circumstance implicating the accused. As rightly pointed out by the Courts below, the accused have not offered any cogent or plausible explanation as to how they came in possession of those articles.

432. Similarly, the Indian bank debit card (Ex. P.W. 74/3) recovered at the behest of A- 1 Ram Singh and black coloured Nokia mobile phone (Ex. P.W. 68/5) recovered at the behest of A- 4 Vinay have been proved to be used by the prosecutrix. P.W. 75 Asha Devi mother of the victim in her testimony stated that the Debit card belonged to her P.W. 75 Asha Devi and that the same was in the possession of her daughter. Nokia mobile phone (Ex. P.W. 68/5) is stated to be the mobile used by the victim. Notably, the articles of the prosecutrix recovered from the accused were proved by the evidence of P.W. 75 Asha Devi (mother of the victim) and the same was not controverted by the defence.

433. Section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act (for short 'the Evidence Act') speaks of a confession made to a police officer, which shall not be proved as against a person accused of an offence. Section 26 of the Evidence Act also speaks that no confession made by the person whilst he is in the custody of a police officer, unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, shall be proved as against such person. Sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act put a complete bar on the admissibility of a confessional statement made to a police officer or a confession made in absentia of a Magistrate, while in custody. Section 27 of the Evidence Act is by way of a proviso to Sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act and a statement even by way of confession made in police custody which distinctly relates to the fact discovered is admissible in evidence against the accused. Section 27 of the Evidence Act reads as under:

27. How much of information received from accused may be proved.- Provided that, when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a police officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved.

Section 27 is based on the view that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information is true and is a relevant fact and accordingly it can be safely allowed to be given in evidence.

434. Section 27 has prescribed two limitations for determining how much of the information received from the accused can be proved against him: (i) The information must be such as the accused has caused discovery of the fact, i.e. the fact must be the consequence, and the information the cause of its discovery; (ii) The information must 'relate distinctly' to the fact discovered. Both the conditions must be satisfied. Various requirements of Section 27 of the Evidence Act are succinctly summed up in Anter Singh v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/0096/2004 : (2004) 10 SCC 657:

16. The various requirements of the section can be summed up as follows:

(1) The fact of which evidence is sought to be given must be relevant to the issue. It must be borne in mind that the provision has nothing to do with the question of relevancy. The relevancy of the fact discovered must be established according to the prescriptions relating to relevancy of other evidence connecting it with the crime in order to make the fact discovered admissible.

(2) The fact must have been discovered.

(3) The discovery must have been in consequence of some information received from the accused and not by the accused's own act.

(4) The person giving the information must be accused of any offence.

(5) He must be in the custody of a police officer.

(6) The discovery of a fact in consequence of information received from an accused in custody must be deposed to.

(7) Thereupon only that portion of the information which relates distinctly or strictly to the fact discovered can be proved. The rest is inadmissible.

435. Appending a note of caution to prevent the misuse of the provision of Section 27 of the Evidence Act, this Court in Geejaganda Somaiah v. State of Karnataka MANU/SC/7211/2007 : (2007) 9 SCC 315, observed that the courts need to be vigilant about application of Section 27 of the Evidence Act. Relevant extract from the judgment is as under:

22. As the section is alleged to be frequently misused by the police, the courts are required to be vigilant about its application. The court must ensure the credibility of evidence by police because this provision is vulnerable to abuse. It does not, however, mean that any statement made in terms of the aforesaid section should be seen with suspicion and it cannot be discarded only on the ground that it was made to a police officer during investigation. The court has to be cautious that no effort is made by the prosecution to make out a statement of the accused with a simple case of recovery as a case of discovery of fact in order to attract the provisions of Section 27 of the Evidence Act.

436. Even though, the arrest and recovery Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act is often sought to be misused, the courts cannot be expected to completely ignore how crucial are the recoveries made Under Section 27 in an investigation. The legislature while incorporating Section 27, as an exception to Sections 24, 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act, was convinced of the quintessential purpose Section 27 would serve in an investigation process. The recovery made Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act not only acts as the foundation stone for proceeding with an investigation, but also completes the chain of circumstances. Once the recovery is proved by the prosecution, burden of proof on the defence to rebut the same is very strict, which cannot be discharged merely by pointing at procedural irregularities in making the recoveries, especially when the recovery is corroborated by direct as well as circumstantial evidence, especially when the investigating officer assures that failure in examining independent witness while making the recoveries was not a deliberate or mala fide, rather it was on account of exceptional circumstances attending the investigation process.

437. While the prosecution has been able to prove the recoveries made at the behest of the accused, the defence counsel repeatedly argued in favour of discarding the recoveries made, on the ground that no independent witnesses were examined while effecting such recoveries and preparing seizure memos.

438. The above contention of the defence counsel urges one to look into the specifics of Section 27 of the Evidence Act. As a matter of fact, need of examining independent witnesses, while making recoveries pursuant to the disclosure statement of the accused is a rule of caution evolved by the Judiciary, which aims at protecting the right of the accused by ensuring transparency and credibility in the investigation of a criminal case. In the present case, P.W. 80 SI Pratibha Sharma has deposed in her cross- examination that no independent person had agreed to become a witness and in the light of such a statement, there is no reason for the courts to doubt the version of the police and the recoveries made.

439. When recovery is made pursuant to the statement of accused, seizure memo prepared by the Investigating Officer need not mandatorily be attested by independent witnesses. In State Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Sunil and Anr. MANU/SC/0735/2000 : (2001) 1 SCC 652, it was held that non-attestation of seizure memo by independent witnesses cannot be a ground to disbelieve recovery of articles' list consequent upon the statement of the accused. It was further held that there was no requirement, either Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act or Under Section 161 Code of Criminal Procedure to obtain signature of independent witnesses. If the version of the police is not shown to be unreliable, there is no reason to doubt the version of the police regarding arrest and contents of the seizure memos.

440. In the landmark case of Pulukuri Kottaya v. King- Emperor MANU/PR/0049/1946 : AIR 1947 PC 67, the Privy Council has laid down the relevance of information received from the accused for the purpose of Section 27 of the Evidence Act. Relevant extracts from the judgment are as under:

10. Section 27, which is not artistically worded, provides an exception to the prohibition imposed by the preceding section, and enables certain statements made by a person in police custody to be proved. The condition necessary to bring the section into operation is that the discovery of a fact in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence in the custody of a Police officer must be deposed to, and thereupon so much of the information as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered may be proved. The section seems to be based on the view that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information was true, and accordingly can be safely allowed to be given in evidence; but clearly the extent of the information admissible must depend on the exact nature of the fact discovered to which such information is required to relate.

The test laid down in Pulukuri Kottaya's case was reiterated in several subsequent judgments of this Court including State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu alias Afsan Guru MANU/SC/0465/2005 : (2005) 11 SCC 600.

441. In the light of above discussion, it is held that recoveries made pursuant to disclosure statement of the accused are duly proved by the prosecution and there is no substantial reason to discard the same. Recovery of articles of P.W. 1 and also that of victim at the instance of the accused is a strong incriminating evidence against accused, especially when no plausible explanation is forthcoming from the accused. Further, as discussed infra, the scientific examination of the articles recovered completely place them in line with the chain of events described by the prosecution.

442. DNA Analysis: In order to establish a clear link between the accused persons and the incident at hand, the prosecution has also adduced scientific evidence in the form of DNA analysis. For the purpose of DNA profiling, various samples were taken from the person of the prosecutrix; the complainant; the accused, their clothes/articles; the dumping spot; the iron rods; the ashes of burnt clothes; as well as from the offending bus. P.W. 45 Dr. B.K. Mohapatra analysed the said DNA profiles and submitted his report thereof. In his report, he concluded that the samples were authentic and capable of establishing the identities of the persons concerned beyond reasonable doubt. Prosecution relies upon the biological examination of various articles including the samples collected from the accused and the DNA profiles generated from the blood- stained clothes of the accused. The DNA profile generated from the samples collected, when compared with the DNA profile generated from the blood samples of the victim and P.W. 1 Awninder Pratab Singh, were found consistent.

443. For easy reference and for completion of narration of events, I choose to refer to the articles recovered from the accused pursuant to their disclosure statements and other articles like blood-stained clothes; samples of personal fluids like blood, saliva with control swab; other samples like nail clippings, penil swab, stray hair etc. Details of the DNA analysis is contained in the reports of biological examination and DNA profiling (Ex. P.W. 45/A to Ex. P.W. 45/C), furnished by P.W. 45 Dr. B.K. Mohapatra.

444. Before considering the above findings of DNA analysis contained in tabular form, let me first refer to what is DNA, the infallibility of identification by DNA profiling and its accuracy with certainty. DNA - De- oxy- ribonucleic acid, which is found in the chromosomes of the cells of living beings, is the blueprint of an individual. DNA is the genetic blue print for life and is virtually contained in every cell. No two persons, except identical twins have ever had identical DNA. DNA profiling is an extremely accurate way to compare a suspect's DNA with crime scene specimens, victim's DNA on the blood- stained clothes of the accused or other articles recovered, DNA testing can make a virtually positive identification when the two samples match. A DNA finger print is identical for every part of the body, whether it is the blood, saliva, brain, kidney or foot on any part of the body. It cannot be changed; it will be identical no matter what is done to a body. Even relatively minute quantities of blood, saliva or semen at a crime scene or on clothes can yield sufficient material for analysis. The Experts opine that the identification is almost hundred per cent precise. Using this i.e. chemical structure of genetic information by generating DNA profile of the individual, identification of an individual is done like in the traditional method of identifying finger prints of offenders. Finger prints are only on the fingers and at times may be altered. Burning or cutting a finger can change the make of the finger print. But DNA cannot be changed for an individual no matter whatever happens to a body.

445. We may usefully refer to Advanced Law Lexicon, 3rd Edition Reprint 2009 by P. Ramanatha Aiyar which explains DNA as under:

DNA.- De- oxy- ribonucleic acid, the nucleoprotein of chromosomes.

The double- helix structure in cell nuclei that carries the genetic information of most living organisms.

The material in a cell that makes up the genes and controls the cell. (Biological Term)

DNA finger printing. A method of identification especially for evidentiary purposes by analyzing and comparing the DNA from tissue samples. (Merriam Webster)

In the same Law Lexicon, learned author refers to DNA identification as under:

DNA identification. A method of comparing a person's deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) - a patterned chemical structure of genetic information - with the DNA in a biological specimen (such as blood, tissue, or hair) to determine if the person is the source of the specimen. - Also termed DNA finger printing; genetic finger printing (Black, 7th Edition, 1999)

446. DNA evidence is now a predominant forensic technique for identifying criminals when biological tissues are left at the scene of crime or for identifying the source of blood found on any articles or clothes etc. recovered from the accused or from witnesses. DNA testing on samples such as saliva, skin, blood, hair or semen not only helps to convict the accused but also serves to exonerate. The sophisticated technology of DNA finger printing makes it possible to obtain conclusive results. Section 53A Code of Criminal Procedure is added by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 2005. It provides for a detailed medical examination of accused for an offence of rape or attempt to commit rape by the registered medical practitioners employed in a hospital run by the Government or by a local authority or in the absence of such a practitioner within the radius of 16 kms. from the place where the offence has been committed by any other registered medical practitioner.

447. Observing that DNA is scientifically accurate and exact science and that the trial court was not justified in rejecting DNA report, in Santosh Kumar Singh v. State through CBI MANU/SC/0801/2010 : (2010) 9 SCC 747, the Court held as under:

65. We now come to the circumstance with regard to the comparison of the semen stains with the blood taken from the Appellant. The trial court had found against the prosecution on this aspect. In this connection, we must emphasise that the court cannot substitute its own opinion for that of an expert, more particularly in a science such as DNA profiling which is a recent development.

66. Dr. Lalji Singh in his examination- in- chief deposed that he had been involved with the DNA technology ever since the year 1974 and he had returned to India from the UK in 1987 and joined CCMB, Hyderabad and had developed indigenous methods and techniques for DNA finger printing which were now being used in this country. We also see that the expertise and experience of Dr. Lalji Singh in his field has been recognised by this Court in Kamalanantha v. State of T.N. MANU/SC/0259/2005 : (2005) 5 SCC 194. We further notice that CW 1 Dr. G.V. Rao was a scientist of equal repute and he had in fact conducted the tests under the supervision of Dr. Lalji Singh. It was not even disputed before us during the course of arguments that these two scientists were persons of eminence and that the laboratory in question was also held in the highest esteem in India.

67. The statements of Dr. Lalji Singh and Dr. G.V. Rao reveal that the samples had been tested as per the procedure developed by the laboratory, that the samples were sufficient for the purposes of comparison and that there was no possibility of the samples having been contaminated or tampered with. The two scientists gave very comprehensive statements supported by documents that DNA of the semen stains on the swabs and slides and the underwear of the deceased and the blood samples of the Appellant was from a single source and that source was the Appellant.

68. It is significant that not a single question was put to PW Dr. Lalji Singh as to the accuracy of the methodology or the procedure followed for the DNA profiling. The trial court has referred to a large number of textbooks and has given adverse findings on the accuracy of the tests carried out in the present case. We are unable to accept these conclusions as the court has substituted its own opinion ignoring the complexity of the issue on a highly technical subject, more particularly as the questions raised by the court had not been put to the expert witnesses. In Bhagwan Das v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/0037/1957 : AIR 1957 SC 589 it has been held that it would be a dangerous doctrine to lay down that the report of an expert witness could be brushed aside by making reference to some text on that subject without such text being put to the expert.

71. We feel that the trial court was not justified in rejecting the DNA report, as nothing adverse could be pointed out against the two experts who had submitted it. We must, therefore, accept the DNA report as being scientifically accurate and an exact science as held by this Court in Kamti Devi v. Poshi Ram MANU/SC/0335/2001 : (2001) 5 SCC 311. In arriving at its conclusions the trial court was also influenced by the fact that the semen swabs and slides and the blood samples of the Appellant had not been kept in proper custody and had been tampered with, as already indicated above. We are of the opinion that the trial court was in error on this score. We, accordingly, endorse the conclusions of the High Court on Circumstance 9.

448. From the evidence of P.W. 45 and the details given in the above tabular form, it is seen that the DNA profile generated from blood- stained clothes of the accused namely, A- 1 Ram Singh (dead); A- 2 Mukesh; A- 3 Akshay; A- 4 Vinay; and A- 5 Pawan Gupta @ Kalu are found consistent with the DNA profile of the prosecutrix. Also as noted above, two sets of DNA profile were generated from the black colour sweater of the accused Pawan. One set of DNA profile found to be female in origin, consistent with the DNA profile of the prosecutrix; other set found to be male in origin, consistent with the DNA profile of P.W. 1. Likewise, two sets of DNA profile were generated from the black colour sports jacket of accused Vinay, one of which matched the DNA profile of the prosecutrix and another one matched the DNA profile of P.W. 1. Likewise, two sets of DNA profile were generated from the jeans pant of accused Akshay, one of which matched the DNA profile of the prosecutrix and another one matched the DNA profile of P.W. 1. The result of DNA analysis and that of the DNA profile generated from blood- stained clothes of the accused found consistent with that of the victim is a strong piece of evidence incriminating the accused in the offence.

449. DNA profile generated from the blood samples of accused Ram Singh matched with the DNA profile generated from the rectal swab of the victim. Blood as well as human spermatozoa was detected in the underwear of the accused Ram Singh (dead) and DNA profile generated therefrom was found to be female in origin, consistent with that of the victim. Likewise, the DNA profile generated from the breast swab of the victim was found consistent with the DNA profile of the accused Akshay.

450. As discussed earlier, identification by DNA genetic finger print is almost hundred per cent precise and accurate. The DNA profile generated from the blood- stained clothes of the accused and other articles are found consistent with the DNA profile of the victim and DNA profile of P.W. 1; this is a strong piece of evidence against the accused. In his evidence, P.W. 45 Dr. B.K. Mohapatra has stated that once DNA profile is generated and found consistent with another DNA profile, the accuracy is hundred per cent and we find no reason to doubt his evidence. As pointed out by the Courts below, the counsel for the defence did not raise any substantive ground to rebut the findings of DNA analysis and the findings through the examination of P.W. 45. The DNA report and the findings thereon, being scientifically accurate clearly establish the link involving the accused persons in the incident.

451. Conspiracy: The accused have been charged with the offence of "conspiracy" to commit the offence of abduction, robbery/dacoity, gang rape and unnatural sex, in pursuance of which the accused are alleged to have picked up the prosecutrix and P.W. 1. The charge sheet also states that in furtherance of conspiracy, the accused while committing the offence of gang rape on the prosecutrix intentionally inflicted bodily injury with iron rod and inserted the iron rod in the vital parts of her body with the common intention to cause her death.

452. The learned amicus Mr. Sanjay Hegde submitted that there is no specific evidence to prove that there was prior meeting of minds of the accused and that they had conspired together to commit grave offence by use of iron rod, resulting in the death of the victim and, therefore, insertion/use of iron rod by any one of the accused cannot be attributed to all the accused in order to hold them guilty of the offence of murder.

453. The essentials of the offence of conspiracy and the manner in which it can be proved has been laid down by this Court through a catena of judicial pronouncements and I choose to briefly recapitulate the law on the point, so as to determine whether the offence is made out in this case or not. Meeting of minds for committing an illegal act is sine qua non of the offence of conspiracy. It is also obvious that meeting of minds, thereby resulting in formation of a consensus between the parties, can be a sudden act, spanning in a fraction of a minute. It is neither necessary that each of the conspirators take active part in the commission of each and every conspiratorial act, nor it is necessary that all the conspirators must know each and every details of the conspiracy. Essence of the offence of conspiracy is in agreement to break the law as aptly observed by this Court in Major E.G. Barsay v. State of Bombay MANU/SC/0123/1961 : (1962) 2 SCR 195.

454. So far as the English law on conspiracy is concerned, which is the source of Indian law, KENNY has succinctly stated that in modern times conspiracy is defined as an agreement of two or more persons to effect any unlawful purpose, whether as their ultimate aim or only as a means to it. Stressing on the need of formation of an agreement, he has cautioned that conspiracy should not be misunderstood as a purely mental crime, comprising the concurrence of the intentions of the parties. The meaning of an 'agreement', he has explained by quoting following words of Lord Chelmsford:

Agreement is an act in advancement of the intention which each person has conceived in his mind.

KENNY has further said that it is not mere intention, but the announcement and acceptance of intentions. However, it is not necessary that an overt act is done; the offence is complete as soon as the parties have agreed as to their unlawful purpose, although nothing has yet been settled as to the means and devices to be employed for effecting it. [Refer KENNY on Outlines of Criminal Law, 19th Edn., pp. 426- 427]

455. The most important aspect of the offence of conspiracy is that apart from being a distinct statutory offence, all the parties to the conspiracy are liable for the acts of each other and as an exception to the general law in the case of conspiracy intent i.e. mens rea alone constitutes a crime. As per Section 10 of the Evidence Act, once reasonable ground is shown for believing that two or more persons have conspired to commit an offence then, anything done by any one of them in reference to their common intention, is admissible against the others. As held in State of Maharashtra v. Damu and Ors. MANU/SC/0299/2000 : (2000) 6 SCC 269, the only condition for the application of the rule in Section 10 of the Evidence Act is that there must be reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence.

456. The principles relating to the offence of criminal conspiracy and the standard of proof for establishing offence of conspiracy and the joint liability of the conspirators have been elaborately laid down in Shivnarayan Laxminarayan Joshi and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0241/1979 : (1980) 2 SCC 465; Mohammad Usman Mohammad Hussain Maniyar and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0180/1981 : (1981) 2 SCC 443; Kehar Singh and Ors. v. State (Delhi Administration) MANU/SC/0241/1988 : (1988) 3 SCC 609; State of Maharashtra and Ors. v. Som Nath Thapa and Ors. MANU/SC/0451/1996 : (1996) 4 SCC 659; State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu @ Afsan Guru MANU/SC/0465/2005 : (2005) 11 SCC 600; State Through Superintendent of Police, CBI/SIT v. Nalini and Ors. MANU/SC/0945/1999 : (1999) 5 SCC 253; Yakub Abdul Razak Menon v. The State of Maharashtra, through CBI, Bombay MANU/SC/0268/2013 : (2013) 13 SCC 1.

457. Another significant aspect of the offence of criminal conspiracy is that it is very rare to find direct proof of it, because of the very fact that it is hatched in secrecy. Unlike other offences, criminal conspiracy in most of the cases is proved by circumstantial evidence only. It is extremely rare that direct evidence in proof of conspiracy can be forthcoming from wholly disinterested, quarters or from utter strangers. Conspiracy is a matter of inference, deduced from words uttered, criminal acts of the accused done in furtherance of conspiracy. (Vide Noor Mohammad Mohd. Yusuf Momin v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0157/1970 : (1970) 1 SCC 696; Firozuddin Basheeruddin and Ors. v. State of Kerala MANU/SC/0471/2001 : (2001) 7 SCC 596; Ram Narain Poply v. Central Bureau of Investigation and Ors. MANU/SC/0017/2003 : (2003) 3 SCC 641; Yogesh @ Sachin Jagdish Joshi v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/7528/2008 : (2008) 10 SCC 394; Pratapbhai Hamirbhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat and Anr. MANU/SC/0854/2012 : (2013) 1 SCC 613; Chandra Prakash v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/0457/2014 : (2014) 8 SCC 340 etc.)

458. In Yogesh @ Sachin Jagdish Joshi v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/7528/2008 : (2008) 10 SCC 394, this Court, after referring to the law laid down in several pronouncements, summarised the core principles of law of conspiracy in the following words:

23. Thus, it is manifest that the meeting of minds of two or more persons for doing an illegal act or an act by illegal means is sine qua non of the criminal conspiracy but it may not be possible to prove the agreement between them by direct proof. Nevertheless, existence of the conspiracy and its objective can be inferred from the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the accused. But the incriminating circumstances must form a chain of events from which a conclusion about the guilt of the accused could be drawn. It is well settled that an offence of conspiracy is a substantive offence and renders the mere agreement to commit an offence punishable even if an offence does not take place pursuant to the illegal agreement.

459. In the present case, there is ample evidence proving the acts, statements and circumstances, establishing firm ground to hold that the accused who were present in the bus were in prior concert to commit the offence of rape. The prosecution has established that the accused were associated with each other. The criminal acts done in furtherance of conspiracy, is established by the sequence of events and the conduct of the accused. Existence of conspiracy and its objects could be inferred from the chain of events. The chain of events described by the victim in her dying declarations coupled with the testimony of P.W. 1 clearly establish that as soon as the complainant and the victim boarded the bus, the accused switched off the lights of the bus. Few accused pinned down P.W. 1 and others committed rape on the victim in the back side of the bus one after the other. The accused inserted iron rods in the private parts of the prosecutrix, dragging her holding her hair and then threw her outside the bus. The victim has also maintained in her dying declaration that the accused persons were exhorting that the victim has died and she be thrown out of the bus. Ultimately, both the victim and the complainant were thrown out of the moving bus through the front door, having failed to throw them through the rear door. The chain of action and the act of finally throwing the victim and P.W. 1 out of the bus show that there was unity of object among the accused to commit rape and destroy the evidence thereon.

460. In this case, the existence of conspiracy is sought to be drawn by an inference from the circumstances: (i) the accused did not allow any other passenger to board the bus after P.W. 1 and the prosecutrix boarded the bus; (ii) switching off the lights; pinning P.W. 1 down by some while others commit rape/unnatural sex with the prosecutrix at the rear side of the bus; (iii) exhortation by some of the accused that the victim be not left alive; and (iv) their act of throwing the victim and P.W. 1 out of the running bus without clothes in the wintery night of December. Existence of conspiracy and its objects is inferred from the above circumstances and the words uttered. In my view, the courts below have rightly drawn an inference that there was prior meeting of minds among the accused and they have rightly held that the prosecution has proved the existence of conspiracy to commit gang rape and other offences.

461. As already stated in the beginning, in achieving the goal of the conspiracy, several offences committed by some of the conspirators may not be known to others, still all the accused will be held guilty of the offence of criminal conspiracy. The trial court has recorded that the victim's complete alimentary canal from the level of duodenum upto 5 cm from anal sphincter was completely damaged. It was beyond repair. Causing of damage to jejunum is indicative of the fact that the rods were inserted through vagina and/or anus upto the level of jejunum." Further "the septicemia was the direct result of internal multiple injuries". Use of iron rod by one or more of the accused is sufficient to inculpate all the accused for the same. In the present case, gang rape and use of iron rod caused grave injuries to victim's vagina and intestines; throwing her out of the bus in that vegetative state in chilled weather led to her death; all this taking place in the course of same transaction and with the active involvement of all the accused is more than sufficient evidence to find the accused guilty of criminal conspiracy. I, thus, affirm the findings of the courts below with regard to conviction of all the accused Under Section 120- B Indian Penal Code and Section 302 read with Section 120- B Indian Penal Code.

462. Apart from considering the principles of law of conspiracy distinctly, if we consider it in the context of 'conspiracy to commit the offence of gang rape, unnatural sex etc., as is specifically relevant in the present case, we find that existence of common intent and joint liability is already implicit in the offence of gang rape. Gang rape is dealt with in Clause (g) of Sub- section (2) of Section 376 Indian Penal Code read with Explanation 1. As per Explanation 1 to Section 376 Indian Penal Code, "where a woman is raped by one or more in a group of persons acting in furtherance of their common intention, each of the persons shall be deemed to have committed gang rape" and all of them shall be liable to be punished under Sub- section (2) of Section 376 Indian Penal Code. As per Explanation 1, by operation of deeming provision, a person who has not actually committed rape is deemed to have committed rape even if only one of the groups has committed rape in furtherance of the common intention.

463. While considering the scope of Section 376(2)(g) Indian Penal Code read with Explanation, in Ashok Kumar v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/1176/2002 : (2003) 2 SCC 143, this Court held as under:

8. Charge against the Appellant is Under Section 376(2)(g) Indian Penal Code. In order to establish an offence Under Section 376(2)(g) Indian Penal Code, read with Explanation I thereto, the prosecution must adduce evidence to indicate that more than one accused had acted in concert and in such an event, if rape had been committed by even one, all the accused will be guilty irrespective of the fact that she had been raped by one or more of them and it is not necessary for the prosecution to adduce evidence of a completed act of rape by each one of the accused. In other words, this provision embodies a principle of joint liability and the essence of that liability is the existence of common intention; that common intention presupposes prior concert which may be determined from the conduct of offenders revealed during the course of action and it could arise and be formed suddenly, but, there must be meeting of minds. It is not enough to have the same intention independently of each of the offenders. In such cases, there must be criminal sharing marking out a certain measure of jointness in the commission of offence.

So far as the offence Under Section 376 (2)(g) Indian Penal Code, the sharing of common intention and the jointness in commission of rape is concerned, the same is established by the presence of all the accused in the bus; their action in concert as established by the dying declaration of the prosecutrix and the evidence of P.W. 1, presence of blood in the clothes of all the accused, DNA profile generated thereon being consistent with the DNA profile of the victim.

464. The prosecution has established the presence of the accused in the bus and the heinous act of gang rape committed on the prosecutrix by the accused by the ample evidence - by the multiple dying declaration of the victim and also by the evidence of P.W. 1 and medical evidence and also by arrest and recovery of incriminating articles of the victim and that of P.W. 1 complainant. The scientific evidence in particular DNA analysis report clearly brings home the guilt of the accused.

465. Section 235(2), Code of Criminal Procedure: Once the conviction of the accused persons is affirmed, what remains to be decided is the question of appropriate punishment imposed on them. On the aspect of sentencing, we were very effectively assisted by the learned Amicus Curiae. Accused were convicted vide judgment and order dated 10.09.2013 and on the very next day of judgment i.e. on 11.09.2013, the arguments on sentencing were concluded. Thereafter, a separate order on sentence was pronounced on 13.09.2013.

466. Counsel for the Appellants as well as the learned amicus Mr. Raju Ramachandran contended that no effective opportunity was given to the Appellants to lead their defence on the point of sentencing as mandated Under Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure and each of the accused were not individually heard in person on the question of sentence. Learned Amicus Curiae, Mr. Raju Ramachandran submitted only the counsel for the accused were heard and all the accused were treated alike irrespective of their individual background and were sentenced to death, which is in clear violation of the mandate of Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure. It was submitted that Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure is intended to give an opportunity to the accused to place before the Court all the relevant facts and material having a bearing on the question of sentence and, therefore, salutary provision should not have been treated as a mere formality by the trial court. In support of his contention, the learned Amicus has placed reliance upon a number of judgments viz. - (i) Dagdu and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra

MANU/SC/0086/1977 : (1977) 3 SCC 68; (ii) Malkiat Singh and Ors. v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0622/1991 : (1991) 4 SCC 341; and (iii) Ajay Pandit alias Jagdish Dayabhai Patel and Anr. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0562/2012 : (2012) 8 SCC 43.

467. Section 235 Code of Criminal Procedure deals with the judgments of acquittal or conviction. Under Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure, where the accused is convicted, save in cases of admonition or release on good conduct, the Judge shall hear the accused on the question of sentence and then pass sentence in accordance with law. Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure imposes duty on the court to hear the accused on the question of sentence and then pass sentence on him in accordance with law. The only exception to the said rule is created in case of applicability of Section 360 Code of Criminal Procedure i.e. when the court finds the accused eligible to be released on probation of good conduct or after admonition.

468. Section 354 Code of Criminal Procedure specifies the language and contents of judgment, while delivering the judgment in a criminal case. Section 354(3) Code of Criminal Procedure deals with judgments where conviction is for an offence punishable with death penalty or in the alternative with imprisonment for life. Section 354(3) Code of Criminal Procedure mandates that when the conviction is for an offence punishable with death or, in the alternative, with imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of years, the judgment shall state the reasons for the sentence awarded, and in the case of sentence of death, the special reasons for such sentence.

469. The statutory duty to state special reasons Under Section 354(3) Code of Criminal Procedure can be meaningfully carried out only if the hearing on sentence Under Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure is effective and procedurally fair. To afford an effective opportunity to the accused, the Court must hear on the question of sentence to know about (i) age of the accused; (ii) background of the accused; (iii) prior criminal antecedents, if any; (iv) possibility of reformation, if any; and (v) such other relevant factors. The major deficiency in the complex criminal justice system is that important factors which have a bearing on sentence are not placed before the Court. Resultantly, the Courts are constantly faced with the dilemma to impose an appropriate sentence. In this context, hearing of the accused Under Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure on the question of sentencing is a crucial exercise which is intended to enable the accused to place before the Court all the mitigating circumstances in his favour viz. his social and economic backwardness, young age etc. The mandate of Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure becomes more crucial when the accused is found guilty of an offence punishable with death penalty or with the life imprisonment.

470. It is well- settled that Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure is intended to give an opportunity of hearing to the prosecution as well as the accused on the question of sentence. The Court while awarding the sentence has to take into consideration various factors having a bearing on the question of sentence. In case, Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure is not complied with, as held in Dagdu's case, the appellate Court can either send back the case to the Sessions Court for complying with Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure so as to enable the accused to adduce materials; or, in order to avoid delay, the appellate Court may by itself give an opportunity to the parties in terms of Section 235(2) Code of Criminal Procedure to produce the materials they wish to adduce instead of sending the matter back to the trial Court for hearing on sentence. In the present case, we felt it appropriate to adopt the latter course and accordingly asked the counsel appearing for the Appellants to file affidavits/materials on the question of sentence. Consequently, vide order dated 03.02.2017, we directed the learned Counsel for the accused to place in writing, before this Court, their submissions, whatever they desired to place on the question of sentence. In compliance with the order, Mr. M.L. Sharma, learned Counsel on behalf of the accused A- 2 Mukesh and A- 5 Pawan and Mr. A.P. Singh, learned Counsel on behalf of the accused Akshay Kumar Singh, Vinay Sharma and Pawan Gupta filed the individual affidavits of the accused.

471. Accused Mukesh (A- 2) in his affidavit has stated that he was picked up from his house at Karoli, Rajasthan and brought to Delhi and reiterated that he is innocent and he denied his involvement in the occurrence. In their affidavits, accused Akshay Kumar Singh (A- 3), accused Vinay Sharma (A- 4) and accused Pawan Gupta (A- 5) submitted in their individual affidavits have stated that they hail from an ordinary/poor background and are not much educated. They have also stated that they have aged parents and other family members who are dependent on them and they are to be supported by them. Accused have also stated that they have no criminal antecedents and that after their confinement in Tihar Jail they have maintained good behavior.

472. Learned Counsel Mr. M.L. Sharma submitted that accused Mukesh (A- 2) is innocent and he has been falsely implicated only because he is the brother of accused Ram Singh.

473. Taking us through the affidavits filed by the accused, learned Counsel Mr. A.P. Singh submitted that the accused namely Akshay Kumar Singh, Pawan Gupta and Vinay Sharma hail from very poor background; and have got large families to support; and have no criminal antecedents. It has been contended that having regard to the fact that the three accused have no prior criminal antecedents and are not hardened criminals, the case will not fall under "rarest of rare cases" to affirm the death sentence.

474. Supplementing the affidavits filed by the accused, the learned amicus and senior Counsel Mr. Raju Ramachandran and Mr. Sanjay Hegde submitted that assuming that the conviction of the Appellants are confirmed, the accused who hail from very ordinary poor background and having no criminal antecedents, the death sentence be commuted to life imprisonment.

475. Question of awarding sentence is a matter of discretion and has to be exercised on consideration of circumstances aggravating or mitigating in the individual cases. The courts are consistently faced with the situation where they are required to answer the new challenges and mould the sentence to meet those challenges. Protection of society and deterring the criminal is the avowed object of law. It is expected of the courts to operate the sentencing system as to impose such sentence which reflects the social conscience of the society. While determining sentence in heinous crimes, Judges ought to weigh its impact on the society and impose adequate sentence considering the collective conscience or society's cry for justice. While considering the imposition of appropriate punishment, courts should not only keep in view the rights of the criminal but also the rights of the victim and the society at large.

476. In State of M.P. v. Munna Choubey and Anr. MANU/SC/0055/2005 : (2005) 2 SCC 710, it was observed as under:

10. Therefore, undue sympathy to impose inadequate sentence would do more harm to the justice system to undermine the public confidence in the efficacy of law and society could not long endure under such serious threats. It is, therefore, the duty of every court to award proper sentence having regard to the nature of the offence and the manner in which it was executed or committed etc. This position was illuminatingly stated by this Court in Sevaka Perumal v. State of Tamil Naidu MANU/SC/0338/1991 : (1991) 3 SCC 471.

477. In Jashubha Bharatsinh Gohil and Ors. v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/1561/1994 : (1994) 4 SCC 353, while upholding the award of death sentence, this Court held that sentencing process has to be stern where the circumstances demand so. Relevant extract is as under:

12.....The courts are constantly faced with the situation where they are required to answer to new challenges and mould the sentencing system to meet those challenges. Protection of society and deterring the criminal is the avowed object of law and that is required to be achieved by imposing appropriate sentence. The change in the legislative intendment relating to award of capital punishment notwithstanding, the opposition by the protagonist of abolition of capital sentence, shows that it is expected of the courts to so operate the sentencing system as to impose such sentence which reflects the social conscience of the society. The sentencing process has to be stern where it should be.

478. Whether the Case falls under rarest of rare cases: Law relating to award of death sentence in India has evolved through massive policy reforms- nationally as well as internationally and through a catena of judicial pronouncements, showcasing distinct phases of our view towards imposition of death penalty. Undoubtedly, continuing prominence of reformative approach in sentencing and India's international obligations have been majorly instrumental in facilitating a visible shift in court's view towards restricting imposition of death sentence. While closing the shutter of deterrent approach of sentencing in India, the small window of 'award of death sentence' was left open in the category of 'rarest of rare case' in Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0055/1982 : (1980) 2 SCC 684, by a Constitution Bench of this Court.

479. In Bachan Singh (supra), while upholding the constitutional validity of capital sentence, this Court revisited the law relating to death sentence at that point of time, by thoroughly discussing the law laid down in Jagmohan Singh v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0139/1972 : (1973) 1 SCC 20;

Rajendra Prasad v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0212/1979 : (1979) 3 SCR 646 and other cases. The principles laid down in Bachan Singh's case is that, normal rule is awarding of 'life sentence', imposition of death sentence being justified, only in rarest of rare case, when the option of awarding sentence of life imprisonment is unquestionably foreclosed'. By virtue of Bachan Singh (supra), 'life imprisonment' became the rule and 'death sentence' an exception. The focus was shifted from 'crime' to the 'crime and criminal' i.e. now the nature and gravity of the crime needs to be analysed juxtaposed to the peculiar circumstances attending the societal existence of the criminal. The principles laid down in Bachan Singh's case were considered in Machhi Singh and Ors. v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0211/1983 : (1983) 3 SCC 470 and was summarised as under:

38. In this background the guidelines indicated in Bachan Singh's case (supra) will have to be culled out and applied to the facts of each individual case where the question of imposing of death sentence arises. The following propositions emerge from Bachan Singh's case (supra):

(i) The extreme penalty of death need not be inflicted except in gravest cases of extreme culpability.

(ii) Before opting for the death penalty the circumstances of the 'offender' also require to be taken into consideration along with the circumstances of the 'crime'.

(iii) Life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence is an exception. In other words death sentence must be imposed only when life imprisonment appears to be an altogether inadequate punishment having regard to the relevant circumstances of the crime, and provided, and only provided, the option to impose sentence of imprisonment for life cannot be conscientiously exercised having regard to the nature and circumstances of the crime and all the relevant circumstances.

(iv) A balance sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn up and in doing so the mitigating circumstances have to be accorded full weightage and a just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised.

480. In Machhi Singh's case, this Court took the view that in every case where death penalty is a question, a balance sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances must be drawn up before arriving at the decision. The Court held that for practical application of the doctrine of 'rarest of rare case', it must be understood broadly in the background of five categories of cases crafted thereon that is 'Manner of commission of crime', 'Motive', 'Anti- social or socially abhorrent nature of the crime', 'Magnitude of crime', and 'Personality of victim of murder'. These five categories are elaborated in para Nos. 32 to 37 as under:

32. The reasons why the community as a whole does not endorse the humanistic approach reflected in "death sentence- in- no- case" doctrine are not far to seek. In the first place, the very humanistic edifice is constructed on the foundation of "reverence for life" principle. When a member of the community violates this very principle by killing another member, the society may not feel itself bound by the shackles of this doctrine. Secondly, it has to be realized that every member of the community is able to live with safety without his or her own life being endangered because of the protective arm of the community and on account of the rule of law enforced by it. The very existence of the rule of law and the fear of being brought to book operates as a deterrent for those who have no scruples in killing others if it suits their ends. Every member of the community owes a debt to the community for this protection. When ingratitude is shown instead of gratitude by "killing" a member of the community which protects the murderer himself from being killed, or when the community feels that for the sake of self- preservation the killer has to be killed, the community may well withdraw the protection by sanctioning the death penalty. But the community will not do so in every case. It may do so "in rarest of rare cases" when its collective conscience is so shocked that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retaining death penalty. The community may entertain such a sentiment when the crime is viewed from the platform of the motive for, or the manner of commission of the crime, or the anti- social or abhorrent nature of the crime, such as for instance:

I. Manner of commission of murder

33. When the murder is committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting or dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community. For instance,

(i) when the house of the victim is set aflame with the end in view to roast him alive in the house.

(ii) when the victim is subjected to inhuman acts of torture or cruelty in order to bring about his or her death.

(iii) when the body of the victim is cut into pieces or his body is dismembered in a fiendish manner.

II. Motive for commission of murder

34. When the murder is committed for a motive which evinces total depravity and meanness. For instance when (a) a hired assassin commits murder for the sake of money or reward (b) a cold-blooded murder is committed with a deliberate design in order to inherit property or to gain control over property of a ward or a person under the control of the murderer or vis- a- vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position or in a position of trust, or (c) a murder is committed in the course for betrayal of the motherland.

III. Anti- social or socially abhorrent nature of the crime

35. (a) When murder of a member of a Scheduled Caste or minority community etc., is committed not for personal reasons but in circumstances which arouse social wrath. For instance when such a crime is committed in order to terrorize such persons and frighten them into fleeing from a place or in order to deprive them of, or make them surrender, lands or benefits conferred on them with a view to reverse past injustices and in order to restore the social balance.

(b) In cases of "bride burning" and what are known as "dowry deaths" or when murder is committed in order to remarry for the sake of extracting dowry once again or to marry another woman on account of infatuation.

IV. Magnitude of crime

36. When the crime is enormous in proportion. For instance when multiple murders say of all or almost all the members of a family or a large number of persons of a particular caste, community, or locality, are committed.

V. Personality of victim of murder

37. When the victim of murder is (a) an innocent child who could not have or has not provided even an excuse, much less a provocation, for murder (b) a helpless woman or a person rendered helpless by old age or infirmity (c) when the victim is a person vis- a- vis whom the murderer is in a position of domination or trust (d) when the victim is a public figure generally loved and respected by the community for the services rendered by him and the murder is committed for political or similar reasons other than personal reasons.

481. The principle laid down in Bachan Singh (supra) and Machhi Singh (supra) came to be discussed and applied in all the cases relating to imposition of death penalty for committing heinous offences. However, lately, it was felt that the courts have not correctly applied the law laid down in Bachan Singh (supra) and Machhi Singh (supra), which has led to inconsistency in sentencing process in India; also it was observed that the list of categories of murder crafted in Machhi Singh (supra), in which death sentence ought to be awarded are not exhaustive and needs to be given even more expansive adherence owing to changed legal scenario. In Swamy

Shradhananda alias Murali Manohar Mishra (2) v. State of Karnataka MANU/SC/3096/2008 : (2008) 13 SCC 767; a three- Judge Bench of this Court, observed as under in this regard:

43. In Machhi Singh the Court crafted the categories of murder in which 'the Community' should demand death sentence for the offender with great care and thoughtfulness. But the judgment in Machhi Singh was rendered on 20 July, 1983, nearly twenty five years ago, that is to say a full generation earlier. A careful reading of the Machhi Singh categories will make it clear that the classification was made looking at murder mainly as an act of maladjusted individual criminal(s). In 1983 the country was relatively free from organised and professional crime. Abduction for Ransom and Gang Rape and murders committed in course of those offences were yet to become a menace for the society compelling the Legislature to create special slots for those offences in the Penal Code. At the time of Machhi Singh, Delhi had not witnessed the infamous Sikh carnage. There was no attack on the country's Parliament. There were no bombs planted by terrorists killing completely innocent people, men, women and children in dozens with sickening frequency. There were no private armies. There were no mafia cornering huge government contracts purely by muscle power. There were no reports of killings of social activists and 'whistle blowers'. There were no reports of custodial deaths and rape and fake encounters by police or even by armed forces. These developments would unquestionably find a more pronounced reflection in any classification if one were to be made today. Relying upon the observations in Bachan Singh, therefore, we respectfully wish to say that even though the categories framed in Machhi Singh provide very useful guidelines, nonetheless those cannot be taken as inflexible, absolute or immutable. Further, even in those categories, there would be scope for flexibility as observed in Bachan Singh itself.

482. A milestone in the sentencing policy is the concept of 'life imprisonment till the remainder of life' evolved in Swamy Shradhananda (2)(supra). In this case, a man committed murder of his wife for usurping her property in a cold- blooded, calculated and diabolic manner. The trial court convicted the accused and death penalty was imposed on him which was affirmed by the High Court. Though the conviction was affirmed by this Court also on the point of sentencing, the views of a two- Judge Bench of this Court, in Swamy Shradhananda v. State of Karnataka (2007) 12 SCC 282 differed, and consequently, the matter was listed before a three- Judge Bench, wherein a mid way was carved. The three- Judge Bench, was of the view that even though the murder was diabolic, presence of certain circumstances in favour of the accused, viz. no mental or physical pain being inflicted on the victim, confession of the accused before the High Court etc., made them reluctant to award death sentence. However, the Court also realised that award of life imprisonment, which euphemistically means imprisonment for a term of 14 years (consequent to exercise of power of commutation by the executive), would be equally disproportionate punishment to the crime committed. Hence, in Swamy Shradhananda (2) (supra) the Court directed that the accused shall not be released from the prison till the rest of his life. Relevant extract from the judgment reads as under:

92. The matter may be looked at from a slightly different angle. The issue of sentencing has two aspects. A sentence may be excessive and unduly harsh or it may be highly disproportionately inadequate. When an Appellant comes to this Court carrying a death sentence awarded by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court, this Court may find, as in the present appeal, that the case just falls short of the rarest of the rare category and may feel somewhat reluctant in endorsing the death sentence. But at the same time, having regard to the nature of the crime, the Court may strongly feel that a sentence of life imprisonment that subject to remission normally works out to a term of 14 years would be grossly disproportionate and inadequate. What then the Court should do? If the Court's option is limited only to two punishments, one a sentence of imprisonment, for all intents and purposes, of not more than 14 years and the other death, the court may feel tempted and find itself nudged into endorsing the death penalty. Such a course would indeed be disastrous. A far more just, reasonable and proper course would be to expand the options and to take over what, as a matter of fact, lawfully belongs to the court, i.e., the vast hiatus between 14 years' imprisonment and death. It needs to be emphasized that the Court would take recourse to the expanded option primarily because in the facts of the case, the sentence of 14 years imprisonment would amount to no punishment at all.

483. After referring to a catena of judicial pronouncements post Bachan Singh (supra) and Machhi Singh (supra), in the case of Ramnaresh and Ors. v. State of Chhattisgarh MANU/SC/0163/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 257, this Court, tried to lay down a nearly exhaustive list of aggravating and mitigating circumstances. It would be apposite to refer to the same here:

Aggravating circumstances

(1) The offences relating to the commission of heinous crimes like murder, rape, armed dacoity, kidnapping, etc. by the accused with a prior record of conviction for capital felony or offences committed by the person having a substantial history of serious assaults and criminal convictions.

(2) The offence was committed while the offender was engaged in the commission of another serious offence.

(3) The offence was committed with the intention to create a fear psychosis in the public at large and was committed in a public place by a weapon or device which clearly could be hazardous to the life of more than one person.

(4) The offence of murder was committed for ransom or like offences to receive money or monetary benefits.

(5) Hired killings.

(6) The offence was committed outrageously for want only while involving inhumane treatment and torture to the victim.

(7) The offence was committed by a person while in lawful custody.

(8) The murder or the offence was committed to prevent a person lawfully carrying out his duty like arrest or custody in a place of lawful confinement of himself or another. For instance, murder is of a person who had acted in lawful discharge of his duty Under Section 43 Code of Criminal Procedure. When the crime is enormous in proportion like making an attempt of murder of the entire family or members of a particular community. When the victim is innocent, helpless or a person relies upon the trust of relationship and social norms, like a child, helpless woman, a daughter or a niece staying with a father/uncle and is inflicted with the crime by such a trusted person.

(9) When murder is committed for a motive which evidences total depravity and meanness.

(10) When there is a cold- blooded murder without provocation.

(11) The crime is committed so brutally that it pricks or shocks not only the judicial conscience but even the conscience of the society.

Mitigating circumstances

(1) The manner and circumstances in and under which the offence was committed, for example, extreme mental or emotional disturbance or extreme provocation in contradistinction to all these situations in normal course.

(2) The age of the accused is a relevant consideration but not a determinative factor by itself.

(3) The chances of the accused of not indulging in commission of the crime again and the probability of the accused being reformed and rehabilitated.

(4) The condition of the accused shows that he was mentally defective and the defect impaired his capacity to appreciate the circumstances of his criminal conduct.

(5) The circumstances which, in normal course of life, would render such a behavior possible and could have the effect of giving rise to mental imbalance in that given situation like persistent harassment or, in fact, leading to such a peak of human behavior that, in the facts and circumstances of the case, the accused believed that he was morally justified in committing the offence.

(6) Where the court upon proper appreciation of evidence is of the view that the crime was not committed in a preordained manner and that the death resulted in the course of commission of another crime and that there was a possibility of it being construed as consequences to the commission of the primary crime.

(7) Where it is absolutely unsafe to rely upon the testimony of a sole eyewitness though the prosecution has brought home the guilt of the accused.

484. Similarly, this Court in Sangeet and Anr. v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0989/2012 : (2013) 2 SCC 452, extensively analysed the evolution of sentencing policy in India and stressed on the need for further evolution. In para (77), this Court emphasized on making the sentencing process a principled one, rather than Judge- centric one and held that a re- look is needed at some conclusions that have been taken for granted and we need to continue the development of the law on the basis of experience gained over the years and views expressed in various decisions of this Court.

485. As dealing with sentencing, courts have thus applied the "Crime Test", "Criminal Test" and the "Rarest of the Rare Test", the tests examine whether the society abhors such crimes and whether such crimes shock the conscience of the society and attract intense and extreme indignation of the community. Courts have further held that where the victims are helpless women, children or old persons and the accused displayed depraved mentality, committing crime in a diabolic manner, the accused should be shown no remorse and death penalty should be awarded. Reference may be made to Holiram Bordoloi v. State of Assam MANU/SC/0271/2005 : (2005) 3 SCC 793 [Para 15- 17], Ankush Maruti Shinde and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0700/2009 : (2009) 6 SCC 667 (para 31- 34), Kamta Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0722/1996 : (1996) 6 SCC 250 (para 7- 8), State of U.P. v. Satish MANU/SC/0090/2005 : (2005) 3 SCC 114 (para 24- 31), Sundar alias Sundarajan v. State by Inspector of Police and Anr. MANU/SC/0105/2013 : (2013) 3 SCC 215 (para 36- 38, 42- 42.7, 43), Sevaka Perumal and Anr. v. State of Tamil Nadu MANU/SC/0338/1991 : (1991) 3 SCC 471 (para 8- 10, 12), Mohfil Khan and Anr. v. State of Jharkhand MANU/SC/0915/2014 : (2015) 1 SCC 67 (para 63- 65).

486. Even the young age of the accused is not a mitigating circumstance for commutation to life, as has been held in the case of Bhagwan Swarup v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0094/1970 : (1971) 3 SCC 759 (para 5), Deepak Rai v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0965/2013 : (2013) 10 SCC 421 (para 91- 100) and Shabhnam v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0649/2015 : (2015) 6 SCC 632 (para 36).

487. Let me now refer to a few cases of rape and murder where this Court has confirmed the sentence of death. In Molai & Anr. v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0680/1999 : (1999) 9 SCC 581, death sentence awarded to both the accused for committing offences Under Sections 376(2)(g) Indian Penal Code, 302 read with Section 34 Indian Penal Code and 201 Indian Penal Code, was confirmed by this Court. The accused had committed gang rape on the victim, strangulated her thereafter and threw away her body into the septic tank with the cycle, after causing stab injuries. It was held as under:

36.....It cannot be overlooked that Naveen, a 16 year old girl, was preparing for her 10th examination at her house and suddenly both the accused took advantage of she being alone in the house and committed a most shameful act of rape. The accused did not stop there but they strangulated her by using her under- garment and thereafter took her to the septic tank alongwith the cycle and caused injuries with a sharp edged weapon. The accused did not even stop there but they exhibited the criminality in their conduct by throwing the dead body into the septic tank totally disregarding the respect for a human dead body. Learned Counsel for the accused (Appellants) could not point any mitigating circumstances from the record of the case to justify the reduction of sentence of either of the accused. In a case of this nature, in our considered view, the capital punishment to both the accused is the only proper punishment and we see no reason to take a different view than the one taken by the courts below.

488. In Bantu v. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/7863/2008 : (2008) 11 SCC 113, the victim aged about five years was not only raped, but was murdered in a diabolic manner. The Court awarded extreme punishment of death, holding that for deciding just and appropriate sentence to be awarded for an offence, the aggravating and mitigating factors and circumstances in which a crime has been committed must be delicately balanced by the Court in a dispassionate manner.

489. In Ankush Maruti Shinde and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0700/2009 : (2009) 6 SCC 667, concerned accused were found guilty of offences Under Sections 307 Indian Penal Code, 376(2)(g) Indian Penal Code and 397 read with 395 and 396 of Indian Penal Code. This Court declined to interfere with the concurrent findings of the courts below and upheld death penalty awarded to the accused, taking into account the brutality of the incident, tender age of the deceased, and the fact of a minor girl being mercilessly gang raped and then put to death. The court also noted that there was no provocation from the deceased's side and the two surviving eye witnesses had fully corroborated the case of the prosecution.

490. In Mehboob Batcha and Ors. v. State rep. by Supdt. of Police MANU/SC/0260/2011 : (2011) 7 SCC 45, accused were policemen who had wrongfully confined one Nandagopal in police custody in Police Station Annamalai Nagar on suspicion of theft from 30.05.1992 till 02.06.1992 and had beaten him to death there with lathis, and had also gang raped his wife Padmini in a barbaric manner. This Court could not award death penalty due to omission of the courts below in framing charge Under Section 302, Indian Penal Code. However, the observations made by this Court are worth quoting here:

Bane hain ahal- e- hawas muddai bhi munsif bhi Kise vakeel karein kisse munsifi chaahen - - Faiz Ahmed Faiz

1. If ever there was a case which cried out for death penalty it is this one, but it is deeply regrettable that not only was no such penalty imposed but not even a charge Under Section 302 Indian Penal Code was framed against the accused by the Courts below.

9. We have held in Satya Narain Tiwari @ Jolly and Anr. v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0910/2010 : (2010) 13 SCC 689 and in Sukhdev Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/1355/2010 : (2010) 13 SCC 656 that crimes against women are not ordinary crimes committed in a fit of anger or for property. They are social crimes. They disrupt the entire social fabric, and hence they call for harsh punishment.....

491. In Mohd. Mannan @ Abdul Mannan v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0460/2011 : (2011) 5 SCC 317, this Court upheld award of death sentence to a 43 year old accused who brutally raped and murdered a minor girl, while holding a position of trust. Relevant considerations of the Court while affirming the death sentence are extracted as under:

26....The postmortem report shows various injuries on the face, nails and body of the child. These injuries show the gruesome manner in which she was subjected to rape. The victim of crime is an innocent child who did not provide even an excuse, much less a provocation for murder. Such cruelty towards a young child is appalling. The Appellant had stooped so low as to unleash his monstrous self on the innocent, helpless and defenseless child. This act no doubt had invited extreme indignation of the community and shocked the collective conscience of the society. Their expectation from the authority conferred with the power to adjudicate, is to inflict the death sentence which is natural and logical. We are of the opinion that Appellant is a menace to the society and shall continue to be so and he cannot be reformed. We have no manner of doubt that the case in hand falls in the category of the rarest of the rare cases and the trial court had correctly inflicted the death sentence which had rightly been confirmed by the High Court.

In Shivaji @ Dadya Shankar Alhat v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/8019/2008 : (2008) 15 SCC 269; Rajendra Pralhadrao Wasnik v. The State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0160/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 37 award of death penalty in case of rape and murder was upheld, finding the incident brutal and accused a menace for the society.

492. In Dhananjoy Chatterjee alias Dhana v. State of W.B. MANU/SC/0626/1994 : (1994) 2 SCC 220, a security guard who was entrusted with the security of a residential apartment had raped and murdered an eighteen year old inhabitant of one of the flats in the said apartment, between 5.30 p.m. and 5.45 p.m. The entire case of the prosecution was based on circumstantial evidence. However, Court found that it was a fit case for imposing death penalty. Following observation of the Court while imposing death penalty is worth quoting:

14. In recent years, the rising crime rate- particularly violent crime against women has made the criminal sentencing by the courts a subject of concern. Today there are admitted disparities. Some criminals get very harsh sentences while many receive grossly different sentence for an essentially equivalent crime and a shockingly large number even go unpunished, thereby encouraging the criminal and in the ultimate making justice suffer by weakening the system's credibility. Of course, it is not possible to lay down any cut and dry formula relating to imposition of sentence but the object of sentencing should be to see that the crime does not go unpunished and the victim of crime as also the society has the satisfaction that justice has been done to it. In imposing sentences, in the absence of specific legislation, Judges must consider variety of factors and after considering all those factors and taking an over- all view of the situation, impose sentence which they consider to be an appropriate one. Aggravating factors cannot be ignored and similarly mitigating circumstances have also to be taken into consideration.

15. In our opinion, the measure of punishment in a given case must depend upon the atrocity of the crime; the conduct of the criminal and the defenceless and unprotected state of the victim. Imposition of appropriate punishment is the manner in which the courts respond to the society's cry for justice against the criminals. Justice demands that courts should impose punishment fitting to the crime so that the courts reflect public abhorrence of the crime. The courts must not only keep in view the rights of the criminal but also the rights of the victim of crime and the society at large while considering imposition of appropriate punishment.

493. In a landmark judgment Shankar Kisanrao Khade v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0476/2013 : (2013) 5 SCC 546, Justice Madan B. Lokur (Concurring) after analysing various cases of rape and murder, wherein death sentence was confirmed by this Court, in para (122) briefly laid down the grounds which weighed with the Court in confirming the death penalty and the same read as under:

122. The principal reasons for confirming the death penalty in the above cases include:

(1) the cruel, diabolic, brutal, depraved and gruesome nature of the crime (Jumman Khan v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0081/1991 : (1991) 1 SCC 752, Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B. MANU/SC/0626/1994 : (1994) 2 SCC 220, Laxman Naik v. State of Orissa MANU/SC/0264/1995 : (1994) 3 SCC 381, Kamta Tewari v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0722/1996

: (1996) 6 SCC 250, Nirmal Singh v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0178/1999 : (1999) 3 SCC 670, Jai Kumar v. State of M.P. MANU/SC/0360/1999 : (1999) 5 SCC 1, State of U.P. v. Satish MANU/SC/0090/2005 : (2005) 3 SCC 114, Bantu v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/7863/2008 : (2008) 11 SCC 113, Ankush Maruti Shinde v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0700/2009 : (2009) 6 SCC 667, B.A. Umesh v. State of Karnataka MANU/SC/0082/2011 : (2011) 3 SCC 85, Mohd. Mannan v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0460/2011 : (2011) 5 SCC 317 and Rajendra Pralhadrao Wasnik v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0160/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 37);

(2) the crime results in public abhorrence, shocks the judicial conscience or the conscience of society or the community (Dhananjoy Chatterjee MANU/SC/0626/1994 : (1994) 2 SCC 220, Jai Kumar MANU/SC/0360/1999 : (1999) 5 SCC 1, Ankush Maruti Shinde MANU/SC/0700/2009 : (2009) 6 SCC 667 and Mohd. Mannan MANU/SC/0460/2011 : (2011) 5 SCC 317);

(3) the reform or rehabilitation of the convict is not likely or that he would be a menace to society (Jai Kumar MANU/SC/0360/1999 : (1999) 5 SCC 1, B.A. Umesh MANU/SC/0082/2011 : (2011) 3 SCC 85 and Mohd. Mannan MANU/SC/0460/2011 : (2011) 5 SCC 317);

(4) the victims were defenceless (Dhananjoy Chatterjee MANU/SC/0626/1994 : (1994) 2 SCC 220, Laxman Naik MANU/SC/0264/1995 : (1994) 3 SCC 381, Kamta Tewari MANU/SC/0722/1996 : (1996) 6 SCC 250, Ankush Maruti Shinde MANU/SC/0700/2009 : (2009) 6 SCC 667, Mohd. Mannan MANU/SC/0460/2011 : (2011) 5 SCC 317 and Rajendra Pralhadrao Wasnik MANU/SC/0160/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 37);

(5) the crime was either unprovoked or that it was premeditated (Dhananjoy Chatterjee MANU/SC/0626/1994 : (1994) 2 SCC 220, Laxman Naik MANU/SC/0264/1995 : (1994) 3 SCC 381, Kamta Tewari MANU/SC/0722/1996 : (1996) 6 SCC 250, Nirmal Singh MANU/SC/0178/1999 : (1999) 3 SCC 670, Jai Kumar MANU/SC/0360/1999 : (1999) 5 SCC 1, Ankush Maruti Shinde MANU/SC/0700/2009 : (2009) 6 SCC 667, B.A. Umesh MANU/SC/0082/2011 : (2011) 3 SCC 85 and Mohd. Mannan MANU/SC/0460/2011 : (2011) 5 SCC 317) and in three cases the antecedents or the prior history of the convict was taken into consideration (Shivu v. High Court of Karnataka MANU/SC/7103/2007 : (2007) 4 SCC 713, B.A. Umesh MANU/SC/0082/2011 : (2011) 3 SCC 85 and Rajendra Pralhadrao Wasnik MANU/SC/0160/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 37).

494. We also refer to para (106) of Shankar Kisanrao Khade's case where Justice Madan B. Lokur (Concurring) has exhaustively analysed the case of rape and murder where death penalty was converted to that of imprisonment for life and some of the factors that weighed with the Court in such commutation. Para (106) reads as under:

106. A study of the above cases suggests that there are several reasons, cumulatively taken, for converting the death penalty to that of imprisonment for life. However, some of the factors that have had an influence in commutation include:

(1) the young age of the accused [Amit v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0567/2003 : (2003) 8 SCC 93 aged 20 years, Rahul v. State of Maharashtra (2005) 10 SCC 322 aged 24 years, Santosh Kumar Singh v. State MANU/SC/0801/2010 : (2010) 9 SCC 747 aged 24 years, Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod (2) MANU/SC/0075/2011 : (2011) 2 SCC 764 aged 28 years and Amit v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0133/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 107 aged 28 years];

(2) the possibility of reforming and rehabilitating the accused (in Santosh Kumar Singh MANU/SC/0801/2010 : (2010) 9 SCC 747 and Amit v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0133/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 107 the accused, incidentally, were young when they committed the crime);

(3) the accused had no prior criminal record (Nirmal Singh MANU/SC/0178/1999 : (1999) 3 SCC 670, Raju MANU/SC/0324/2001 : (2001) 9 SCC 50, Bantu MANU/SC/0684/2001 : (2001) 9 SCC 615, Amit v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0567/2003 : (2003) 8 SCC 93, Surendra Pal Shivbalakpal MANU/SC/0794/2004 : (2005) 3 SCC 127, Rahul (2005) 10 SCC 322 and Amit v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0133/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 107);

(4) the accused was not likely to be a menace or threat or danger to society or the community (Nirmal Singh MANU/SC/0178/1999 : (1999) 3 SCC 670, Mohd. Chaman MANU/SC/0781/2000 : (2001) 2 SCC 28, Raju MANU/SC/0324/2001 : (2001) 9 SCC 50, Bantu MANU/SC/0684/2001 : (2001) 9 SCC 615, Surendra Pal Shivbalakpal MANU/SC/0794/2004 : (2005) 3 SCC 127, Rahul (2005) 10 SCC 322 and Amit v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0133/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 107).

(5) a few other reasons need to be mentioned such as the accused having been acquitted by one of the courts (State of T.N. v. Suresh MANU/SC/0939/1998 : (1998) 2 SCC 372, State of Maharashtra v. Suresh MANU/SC/0765/1999 : (2000) 1 SCC 471, State of Maharashtra v. Bharat Fakira Dhiwar MANU/SC/0700/2001 : (2002) 1 SCC 622, State of Maharashtra v. Mansingh MANU/SC/1159/2004 : (2005) 3 SCC 131 and Santosh Kumar Singh MANU/SC/0801/2010 : (2010) 9 SCC 747);

(6) the crime was not premeditated (Kumudi Lal v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0275/1999 : (1999) 4 SCC 108, Akhtar v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/1008/1999 : (1999) 6 SCC 60, Raju v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0324/2001 : (2001) 9 SCC 50 and Amrit Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/8642/2006 : (2006) 12 SCC 79);

(7) the case was one of circumstantial evidence (Mansingh MANU/SC/1159/2004 : (2005) 3 SCC 131 and Bishnu Prasad Sinha MANU/SC/7022/2007 : (2007) 11 SCC 467).

In one case, commutation was ordered since there was apparently no "exceptional" feature warranting a death penalty (Kumudi Lal MANU/SC/0275/1999 : (1999) 4 SCC 108) and in another case because the trial court had awarded life sentence but the High Court enhanced it to death (Haresh Mohandas Rajput MANU/SC/1099/2011 : (2011) 12 SCC 56).

495. In the same judgment in Shankar Kisanrao Khade v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0476/2013 : (2013) 5 SCC 546, Justice Madan B. Lokur (concurring) while elaborately analysing the question of imposing death penalty in specific facts and circumstances of that particular case, concerning rape and murder of a minor, discussed the sentencing policy of India, with special reference to execution of the sentences imposed by the Judiciary. The Court noted the prima facie difference in the standard of yardsticks adopted by two organs of the government viz. Judiciary and the Executive in treating the life of convicts convicted of an offence punishable with death and recommended consideration of Law Commission of India over this issue. The relevant excerpt from the said judgment, highlighting the inconsistency in the approach of Judiciary and Executive in the matter of sentencing, is as under:

148. It seems to me that though the Courts have been applying the rarest of rare principle, the Executive has taken into consideration some factors not known to the Courts for converting a death sentence to imprisonment for life. It is imperative, in this regard, since we are dealing with the lives of people (both the accused and the rape- murder victim) that the Courts lay down a jurisprudential basis for awarding the death penalty and when the alternative is unquestionably foreclosed so that the prevailing uncertainty is avoided. Death penalty and its execution should not become a matter of uncertainty nor should converting a death sentence into imprisonment for life become a matter of chance. Perhaps the Law Commission of India can resolve the issue by examining whether death penalty is a deterrent punishment or is retributive justice or serves an incapacitative goal.

In Shankar Kisanrao's case, it was observed by Justice Madan B. Lokur that Dhananjay Chatterjee's case was perhaps the only case where death sentence imposed on the accused, who was convicted for rape was executed.

496. Another significant development in the sentencing policy of India is the 'victim- centric' approach, clearly recognised in Machhi Singh (Supra) and re- emphasized in a plethora of cases. It has been consistently held that the courts have a duty towards society and that the punishment should be corresponding to the crime and should act as a soothing balm to the suffering of the victim and their family. [Ref: Gurvail Singh @ Gala and Anr. v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0111/2013 : (2013) 2 SCC 713; Mohfil Khan and Anr. v. State of Jharkhand MANU/SC/0915/2014 : (2015) 1 SCC 67; Purushottam Dashrath Borate and Anr. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0583/2015 : (2015) 6 SCC 652]. The Courts while considering the issue of sentencing are bound to acknowledge the rights of the victims and their family, apart from the rights of the society and the accused. The agony suffered by the family of the victims cannot be ignored in any case. In Mohfil Khan (supra), this Court specifically observed that 'it would be the paramount duty of the Court to provide justice to the incidental victims of the crime - the family members of the deceased persons.

497. The law laid down above, clearly sets forth the sentencing policy evolved over a period of time. I now proceed to analyse the facts and circumstances of the present case on the anvil of above- stated principles. To be very precise, the nature and the manner of the act committed by the accused, and the effect it casted on the society and on the victim's family, are to be weighed against the mitigating circumstances stated by the accused and the scope of their reform, so as to reach a definite reasoned conclusion as to what would be appropriate punishment in the present case- 'death sentence', life sentence commutable to 14 years' or 'life imprisonment for the rest of the life'.

498. The question would be whether the present case could be one of the rarest of rare cases warranting death penalty. Before the court proceed to make a choice whether to award death sentence or life imprisonment, the court is to draw up a balance- sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances attending to the commission of the offence and then strike a balance between those aggravating and mitigating circumstances. Two questions are to be asked and answered: (i) Is there something uncommon about the crimes which regard sentence of imprisonment for life inadequate; (ii) Whether there is no alternative punishment suitable except death sentence. Where a crime is committed with extreme brutality and the collective conscience of the society is shocked, courts must award death penalty, irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability of death penalty. By not imposing a death sentence in such cases, the courts may do injustice to the society at large.

499. We are here concerned with the award of an appropriate sentence in case of brutal gang-rape and murder of a young lady, involving most gruesome and barbaric act of inserting iron rods in the private parts of the victim. The act was committed in connivance and collusion of six who were on a notorious spree running a bus, showcasing as a public transport, with the intent of attracting passengers and committing crime with them. The victim and her friend were picked up from the Munirka bus stand with the mala fide intent of ravishing and torturing her. The accused not only abducted the victim, but gang- raped her, committed unnatural offence by compelling her for oral sex, bit her lips, cheeks, breast and caused horrifying injuries to her private parts by inserting iron rod which ruptured the vaginal rectum, jejunum and rectum. The diabolical manner in which crime was committed leaves one startled as to the pervert mental state of the inflictor. On top of it, after having failed to kill her on the spot, by running the bus over her, the victim was thrown half naked in the wintery night, with grievous injuries.

500. If we look at the aggravating circumstances in the present case, following factors would emerge:

• Diabolic nature of the crime and the manner of committing crime, as reflected in committing gang- rape with the victim; forcing her to perform oral sex, injuries on the body of the deceased by way of bite marks; insertion of iron rod in her private parts and causing fatal injuries to her private parts and other internal injuries; pulling out her internal organs which caused sepsis and ultimately led to her death; throwing the victim and the complainant (P.W. 1) naked in the cold wintery night and trying to run the bus over them.

• The brazenness and coldness with which the acts were committed in the evening hours by picking up the deceased and the victim from a public space, reflects the threat to which the society would be posed to, in case the accused are not appropriately punished. More so, it reflects that there is no scope of reform.

• The horrific acts reflecting the in- human extent to which the accused could go to satisfy their lust, being completely oblivious, not only to the norms of the society, but also to the norms of humanity.

• The acts committed so shook the conscience of the society.

501. As noted earlier, on the aspect of sentencing, seeking reduction of death sentence to life imprisonment, three of the convicts/Appellants namely A- 3 Akshay, A- 4 Vinay and A- 5 Pawan placed on record, through their individual affidavits dated 23.03.2017, following mitigating circumstances:

(a) Family circumstances such as poverty and rural background,

(b) Young age,

(c) Current family situation including age of parents, ill health of family members and their responsibilities towards their parents and other family members,

(d) Absence of criminal antecedents,

(e) Conduct in jail, and

(f) Likelihood of reformation.

In his affidavit, accused Mukesh reiterated his innocence and only pleaded that he is falsely implicated in the case.

502. In Purushottam Dashrath Borate and Anr. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0583/2015 : (2015) 6 SCC 652, this Court held that age of the accused or family background of the accused or lack of criminal antecedents cannot be said to be the mitigating circumstance. It cannot also be considered as mitigating circumstance, particularly taking into consideration, the nature of heinous offence and cold and calculated manner in which it was committed by the accused persons.

503. Society's reasonable expectation is that deterrent punishment commensurate with the gravity of the offence be awarded. When the crime is brutal, shocking the collective conscience of the community, sympathy in any form would be misplaced and it would shake the confidence of public in the administration of criminal justice system. As held in Om Prakash v. State of Haryana MANU/SC/0129/1999 : (1999) 3 SCC 19, the Court must respond to the cry of the society and to settle what would be a deterrent punishment for what was an apparently abominable crime.

504. Bearing in mind the above principles governing the sentencing policy, I have considered all the aggravating and mitigating circumstances in the present case. Imposition of appropriate punishment is the manner in which the courts respond to the society's cry for justice against the crime. Justice demands that the courts should impose punishments befitting the crime so that it reflects public abhorrence of the crime. Crimes like the one before us cannot be looked with magnanimity. Factors like young age of the accused and poor background cannot be said to be mitigating circumstances. Likewise, post- crime remorse and post- crime good conduct of the accused, the statement of the accused as to their background and family circumstances, age, absence of criminal antecedents and their good conduct in prison, in my view, cannot be taken as mitigating circumstances to take the case out of the category of "rarest of rare cases". The circumstances stated by the accused in their affidavits are too slender to be treated as mitigating circumstances.

505. In the present case, there is not even a hint of hesitation in my mind with respect to the aggravating circumstances outweighing the mitigating circumstances and I do not find any justification to convert the death sentence imposed by the courts below to 'life imprisonment for the rest of the life'. The gruesome offences were committed with highest viciousness. Human lust was allowed to take such a demonic form. The accused may not be hardened criminals; but the cruel manner in which the gang- rape was committed in the moving bus; iron rods were inserted in the private parts of the victim; and the coldness with which both the victims were thrown naked in cold wintery night of December, shocks the collective conscience of the society. The present case clearly comes within the category of 'rarest of rare case' where the question of any other punishment is 'unquestionably foreclosed'. If at all there is a case warranting award of death sentence, it is the present case. If the dreadfulness displayed by the accused in committing the gang- rape, unnatural sex, insertion of iron rod in the private parts of the victim does not fall in the 'rarest of rare category', then one may wonder what else would fall in that category. On these reasoning recorded by me, I concur with the majority in affirming the death sentence awarded to the accused persons.

506. The incident of gang- rape on the night of 16.12.2012 in the capital sparked public protest not only in Delhi but nation- wide. We live in a civilized society where law and order is supreme and the citizens enjoy inviolable fundamental human rights. But when the incident of gang- rape like the present one surfaces, it causes ripples in the conscience of society and serious doubts are raised as to whether we really live in a civilized society and whether both men and women feel the same sense of liberty and freedom which they should have felt in the ordinary course of a civilized society, driven by rule of law. Certainly, whenever such grave violations of human dignity come to fore, an unknown sense of insecurity and helplessness grabs the entire society, women in particular, and the only succour people look for, is the State to take command of the situation and remedy it effectively.

507. The statistics of National Crime Records Bureau which I have indicated in the beginning of my judgment show that despite the progress made by women in education and in various fields and changes brought in ideas of women's rights, respect for women is on the decline and crimes against women are on the increase. Offences against women are not a women's issue alone but, human rights issue. Increased rate of crime against women is an area of concern for the law-makers and it points out an emergent need to study in depth the root of the problem and remedy the same through a strict law and order regime. There are a number of legislations and numerous penal provisions to punish the offenders of violence against women. However, it becomes important to ensure that gender justice does not remain only on paper.

508. We have a responsibility to set good values and guidance for posterity. In the words of great scholar, Swami Vivekananda, "the best thermometer to the progress of a nation is its treatment of its women." Crime against women not only affects women's self esteem and dignity but also degrades the pace of societal development. I hope that this gruesome incident in the capital and death of this young woman will be an eye- opener for a mass movement "to end violence against women" and "respect for women and her dignity" and sensitizing public at large on gender justice. Every individual, irrespective of his/her gender must be willing to assume the responsibility in fight for gender justice and also awaken public opinion on gender justice. Public at large, in particular men, are to be sensitized on gender justice. The battle for gender justice can be won only with strict implementation of legislative provisions, sensitization of public, taking other pro- active steps at all levels for combating violence against women and ensuring widespread attitudinal changes and comprehensive change in the existing mind set. We hope that this incident will pave the way for the same.

Back to Section 100 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Appeal (crl.) 31 of 2000

Decided On: 20.03.2002

Khet Singh Vs. Union of India (UOI)

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

R.P. Sethi and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ.

JUDGMENT

K.G. Balakrishnan, J.

1. This appeal is directed against the judgment of the High Court of Rajasthan challenging the conviction and sentence of the appellant under Sections 17 18 & 21 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 (hereinafter referred to as "NDPS Act"). Appellant had been sentenced to undergo 10 years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1 lakh and in default of payment of fine further to undergo two years and six months' rigorous imprisonment.

2. Appellant Khet Singh was tried along with one Kanhaiya Lal for the aforesaid offences and Kanhaiya Lal was acquitted by the Sessions Court. The case of the prosecution is that on 6.5.1989, PW6 Shri Narain Das Lakhara, Inspector, Customs Department, Jaisalmer, along with the Superintendent of Customs and two other constables was proceeding on patrolling and checking duty towards Ramgarh. Near Brahamsar crossing, they started checking several motor vehicles as it was suspected that there might be drug trafficking. In truck no. RJC 1472, the appellant was found sitting with a cloth basket in his hand. During the search, a polythene bag was found in the basket which contained some black substance suspected to be opium. Appellant Khet Singh and Kanhaiya Lal along with the cloth basket were brought to the Office of the Customs. In the office of the Customs, the opium was seized, samples were taken from it and were sealed. Appellant and Kanhaiya Lal were questioned. The appellant stated that he had purchased the seized opium from Kanhaiya Lal. The samples were sent for chemical examination and the report from the Forensic Science Laboratory revealed that the sample was 'opium'.

3. The appellant contended before the trial court that there was violation of Section 50 of the NDPS Act as the search and seizure was not made in the presence of a Gazetted Officer or a Magistrate and that the appellant was not told in advance that he had a right to demand that the search to be effected shall be in the presence of a Magistrate or a Gazetted Officer. This plea was rejected on the ground that search and checking was being conducted of the vehicles and it was during the course of this general search that the appellant was found travelling with the opium and hence Section 50 of the NDPS Act is not applicable and that the same would apply in the case of a search on the person of the appellant. The same plea was raised before the High Court and was rightly rejected.

4. The learned Counsel, Mr. Doongar Singh who appeared on behalf of the appellant raised a contention that though the search and seizure was effected near Brahamsar crossing, no mahazar was prepared and no samples were taken from the contraband article; the seizure memo was prepared in the Office of the Customs Department and the samples were also taken at the Office of the Customs Department, and that this has caused serious prejudice to the appellant. According to the appellant's Counsel, the seizure memo should have been prepared at the place where the contraband article was seized from the accused. He further pointed out that the recovery was effected but the contraband article was not sealed at the spot and the truck along with the driver and the appellant were brought to the office of Customs Department at Jaisalmer and that there were about 10 other persons in the truck and all of them were allowed to go. The learned counsel further contended that had the search mahazar been prepared at the spot, it could have been satisfactorily proved that it was from the appellant's possession that the bag was taken and it is doubtful whether the bag belonged to the appellant or to any other passengers.

5. It is true that the search and seizure of contraband article is a serious aspect in the matter of investigation related to offences under the NDPS Act. The NDPS Act and the rules framed thereunder have laid down a detailed procedure and guidelines as to the manner in which search and seizure are to be effected. If there is any violation of these guidelines, Courts would take a serious view and the benefit would be extended to the accused. The offences under NDPS Act are grave in nature and minimum punishment prescribed under the Statute is incarceration for a long period. As the possession of any narcotic drugs or psychotropic substance by itself is made punishable under the act, the seizure of the article from the appellant is of vital importance.

6. Section 51 of the NDPS Act provides that the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 shall apply in respect of warrants, arrests, searches and seizure in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of the NDPS Act. Section 165 of the Code confers powers on the police to search any place without search warrant. 'Place' has been defined in Section 2(p) of the Code as one which includes house, building, tent, vehicle and vessel. Section 165 of the Code empowers a police officer making an investigation to conduct search without a warrant if he has reasonable grounds for believing that anything necessary for the purpose of an investigation into any offence may be found and that he is of the opinion that undue delay may frustrate the object of the search. Further, Section 100 of the Code lays down the detailed procedure and guidelines regarding the manner in which search is to be conducted of a closed place.

7. In the present case, the learned Counsel for the appellant contended that the police officer did not prepare the seizure mahazar at the spot and thereby violated the provisions of law. Therefore, it is argued that the evidence collected by the prosecution was not admissible. The learned Counsel further contended that the directions contained in the Standing Instructions issued by the Narcotics Control Bureau were not complied with. Our attention was drawn to clause 1.5 of the Standing Instruction No. 1/88 issued by the Narcotics Control Bureau, New Delhi, which is to the following effect :- \

" Place and time for drawal of sample Samples from the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances seized, must be drawn on the spot of recovery, in duplicate, in the presence of search(Panch) witnesses and the person from whose possession the drug is recovered, and a mention to this effect should invariably be made in the panchnama drawn on the spot."

8. The learned Counsel for the appellant also pointed out to us Clause 3.8 of the Standing Order No. 2/88 issued by the Narcotics Control Bureau, New Delhi, which reads as follows :-

Each seizing officer should deposit the drugs fully packed and sealed with his seal in the godown within 48 hours of seizure of such drugs, with a forwarding memo indicating:

(i) NDPS Crime No. as per crime and prosecution register under the new law (i.e. NDPS Act)

(ii) Name (s) of accused

(iii) Reference of test memo

(iv) Description of drugs in the sealed packages/containers and other goods, if any

(v) Drug- wise quantity in each package/container

(vi) Drug- wise number of packages/containers

(vii) Total number of all packages/containers.

9. The learned Counsel for the appellant contended that these instructions issued by the Narcotics Control Bureau, New Delhi, were not followed and the seizure memo was not prepared at the spot and there was delay in depositing the seized drug in the godown. It was argued that this has caused serious prejudice to the accused and therefore, his conviction is vitiated on that account.

10. The instructions issued by the Narcotics Control Bureau, New Delhi are to be followed by the officer in- charge of the investigation of the crimes coming within the purview of the NDPS Act, even though these instructions do not have the force of law. They are intended to guide the officers and to see that a fair procedure is adopted by the officer in- charge of the investigation. It is true that when a contraband article is seized during investigation or search, a seizure mahazar should be prepared at the spot in accordance with law. There may, however, be circumstances in which it would not have been possible for the officer to prepare the mahazar at the spot, as it may be a chance recovery and the officer may not have the facility to prepare a seizure mahazar at the spot itself. If the seizure is effected at the place where there are no witnesses and there is no facility for weighing the contraband article or other requisite facilities are lacking, the officer can prepare the seizure mahazar at a later stage as and when the facilities are available, provided there are justifiable and reasonable grounds to do so. In that event, where the seizure mahazar is prepared at a later stage, the officer should indicate his reasons as to why he had not prepared the mahazar at the spot of recovery. If there is any inordinate delay in preparing the seizure mahazar, that may give an opportunity to tamper with the contraband article allegedly seized from the accused. There may also be allegations that the article seized was by itself substituted and some other items were planted to falsely implicate the accused. To avoid these suspicious circumstances and to have a fair procedure in respect of search and seizure, it is always desirable to prepare the seizure mahazar at the spot itself from where the contraband articles were taken into custody.

11. In the present case, though the article was seized from the accused while he was travelling in a truck, no seizure mahazar was prepared at that time. The accused persons were taken to the office of customs and the seizure mahazar was prepared at the office of customs. The learned Single Judge of the High Court held that no prejudice was caused to the appellant. The learned Counsel for the appellant contended that NDPS Act being a special Statute with provision for severe punishment on the accused found guilty of the offences punishable thereunder, the procedure established by law for search and seizure is to be strictly complied with and any failure to comply with such procedure is to be viewed seriously and any evidence collected shall be made inadmissible under law.

12. Whether evidence collected by illegal search or seizure is admissible or not was considered by this Court in series of decisions and one of the earliest decisions is the decision of the Constitution Bench in Pooran Mal vs. The Director of Inspection (Investigation), New Delhi and others, etc.etc. MANU/SC/0055/1973 : [1974]93ITR505(SC) . Though the search in that case was done under the provisions of the Income Tax Act, it is apposite to note the following observation made by this court:-

"So far as India is concerned its law of evidence is modelled on the rules of evidence which prevailed in English Law, and Courts in India and in England have consistently refused to exclude relevant evidence merely on the ground that it is obtained by illegal search or seizure."

13. In State of Punjab vs. Baldev Singh MANU/SC/0972/1998 : (1999)6SCC172 , the Constitution Bench of this Court extensively considered the question whether the procedure laid down under Section 50 of NDPS Act is mandatory or not. It was held that the judgment in Pooran Mal case cannot be understood to have laid down that an illicit article seized during a search of a person, on prior information, conducted in violation of the provisions of Section 50 of the Act, can by itself be used as evidence of unlawful possession of the illicit article on the person from whom the contraband has been seized during the illicit search. In paragraph 45 of the Judgment, Dr. A.S. Anand(Chief Justice) held as under:-

"..Prosecution cannot be permitted to take advantage of its own wrong. Conducting a fair trial for those who are accused of a criminal offence is the cornerstone of our democratic society. A conviction resulting from an unfair trial is contrary to our concept of justice. Conducting a fair trial is both for the benefit of the society as well as for an accused and cannot be abandoned. While considering the aspect of fair trial, the nature of the evidence obtained and the nature of the safeguard violated are both relevant factors. Courts cannot allow admission of evidence against an accused, where the court is satisfied that the evidence had been obtained by a conduct of which the prosecution ought not to take advantage particularly when that conduct had caused prejudice to the accused. If after careful consideration of the material on record it is found by the court that the admission of evidence collected in search conducted in violation of Section 50 would render the trial unfair then that evidence must be excluded.."

14. In State of H.P. vs. Prithi Chand and Another MANU/SC/0259/1996 : 1996CriLJ1354 , it was held that it would thus be settled law that every deviation from the details of the procedure prescribed for search does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that search by the police renders the recovery of the articles pursuant to the illegal search irrelevant evidence nor the discovery of the fact inadmissible at the trial. Weight to be attached to such evidence depends on facts and circumstances in each case. The court is required to scan the evidence with care and to act upon it when it is proved and the court would hold that the evidence would be relied upon.

15. In Radha Kishan vs. State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0146/1962 : (1963)IILLJ667SC this Court held that the evidence obtained by illegal search and seizure would not be rejected but requires to be examined carefully. In State of Maharashtra vs. Natwarlal Damodardas Soni MANU/SC/0518/1979 : 1980CriLJ429 it was held that even if the search was illegal, it will not affect the validity of the seizure and further investigation of the authorities or the validity of the trial which followed on the complaint by the customs officials.

16. Law on the point is very clear that even if there is any sort of procedural illegality in conducting the search and seizure, the evidence collected thereby will not become inadmissible and the Court would consider all the circumstances and find out whether any serious prejudice had been caused to the accused. If the search and seizure was in complete defiance of the law and procedure and there was any possibility of the evidence collected likely to have been tampered with or interpolated during the course of such search or seizure, then, it could be said that the evidence is not liable to be admissible in evidence.

17. In the present case, though the mahazar was not prepared at the spot where the accused persons were found to be in possession of the contraband article but the same was done only at the Office of the Customs Department while the accused persons were very much present throughout, there was no allegation or suggestion that the contraband article was, in any way, meddled with by the officers. Therefore, we are of the view that the appellant has rightly been found to be in possession of the opium. We find no reason to interfere with the conviction and sentence entered against the appellant. The appeal is dismissed accordingly.

Back to Section 102 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 179 of 2008 (Arising out of SLP (Crl.) 3408 of 2007)

Decided On: 24.01.2008

Suresh Nanda Vs. C.B.I.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

P.P. Naolekar and Markandey Katju, JJ.

ORDER

1. Leave granted.

2. The appellant claims to be a non- resident Indian settled in United Kingdom for the last 23 years. The passport of the appellant as well as other documents were seized by the respondent from 4, Prithviraj Road, New Delhi in a search conducted on 10.10.2006 when the appellant was on a visit to India. The said search and seizure was pursuant to an F.I.R. dated 9.10.2006 registered on the basis of a sting operation carried out by a news portal in the year 2001. The passport seized during the search was retained by the C.B.I. officials. An application was moved by the appellant before the Special Judge, C.B.I., Patiala House Courts, New Delhi praying for release of his passport so that he can travel abroad to London and Ducal for a period of 15 days. The learned Special Judge, by order dated 13.1.2007, directed the release of the passport to the appellant by imposing upon him certain conditions. Aggrieved against the order passed by the Learned Special Judge, C.B.I., the respondent preferred a Criminal Revision before the High Court, The High Court, by order dated 5.2.2007, reversed the order of the learned Special Judge and refused to release the passport to the appellant. Aggrieved against the order of the High Court, present appeal, by special leave, has been preferred by the appellant.

3. Learned senior counsel appearing for the appellant submitted that the power and jurisdiction to impound the passport of any individual has to be exercised under the Passports Act, 1967 (hereinafter referred to as "The Act"). He specifically referred to Sub- section (3)(e) of Section 10 of the Act which reads as under:

(3) The passport authority may impound or cause to be impounded or revoke a passport or travel document -

(e) if proceedings in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by the holder of the passport or travel document are pending before a criminal court in India:

Reference was also made to Section 10A of the Act which has been introduced by Act 17/2002 w.e.f. 17.10.2001.

4. Learned senior counsel for the appellant also placed reliance on the decision of 5- Judge Bench of this Court in Satwant Singh Sawhney v. D. Rajnarathnam, Asstt. Passport Officer MANU/SC/0040/1967 : [1967]3SCR525 wherein in para 31, it was held as under:

31: For the reasons mentioned above, we would accept the view of Kerala, Bombay and Mysore High Courts in preference to that expressed by the Delhi High Court. It follows that under Article 21 of the Constitution no person can be deprived of his right to travel except according to procedure established by law. It is not disputed that no law was trade by the State regulating or depriving persons of such a right.

5. A similar view is reiterated in the decision rendered by 7- Juage Bench of this Court in Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India and Anr. MANU/SC/0133/1978 : [1978]2SCR621 wherein at page 280, it was held as under;

...Now, it has been held by this Court in Satwant Singh's case (supra) that 'personal liberty' within the meaning of Article 21 includes within its ambit the right to go abroad and consequently no person can be deprived of this right except according to procedure prescribed by law. Prior to the enactment of the Passports Act, 1967, there was no law regulating the right of a person to go abroad and that was the reason why the order of the Passport Officer refusing to issue passport to the petitioner in Satwant Singh's case (supra) was struck down as invalid. It will be seen at once from the language of Article 21 that the protection it secures is a limited one. It safeguards the right to go abroad against executive interference which is not supported by law; and law here means 'enacted law' or 'State law' (Vide A.K. Gopalan's case). Thus, no person can be deprived of his right to go abroad unless there is a law made by the State prescribing the procedure for so depriving him and the deprivation is effected strictly in accordance with such procedure....

6. On the other hand, learned Additional Solicitor General appearing for the respondent submitted that the passport was seized and impounded by exercising the powers under Section 102 read with Sections 165 and 104 of Code of Criminal Procedure (hereinafter referred to as "the Cr.P.C"). He further contended that the power to retain and impound the passport has been rightly exercised by the respondent as there is an order dated 3.11.2006' passed by the learned Special Judge for C.B.I, exercising the power under Section 104 of Cr.P.C.

7. Sub- section (3) (e) of Section 10 of the Act provides for impounding of a passport if proceedings in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by the holder of the passport or travel document are pending before a criminal court in India. Thus, the Passport Authority has the power to impound the passport under the Act, Section 102 of Cr.P.C. gives powers to the police officer to seize any property which may be alleged or suspected to have been stolen or which may be found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence. Sub-section (5) of Section 165 of Cr.P.C. provides that the copies of record made under Sub- section (1) or sub- section (3) shall forthwith be sent to the nearest Magistrate empowered to take cognizance to the offence Whereas Section 104 of Cr.P.C. authorizes the court to impound any document or thing produced before it under the Code. Section 165 of Cr.P.C. does not speak about the passport which has been searched and seized as in the present case. It does not speak about the documents found in search, but copies of the records prepared under Sub- section (1) and Sub- section (3). "Impound" means to keep in custody of the law. There trust be some distinct action which will show that documents or things have been impounded. According to the Oxford Dictionary "impound" means to take legal or formal possession. In the present case, the passport of the appellant is in possession of CBI right from the date it has been seized by the CBI. When we read Section 104 of Cr.P.C. and Section 10 of the Act together, under Cr.P.C., the Court is empowered to impound any document or thing produced before it whereas the Act speaks specifically of impounding of the passport.

8. Thus, the Act is a special Act relating to a matter of passport, whereas Section 104 of the Cr.P.C. authorizes the Court to impound document or thing produced before it. Where there is a special Act dealing with specific subject, resort should be had to that Act instead of general Act providing for the matter connected with the specific Act. As the Passports Act is a special act, the rule that "general provision should yield to the specific provision" is to be applied. See: Dam Vaiaji Shah and Anr. v. Life Corporation of India and Ors. AIR 1966 SC 1351; Gobind Sugar Mills Ltd. v. State of Bihar and Ors. MANU/SC/0486/1999 : AIR1999SC3097 ; and Belsund Sugar Co. Ltd. v. State of Bihar and Ors. MANU/SC/0457/1999 : AIR1999SC3125 .

9. The Act being a specific Act whereas Section 104 of Cr.P.C. is a general provision for impounding any document or thing, it shall prevail over that Section in the Cr.P.C. as regards the passport. Thus, by necessary implication, the power of Court to impound any document or thing produced before it would exclude passport.

10. In the present case, no steps have been taken under Section 10 of the Act which provides for variation, impounding and revocation of the passports and travel documents. Section 10A of the Act which provides for an order to suspend with immediate effect any passport or travel document; such other appropriate order which may have the effect of rendering any passport or travel document invalid, for a period not exceeding four weeks, if the Central Government or any designated officer on its satisfaction holds that it is necessary in public interest to do without prejudice to the generality of the provisions contained in Section 10 by approaching the Central Government or any designated officer. Therefore, it appears that the passport of the appellant cannot be impounded except by the Passport Authority in accordance with law. The retention of the passport by the respondent (CBI) has not been done in conformity with the provisions of law as there is no order of the passport authorities under Section 10(3)(e) or by the Central Government or any designated officer under Section 10A of the Act to impound the passport by the respondent exercising the powers vested under the act.

11. Learned Additional Solicitor General has submitted that the police has power to seize a passport in view of Section 102(1) of the Cr.P.C. which states:

Power of police officer to seize certain property; (1) Any police officer may seize any property which may be alleged or suspected to have seen stolen, or which may be found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence.

In our opinion, while the police may have the power to seize a passport under Section 102(1) Cr.P.C, it does not have the power to impound the same. Impounding of a passport can only be done by the passport authority under Section 10(3) of the Passports Act, 1967.

12. It may be mentioned that there is a difference between seizing of a document and impounding a document. a seizure is made e at a particular moment when a person or authority taxes into his possession some property which was earlier not in his possession. Thus, seizure is done at a particular moment of time. However, if after seizing of a property or document the said property or document is retained for some period of time, then such retention amounts to impounding of the property/or document. In the Law Lexicon by P. Ramanatha Aiyar (2nd Edition), the word "impound" has been defined to mean "to take possession of a document or thing for being held in custody in accordance with law". Thus, the word 'impounding" really means retention of possession of a good or a document which has been seized.

13. Hence, while the police may have power to seize a passport under Section 102 Cr.P.C. if it is permissible within the authority given under Section 102 of Cr.P.C. it does not have power to retain or impound the same, because that can only be done by the passport authority under Section 10(3) of the Passports Act. Hence, if the police seizes a passport (which it has power to do under Section 102 Cr.P.C.), thereafter the police must send it along with a letter to the passport authority clearly stating that the seized passport deserves to be impounded for one of the reasons mentioned in Section 10(3) of the Act. It is thereafter the passport authority to decide whether to impound the passport or not. Since impounding of a passport has civil consequences, the passport authority must give an opportunity of hearing to the person concerned before impounding his passport. It is well settled that any order which has civil consequences must be passed after giving opportunity of hearing to a party vide State of Orissa v. Binapani Dei MANU/SC/0332/1967 : (1967)IILLJ266SC .

14. In the present case, neither the passport authority passed any order of impounding nor was any opportunity of hearing given to the appellant by the passport authority for impounding the document. It was only the CBI authority which has retained possession of the passport (which in substance amounts to impounding it) from October, 2006. In our opinion, this was clearly illegal.

Under Section 10A of the Act retention by the Central Government can only be for four weeks. Thereafter it can only be retained by an order of the Passport authority under Section 10(3).

15. In our opinion, even the Court cannot impound a passport. Though, no doubt. Section 104 Cr.P.C. states that the Court may, if it thinks fit, impound any document or thing produced before it, in our opinion, this provision will only enable the Court to impound any document or thing other than a passport. This is because impounding a "passport" is provided for in Section 10(3) of the Passports Act. The Passports Act is a special law while the Cr.P.C. is a general law. It is well settled that the special law prevails over the general law vide G.P. Singh's Principles of Statutory Interpretation (9th Edition pg, 133). This principle is expressed in the maxim "Generalia specialibus non derogant", Hence, impounding of a passport cannot be done by the Court under Section 104 Cr.P.C. though it can impound any other document or thing.

16. For the aforesaid reasons, we set aside the impugned order of the High Court and direct the respondent to hand over the passport to the appellant within a week from today. However, it shall be open to the respondent to approach the Passport Authorities under Section 10 or the authorities under Section 10A of the Act for impounding the passport of the appellant in accordance with law.

17. We, however, make it clear that we are not expressing any opinion on the merits of the case and are not deciding whether the passport can be impounded as a condition for grant of bail.

The appeal stands disposed of accordingly.

MANU/SC/0194/1985

Back to Section 125 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 103 of 1981

Decided On: 23.04.1985

Mohd. Ahmed Khan Vs. Shah Bano Begum and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J., D.A. Desai, E.S. Venkataramiah, O. Chinnappa Reddy and Ranganath Misra, JJ.

JUDGMENT

1. This appeal does not involve any question of constitutional importance but, that is not to say that it does not involve any question of importance. Some questions which arise under the ordinary civil and criminal law are of a far- reaching significance to large segments of society which have been traditionally subjected to unjust treatment. Women are one such segment. ' Na stree swatantramarhati" said Manu, the Law giver : The woman does not deserve independence. And, it is alleged that the 'fatal point in Islam is the 'degradation of woman' 'Selections from Kuran' Edward William Lane 1843, Reprint 1982, page xc (Introduction). To the Prophet is ascribed the statement, hopefully wrongly, that 'Woman was made from a crooked rib, and if you try to bend it straight, it will break ; therefore treat your wives kindly.

2. This appeal, arising out of an application filed by a divorced Muslim woman for maintenance under Section 125 of the CrPC, raises a straightforward issue which is of common interest not only to Muslim women, not only to women generally but, to all those who, aspiring to create an equal society of men and women, lure themselves into the belief that mankind has achieved a remarkable decree of progress in that direction. The appellant, who is an advocate by profession, was married to the respondent in 1932. Three sons and two daughters wire born of that marriage. In 1975 the appellant drove the respondent out of the matrimonial home, la April 1978, the respondent filed a petition against the appellant under Section 125 of the Code in the court of the learned Judicial Magistrate (First Class), Indore asking for maintenance at the rate of Rs. 500 per month. On November 6, 1978 the appellant divorced the respondent by an irrevocable talaq. His defence to the respondent's petition for maintenance was that she had ceased to be his wife by reason of the divorce granted by him, to provide that he was therefore under no obligation maintenance for her, that he had already paid maintenance to her at the rate of Rs. 200 per month for about two years and that, he had deposited a sum of Rs. 3000 in the court by way of dower during the period the of iddat. In August, 1979 the learned Magistrate directed appellant to pay a princely sum of Rs. 25 per month to the respondent by way of maintenance. It may be mentioned that the respondent had alleged that the appellant earns a professional income of about Rs. 60,000 per year. In July, 1980 in a revisional application filed by the respondent, the High court of Madhya Pradesh enhanced the amount of maintenance to Rs. 179.20 per month. The husband is before us by special leave.

3. Does the Muslim Personal Law impose no obligation upon the husband to provide for the maintenance of his divorced wife? Undoubtedly, the Muslim husband enjoys the privilege of being able to discard his wife whenever he chooses to do so, for reasons good, bad or indifferent. Indeed, for no reason at all. But, is the only price of that privilege the dole of a pittance during the period of iddat? And, is the law so ruthless in its inequality that, no matter how much the husband pays for the maintenance of his divorced wife during the period of iddat, the mere fact that he has paid something, no matter how little, absolves him for ever from the duty B of paying adequately so as to enable her to keep her body and soul together ? Then again, is there any provision in the Muslim Personal Law under which a sun is payable to the wife 'on divorce' ? These are some of the important, though agonising, questions which arise for our decision.

4. The question as to whether Section 125 of the Code applies to Muslims also is concluded by two decisions of this Court which are reported in Bai Tahira Ali Hussain Fidaalli Chothia MANU/SC/0402/1978 : 1979CriLJ151 and Fuzlunbi v. K. Khader Vali MANU/SC/0508/1980 : 1980CriLJ1249 . Those decisions took the view that the divorced Muslim wife is entitled to apply for maintenance nice under Section 125. But, a Bench consisting of our learned Brethren, Murtaza Fazal Ali and A. Varadarajan, JJ. were inclined to the view that those cases are not correctly decided. Therefore, they referred this appeal to a larger Bench by an order dated February 3, 1981, which reads thus :

As this case involves substantial questions of law of far- reaching consequences, we feel that the decisions of this Court in Bai Tahira v. Ali Hussain Fidaalli Chothia and Anr. and Fuzlunbi v. K. Khader Vali and Anr. require reconsideration because, in our opinion, they are not only in direct contravention of the plain and an unambiguous language of Section 127(3)(b) of the CrPC, 1973 which far from overriding the Muslim Law on the subject protects and applies the same in case where a wife has been divorced by the husband and the dower specified has been paid and the period of iddat has been observed. The decision also appear to us to be against the fundamental concept of divorce by the husband and its consequences under the Muslim law which has been expressly protected by Section 2 of the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act, 1937- :in Act which was not noticed by the aforesaid decisions. We, therefore, direct that the matter may be placed before the Hon'ble Chief Justice for being heard by a larger Bench consisting of more than three Judges.

5. Section 125 of the CrPC which deals with the right of maintenance reads thus :

Order for maintenance of wives, children and parents

125. (1) If any person having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain -

(a) his wife, unable to maintain herself,

a Magistrate of the first class may, upon proof of such neglect or refusal, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife ..., at such monthly rate not exceeding five hundred rupees in the whole as such Magistrate think fit....

Explanation For the purposes of this Chapter,-

(b) "Wife" includes a woman who has been divorced by, or has obtained a divorce from, her not remarried.

(2) ....

(3) If any person so ordered fails without sufficient cause to comply with the order, any such Magistrate may, for every breach of the older, issue a warrant for levying the amount due in the manner provided for levying fines, and may sentence such person, for the whole or any part of each month's allowance remaining unpaid after the execution of the warrant, to imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month or until payment if sooner made :

Provided....

Provided further that if such person offers to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him and she refuses to live with him, such Magistrate may consider any grounds of refusal stated by her, and may make an order under this section notwithstanding such offer, if he is satisfied that there is just ground for so doing.

Explanation - If a husband has contracted marriage with another woman or keeps a mistress, it shall be considered to be just ground for his wife's refusal to live with him.

6. Section 127(3)(b), on which the appellant has built up the edifice of his defence reads thus:

Alteration in allowance

(2) ....

(3) Where any order has been made under Section 125 in favour of a woman who has been divorced by, or has obtained a divorce from her husband, the Magistrate shall, if he is satisfied that-

(a) ....

(b) the woman has been divorced by her husband and that she has received, whether before or after the date o the said order, the whole of the sum which, under any customary or personal law applicable to the parties, was payable on such divorce, cancel such order,

(i) in the case where such sum was paid before such order, from the date on which such order was made.

(ii) in any other case, from the date of expiry of the period, if any, for which maintenance has been actually paid by the husband to the woman.

7. Under Section 125(1)(a), a person who, having sufficient means, neglects or refuses to maintain his wife who is unable to maintain herself, can be asked by the court to pay a monthly maintenance to her at a rate not exceeding Five Hundred rupees. By Clause (b) of the Explanation to Section 125(1), 'wife' includes a divorced woman who has not remarried. These provisions are too clear and precise to admit of any doubt or refinement. The religion professed by a spouse or by the spouses has no place in the scheme of these provisions Whether the spouses are Hindus or Muslims, Christians or Parsis, pagans or heathens is wholly irrelevant in the application of these provision. The reason for this is axiomatic, in the sense that Section 125 is a part of the code of Criminal Procedure, not of the Civil Laws which define and govern the right and obligations of the parties belonging to particular religions, like the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, the Shariat, or the Parsi Matrimonial Act. Section 125 was enacted in order to provide a quick and summary remedy to a class of persons who are unable to maintain themselves. What difference would it then make as to what is the religion professed by the neglected wife, child or parent ?Neglect by a person of sufficient means to maintain these and the inability of these persons to maintain themselves are the objective are the objective criteria which determine the applicability of Section 125. Such provisions, which are essentially of a prophylactic nature, across the barriers of religion. True that they do not supplant the personal law of the parties or the state of the personal law y which they are governed, cannot have any repercussion on the applicability of such laws unless, within the framework of the Constitution, their application is restricted to a defined category of religious groups or classes. The liability imposed by Section 125 to maintain close relatives who are indigent is founded upon individual's obligation to the society to prevent vagrancy and destitution. That is the moral edict of the law and morality cannot be clubbed with religion. Clause (b) of the Explanation to Section 125(1), which defines 'wife' as including a divorced wife, contains no words of limitation to justify the exclusion of Muslim women from its scope. Section 125 is truly secular in character.

8. Sir James Fitz James Stephen who piloted the CrPC, 1872 as a Legal Member of the Viceroy's Council, described the precursor of Chapter IX of the Code in which Section 125 occurs, as 'a mode of preventing vagrancy or at least of preventing its consequences. In Jagir kaur v. Jaswant Singh MANU/SC/0242/1963 : [1964]2SCR73 , 84 Subba Rao, J. speaking for the Court said that Chapter XXXVI of the Code of 1898 which contained Section 488, corresponding to Section 125, "intends to serve a social purpose". In Nanak Chand v. Shri Chandra Kishore Agarwala MANU/SC/0481/1969 : 1970CriLJ522 Sikri, J., while pointing out that the scope of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act. 1956 and that of Section 488 was different, said that Section 488 was "applicable to all persons belonging to all religions and has no relationship with the personal law of the parties".

9. Under Section 488 of the Code of 1898, the wife's right to maintenance depended upon the continuance of her married status. Therefore, that right could be defeated by the husband by divorcing her unilaterally as under the Muslim Personal Law, or by obtaining a decree of divorce against her under the other systems of law. It was in order to remove this hardship that the Joint Committee recommended that the benefit of the provisions regarding maintenance should be extended to a divorced woman, so long as she has not remarried after the divorce. That is the genesis of Clause (b) of the Explanation to Section 125(1), which provides that 'wife' includes a woman who has been divorced by, or has obtained a divorce from her husband and has not remarried. Even in the absence of this provision, the courts had held under the Code of 1898 that the provisions regarding maintenance were independent of the personal law governing the parties. The induction of the definition of 'wife, so as to include a divorced woman lends even greater weight to that conclusion. 'Wife' means a wife as defined, irrespective of the religion professed by her or by her husband. Therefore, a divorced Muslim woman, so long as she has not remarried, is a 'wife' for the purpose of Section 125. The statutory right available to her under that section is unaffected by the provisions of the personal law applicable to her.

10. The conclusion that the right conferred by Section 125 can be exercised irrespective of the personal law of the parties is fortified, especially in regard to Muslims, by the provision contained in the Explanation to the second proviso to Section 125(3) of the Code. That proviso says that if the husband offers to maintain his wife on condition that she should live with him, and she refuses to live with him, the Magistrate may consider any grounds of refusal stated by her, and may make an order of maintenance notwithstanding the offer of the husband, if he is satisfied that there is a just ground for passing such an order.

According to the Explanation to the proviso :

If a husband has contracted marriage with another woman or keeps a mistress, it shall be considered to be just ground for his wife's refusal to live with him.

11. It is too well- known that "A. Mahomedan may have as many as four wives at the same time but not more. If he marries a fifth wife when he has already four, the marriage is not void, but merely irregular". (See Mulla's Mahomedan Law, 18th Edition, paragraph 255, page 285, quoting Baillie's Digest of Moohummudan Law; and Ameer Ali's Mahomedan Law, 5th Edition, Vol. II, page 280). The explanation confers upon the wife the right to refuse to live with her husband if he contracts another marriage, leave alone 3 or 4 other marriages. It shows, unmistakably, that Section 125 overrides the personal law, if is any there conflict between the two.

12. The whole of this discussion as to whether the right conferred by Section 125 prevails over the personal law of the parties, has proceeded on the assumption that there is a conflict between the provisions of that section and those of the Muslim Personal Law. The argument that by reason of Section 2 of the Shariat Act, XXVI of 1937, the rule of decision in matters relating, inter alia, to maintenance "shall be the Muslim Persona" Law" also proceed upon a similar assumption. We embarked upon the decision of the question of priority between the Code and the Muslim Personal Law on the assumption the it there was a conflict between the two because, in so far as it lies in our power, we wanted to set at rest, once for all, the question whether Section 125 would prevail over the personal law of the parties, in cases where they are in conflict.

13. The next logical step to take is to examine the question, on which considerable argument has been advanced before us, whether there is any conflict between the provisions of Section 125 and those of the Muslim Personal Law on the liability of the Muslim husband to provide for the maintenance of his divorced wife.

14. The contention of the husband and of the interveners who support him is that, under the Muslim Personal Law, the liability of the husband to maintain a divorced wife is limited to the period of iddat in support of this proposition, they rely upon the statement of law on the point contained in certain text books. In Mulla's Mahomedan Law (18th Edition, para 279, page 301), there is a statement to the effect that, "After divorce, the wife is entitled to maintenance during the period of iddat". At page 302, the learned author says :

Where an order is made for the maintenance of a wife under Section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the wife is afterwards divorced, the order ceases to operate on the expiration of the period of iddat. The result is that a Mahomedan may defeat an order made against him under Section 488 by divorcing his wife immediately after the order is made. His obligation to maintain his wife will cease in that case on the completion of her iddat.

15. Tyabji's Muslim law (4th Edition, para 304, pages 268- 269) contains the statement that :

On the expiration of the iddat after talaq, the wife's right to maintenance ceases, whether based on the Muslim Law, or on an order under the Criminal Procedure Code.

According to Dr Paras Diwan :

When a marriage is dissolved by divorce the wife is entitled to maintenance during the period of iddat.... On the expiration of the period of iddat, the wife is not entitled to any maintenance under any circumstances. Muslim Law does not recognise any obligation on the part of a man to maintain a wife whom he had divorced.

16. These statements in the text book are inadequate to establish the proposition that the Muslim husband is not under an obligation to provide for the maintenance of his divorced wife, who is unable to maintain herself. One must have regard to the entire conspectus of the Muslim Personal Law in order to determine the extent both, in quantum and in duration, of the husband's liability to provide for the maintenance of an indigent wife who has been divorced by him. Under that law, the husband is bound to pay Mahr to the wife as a mark of respect to her. True, that he may settle any amount he likes by way of dower upon his wife, which cannot be less than 10 Dirhams, which is equivalent to three or four rupees (Mulla's Mahomedan Law, 18th Edition, para 286, page 308). But, one must have regard to the realities of life Mahr is a mark of respect to the wife. The sum settled by way of Main is generally expected to take care of the ordinary requirements of the wife, during the marriage and after. Hut these provisions of the Muslim Personal Law do not countenance cases in which the wife is unable to maintain herself after the divorce. We consider it not only incorrect but unjust, to extend the scope of the statements extracted above to cases in which a divorced wife is unable to maintain herself. We are of the opinion that the application of those statements of law must be restricted to that class of cases, in which there is no possibility of vagrancy or destitution arising out of the indigence of the divorced wife.

We are not concerned here with the broad and general question whether a husband is liable to maintain his wife, which includes a divorced wife, in all circumstances and at all events. That is not the subject matter of Section 125. That section deals with cases in which, a person who is possessed of sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain, amongst others, his wife who is unable to maintain herself. Since the Muslim Personal Law, which limits the husband's liability to provide for the maintenance of the divorced wife to the period of iddat, does not contemplate or countenance the situation envisaged by Section 125, it would be wrong to hold that the Muslim husband, according to his personal law, is not under an obligation to provide maintenance, beyond the period of iddat, to his divorced wife who is unable to maintain herself. The argument of the appellant that, according to the Muslim Persona! Law, his liability to provide for the maintenance of his divorced wife is limited to the period of iddat despite the fact she is unable to maintain herself, has therefore to be rejected. The true position is that, if the divorced wife is able to maintain herself, the husband's liability to provide maintenance for her ceases with the expiration of the period of iddat. If she is unable to maintain herself, she is entitled to take recourse to Section 125 of the Code. The outcome of this discussion is that there is no conflict between the provisions of Section 125 and those of the Muslim Personal Law on the question of the Muslim husband's obligation to provide maintenance for a divorced wife who is unable to maintain herself.

17. There can be no greater authority on this question than the Holy Quran, "The Quran, the Sacred Book of Islam, comprises in its 114 Suras or chapters, the total of revelations believed to have been communicated to Prophet Muhammed, as a final expression of God's will". (The Quran Interpreted by Arthur J. Arberry). Verses (Aiyats) 241 and 242 of the Quran show that according to the Prophet, there is an obligation on Muslim husbands to provide for their divorced wives. The Arabic version of those Aiyats and their English translation are reproduced below :

(See 'The Holy Quran' by Yusuf Ali, Page 96).

18. The correctness of the translation of these Aiyats is not in dispute except that, the contention of the appellant is that the word 'Mata' in Aiyat No. 241 means 'provision' and not 'maintenance'. That is a distinction without a difference. Nor are we impressed by the shuffling plea of the All India Muslim Personal Law Board that, in Aiyat 241, the exhortation is to the 'Mutta Queena', that is, to the more pious and the more God- fearing, not to the general run of the Muslims, the 'Muslminin'. In Aiyat 242, the Quran says : "It is expected that you will use your commonsense".

19. The English version of the two Aiyats in Muhammad Zafrullah Khan's 'The Quran' (page 38) reads thus :

For divorced women also there shall be provision according to what is fair. This is an obligation binding on the righteous. Thus does Allah make His commandments clear to you that you may understand.

20. The translation of Aiyats 240 to 242 in 'The Meaning of the Quran' (Vol. I, published by the Board of Islamic Publications, Delhi) reads thus.

240- 241.

Those of you, who shall die and leave wives behind them, should make a will to the effect that they should be provided with a year's maintenance and should not be turned out of their homes. But if they leave their homes of their own accord, you shall not be answerable for whatever they choose for themselves in a fair way ; Allah is All- Powerful, All- wise. Likewise, the divorced women should also be given something in accordance with the known fair standard. This is an obligation upon the God- fearing people.

242

Thus Allah makes clear His commandments for you :

It is expected that you will use your commonsense.

21. In "The Running Commentary of The Holy Quran" (1964 Edition) by Dr. Allamah Khadim Rahmani Nuri, Aiyat No. 241 is translated thus :

241

And for the divorced woman (also) a provision (should be made) with fairness (in addition to her dower) ; (This is) a duty (incumbent) on the reverent.

22. In "The Meaning of the Glorious Quran, Text and Explanatory Translation", by Marmaduke Pickthall, (Taj Company Ltd., karachi), Aiyat 241 is translated thus :

241.

For divorced women a provision in kindness : A duty for those who ward oil (evil).

23. Finally, in "The Quran Interpreted" by Arthur J. Arberry. Aiyat 241 is translated thus :

241.

There shall be for divorced women provision honourable an obligation on the god fearing ."

So God makes clear His signs for you : Happily you will understand.

24. Dr. K.R. Nuri in his book quoted above : 'The Running Commentary of the Holy Quran", says in the preface :

Belief in Islam does not mean mere confession of the existence of something. It really means the translation of the faith into action. Words without deeds carry no meaning in Islam. Therefore the term "believe and do good" has been used like a phrase all over the Quran. Belief in something means that man should inculcate the qualities or carry out the promptings or guidance of that thing in his action. Belief in Allah means that besides acknowledging the existence of the Author of the Universe, we are to show obedience to His commandments....

25. These Aiyats leave no doubt that the Quran imposes an obligation on the Muslim husband to make provision for or to provide maintenance to the divorced wife. The contrary argument does less than justice to the teaching of the Quran, As observed by Mr. M. Hidayatullah in his introduction to Mulla's Mahomedan Law, the Quran is Al- furqan' that is one showing truth from falsehood and right from wrong.

26. The second plank of the appellant's argument is that the respondent's application under Section 125 is liable to be dismissed because of the provision contained in Section 127(3)(b). That section provides, to the extent material, that the Magistrate shall cancel the order of maintenance, if the wife is divorced by the husband and, she has received "the whole of the sum which, under any customary or personal law applicable to the parties, was payable on such divorce". That raises the question as to whether, under the Muslim Personal Law, any sum is payable to the wife 'on divorce'. We do not have to grope in the dark and speculate as to which kind of a sum this can be because, the only argument advanced before us on behalf of the appellant and by the interveners supporting him, is that Mahr is the amount payable by the husband to the wife on divorce. We find it impossible to accept this argument.

27. In Mulla's principles of Mahomedan Law (18th Edition, page 308), Mahr or Dower is defined in paragraph 285 as "a sum of money or other property which the wife is entitled to receive from the husband in consideration of the marriage." Dr. Paras Diwan in his book, "Muslim Law in Modern India" (1982 Edition, page 60), criticises this definition on the ground that Mahr is not payable "in consideration of marriage" but is an obligation imposed by law on the husband as a mark of respect for the wife, as is evident from the fact that non- specification of Mahr at the time of marriage does not affect the validity of the marriage. We sued not enter into this controversy and indeed, Mulla's book itself contains the further statement at page 308 that the word 'consideration' is not used in the sense in which it is used in the Contract Act and that under the Mohammedan Law, Dower is m obligation imposed upon the husband as a mark of respect for the wife. We are concerned to find whether Mahr is an amount payable by the husband to the wife on divorce. Some confusion is caused by the fact that, under the Muslim Personal Law, the amount of Mahr is usually split into two parts, one of which is called "prompt", which is payable on demand, and the other is called "deferred", which is payable on the dissolution of the marriage by death or by divorce. But, the fact that deferred Mahr is payable at the time of the dissolution of marriage, cannot justify the conclusion that it is payable 'on divorcel. Even assuming that, in a given case, the entire amount of Mahr is of the deferred variety payable on the dissolution of marriage by divorce, it cannot be said that it is an amount which is payable on divorce. Divorce maybe a convenient or identifiable point of time at which the deferred amount has to be paid by the husband to the wife. But, the payment of the amount is not occasioned by the divorce, which is what is meant by the expression 'on divorce', which occurs in Section 127(3)(b) of the Code. If Mahr is an amount which the wife is entitled to receive from the husband in consideration of the marriage, that is the very opposite of the amount being payable in consideration of divorce. Divorce dissolves the Marriage. Therefore no amount which is payable in consideration of the marriage can possibly be described as an amount payable in consideration of divorce. The alternative premise that Mahr is an obligation imposed upon the husband as a mark of respect for the wife, is wholly detrimental to the stance that it is an amount payable to the wife on divorce. A man may marry a woman for love, looks, learning or nothing at all. And he may settle a sum upon her as a mark of respect for her. But he does not divorce her as a mark of respect. Therefore, a sum payable to the wife out of respect cannot be a sum payable 'on divorce'.

28. In an appeal from a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court, the Privy Council in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaide Bibi 43 I. A. 294 summed up the nature and character of Mahr in these words :

Dower is an essential incident under the Muslim Law to the status of marriage; to such an extent that is so that when it is unspecified at the time the marriage is contracted, the law declares that it must be adjudged on definite principles. Regarded as a consideration for the marriage, it is, in theory, payable before consummation; but the law allows its division into two parts, one of which is called "prompt" payable before the wife can be called upon to enter the conjugal domicile ; the other "deferred", payable on the dissolution of the contract by the death of either of the parties or by divorce.

29. This statement of law was adopted in another decision of the Privy Council in Syed Sabir Husain v. Farzand Hasan 65 I. A. 119. It is not quite appropriate and seems invidious to describe any particular Bench of a court as "strong" but, we cannot resist the temptation of mentioning that Mr. Syed Ameer Ali was a party to the decision in Hamira Bibi while Sir Shadi Lal was a party to the decision in Syed Sabir Husain. These decisions show that the payment of dower may be deferred to a future date as, for example, death or divorce. But, that does not mean that the payment of the deferred dower is occasioned by these events.

30. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the proceedings of the Rajya Sabha dated December 18, 1973 (volume 86, column 186), when the bill which led to the Code of 1973 was on the anvil, would show that the intention of the Parliament was to leave the provisions of the Muslim Personal Law untouched. In this behalf, reliance is placed on the following statement made by Shri Ram Niwas Mirdha, the then Minister of State, Home Affairs :

Dr. Vyas very learnedly made certain observations that a divorced wife under the Muslim law deserves to be treated justly and she should get what is her equitable or legal due. Well, I will not go into this, but say that we would not like to interfere with the customary law of the Muslims through the Criminal Procedure Code. If there is a demand for change in the Muslim Personal Law, it should actually come from the Muslim Community itself and we should wait for the Muslim public opinion on these matters to crystalise before we try to change this customary right or make changes in their personal law. Above all, this is hardly, the place where we could do so. But as I tried to explain, the provision in the Bill is an advance over the previous situation. Divorced women have been included and brought within the admit of Clause 125, but a limitation is being imposed by this amendment to Clause 127, namely, that the maintenance orders would ceases to operate after the amounts due to her under the personal law are paid to her. This is a healthy compromise between what has been termed a conservative interpretation of law or a concession to conservative public opinion and liberal approach to the problem. We have made an advance and not tried to transgress what are the personal rights of Muslim women. So this, I think, should satisfy Hon. Members that whatever advance we have made is in the right direction and it should be welcomed.

31. It does appear from this speech that the Government did not desire to interfere with the personal law of the Muslim through the Criminal Procedure Code. It wanted the Muslim community to take the lead and the Muslim public opinion to crystalise on the reforms in their personal law. However, we do not concerned with the question whether the Government did or did not desire to bring about changes in the Muslim Personal Law by enacting Sections 125 and 127 of the Code. As we have said earlier and, as admitted by the Minister, the Government did introduce such a change by defining the expression 'wife' to include a divorced wife. It also introduced another significant change by providing that the fact that the husband has contracted marriage with another woman is a just ground for the wife's refusal to live with him. The provision contained in Section 127(3)(b) may have been introduces because of the misconception that dower is an amount payable "on divorce". But, that cannot convert an amount payable as a mark of respect for the wife into an amount payable on divorce.

32. It must follow from this discussion, unavoidably a little too long, that the judgments of this Court in Bui Tahira (Krishna Iyer J., Tulzapurkar J. and Pathak J.) and fazlunbi (Krishna Iyer, J.,) one of us, Chinnappa Reddy J. and A. P. Sen J.) are correct. Justice Krishna Iyer who spoke for the Court in both these cases, relied greatly on the teleological and schematic method of interpretation so as to advance the purpose of the law. These constructional techniques have their own importance in the interpretation of statutes meant to ameliorate the conditions of suffering sections of the society. We have attempted to show that taking the language of the statute as one finds it, there is no escape from the conclusion that a divorced Muslim wife is entitled to apply for maintenance under Section 125 and that, Mahr is not a sum which, under the Muslim Personal Law, is payable on divorce.

33. Though Bai Tahira was correctly decided, we would like, respectfully, to draw attention to an error which has crept in the judgment There is a statement at page 80 of the report, in the context of Section 127(3)(b), that "payment of Mahr money, as a customary discharge, is with in the cognizance of that provision". We have taken the view that Mahr, not being payable on divorce, does not fall within the meaning of that provision.

34. It is a matter of deep regret that some of the interveners who supported the appellant, took up an extreme position by displaying an unwarranted zeal to defeat the right to maintenance of women who are unable to maintain themselves. The written submissions of the All India Muslim Personal Law Board have gone to the length of asserting that it is irrelevant to inquire as to how a Muslim divorce should maintain herself. The facile answer of the Board is (that the Personal Law has devised the system of Mahr to meet the requirements of women and if a woman is indigent, she must look to her relations, including nephew and cousins, to support her. This is a most unreasonable view of law as well as life. We appreciate that Begum Temur Jehan, a social worker who has been working in association with the Delhi City Women's Association for the uplift of Muslim women, intervened to support Mr. Daniel Latifi who appeared on behalf of the wife.

35. It is also a matter of regret that Article 44 of our Constitution has remained a dead letter It provides that "The State shall endeavour to secure for the citizens a uniform civil code throughout the territory of India". There is no evidence of any official activity for framing a common civil code for the country. A belief seems to have gained ground that it is for the Muslim community to take a lead in the matter of reforms of their persona law. A common Civil Code will help the cause of national integration by removing disparate loyalties to laws which have conflicting ideologies. No community is likely to bell the cat by making gratuitous concessions on this issue. It is the State which is charged with the duty of securing a uniform civil code for the citizens of the country and, unquestionably, it has the legislative competence to do so. A counsel in the case whispered, somewhat audibly, that legislative competence is one thing, the political courage to use that competence is quite another. We understand the difficulties involved in bringing persons of different faiths and persuasions on a common platform. But, a beginning has to be made if the Constitution is to have any meaning. Inevitably, the role of the reformer has to be assumed by the courts because, it is beyond the endurance of sensitive minds to allow injustice to be suffered when it is so palpable. But piecemeal attempts of courts to bridge the gap between personal laws cannot take the place of a common Civil Code. Justice to all is a far more satisfactory way of dispensing justice than justice from case to case.

36. Dr. Tahir Mahmood in his book 'Muslim Personal Law' (1977 Edition, pages 200- 202), has made a powerful plea for framing a uniform Civil Code for all citizens of India. He say: "In pursuance of the goal of secularism, the State must stop administering religion- based personal laws". He wants the lead to come from the majority community but, we should have, thought that, lead or no lead, the State must act. It would be useful to quote the appeal made by the author to the Muslim community :

Instead of wasting their energies in exerting theological and political pressure in order to secure an "immunity" for their traditional personal law from the stated legislative jurisdiction, the Muslim will do well to begin exploring and demonstrating how the true Islamic laws, purged of their time- worn and anachronistic interpretations, can enrich the common civil code of India.

37. At a Seminar held on October 18, 1980 under the auspices of the Department of Islamic and Comparative Law, Indian Institute of Islamic Studies New Delhi he also made and appeal to the Muslim community to display by their conduct a correct understanding of Islamic concepts on marriage and divorce (See Islam and Comparative Law Quarterly, April- June, 1981, page 146).

38. Before we conclude, we would like to draw attention to the Report of the Commission on marriage and Family Laws, which was appointed by the Government of Pakistan by a Resolution dated August 4, 1955. The answer of the Commission to Question No. 5 (page 1215 of the Report) is that a large number of middle- aged women who are being divorced without rhyme or reason should not be thrown on the streets without a roof over their heads and without any mean; of sustaining themselves and their children.

39. The Report concludes thus :

In the words of Allama Iqbal, "the question which is likely to confront Muslim countries in the near future, is whether the law of Islam is capable of evolution- a question which will require great intellectual effort, and is sure to be answered in the affirmative.

40. For these reasons, we dismiss the appeal and confirm the judgment of the High Court. The appellant will pay the costs of the appeal to respondent 1, which we quantify at rupees ten thousand. It is needless to add that it would be open to the respondent to make an application under Section 127(1) of the Code for increasing the allowance of maintenance granted to her on proof of a change in the circumstances as envisaged by that section.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 332 of 1977

Decided On: 06.10.1978

Bai Tahira Vs. Ali Hussain Fidaalli Chothia and Ors.

Back to Section 125 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Back to Section 127 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

R.S. Pathak, V.D. Tulzapurkar and V.R. Krishna Iyer, JJ.

JUDGMENT

V.R. Krishna Iyer, J.

1. In this appeal, by special leave, we are called upon to interpret a benign provision enacted to ameliorate the economic condition of neglected wives and discarded divorcees, namely, Section 125, Cr.P.C.

2. Welfare laws must be so read as to be effective delivery systems of the salutary objects sought to be served by the Legislature and when the beneficiaries are the weaker sections, like destitute women, the spirit of Article 15(3) of the Constitution must be light the meaning of the Section. The Constitution is a pervasive omnipresence brooding over the meaning and transforming the values of every measure. So, Section 125 and sister clauses must receive a compassionate expansion of sense that the words used permit.

The Brief Facts

3. The respondent (husband) married the appellant (wife) as a second wife, way back in 1956, and a few years later had a son by her. The initial warmth vanished and the jealousies of a triangular situation erupted, marring mutual affection. The respondent divorced the appellant around July 1962. A suit relating to a flat in which the husband had housed the wife resulted in a consent decree which also settled the marital disputes. For instance, it recited that the respondent had transferred the suit premises, namely, a flat in Bombay, to the appellant and also the shares of the Cooperative Housing Society which built the flat concerned. There was a reference to mehar money (Rs. 5,000/- and 'iddat' money, Rs. 180/-) which was also stated to have been adjusted by the compromise terms.

4. There was a clause in the compromise :

The plaintiff declares that she has now no claim or right whatsoever against the defendant or against the estate and the properties of the defendant.

And another term in the settlement was that the appellant had by virtue of the compromise become the absolute owner of the flat and various deposits in respect of the said flat made with the cooperative housing society.

5. For some time there was flickering improvement in the relations between the quondam husband and the quondam wife and they lived together. Thereafter, again they separated, became entranged. The appellant, finding herself in financial straits and unable to maintain herself, moved the magistrate under Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, for a monthly allowance for the maintenance of herself and her child. She proceeded on the footing that she was still a wife while the respondent rejected this status and asserted that she was a divorce and therefore ineligible for maintenance. The Magistrate who tried the petition for maintenance held that the appellant was a subsisting wife and awarded monthly maintenance of Rs. 300/- for the son and Rs. 400/- for the mother for their subsistence, taking due note of the fact that the cost of living in Bombay, where the parties lived, was high, and that the respondent had provided residential accommodation to the appellant.

6. This order was challenged before the sessions Judge by the aggrieved husband, who on a strange view of the law that the court, under Section 125, had no jurisdiction to consider whether the applicant was a wife, dismissed the petition in allowance of the appeal. The High Court deigned to bestow little attention on the matter and summarily dismissed a revision petition. This protracted and fluctuating litigation misfortune has led to the appeal, by special leave, before this Court.

The Questions Mooted

7. Shri Bhandare appearing for the appellant contended that the Courts below had surprisingly forgotten the plain provision in the Explanation (b) to Section 125(1) of the Code, which reads :

"wife" includes a woman who has been divorced by, or has obtained a divorce from, her husband and has not remarried.

8. On this foundation, he urged that accepting the contention of the respondent that the appellant was a divorcee, his client was still entitled to an allowance. This is obviously beyond dispute on a simple reading of the sub- section and it is curious how this innovative and sensitive provision with a benignant disposition towards destitute divorcees has been overlooked by all the courts below. We hold that every divorce otherwise eligible, is entitled to the benefit of maintenance allowance and the dissolution of the marriage makes no difference to this right under the current Code. In the normal course, an order for maintenance must follow, the quantum having been determined by the learned Magistrate at the trial level.

9. However, Shri Sanghi, appearing for the respondent, sought to sustain the order in his favour on three grounds. They are of public importance since the affected party in such a fact- situation is the neglected divorcee. He first argued that Section 125(4) would apply in the absence of proof that the lady was not living separately by mutual consent. His next plea was that there must be proof of neglect to maintain to attract Section 125 and his third contention was that there was a settlement by consent decree in 1962 whereby the mehar money had been paid and all claims adjusted, and so no claim for maintenance could survive. The third contention is apparently based upon a contractual arrangement in the consent decree read with Section 127(3)(b) which reads :

(b) the woman has been divorced by her husband and that she has received, whether before or after the date of the said order, the whole of the sum which, under any customary or personal law applicable to the parties, was payable on such divorce, cancel such order, -

(i) in the case where such sum was paid before such order, from the date on which such order was made.

(ii) in any other case, from the date of expiry of the period, if any, for which maintenance has been actually paid by the husband to the woman;

We must state, however, that there was no specific plea, based upon the latter provision, set up anywhere in the courts below or urged before us. But if one were to locate a legal ground to raise the contention that the liability to pay maintenance had ceased on account of the payment of mehar, it is Section 127(3) of the Code. So we must deal with the dual sub- heads of the third ground.

10. The meaning of meanings is derived from values in a given society and its legal system. Article 15(3) has compelling, compassionate relevance in the context of Section 125 and the benefit of doubt, if any in statutory interpretation belongs to the ill- used wife and the derelict divorcee. This social perspective granted, the resolution of all the disputes projected is easy. Surely, Parliament, in keeping with Article 15(3) and deliberate by design, made a special provision to help women in distress cast away by divorce. Protection against moral and material abandonment manifest in Article 39 is part of social and economic justice, specificated in Article 38, fulfilment of which is fundamental to the governance of the country (Article 37). From this coign of vantage we must view the printed text of the particular Code.

11. Section 125 requires, as a sine qua non for its application, neglect by husband or father. The magistrate's order proceeds on neglect to maintain; the sessions judge has spoken nothing to the contrary; and the High Court has not spoken at all. Moreover, the husband has not examined himself to prove that he has been giving allowances to the divorced wife. His case, on the contrary, is that she has forfeited her claim because of divorce and the consent decree. Obviously, he has no case of non- neglect. His plea is his right to ignore. So the basic condition of neglect to maintain is satisfied. In this generous jurisdiction, a broader perception and appreciation of the facts and their bearing must govern the verdict not chopping little logic or tinkering with burden of proof.

12. The next submission is that the absence of mutual consent to live separately must be made out if the hurdle of Section 125(4) is to be overcome. We see hardly any force in this plea. The compulsive conclusion from a divorce by a husband and his provision of a separate residence as evidenced by the consent decree fills the bill. Do divorcees have to prove mutual consent to live apart? Divorce painfully implies that the husband orders her out of the conjugal home. If law has nexus with life this argument is still- born.

13. The last defence, based on mehar payment, merits more serious attention. The contractual limb of the contention must easily fail. The consent decree of 1962 resolved all disputes and settled all claims then available. But here is a new statutory right created as a projection of public policy by the Code of 1973, which could not have been in the contemplation of the parties when in 1962, they entered into a contract to adjust their then mutual rights. No settlement of claims which does not have the special statutory right of the divorcee under Section 125 can operate to negate that claim.

14. Nor can Section 127 rescue the respondent from his obligation. Payment of mehar money, as a customary discharge, is within the cognisance of that provision. But what was the amount of mehar ? Rs. 5000/- , interest from which could not keep the woman's body and soul together for a day, even in that city where 40% of the population are reported to live on pavements, unless she was ready to sell her body and give up her soul? The point must be clearly understood that the scheme of the complex of provisions in Chapter IX has a social purpose. Ill- used wives and desperate divorcees shall not be driven to material and moral dereliction to seek sanctuary in the streets. This traumatic horror animates the amplitude of Section 127. Where the husband, by customary payment at the time of divorce, has adequately provided for the divorce, a subsequent series of recurrent doles is contra- indicated and the husband liberated. This is the teleological interpretation, the sociological decoding of the text of Section 127. The keynote thought is adequacy of payment which will take reasonable care of her maintenance.

15. The payment of illusory amounts by way of customary or personal law requirement will be considered in the reduction of maintenance rate but cannot annihilate that rate unless it is a reasonable substitute. The legal sanctity of the payment is certified by the fulfilment of the social obligation, not by a ritual exercise rooted in custom. No construction which leads to frustration of the statutory project can secure validation if the court is to pay true homage to the Constitution. The only just construction of the section is that Parliament intended divorcees should not derive a double benefit. If the first payment by way of mehar or ordained by custom has a reasonable relation to the object and is a capitalised substitute for the order under Section 125 not mathematically but fairly- then Section 127(3)(b) subserves the goal and relieves the obligor, not pro tanto but wholly. The purpose of the payment 'under any customary or personal law' must be to obviate destitution of the divorcee and to provide her with wherewithal to maintain herself. The whole scheme of Section 127(3)(b) is manifestly to recognise the substitute maintenance arrangement by lump sum payment organised by the custom of the community or the personal law of the parties. There must be a rational relation between the sum so paid and its potential as provision for maintenance. To interpret otherwise is to stultify the project. Law is dynamic and its meaning cannot be pedantic but purposeful. The proposition, therefore, is that no husband can claim under Section 127(3)(b) absolution from this obligation under Section 125 towards a divorced wife except on proof of payment of a sum stipulated by customary or personal law whose quantum is more or less sufficient to do duty for maintenance allowance.

16. The conclusion that we therefore reach is that the appeal should be allowed and it is hereby allowed, and the order of the trial court restored.

Bhupinder Singh Vs. Daljit Kaur

Back to Section 127 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.P. Sen, P.N. Shinghal and V.R. Krishna Iyer, JJ.

ORDER

V.R. Krishna Iyer, J.

1. A short narrative of the facts is necessary to explore and explode the submission that a substantial question of law arises, which merits grant of leave under Article 136 of the Constitution. The respondent is the wife of the petitioner. She moved the Magistrate, having jurisdiction over the subject- matter, for grant of maintenance under Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Court awarded maintenance in a sum of Rs. 250/- per mensem but the order was made ex parte since the petitioner did not appear in court. The motion for setting aside the ex parte order was dismissed whereupon a criminal revision was filed by the husband before the High Court. During the pendency of the said petition a compromise was entered into between the parties as a result of which the wife resumed cohabitation with the husband. This resumption of conjugal life was followed by an application by the wife (respondent) praying that her application for maintenance be dismissed and the execution proceedings for recovery of arrears of maintenance be withdrawn. Apparently, on this basis the trial court did not proceed to recover arrears of maintenance. But as the record now stands, the order for maintenance remains. That has not been set aside and must be treated as subsisting. The High Court apparently dismissed the revision petition on the score that the parties had compromised the dispute.

2. Later developments were not as smooth as expected. The wife was betrayed, because her allegation is that her husband is keeping a mistress making it impossible for her to live in the conjugal home. Naturally, she proceeded to enforce the order for maintenance. This was resisted by the petitioner (husband) on the ground that resumption of cohabitation, after the original order for maintenance, revoked the said order. This plea having been rejected right through, the petitioner has come up to this Court seeking leave to appeal. The short question of law pressed before us is that the order for maintenance under Section 125 of the Code is superseded by the subsequent living of the wife with the husband and is unavailable for enforcement.

3. Counsel has relied on a ruling of the Madras High Court in MANU/TN/0169/1960 : AIR1960Mad515 . The holding in that case is that resumption of cohabitation puts an end to the order of maintenance. The learned Judge observed;

On the authority of the above decisions I must hold in this case that there was a reunion for some time and that put an end to the order under Section 488 Cr.P.C. If the wife separated again from the husband, then she must file another petition, a fresh cause of action, and obtain an order if she satisfied the Court that there is sufficient reason to leave her husband and that he neglected to maintain her.

4. To the same effect is the decision of the Andhra High Court reported in 1955 Andhra Law Times Reports (Criminal) Page 244. The head note there reads :

If a wife who has obtained an order of maintenance under Section 488 rejoins her husband and lives with him, the order is revoked and cannot be enforced subsequently, if they fall out again. If there are fresh grounds, such as would entitle her to obtain maintenance under Section 488, it is open to her to invoke the jurisdiction of court once again for the same relief.

5. An earlier Rangoon case MANU/RA/0120/1930 : (A.I.R. 1931 Rangoon 89) as lends support to this proposition.

6. A contrary position has found favour with the Lahore High Court reported in MANU/LA/0070/1931 : A.I.R. 1932 Lah.115. The facts of that case have close similarity to the present one and the head- note brings out the ratio with sufficient clarity. It reads :

7. Shadi Lal, C.J. observed :

Now in the present case the compromise, as pointed out above, was made out of Court and no order under Section 488, Criminal P.C. was made in pursuance of that compromise, Indeed, the order of the Magistrate allowing maintenance at the rate of Rs. 10 per mensem was neither rescinded nor modified, and no ground has been shown why that order should not be enforced. If the husband places his reliance upon the terms of the compromise, he may have recourse to such remedy in a civil Court as may be open to him. The criminal Court cannot however take cognizance of the compromise and refuse to enforce the order made by it.

This reasoning of the learned Chief Justice appeals to us.

8. We are concerned with a Code which is complete on the topic and any defence against an order passed under Section 125 Crl. P.C. must be founded on a provision in the Code. Section 125 is a provision to protect the weaker of the two parties, namely, the neglected wife. If an order for maintenance has been made against the deserter it will operate until vacated or altered in terms of the provisions of the Code itself. If the husband has a case under Section 125(4)(5) or Section 127 of the Code it is open to him to initiate appropriate proceedings. But until the original order for maintenance is modified or cancelled by a higher court or is varied or vacated in terms of Section 125(4) or (5) or Section 127, its validity survives. It is enforceable and no plea that there has been cohabitation in the interregnum or that there has been a compromise between the parties can hold good as a valid defence. In this view, we hold that the decisions cited before us in favour of the proposition contended for by the petitioner are not good law and that the view taken by Sir Shadi Lal Chief Justice is sound.

9. A statutory order can ordinarily be demolished only in terms of the statute. That being absent in the present case the Magistrate will execute the order for maintenance. Our order does not and shall not be deemed to prejudice the petitioner in any proceedings under the law which he may start to vacate or vary the order for maintenance.

Decided On: 07.10.2010

Civil Appeal No. ... of 2010 (Arising out of SLP (C) No. 15071 of 2009)

Chanmuniya Vs. Chanmuniya Virendra Kumar Singh Kushwaha and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

G.S. Singhvi and A.K. Ganguly, JJ.

JUDGMENT

A.K. Ganguly, J.

1. Leave granted.

2. One Sarju Singh Kushwaha had two sons, Ram Saran (elder son) and Virendra Kumar Singh Kushwaha (younger son and the first respondent). The appellant, Chanmuniya, was married to Ram Saran and had 2 daughters- Asha, the first one, was born in 1988 and Usha, the second daughter, was born in 1990. Ram Saran died on 7.03.1992.

3. Thereafter, the appellant contended that she was married off to the first respondent as per the customs and usages prevalent in the Kushwaha community in 1996. The custom allegedly was that after the death of the husband, the widow was married off to the younger brother of the husband. The appellant was married off in accordance with the local custom of Katha and Sindur. The appellant contended that she and the first respondent were living together as husband and wife and had discharged all marital obligations towards each other. The appellant further contended that after some time the first respondent started harassing and torturing the appellant, stopped her maintenance and also refused to discharge his marital obligations towards her.

4. As a result, she initiated proceedings under Section 125 of the Cr.P.C. for maintenance (No. 20/1997) before the 1st Additional Civil Judge, Mohamadabad, Ghazipur. This proceeding is pending.

5. She also filed a suit (No. 42/1998) for the restitution of conjugal rights under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 in the Court of 1st Additional District Judge, Ghazipur.

6. The Trial Court decreed the suit for restitution of conjugal rights in favour of the appellant on 3.1.2004 as it was of the opinion that the appellant had remarried the first respondent after the death of Ram Saran, and the first respondent had deserted the appellant thereafter. Thus, it directed the first respondent to live with the appellant and perform his marital duties.

7. Hence, the first respondent preferred a first appeal (No. 110/2004) under Section 28 of the Hindu Marriage Act. The main issue in appeal was whether there was any evidence on record to prove that the appellant was the legally wedded wife of the first respondent. The High Court in its judgment dated 28.11.2007 was of the opinion that the essentials of a valid Hindu marriage, as required under Section 7 of the Hindu Marriage Act, had not been performed between the first respondent and the appellant and held that the first respondent was not the husband of the appellant and thus reversed the findings of the Trial Court.

8. Aggrieved by the aforesaid judgment of the High Court, the appellant sought a review of the order dated 28.11.2007. The review petition was dismissed on 23.01.2009 on the ground that there was no error apparent on the face of the record of the judgment dated 28.11.2007.

9. Hence, the appellant approached this Court by way of a special leave petition against the impugned orders dated 28.11.2007 and 23.01.2009.

10. One of the major issues which cropped up in the present case is whether or not presumption of a marriage arises when parties live together for a long time, thus giving rise to a claim of maintenance under Section 125 Cr.P.C. In other words, the question is what is meant by 'wife' under Section 125 of Criminal Procedure Code especially having regard to explanation under Clause (b) of the Section.

11. Thus, the question that arises is whether a man and woman living together for a long time, even without a valid marriage, would raise as in the present case, a presumption of a valid marriage entitling such a woman to maintenance.

12. On the question of presumption of marriage, we may usefully refer to a decision of the House of Lords rendered in the case of Lousia Adelaide Piers and Florence A.M. De Kerriguen v. Sir Henry Samuel Piers (1849) II HLC 331, in which their Lordships observed that the question of validity of a marriage cannot be tried like any other issue of fact independent of presumption. The Court held that law will presume in favour of marriage and such presumption could only be rebutted by strong and satisfactory evidence.

13. In Lieutenant C.W. Campbell v. John A.G. Campbell (1867) Law Rep. 2 HL 269, also known as the Breadalbane case, the House of Lords held that cohabitation, with the required repute, as husband and wife, was proof that the parties between themselves had mutually contracted the matrimonial relation. A relationship which may be adulterous at the beginning may become matrimonial by consent. This may be evidenced by habit and repute. In the instant case both the appellant and the first respondent were related and lived in the same house and by a social custom were treated as husband and wife. Their marriage was solemnized with Katha and Sindur. Therefore, following the ratio of the decisions of the House of Lords, this Court thinks there is a very strong presumption in favour of marriage. The House of Lords again observed in Captain De Thoren v. The Attorney- General (1876) 1 AC 686, that the presumption of marriage is much stronger than a presumption in regard to other facts.

14. Again in Sastry Velaider Aronegary and his wife v. Sembecutty Viagalie and Ors. (1881) 6 AC 364, it was held that where a man and woman are proved to have lived together as man and wife, the law will presume, unless the contrary is clearly proved, that they were living together in consequence of a valid marriage, and not in a state of concubinage.

15. In India, the same principles have been followed in the case of A. Dinohamy v. W.L. Balahamy MANU/PR/0116/1927 : AIR 1927 P.C. 185, in which the Privy Council laid down the general proposition that where a man and woman are proved to have lived together as man and wife, the law will presume, unless, the contrary is clearly proved, that they were living together in consequence of a valid marriage, and not in a state of concubinage.

16. In Mohabbat Ali Khan v. Muhammad Ibrahim Khan and Ors. MANU/PR/0068/1929 : AIR 1929 PC 135, the Privy Council has laid down that the law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and woman have cohabited continuously for number of years.

17. In the case of Gokal Chand v. Parvin Kumari MANU/SC/0077/1952 : AIR 1952 SC 231, this Court held that continuous co- habitation of man and woman as husband and wife may raise the presumption of marriage, but the presumption which may be drawn from long co- habitation is rebuttable and if there are circumstances which weaken and destroy that presumption, the Court cannot ignore them.

18. Further, in the case of Badri Prasad v. Dy. Director of Consolidation and Ors. MANU/SC/0004/1978 : (1978) 3 SCC 527, the Supreme Court held that a strong presumption arises in favour of wedlock where the partners have lived together for a long spell as husband and wife. Although the presumption is rebuttable, a heavy burden lies on him who seeks to deprive the relationship of legal origin.

19. Again, in Tulsa and Ors. v. Durghatiya and Ors. MANU/SC/0424/2008 : 2008 (4) SCC 520, this Court held that where the partners lived together for a long spell as husband and wife, a presumption would arise in favour of a valid wedlock.

20. Sir James Fitz Stephen, who piloted the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872, a legal member of Viceroy's Council, described the object of Section 125 of the Code (it was Section 536 in 1872 Code) as a mode of preventing vagrancy or at least preventing its consequences.

21. Then came the 1898 Code in which the same provision was in Chapter XXXVI Section 488 of the Code. The exact provision of Section 488(1) of the 1898 Code runs as follows:

488. (1) If any person having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife or his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub- divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class may, upon proof of such neglect or refusal, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child, at such monthly rate, not exceeding five hundred rupees in the whole as such Magistrate thinks fit, and to pay the same to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs.

22. In Jagir Kaur and Anr. v. Jaswant Singh MANU/SC/0242/1963 : AIR 1963 SC 1521, the Supreme Court observed with respect to Chapter XXXVI of Cr.P.C. of 1898 that provisions for maintenance of wives and children intend to serve a social purpose. Section 488 prescribes forums for a proceeding to enable a deserted wife or a helpless child, legitimate or illegitimate, to get urgent relief.

23. In Nanak Chand v. Chandra Kishore Aggarwal and Ors. MANU/SC/0481/1969 : 1969 (3) SCC 802, the Supreme Court, discussing Section 488 of the older Cr.P.C, virtually came to the same conclusion that Section 488 provides a summary remedy and is applicable to all persons belonging to any religion and has no relationship with the personal law of the parties.

24. In Captain Ramesh Chander Kaushal v. Veena Kaushal and Ors. MANU/SC/0067/1978 : AIR 1978 SC 1807, this Court held that Section 125 is a reincarnation of Section 488 of the Cr.P.C. of 1898 except for the fact that parents have also been brought into the category of persons entitled for maintenance. It observed that this provision is a measure of social justice specially enacted to protect, and inhibit neglect of women, children, old and infirm and falls within the constitutional sweep of Article 15(3) reinforced by Article 39. Speaking for the Bench Justice Krishna Iyer observed that- "We have no doubt that sections of statutes calling for construction by courts are not petrified print but vibrant words with social functions to fulfill. The brooding presence of the constitutional empathy for the weaker sections like women and children must inform interpretation if it is to have social relevance. So viewed, it is possible to be selective in picking out that interpretation out of two alternatives which advance the cause- the cause of the derelicts." (Para 9 on pages 1809- 10)

25. Again in Vimala (K) v. Veeraswamy (K) MANU/SC/0719/1991 : (1991) 2 SCC 375, a three-Judge Bench of this Court held that Section 125 of the Code of 1973 is meant to achieve a social purpose and the object is to prevent vagrancy and destitution. Explaining the meaning of the word 'wife' the Court held:

...The object is to prevent vagrancy and destitution. It provides a speedy remedy for the supply of food, clothing and shelter to the deserted wife. When an attempt is made by the husband to negative the claim of the neglected wife depicting her as a kept- mistress on the specious plea that he was already married, the court would insist on strict proof of the earlier marriage. The term 'wife' in Section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, includes a woman who has been divorced by a husband or who has obtained a divorce from her husband and has not remarried. The woman not having the legal status of a wife is thus brought within the inclusive definition of the term 'wife' consistent with the objective....

26. Thus, in those cases where a man, who lived with a woman for a long time and even though they may not have undergone legal necessities of a valid marriage, should be made liable to pay the woman maintenance if he deserts her. The man should not be allowed to benefit from the legal loopholes by enjoying the advantages of a de facto marriage without undertaking the duties and obligations. Any other interpretation would lead the woman to vagrancy and destitution, which the provision of maintenance in Section 125 is meant to prevent.

27. The Committee on Reforms of Criminal Justice System, headed by Dr. Justice V.S. Malimath, in its report of 2003 opined that evidence regarding a man and woman living together for a reasonably long period should be sufficient to draw the presumption that the marriage was performed according to the customary rites of the parties. Thus, it recommended that the word 'wife' in Section 125 Cr.P.C. should be amended to include a woman who was living with the man like his wife for a reasonably long period.

28. The Constitution Bench of this Court in Mohammad Ahmed Khan v. Shah Bano Begum and Ors. reported in MANU/SC/0194/1985 : (1985) 2 SCC 556, considering the provision of Section 125 of the 1973 Code, opined that the said provision is truly secular in character and is different from the personal law of the parties. The Court further held that such provisions are essentially of a prophylactic character and cut across the barriers of religion. The Court further held that the liability imposed by Section 125 to maintain close relatives, who are indigent, is founded upon the individual's obligation to the society to prevent vagrancy and destitution.

29. In a subsequent decision, in Dwarika Prasad Satpathy v. Bidyut Prava Dixit and Anr. MANU/SC/0673/1999 : (1999) 7 SCC 675, this Court held that the standard of proof of marriage in a Section 125 proceeding is not as strict as is required in a trial for an offence under Section 494 of IPC. The learned Judges explained the reason for the aforesaid finding by holding that an order passed in an application under Section 125 does not really determine the rights and obligations of parties as the section is enacted with a view to provide a summary remedy to neglected wives to obtain maintenance. The learned Judges held that maintenance cannot be denied where there was some evidence on which conclusions of living together could be reached. (See para 9)

30. However, striking a different note, in Yamunabai Anantrao Adhav v. Anantrao Shivram Adhav and Anr. reported in MANU/SC/0579/1988 : AIR 1988 SC 644, a two- Judge Bench of this Court held that an attempt to exclude altogether personal law of the parties in proceedings under Section 125 is improper. (See para 6). The learned Judges also held (paras 4 & 8) that the expression 'wife' in Section 125 of the Code should be interpreted to mean only a legally wedded wife.

31. Again in a subsequent decision of this Court in Savitaben Somabhat Bhatiya v. State of Gujarat and Ors. reported in MANU/SC/0193/2005 : AIR 2005 SC 1809, this Court held however desirable it may be to take note of plight of an unfortunate woman, who unwittingly enters into wedlock with a married man, there is no scope to include a woman not lawfully married within the expression of 'wife'. The Bench held that this inadequacy in law can be amended only by the Legislature. While coming to the aforesaid finding, the learned Judges relied on the decision in the Yamunabai case (supra).

32. It is, therefore, clear from what has been discussed above that there is a divergence of judicial opinion on the interpretation of the word 'wife' in Section 125.

33. We are inclined to take a broad view of the definition of 'wife' having regard to the social object of Section 125 in the Code of 1973. However, sitting in a two- Judge Bench, we cannot, we are afraid, take a view contrary to the views expressed in the abovementioned two cases.

34. However, law in America has proceeded on a slightly different basis. The social obligation of a man entering into a live- in relationship with another woman, without the formalities of a marriage, came up for consideration in the American courts in the leading case of Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 Cal. 660. In that context, a new expression of 'palimony' has been coined, which is a combination of 'pal' and 'alimony', by the famous divorce lawyer in the said case, Mr. Marvin Mitchelson.

35. In the Marvin case (supra), the plaintiff, Michelle Marvin, alleged that she and Lee Marvin entered into an oral agreement which provided that while "the parties lived together they would combine their efforts and earnings and would share equally any and all property accumulated as a result of their efforts whether individual or combined." The parties allegedly further agreed that Michelle would "render her services as a companion, homemaker, housekeeper and cook." Michelle sought a judicial declaration of her contract and property rights, and sought to impose a constructive trust upon one half of the property acquired during the course of the relationship. The Supreme Court of California held as follows:

(1) The provisions of the Family Law Act do not govern the distribution of property acquired during a non- marital relationship; such a relationship remains subject solely to judicial decision.

(2) The courts should enforce express contracts between non- marital partners except to the extent that the contract is explicitly founded on the consideration of meretricious sexual services.

(3) In the absence of an express contract, the courts should inquire into the conduct of the parties to determine whether that conduct demonstrates an implied contract, agreement of partnership or joint venture, or some other tacit understanding between the parties. The courts may also employ the doctrine of quantum meruit, or equitable remedies such as constructive or resulting trusts, when warranted by the facts of the case.

36. Though in our country, law has not developed on the lines of the Marvin case (supra), but our social context also is fast changing, of which cognizance has to be taken by Courts in interpreting a statutory provision which has a pronounced social content like Section 125 of the Code of 1973.

37. We think the larger Bench may consider also the provisions of the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005. This Act assigns a very broad and expansive definition to the term 'domestic abuse' to include within its purview even economic abuse. 'Economic abuse' has been defined very broadly in sub- explanation (iv) to explanation I of Section 3 of the said Act to include deprivation of financial and economic resources.

38. Further, Section 20 of the Act allows the Magistrate to direct the respondent to pay monetary relief to the aggrieved person, who is the harassed woman, for expenses incurred and losses suffered by her, which may include, but is not limited to, maintenance under Section 125 Cr.P.C. [Section 20(1)(d)].

39. Section 22 of the Act confers upon the Magistrate, the power to award compensation to the aggrieved person, in addition to other reliefs granted under the Act.

40. In terms of Section 26 of the Act, these reliefs mentioned above can be sought in any legal proceeding, before a civil court, family court or a criminal court, affecting the aggrieved person and the respondent.

41. Most significantly, the Act gives a very wide interpretation to the term 'domestic relationship' as to take it outside the confines of a marital relationship, and even includes live- in relationships in the nature of marriage within the definition of 'domestic relationship' under Section 2(f) of the Act.

42. Therefore, women in live- in relationships are also entitled to all the reliefs given in the said Act.

43. We are thus of the opinion that if the abovementioned monetary relief and compensation can be awarded in cases of live- in relationships under the Act of 2005, they should also be allowed in a proceedings under Section 125 of Cr.P.C. It seems to us that the same view is confirmed by Section 26 of the said Act of 2005.

44. We believe that in light of the constant change in social attitudes and values, which have been incorporated into the forward- looking Act of 2005, the same needs to be considered with respect to Section 125 of Cr.P.C. and accordingly, a broad interpretation of the same should be taken.

45. We, therefore, request the Hon'ble Chief Justice to refer the following, amongst other, questions to be decided by a larger Bench. According to us, the questions are:

1. Whether the living together of a man and woman as husband and wife for a considerable period of time would raise the presumption of a valid marriage between them and whether such a presumption would entitle the woman to maintenance under Section 125 Cr.P.C?

2. Whether strict proof of marriage is essential for a claim of maintenance under Section 125 Cr.P.C. having regard to the provisions of Domestic Violence Act, 2005?

3. Whether a marriage performed according to customary rites and ceremonies, without strictly fulfilling the requisites of Section 7(1) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, or any other personal law would entitle the woman to maintenance under Section 125 Cr.P.C.?

46. We are of the opinion that a broad and expansive interpretation should be given to the term 'wife' to include even those cases where a man and woman have been living together as husband and wife for a reasonably long period of time, and strict proof of marriage should not be a pre-condition for maintenance under Section 125 of the Cr.P.C., so as to fulfil the true spirit and essence of the beneficial provision of maintenance under Section 125.

47. We also believe that such an interpretation would be a just application of the principles enshrined in the Preamble to our Constitution, namely, social justice and upholding the dignity of the individual.

MANU/UP/0008/1914

IN THE HIGH COURT OF ALLAHABAD

Decided On: 08.08.1914

Farzand Ali Vs. Hakim Ali

Back to Section 133 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Theodore Caro Pigott, J.

1. This is an application in revision in respect of certain proceedings taken by Magistrate under Section 133 and the succeeding sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The matter appears to have been brought to the notice of the Magistrate by a petition presented by a person of the name of Hakim Ali. That petition stated in substance that Farzand Ali, who is the applicant now before me, had recently enlarged his dwelling- house by making certain constructions which had the effect of obstructing a portion of a public way used by the residents of two villages, and that serious inconvenience was thereby being caused to the petitioner and other residents of the neighbourhood. After notice had issued to Farzand Ali, the latter applied in accordance with law for the appointment of a jury to try the question whether the conditional order issued by the Magistrate for the removal of the alleged obstruction was a reasonable and proper order. Farzand Ali, as he was entitled to do, nominated two jurymen. I note that he nominated two co- religionists of his own. The Magistrate appears to have inquired from Hakim Ali whether he could suggest the names of two other suitable persons to serve on the jury, and thereupon Hakim Ali presented a petition suggesting the names of two Hindu residents of another village The Magistrate then proceeded to nominate a foreman. It has been brought to my notice in the course of argument that the foreman originally nominated by the Magistrate declined to serve, that the Magistrate thereupon nominated another gentleman, a Muhammadan, and that this nomination was objected to on behalf of Farzand Ali. I have not pursued the history of this objection further because no plea is taken in the petition before me with regard to the appointment of the foreman. After the majority of the jury had decided the question referred to them in a sense unfavourable to Farzand Ali, the Magistrate proceeded to make his order absolute in accordance with law. Objection is now taken before this Court that the entire proceedings before the Magistrate, from the date of the order constituting the jury, are illegal and void, by reason of the fact that two of the jurors were appointed on the suggestion of the petitioner Hakim Ali There is authority for this proposition in the cases of Upendra Nath Bhuttacharjee v. Khitish Chandra Bhuttacharjee I.L.R. (1896) Cal. 499, Kailash Chandra Sen v. Ram Lall Mittra I.L.R. (1893) Cal. 869 in some older cases of the same court referred to in the above decisions, and I have also been referred to the case of Mir Imam Abdul Aziz v. Queen Empress Punj. Rec. 1897 Cri. L.J. 4. Now it is certainly expedient that in all proceedings initiated under Section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Magistrate should bear in mind that he is supposed to be acting purely in the interests of the public, and should be on his guard against any tendency to use this section as substitute for litigation in the Civil Courts in order to the settlement of a private dispute. In the present case the question before the Magistrate was whether there had been an obstruction to a public way, to the injury or inconvenience of members of the public entitled to use the same. Hakim Ali had no locus standi in the matter, once he had performed what was perhaps his duty as a good citizen in calling the attention of the Magistrate to the existence of the nuisance. In so far, therefore, as the rulings to which I have been referred lay down the principle that it is expedient that Magistrates should be on their guard against fallowing a proceeding of this sort to assume the character of a private litigation and allowing it to be treated as a dispute to which two private individuals representing opposite interests are the parties, I am in entire accord with the same. I still more emphatically approve of the principle laid down in the Punjab case above referred to, that it would be highly improper on the part of the Magistrate to appoint to serve on a jury of this sort, the friends or supporters of the person at whose instance the proceedings under Chapter X of the Code of Criminal Procedure are being taken. At the same time, it must be remembered that it is often not an easy matter for a Magistrate to secure the services of a foreman and two independent jurymen to undertake in the public interests an inquiry of this sort, it may be in some village distant from head quarters. If the rulings to which I have been referred are supposed to lay down the principle that it is illegal for a Magistrate to address any inquiry t) the person who first came forward to draw his attention to the existence of the alleged public nuisance, with a view to ascertaining the names of respectable and independent residents of the neighbourhood who would be willing to serve on the jury, then lam unable to concur in any such principle. It clearly goes beyond anything, which is to be found in the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure itself, and it also goes beyond the requirements of the effective and impartial administration of justice. The criterion, therefore, which I would apply to a case of this sort, is whether the person at whose instance the proceedings were instituted was allowed to exercise rights not conferred upon him by law, as if he were a party to the litigation, and whether as a matter of fact the jurors nominated by the Magistrate could rightly be described as friends or supporters of the aforesaid person. Even in the cases to which I have been referred it is sufficiently clear that the underlying principle, that the revisional jurisdiction of this Court should be exercised only to correct a manifest failure of justice, was clearly recognized. The record before me does not show that Farzand Ali at any time objected in the court below to the two Hindu jurors who were nominated at the suggestion of Hakim Ali. Even in his petition to this Court he has not suggested, much less proved by affidavit, that these persons could be regarded as friends or supporters of Hakim Ali. I have, therefore, no materials before me which would justify the conclusion that these Hindu jurors were other than respectable and impartial residents of the neighbourhood and suitable persons to have been called upon to act as such; on the contrary, the silence of the applicant in revision justifies the opposite presumption. So far therefore from being prepared to hold that the Magistrate's proceedings were illegal or void, I do not find them to be vitiated by an such impropriety or irregularity as would justify the interference of this Court. The application is therefore dismissed.

Back to Section 144 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Writ Petition Nos. 6890 and 7204 of 1982 and 3491 of 1983

Decided On: 20.10.1983

Acharya Jagdishwaranand Avadhuta and Ors. Vs. Commissioner of Police, Calcutta and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.N. Sen, P.N. Bhagwati and Ranganath Mishra, JJ.

JUDGMENT

Ranganath Misra, J.

1. The petitioner in Writ Petition No. 6890/82 a monk of the Ananda Marga and currently General Secretary, Public Relations Department of the Ananda Marga Pracharak Sangh, has filed this petition under Article 32 of the Constitution for a direction to the Commissioner of Police Calcutta and the State of West Bengal to allow processions to be carried in the public streets and meetings to be held in public places by the followers of the Ananda Marga cult accompanied by the performance of Tandava dance within the State of West Bengal. There are two connected writ petitions being Writ Petition Nos. 7204/82 and 3491/83 by the Diocese Secretary of West Bengal Region and another follower of Ananda Marga. All these Petitions raise this common question and have been heard at a time. For convenience the petition by the General Secretary, Public Relations Department of the Ananda Marga Pracharak Sangh has been treated as the main petition and references in the Judgment have been confined to it.

2. In the original petition certain factual assertions have been made and after counter affidavits were filed several further affidavits have been placed before the Court on behalf of the petitioner and counter affidavits too have been filed. Shorn of unnecessary details, the averments on behalf of the respective contenders are as follows :

3. Shri Pravat Ranjan Sarkar otherwise known as Shri Ananda Murti, founded a socio- spiritual organisation claimed to have been dedicated to the service of humanity in different spheres of life such as physical mental and spiritual irrespective of caste, creed or colour, in the year 1955. In the initial period the Headquarters of this organisation was located near Ranchi in the State of Bihar but later it has been shifted to a place within the City of Calcutta in West Bengal. It has been pleaded that Ananda Marga contains no dogmatic beliefs and teaches the yogic and spiritual science to every aspirant. In order to realise the Supreme, Ananda Marga does not believe that it is necessary to abandon home profession or occupation and spiritual sadhana is possible at any place and concurrently with fulfilling all duties and responsibilities of family life. It has been pleaded that Ananda Marga shows the way and explains the methods for spiritual advancement and this helps man to practice his dharma. According to the petitioner Lord Shiva had performed Tandava Dance in 108 forms but Shaivite literature has given details of 64 kinds only. Seven forms out of these 64 appear to have been commonly accepted and they are called Kalika, Gouri, Sandhya, Sambhara, Tripura, Urdhava and Ananda. The first of these forms elaborates the main aspects of shiva while the seventh, i.e. the Ananda Tandava portrays all the manifold responsibilities of the Lord. Ananda Tandava is claimed to have taken place at Tillai, the ancient name of Chidambaram now situated in the State of Tamil Nadu. It is the petitioner's stand that the word Tandava is derived from the root Tandu which means to jump about and Shiva was the originator of Tandava about 6500 years ago. Ananda Murtiji as the petitioner maintains, is the Supreme Father of the Ananda Margis. It is custody mary for every Ananda Margi after being duly initiated to describe Ananda Murtiji as his father. One of the prescriptions of religious rites to be daily performed by an Ananda Margi is Tandava Dance and this is claimed to have been so introduced from the year 1966 by the preceptor. This dance is to be performed with a skull, a small, symbolic knife and a Trishul. ' It is also customary to hold a lathi and a damroo. It is explained that the knife or the sword symbolises the force which cuts through the fetters of the mundane world and allows human beings to transcend towards perfection; the trishul or the trident symbolises the fight against static forces in the three different spheres of human existence - spiritual, mental and physical; the lathi which is said to be a straight stick stands out as the symbol of straightforwardness or simplicity; the damroo is the symbol to bring out rhythmic harmony between eternal universal music and the entitative sound; and the skull is the symbol of death reminding every man that life is short and therefore, every moment of life should be utilised in the service of mankind and salvation should be sought. The petitioner has further maintained that Ananda Margis greet their spiritual preceptor Shri Ananda Murti with a dance of Tandava wherein one or two followers use the skull and the symbolic knife and dance for two or three minutes. At intervals processions are intended to be taken out in public places accompanied by the Tandava dance as a religious practice.

4. Though in subsequent affidavits and in the course of argument an attempt was made by Mr. Tarkunde to assert that Ananda Marga is a new religious order; we do" not think there is any justification to accept such a contention when it runs counter to the pleadings in paragraphs 4 and 17 of the writ petition. In paragraph 4 it was specifically pleaded that "Ananda Marga is more a denomination than an institutionalised religion", and in paragraph 17 it was pleaded that "Ananda Margis are Shaivites ... " We shall, therefore, proceed to deal with this petition on the footing that, as pleaded by the petitioner, Ananda Marga is a religious denomination of the Shaivite order which is a well known segment of Hindu religion.

5. Though the petitioner had pleaded that Tandava dance has been practiced and performed by every Ananda Margi for more than three decades, it has been conceded in the course of the hearing that Tandava Dance was introduced for the first time as a religious rite for Ananda Margis in or around 1966. Therefore, by the time of institution of this writ petition the practice was at best prevalent for about 16 years.

6. The Commissioner of Police, respondent 1 before us is alleged to have made repetitive orders Under Section 144 of the CrPC, 1973 ('Code' for short) from August 1979 directing that "no member of a procession or assembly of five or more persons should carry any fire arms, explosives, swords, spears, knives, tridents, lathis or any article which may be used as weapon of offence or any article likely to cause annoyance to the public for example skulls...." A petition was filed before the Calcutta High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution by the General Secretary of Ananda Marga for a writ of mandamus against the respondents for a direction not to Interfere with or place restraints on the freedom of conscience and free profession, practice and propagation of their religion, including Tandava Dance in matter No. 903 of 1980. The Calcutta High Court rejected the said petition on September 23, 1980 and observed:

It is open to any one in this country to practice any religion but the religious practice must not be inconsistent with the susceptibility or sensibility or fairness or public order. Tandava dance as such may not be objectionable. In the streets of Calcutta all kinds of demonstrations and procession are being held every day which may on many occasions cause disturbance to others and interrupt the free flow of traffic. In spite of the same such demonstrations and processions are allowed to take place particularly every day by the authority concerned. If the petitioners or any member of their group want to hold a procession or reception or demonstration accompanied by any dance or music, that by itself may not be objectionable. However, brandishing fire torches or skulls or daggers in the public places including streets cannot come under ' the same category. Here other things are involved. The interests of other members of the public are involved, the sense of security of the others is also involved. The authorities concerned have to keep in mind the question of the feelings of other members of the public and the question of the possibility of any attempt to retaliate or counter- act to the same are also to be considered. Taking into consideration all these factors I am of the opinion that the petitioners do not have any legal right and they have not established any legal right to carry fire torches, skulls and daggers in public places or public streets and do not intend to pass any order entitling the petitioners to do so. However, the petitioners shall be entitled to go in procession or hold any demonstration without any such fire tourches, daggers or skulls. However, this would be subject to prevailing law of the land in the particular area. For example, in the High Court, Dalhousie Square and Assembly order Under Section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code is promulgated from time to time. This order would not entitle the petitioners to hold any such procession demonstration in violation of such promulgation if any. This order would also not entitle the petitioners to hold any procession or demonstration without the permission of the authority concerned when such permission is required for such purposes under any existing law.

On March 29, 1982, respondent 1 made a fresh order Under Section 144 of the Code wherein the same restraints as mentioned in the earlier order were imposed. An application for permission to take out a procession on the public street accompanied with Tandava dance was rejected and that led to the filing of this petition.

7. The petitioner asserts that tandava dance is an essential part of the religious rites of the Ananda Margis and that they are entitled to practise the same both in private as also in public places and interference by the respondents is opposed to the fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 25 and 26 of the Constitution. The order Under Section 144 of the Code has been assailed mainly on the ground that it does not state the material facts of the case though the statute requires such statement as a condition precedent to the making of the order. Repetitive orders Under Section 144 of the Code, it has been contended, are not contemplated by the Code and, therefore, making of such orders is an abuse of the law and should not be countenanced.

8. Two separate returns have been made to the rule nisi. Respondent 1 has filed a counter affidavit alleging that Ananda Marga is an organisation which believes in violence and if Ananda Margis are permitted to carry open swords or daggers in public processions it is bound or likely, to disturb public peace and tranquillity and is fraught with the likelihood of breach of public order and would affect public morality. Carrying of human skulls and indulging in provocative dances with human skulls is not only repulsive to public taste and morality, but is bound, and is likely, to raise fears in the minds of the people particularly children thereby affecting public order, morality, peace and tranquility. It has been further pleaded that the petitioner, or for the matter of that, Ananda Margis can have no fundamental right to carry weapons in the public, in procession or otherwise, nor have they any right to perform tandava dance with daggers and human skulls. It is stated that Ananda Marga is a politico- religious organisation started in 1961 by Shri Pravat Ranjan Sarkar alias Sri Ananda Murti, who is a self- styled tantrik yogi. Reference has been made to an incident of 1971 which led to prosecution of Sri Ananda Murti and some of his followers. It is stated that militancy continues to be the main feature of the organisation. Prior to promulgation of the prohibitory orders, it has been pleaded, Ananda Margis took out processions carrying lethal weapons like tridents lathis as well as human skulls and knives from time to time and caused much annoyance to the public in general and onlookers in particular, and this tended to disturb public peace, tranquillity and public order. In spite of the prohibitory orders in force from August 10, 1979, a procession was taken out on the following day within the city of Calcutta by Ananda Margis with lathis, tridents, knives, skulls, and the procession became violent. The assembly was declared unlawful and the police force was obliged to intervene. The police personnel on duty including a Deputy Commissioner of Police received injuries. Reference to several other incidents has also been made in the counter- affidavit of the Police Commissioner. The State Government has supported the stand of the Police Commissioner in its separate affidavit.

9. We have already indicated that the claim that Ananda Marga is a separate religion is not acceptable in view of the clear assertion that is was not an institutionalised religion but was a religious denomination. The principle indicated by Gajendragadkar, CJ, while speaking for the Court in Sastri Yagnapurushadji and Ors. v. Muldas Bhudardos Vaishya and Anr. MANU/SC/0040/1966: [1966]3SCR242 also supports the conclusion that Ananda Marga cannot be a separate religion by itself. In that case the question for consideration was whether the followers of Swaminarayan belonged to a religion different from that of Hinduism. The learned Chief Justice observed :

Even a cursory study of the growth and development of Hindu religion through the ages shows that whenever a saint or a religious reformer attempted the task of reforming Hindu religion and fighting irrational or corrupt practices which had crept into it, a sect was born which was governed by its own tenets but which basically subscribed to the fundamental notions of Hindu religion and Hindu philosophy.

The averments in the writ petition would seem to indicate a situation of this type. We have also taken into consideration the writings of Shri Ananda Murti in books like Carya- Carya, Namah Shivaya Shantaya, A Guide to Human Conduct, and Ananda Vachanamritam. These writings by Shri Ananda Murti are essentially founded upon the essence of Hindu philosophy. The test indicated by the learned Chief Justice in the case referred to above and the admission in paragraph 17 of the writ petition that Ananda Margis belong to the Shaivite order lead to the clear conclusion that Ananda Margis belong to the Hindu religion. Mr. Tarkunde for the petitioner had claimed protection of Article 25 of the Constitution but in view of our finding that Ananda Marga is not a separate religion, application of Article 25 is not attracted.

10. The next aspect for consideration is whether Ananda Marga can be accepted to be a religious denomination. In The Commissioner Hindu Religious Endowments, Madras v. Sri Lakshmindra Thirtha Swamiar of Sri Shirur Mutt MANU/SC/0136/1954: [1954]1SCR1005 Mukherjee, J. (as the learned Judge then was), spoke for the Court thus:

As regards Article 26, the first question is, what is the precise meaning or connotation of the expression 'religious denomination' and whether a Math could come within this expression. The word 'denomination' has been defined in the Oxford Dictionary to mean 'a collection of individuals classed together under the same name : a religious sect or body having a common faith and organisation and designated by a distinctive name'.

This test has been followed in The Durgah Committee, Ajmer and Anr. v, Syed Hussain Ali and Ors. MANU/SC/0063/1961 : [1962]1SCR383 . In the majority judgment in S. P. Mittal etc. v. Union of India and Ors. [1933] 1 S.C.R. 729 reference to this aspect has also been made and it has been stated :

The words 'religious denomination' in Article 26 of the Constitution must take their colour from the word 'religion' and if this be so, the expression 'religious denomination' must also satisfy three conditions :

(1) It must be a collection of individuals who have a system of beliefs or doctrines which they regard as conducive to their spiritual well- being, that is, a common faith;

(2) common organisation; and

(3) designation by a distinctive name.

11. Ananda Marga appears to satisfy all the three conditions, viz., it is a collection of individuals who have a system of beliefs which they regard as conducive to their spiritual well- being; they have a common organisation and the collection of these individuals has a distinctive name. Ananda Marga, therefore, can be appropriately treated as a religious denomination, within the Hindu religion. Article 26 of the Constitution provides that subject to public order morality and health, every religious denomination or any section thereof shall have the right to manage its own affairs in matters of religion. Mukherjea, J. in Lakshmindra Thirtha Swamiar's case (supra) adverted to the question as to what were the matters of religion and stated:

What then are matters of religion ! The word 'religion' has not been defined in the Constitution and it is a term which is hardly susceptible of any rigid definition. In an American case (Davie v. Benson 133 US 333), it has been said "that the term 'religion' has reference to one's views of his relation to his Creator and to the obligations they impose of reverence for His Being and Character and of obedience to His will. It is often "confounded with cults of form or worship of a particular sect, but is distinguishable from the latter". We do not think that the above definition can be regarded as either precise or adequate. Articles 25 and 26 of our Constitution are based for the most part upon Article 44(2) of the Constitution of Eire and we have great doubt whether a definition of 'religion' as given above could have been in the minds of our Constitution makers when they framed the Constitution. Religion is certainly a matter of faith with individuals or communities and it is not necessarily theistic. There are well known religions in India like Buddhism and Jainism which do not believe in God or in any Intelligent First Cause. A religion undoubtedly has its basis in a system of beliefs or doctrines which are regarded by those who profess that religion as conducive to their spiritual well being, but it would not be correct to say that religion is nothing else but a doctrine or belief. A religion may not only lay down a code of ethical rules for its followers to accept, it might prescribe rituals and observances, ceremonies and modes of worship which are regarded as integral parts of religion, and these forms and observances might extend even to matters of food and dress...

Restrictions "by the State upon free exercise of religion are permitted both under Articles 25 and 26 on grounds of public order morality and health. Clause (2) (a) of Article 25 reserved the right of the State to regulate or restrict any economic, financial, political and other secular activities which may be associated with religious practice and there is a further right given to the State by Sub- clause (b) under which the State can legislate for social welfare and reform even though by So doing it might interfere with religious practices....

The contention formulated in such broad terms cannot, we think, be supported. In the first place, what constitutes the essential part of a religion is primarily to be ascertained with reference to the doctrines of that religion itself. It the tenets of any religious sect of the Hindus prescribe that offerings of food should be given to the idol at particular hours of the day, that periodical ceremonies should be performed in a certain way at certain periods of the year or that there should be daily recital of sacred texts or oblations to the sacred fire, all these would be regarded as parts of religion and the mere fact that they involve expenditure of money or employment of priests and servants or the use of marketable commodities would not make them secular activities partaking of a commercial or economic character; all of them are religious practices and should be regarded as matters of religion within the meaning of Article 26(b)....

12. Courts have the power to determine whether a particular rite of observance is regarded as essential by the tenets of a particular religion. In Laxshmindra Thirtha Swamiar's case, Mukherjea, J. observed :

This difference in judicial opinion brings out forcibly the difficult task which a Court has to perform in cases of this type where the freedom" of religious convictions genuinely entertained by men come into conflict with the proper Political attitude which is expected from citizens in matters of unity and solidarity of the State organization.

13. The same question arose in the case of Ratilal Panachand Gandhi v. State of Bombay and Ors. MANU/SC/0138/1954 : [1954]1SCR1055 . The Court did go into the question whether certain matters appertained to religion and concluded by saying that "these are certainly not matters of religion and the objection raised with regard to the validity of these provisions seems to be altogether baseless." In Tilkayat Shri Govindlalji Maharaj v. State of Rajasthan and Ors. MANU/SC/0028/1963 : [1964]1SCR561 this Court went into the question as to whether the tenets of the Vallabh denomination and its religious practices require that the worship by the devotees should be performed at the private temples and therefore, the existence of public temples was inconsistent with the said tenets and practices, and on an examination of this question, negatived the plea.

14. The question for consideration now, therefore, is whether performance of Tandava dance is a religious rite or practice essential to the tenets of the religious faith of the Ananda Margis. We have already indicated that tandava dance was not accepted as an essential religious rite of Ananda Margis when in 1955 . the Ananda Marga order was first established It is the specific case of the petitioner that Shri Ananda Murti introduced tandava as a part of religious rites of Ananda Margis later in 1966. Ananda Marga as a religious order is of recent origin and tandava dance as a part of religious rites of that order is still more recent. It is doubtful as to whether in such circumstances tandava dance can be taken as an essential religious rite of the Ananda Margis. Even conceding that it is so, it is difficult to accept Mr. Tarkunde's argument that taking out religious processions with tandava dance is an essential religious rite of Ananda Margis. In paragraph 17 of the writ petition the petitioner pleaded that "Tandava Dance lasts for a few minutes where two or three persons dance by lifting one leg to the level of the chest, bringing it down and lifting the other." In paragraph 18 it has been pleaded that "when the Ananda Margis greet their spiritual preceptor , at the airport, etc. they arrange for a brief welcome dance of tandava wherein one or two persons use the skull and symbolic knife and dance for two or three minutes." In paragraph 26 it has been pleaded that "Tandava is a custom among the sect members and it is a customary performance and its origin is over four thousand years old, hence it is not a new invention of Ananda Margis." On the basis of the literature of the Ananda Marga denomination it has been contended that there is prescription of the performance of tandava dance by every follower of Ananda Marga. Even conceding that tandava dance has been prescribed as a religious rite for every follower of the Ananda Marg it does not follow as a necessary corollary that tandava dance to be performed in the public is a matter of religious rite. In fact, there is no justification in any of the writings of Shri Ananda Murti that tandava dance must be performed in public. Atleast none could be shown to us by Mr. Tarkunde despite an enquiry by us in that behalf. We are, therefore, not in a position to accept the contention of Mr. Tarkunde that performance of tandava dance in a procession or at public places is an essential religious rite to be performed by every Ananda Margi.

15. One we reach this conclusion, the claim that the petitioner has a fundamental right within the meaning of Articles 25 or 26 to perform tandava dance in public streets and public places has to be rejected. In view of this finding it is no more necessary to consider whether the prohibitory order was justified in the interest of public order as provided in Article 25.

16. It is the petitioner's definite case that the prohibitory orders Under Section 144 of the Code are being repeated at regular intervals from August 1979. Copies of several prohibitory orders made from time to time have been produced before us and it is not the case of the respondents that such repetitive prohibitory orders have not been made. The order Under Section 144 of the Code made in March 1982 has also been challenged on the ground that the material facts of the case have not been stated. Section 144 of the Code, as far as relevant, provides: "(1) In cases where in the opinion of a District Magistrate,' a Sub- Divisional Magistrate, or any other Executive Magistrate specially empowered by the State Government in this behalf, there is sufficient ground for proceeding under this section and immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable, such Magistrate may ,by a written order stating the material facts of the case and served in the manner provided by Section 134, direct..." It has been the contention of Mr. Tarkunde that the right to make the order is conditioned upon it being a written one and the material facts of the case being stated. Some High Courts have taken the view that this is a positive requirement and the validity of the order depends upon compliance of this provision. In our opinion it is not necessary to go into this question as counsel for the respondents conceded that this is one of the requirements of the provision and if the power has to be exercised it should be exercised in the manner provided on pain of invalidating for non- compliance. There is currently in force a prohibitory order in the same terms and hence the question cannot be said to be academic. The other aspect, viz., the propriety of repetitive prohibitory orders is, however, to our mind a serious matter and since long arguments have been advanced , we propose to deal with it. In this case as fact from October 1979 till 1982 at the interval of almost two months orders Under Section 144(1) of the Code have been made from time to time. It is not disputed before us that the power conferred under this section is intended for immediate prevention of breach of peace or speedy remedy. An order made under this section is to remain valid for two months from the date of its making as provided in Sub- section (4) of Section 144. The proviso to Sub- section (4) authorises the State Government in case it considers it necessary so to do for preventing danger to human life, health or safety, or for preventing a riot or any affray, to direct by notification that an order made by a Magistrate may remain in force for a further period not exceeding six months from the date on which the order made by the Magistrate would have, but for such order, expired. The effect of the proviso, therefore, is that the State Government would be entitled to give the prohibitory order an additional term of life but that would be limited to six months Beyond the two months' period in terms of Sub- section (4) of Section 144 of the Code. Several decisions of different High Courts have rightly taken the view that it is not legitimate to go on making successive orders after earlier orders have lapsed by efflux of time. A Full Bench consisting of the entire Court of 12 Judges in Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Taramoni Chowdhrani ILR 5 Cal. 7 examining the provisions of Section 518 of the Code of 1861 (corresponding to present Section 144) took the view that such an action was beyond the Magistrate's powers. Making of successive orders was disapproved by the Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Bishessur Chuckerbutty and Anr. v. Emperor AIR 1916 Cal. 47. Similar view was taken in Swaminatha Mudaliar v. Gopalakrishna Naidu; AIR 1916 Mad. 1106 Taturam Sahu v. The State of Orissa MANU/OR/0039/1953 : AIR1953Ori96 Ram Das Gaur v. The City Magistrate, Varanasi MANU/UP/0096/1960 : AIR1960All397 and Ram Naraain Sah and Anr. v. Parmeshwar Prasad Sah and Ors. MANU/BH/0136/1942 : AIR1942Pat414 . We have no doubt that the ratio of these, decisions represents a correct statement of the legal position. The proviso to Sub- section (4) of Section 144 which gives the State Government jurisdiction to extend the prohibitory order for a maximum period of six months beyond the life of the order made by the Magistrate is clearly indicative of the position that Parliament never intended the life of an order Under Section 144 of the Code to remain in force beyond two months when made by a Magistrate. The scheme of that section does not contemplate repetitive orders and in case the situation so warrants steps have to be taken under other provisions of the law such as Section 107 or Section 145 of the Code when individual disputes are raised and to meet a situation such as here, there are provisions to be found in the Police Act. If repetitive orders are made it would clearly amount to abuse of the power conferred by Section 144 of the Code. If is relevant to advert to the decision of this Court in Babulal Parate v. State of Maharashtra and Ors. MANU/SC/0155/1961 : 1961CriLJ16 where the vires of Section 144 of the Code was challenged. Upholding the provision, this Court observed :

Public order has to be maintained in advance in order to ensure it and, therefore it is competent to a legislature to pass a law permitting an appropriate authority to take anticipatory action or place anticipatory restrictions upon particular kinds of acts in an emergency for the purpose of maintaining public order....

17. It was again emphasized :

But it is difficult to say that an anticipatory action taken by such an authority in an emergency where danger to public order is genuinely apprehended is anything other than an action done in the discharge of the duty to maintain order....

This Court had, therefore, appropriately stressed upon the feature that the provision of Section 144 of the code was intended to meet an emergency. This postulates a situation temporary in character and, therefore, the duration of an order Under Section 144 of the Code could never have been intended to be semi- permanent in character.

18. Similar view was expressed by this Court in Gulam Abbas and Ors. v. State of U.P. and Ors. [1981] 2 Cr. L.J. 1835 where it was said that "the entire basis of action Under Section 144 is provided by the urgency of the situation and the power thereunder is intended to be availed of for preventing disorders, obstructions and annoyances with a view to secure the public weal by maintaining public peace and tranquillity...." Certain observations in Gulam Abbas's decision regarding the nature of the order Under Section 144 of the Code - judicial or executive - to the extent they run counter to the decision of the Constitution Bench in Babulal Parat's case, may require reconsideration but we agree that the nature of the order Under Section 144 of the Code is intended to meet emergent situation. Thus the clear and definite view of this Court is that an order Under Section 144 of the Code is not intended to be either permanent or semi- permanent in character. The consensus of judicial opinion in the High Courts of the country is thus in accord with the view expressed by this Court. It is not necessary on that ground to quash the impugned order of March 1982 as by efflux of time k has already ceased to be effective.

19. It is appropriate to take note of the fact that the impugned order Under Section 144 of the Code did not ban processions or gatherings at public places even by Ananda Margis. The prohibition was with reference to the carrying of daggers, trishuls and skulls. Even performance of tandava dance in public places, which we have held is not an essential part of religious rites to be observed by Ananda Margis, without these, has not been prohibited.

20. The writ petitions have to fail on our finding that performance of tandava dance in procession in the public streets or in gatherings in public places is not an essential religious rite of the followers of Ananda Marga. In the circumstance there will be no order as to costs.

Back to Section 145 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 474 of 1980

Decided On: 28.07.1980

Rajpati Vs. Bachan and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.P. Sen and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ.

JUDGMENT

S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, J.

1. This appeal by special leave involves a short point of law. Proceedings under Section 145 was started by the Magistrate against the respondents on the basis of a police report. After passing a preliminary order on the 29th July, 1976 (wherein the Magistrate had recorded reasons for his being satisfied that a breach of the peace existed), the Magistrate called upon the parties to file their written statements and then after a full enquiry as provided by Section 145 the Magistrate passed the final order on 17th July, 1978 declaring the appellant to be in possession of the land in dispute. Against this order, the respondents moved the High Court under Section 482 Cr.P.C. for quashing the order of the Magistrate. The High Court found that as there was no clear finding by the Magistrate in the final order that there was an apprehension of breach of the peace, therefore, the final order was bad and the High Court accordingly allowed the petition and remitted the case to the Magistrate.

2. We have heard counsel for the parties and in our opinion the High Court erred in holding that the final order of the Magistrate was vitiated in absence of a finding that breach of the peace existed at the time the order was passed. It is not disputed that in the preliminary order there was a clear finding by the Magistrate that apprehension of breach of the peace did exist which was sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate to initiate the proceedings. When the parties filed their written statements, they did not state that no dispute between the parties existed but whereas one party said that there was no apprehension of breach from their side, the other side took the stand that there was an apprehension of breach of the peace.

3. Thus, the stand taken by the two parties was contradictory; hence it must be taken for granted that the apprehension of breach of peace continued to exist and it was not a case where it could be said that no dispute existed, as contemplated under Section 145(5) Cr.P.C.

4. After considering the record and evidence produced by the parties, the Magistrate passed the final order in favour of the appellant.

5. The High Court thought that it was absolutely essential for the Magistrate to give a finding that a breach of peace existed even in the final order. It may have been proper if the Magistrate had given a finding on this aspect of the matter also but in the circumstances, it can be safely presumed that apprehension of breach of peace existed and such a finding was implicit in the final order passed by the Magistrate so it was not necessary for the Magistrate to repeat what he had said in the preliminary order in the final order also. Moreover, mere absence of finding by the Magistrate in the final order in the circumstances as mentioned above cannot be such a manifest defect so as to attract the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court under Section 482 of Cr.P.C.

6. It is, therefore, manifest that a finding of existence of breach of the peace is not necessary at the time when a final order is passed nor is there any provision in the CrPC requiring such a finding in the final order. Once a preliminary order drawn up by the Magistrate sets out the reasons for holding that a breach of the peace exists, it is not necessary that the breach of peace should continue at every stage of the proceedings unless there is clear evidence to show that the dispute has ceased to exist so as to bring the case within the ambit of Sub- section (5) of Section 145 of the CrPC. Unless such a contingency arises the proceedings have to be carried to their logical end culminating in the final order under Sub- section (6) of Section 145. As already indicated the contradictory stands taken by the parties clearly show that there was no question of the dispute having ended so as to lead to cancellation of the order under Sub- section (5) of Section 145 nor was such a case set up by any party before the Magistrate or before the High Court. Further, it is well settled that under Section 145 it is for the Magistrate to be satisfied regarding the existence of a breach of the peace and once he records his satisfaction in the preliminary order, the High Court in revision cannot go into the sufficiency or otherwise of the materials on the basis of which the satisfaction of the Magistrate is based. In R.H. Bhutani v. Miss Mani J. Desai and Ors. MANU/SC/0343/1968 : 1969CriLJ13 , this Court pointed out as follows:

The section requires that the Magistrate must be satisfied before initiating proceedings that a dispute regarding an immovable property exists and that such dispute is likely to cause breach of peace. But once he is satisfied on these two conditions, the section requires him to pass a preliminary order under Sub- section (1) and thereafter to make an enquiry under Sub- section, (4) and pass a final order under Sub- section (6). It is not necessary that at the time of passing the final order the apprehension of breach of peace should continue or exist. The enquiry under Section 145 is limited to the question to who was in actual possession on the date of the preliminary order irrespective of the rights of the parties....

The High Court, in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, would not go into the question of sufficiency of material which has satisfied the Magistrate.

(Emphasisours)

7. In Hari Ram and Ors. v. Banwari Lal and Ors. A.I.R.1967 Punj. 378 it was held that once a Magistrate finds that there is a breach of peace it is not necessary that the dispute should continue to exist at other stages of the proceedings also. In this connection, the High Court observed as follows:

Of course, Magistrate can under Sub- section (1) of Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, assume jurisdiction only if he is satisfied that at the time of passing the preliminary order a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land etc. Once that is done the Magistrate is thereafter expected to call upon the parties concerned in such dispute to attend his court in person or by pleader and put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute. The enquiry, therefore, after the initial satisfaction of the Magistrate and after the assumption of jurisdiction by him, has to be directed only as respects the fact of actual possession. At that time he has not to record a finding again about the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace.

(Emphasisours)

8. To the same effect is a decision of the Hyderabad High Court in Ramarao v. Shivram and Ors. A.I.R.1954 Hyd 93 where Srinivasachari J. observed as follows :-

As regards this contention I am of opinion that once the Magistrate has given a finding to the effect that there is apprehension of breach of peace and that he has jurisdiction to take proceedings under Section 145, Cr.P.C., he can continue the proceedings. It is not necessary that at each stage he should be satisfied that there exists an imminent apprehension of breach of peace

(Emphasisours)

9. We find ourselves in complete agreement with the observations made by the Punjab and Hyderabad High Courts, extracted above, which lay down the correct law on the subject.

10. Assuming, however, that there was an omission on the part of the Magistrate to mention in his final order that there was breach of the peace, that being an error of procedure would clearly fall within the domain of a curable irregularity which is not sufficient to vitiate the order passed by the Magistrate, particularly when there is nothing to show in the instant case that any prejudice was caused to any of the parties who had the full opportunity to produce their evidence before the Court. It was therefore not correct on the part of the High Court to have interfered with the order of the Magistrate on a purely technical ground when the aggrieved party had a clear remedy in the civil court.

11. For these reasons therefore, we are satisfied that the order passed by the High Court is legally erroneous and cannot be allowed to stand. The appeal is accordingly allowed, The order of the High Court is set aside and the order of the Magistrate is confirmed.

MANU/SC/0343/1968

Back to Section 145 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 17 of 1968

Decided On: 23.04.1968

R.H. Bhutani Vs. Man J. Desai and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

S.M. Sikri, J.M. Shelat and Vashishtha Bhargava, JJ.

JUDGMENT

J.M. Shelat, J.

1. At all material times respondent 1 had her office premises in Nawab Building, Fort, Bombay, which consisted of two cabins. On July 10, 1964, she entered into an agreement with the appellant permitting him to occupy one of the cabins on leave and licence for a period of eleven months. On June 9, 1965, the agreement was extended for a period of eleven months. The appellant's case was that it was further extended for another eleven months as from May, 10, 1966 and respondent 1 accordingly accepted Rs. 450 as compensation for May 1966. Respondent 1 thereafter demanded higher compensation which he refused to pay and thereupon respondent 1 refused to execute the renewal and threatened to eject him forcibly if he did not vacate. His case further was that in the morning of June 11, 1966 respondent 1 broke open the staple of the cabin, removed the door from its hinges, removed all his belongings lying in the cabin and dumped them in the passage outside. She then handed over possession of the cabin to respondents 2 and 3 purporting to do so under an agreement of licence dated June 1, 1966. When he went to the cabin he found the cabin occupied by respondents 2 and 3. On his asking them to place back his belongings and to restore possession to him, the respondents threatened him with dire consequences. He, therefore, went to the police station but the police refused to take action and only recorded his N. C. complaint. From the police station he and his friend, Mahomed Salim returned to the cabin when, on their demanding possession of the cabin, the respondents attacked them. In the course of that attack, the said Salim received injuries. He and the said Salim once again went to the police station but the police again refused to take action and recorded another N. C. complaint and sent Salim to the hospital for examination. Due to the persistent refusal by the police to help him to get back the cabin, the appellant approached higher authorities in consequence of which the police at last recorded a case of assault against respondent 1. They then arrested respondent 1 but released her on bail. Respondent 1, however, kept some persons near the cabin to prevent the appellant from recovering possession. There was, therefore, every likelihood of a breach of the peace had he gone to the cabin to regain possession. In these circumstances he filed an application before the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate under Section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

2. The Magistrate then directed the parties to file affidavits and to adduce such further evidence as they desired. Accordingly, the parties filed affidavits of various persons who had their offices in the same building. The appellant, besides other affidavits, also filed an affidavit of one Nathani, the Manager of his company at whose instance, it was the case of respondent 1, the appellant had agreed to hand over and actually did hand over possession of the cabin in the morning of June 11, 1966. That affidavit, however, did not support respondent 1 but, on the contrary, denied that Nathani had agreed that the appellant would vacate or that the appellant at his instance had agreed to do so.

3. In her written statement, respondent 1 denied that the said licence was renewed a second time in May 1966. Her case was that at the request of the appellant she had permitted him to continue in possession till May 1966 on his promising to vacate by the end of that month, that on June 11, 1966, the appellant vacated the cabin, kept his belongings in the passage and thereupon she permitted respondents 2 and 3 to occupy it as, relying on the appellant's promise that he would vacate by the end of May 1966, she had already entered into an agreement of licence on June 1, 1966 with respondent 3. She denied that any incident, as alleged by the appellant, had occurred on that day or that the appellant or the said Salim was assaulted by her or by respondent 2 or 3. She, therefore, denied that any dispute existed on that day or that there was any likelihood of a breach of the peace. Respondents 2 and 3 also filed their written statements on the lines taken by respondent 1. But after filing them, they did not participate any more in the proceedings as they had since then vacated the said cabin. Possession, therefore, of the cabin since then remained with respondent 1. Respondent 1 in the meantime filed a suit in the City Civil Court and took out a notice of motion for restraining the appellant from interfering with her possession of the cabin. The Court dismissed the notice of motion refusing to rely on the said agreement.

4. In the proceedings before the Magistrate the main question was whether the appellant was in actual possession on June 11, 1966 and whether he was forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed by respondent 1 or whether he had vacated and surrendered the cabin to respondent 1. After considering the affidavits and the evidence led by the parties, the Magistrate reached the following findings: (1) that respondent 1 started harassing the appellant from the beginning of June 1966 and gave threats to forcibly dispossess him if he did not vacate: (2) that the appellant's version that the respondent had forcibly and wrongfully taken possession of the cabin in the morning of June 11, 1966 was true and (3) that when the appellant and the said Salim went to the cabin, the respondents manhandled them as a result of which Salim received injuries.

5. On these findings he held that the appellant was in actual possession on June 11, 1966 and that under the second proviso to Section 145 (4), though he had been dispossessed on June 11, he must be deemed to be in possession on June 20, 1966 when the Magistrate passed his preliminary order. By his final order dated June 22, 1967 passed under Sub- section (6), the Magistrate directed restoration of possession to the appellant till he would be evicted in due course of law and prohibited the respondents from interfering with his possession till then.

6. In the revision before the High Court, the respondents raised two contentions: (1) that the Magistrate, in entertaining the said application and passing the said preliminary order, misconceived the scope of proceedings under Section 145, and (2) that he had no jurisdiction to pass the said preliminary order as in the events that had happened there was no existing dispute likely to result in a breach of the peace. The High Court accepted these contentions and set aside the order of the Magistrate. In doing so, it observed that the object of Section 145 was to preserve peace and to provide a speedy remedy against a likely breach of peace where there is an existing dispute regarding possession of an immovable property until such dispute is adjudicated upon by a proper tribunal. That section, therefore can be invoked where these two conditions exist, namely an existing dispute and an apprehension of breach of peace. The Magistrate, therefore, had to be satisfied as to the existence of these two conditions when he passed the preliminary order. The High Court then observed that assuming that the appellant was forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed and the said Salim was assaulted by respondent 1 and her men, it could not even then necessarily mean that there was an existing dispute relating to possession of the cabin which was likely to cause breach of peace on June 20, 1966 when the Magistrate passed his preliminary order. The acts of respondent 1 might constitute an offence for which the appellant had filed a complaint under Section 341 of the Penal Code and the police had arrested respondent 1 and released her on bail. In the light of these facts the Magistrate ought to have held that on that day there did not any longer exist any dispute regarding possession of the said cabin which was likely to lead to a breach of the peace. The High Court, further, observed that the preliminary order did not also record the reasons for the Magistrate's satisfaction as to the two conditions and that all that it stated was that on the facts stated in the said application he was satisfied that there was a dispute which was likely to cause breach of the peace. The High Court also observed that all that the application showed was that there was forcible dispossession and an attempted assault; that from these two facts it was difficult to see how, without any further enquiry, the Magistrate could come to the conclusion that there was likelihood of breach of peace unless it was assumed that in every case of a dispute over possession of an immovable property and forcible dispossession there would be continuous possibility of breach of peace. The High Court complained that the Magistrate did not call for a police report and simply relied on the bare allegations of an interested party. On this reasoning it held that the Magistrate had misconceived the scope of proceedings under Section 145 and passed the preliminary order as if it was a process issued by him in a non- cognisable case. The High Court also noted that respondent 1 had placed respondent 3 in possession, that respondent 3 had remained in possession for nearly a year by the time the Magistrate passed his final order, that the final order would, therefore, affect his vested rights, and that this fact coupled with the fact of the appellant's complaint under Section 341 of the Penal Code on June 13, 1966 ought to have been considered by the Magistrate before passing the final order. As aforesaid, the High Court set aside the Magistrate's order whereupon the appellant obtained special leave and filed this appeal challenging the correctness of the High Court's order.

7. Before proceeding further, we may mention that respondents 2 and 3 had vacated the premises long before the Magistrate passed the final order. There was, therefore, no question of the Magistrate having to consider the question of their having been in possession for about a year or their having any vested rights under the agreement dated June 1, 1966, It may also be recalled that the City Civil Court had refused to rely on the said agreement and to pass an interim injunction restraining the appellant from disturbing the possession of respondent 1.

8. The object of Section 145, no doubt is to prevent breach of peace and for that end to provide a speedy remedy by bringing the parties before the court and ascertaining who of them was in actual possession and to maintain status quo until their rights are determined by a competent court. The section requires that the Magistrate must be satisfied before initiating proceedings that a dispute regarding an immovable property exists and that such dispute is likely to cause breach of peace. But once he is satisfied of these two conditions, the section requires him to pass a preliminary order under Sub- section (1) and thereafter to make an enquiry under Sub- section (4) and pass a final order under Sub- section (6). It is not necessary that at the time of passing the final order the apprehension of breach of peace should continue or exist. The enquiry under Section 145 is limited to the question as to who was in actual possession on the date of the preliminary order irrespective of the rights of the parties.

Under the second proviso, the party who is found to have been forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed within two mouths next preceding the date of the preliminary order may for the purpose of the enquiry be deemed to have been in possession on the date of that order. The opposite party may of course prove that dispossession took place more than two months next preceding the date of that order and in that case the Magistrate would have to cancel his preliminary order. On the other hand, if he is satisfied that dispossession was both forcible and wrongful and took place within the prescribed period, the party dispossessed would be deemed to be in actual possession on the date of the preliminary order and the Magistrate would then proceed to make his final order directing the dispossessor to restore possession and prohibit him from interfering with that possession until the applicant is evicted in due course of law. This is broadly the scheme of Section 145.

9. The satisfaction under Sub- section (1) is of the Magistrate. The question whether on the materials before him, he should initiate proceedings or not is, therefore, in his discretion which, no doubt, has to be exercised in accordance with the well recognised rules of law in that behalf. No hard and fast rule can, therefore, be laid down as to the sufficiency of material for his satisfaction. The language of the sub- section is clear and unambiguous that he can arrive at his satisfaction both from the police report or "from other information" which must include an application by the party dispossessed. The High Court, in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, would not go into the question of sufficiency of material which has satisfied the Magistrate.

10. The question is whether the preliminary order passed by the Magistrate was in breach of Section 145 (1), that is, in the absence of either of the two conditions precedent. One of the grounds on which the High Court interfered was that the Magistrate failed to record in his preliminary order the reasons for his satisfaction. The section, no doubt, requires him to record reasons. The Magistrate has expressed his satisfaction on the basis of the facts set out in the application before him and after he had examined the appellant on oath. That means that those fads were prima facie sufficient and were the reasons leading to his satisfaction.

11. The other reason which, according to the High Court, vitiated the order was that the Magistrate acted only on the allegations in the appellant's application without making any further enquiry and issued the order as if he was issuing a process in a N. C. case. But counsel for the respondents conceded that before passing the order the Magistrate had examined the appellant on oath and it was then only that he made the order recording his satisfaction. But apart from the allegations in the application as to his forcible and wrongful dispossession and assault, there was the fact that on June 11, 1966 the appellant had gone twice to the police station, requested the police to take action and had lodged two N.C. complaints. This material being before the Magistrate, it was hardly fair to blame the Magistrate that he had passed his preliminary order lightly or without being satisfied as to the existence of the two conditions required by the sub-section.

12. Was the High Court next justified in observing that the Magistrate ought to have got a police report on the allegations made in the application before he passed his said order? Such a view has been taken in some decisions. In Emperor v. Phutanja, 25 Cri LJ 1109: MANU/NA/0062/1924 : AIR 1925 Nag 142 the view taken was that it was a safe general rule for a Magistrate to refuse to take action under Section 145 except on a police report and that the absence of such a report is almost conclusive indication of the absence of any likelihood of breach of peace. A similar opinion has also been expressed in Ganesh v. Venkateswara, 1964 2 Cri LJ 100 where, relying on Raja of Karvetnagar v. Sowcar Lodd Govind Doss, MANU/TN/0106/1906 : ILR (1906) 29 Mad 561, the Mysore High Court observed that law and order being the concern of the police it is but natural that the Magistrate should either be moved by the police or if moved by a private party he should call for a police report regarding the likelihood of breach of peace. But the High Court of Madras in the case of Raja of Karvetnagar, MANU/TN/0106/1906 : ILR (1906) 29 Mad 561 , did not lay down any such proposition but merely sounded a note of caution that in the absence of a police report the statements of an interested party should not be relied on without caution and without corroboration. The proposition that the Magistrate before proceeding under Section 145 (1) must, as a rule, call for a police report where be is moved by a private party or that the absence of a police report is a sure indication of the absence of possibility of breach of peace is not warranted by the clear language of the section which permits the Magistrate initiate proceedings either on the police report or "on other information". The words "other information" are wide enough to include an application by a private party. The jurisdiction under Section 145 being, no doubt, of an emergency nature, the Magistrate must act with caution but that does not mean that where on an application by one of the parties to the dispute he is satisfied that the requirements of the section are existent, he cannot initiate proceedings without a police report. The view taken in the aforesaid two decisions unnecessarily and without any warrant from the language of Sub- section (1) limits the discretion of the Magistrate and renders the words "other information" either superfluous or qualifies them to mean other information verified by the police. In our view, once the Magistrate, having examined the applicant on oath, was satisfied that his application disclosed the existence of the dispute and the likelihood of breach of peace, there was no bar against his acting under Section 145 (1).

13. The next ground for the High Court's interference was that assuming that the appellant was forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed and the said Salim was assaulted, the said dispossession was completed, a complaint of assault was lodged and the police had already taken action before the preliminary order was passed on June 20, 1966. Therefore, it was said, there was no longer any dispute on the date of the order likely to lead to breach of peace and consequently the order did not corn- ply with the requirements of Section 145 (1) and was without jurisdiction. This reasoning would mean that if a party takes the law into his hands and deprives forcibly and wrongfully the other party of his possession and completes his act of dispossession, the party so dispossessed cannot have the benefit of Section 145, as by the time he files his application and the Magistrate passes his order, the dispossession would be complete and, therefore, there would be no existing dispute likely to cause breach of peace. Such a construction of Section 145, in our view, is not correct for it does not take into consideration the second proviso to subsection (4) which was introduced precisely to meet such cases. The Magistrate has first to decide who is in actual possession at the date of his preliminary order. If, however, the party in de facto possession is found to have obtained possession by forcibly and wrongfully dispossessing the other party within two months next preceding the date of his order, the Magistrate can treat the dispossessed party as if he was in possession on such date, restore possession to him and prohibit the dispossessor from interfering with that possession until eviction of that person in due course of law. The proviso is founded on the principle that forcible and wrongful dispossession is not to be recognised under the criminal law. So that it is not possible to say that such an act of dispossession was completed before the date of the order. To say otherwise would mean that if a party who is forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed does not in retaliation take the law into his hands, he should be at disadvantage and cannot have the benefit of Section 145.

14. The word "dispossessed" in the second proviso means to be out of possession, removed from the premises, ousted, ejected or excluded. Even where a person has a right to possession but taking the law into his hands makes a forcible entry otherwise than in due course of law, it would be a case of both forcible and wrongful dispossession: [cf. Edwick v. Hawkes, (1881) 18 Ch D 199 and Jiba v. Chandulal, MANU/MH/0149/1925 : AIR 1926 Bom 91]. Sub- section (6) of Section 145 in such a case permits the Magistrate to direct restoration of possession with the legal effect that is valid until eviction in due course of law. In AIR 1926 Bom 9 the High Court of Bombay held that it would be unfair to allow the other party the advantages of his forcible and wrongful possession and the fact that time has elapsed since such dispossession and that the dispossessor has since then been in possession or has filed a suit for a declaration of title and for injunction restraining disturbance of his possession is no ground for the Magistrate to refuse to pass an order for restoration of possession once he is satisfied that the dispossessed party was in actual or deemed possession under the second proviso. Similarly, in A.N. Shah v. Nageswara Rao, MANU/TN/0094/1946 : AIR 1947 Mad 133, it was held that merely because there has been no further violence after one of the parties had wrongfully and forcibly dispossessed the other it cannot be said that there cannot be breach of peace and that, therefore, proceedings under Section 145 should be dropped. It may be that a party may not take the law in his hands in reply to the other party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessing him. That does not mean that he is not to have the benefit of the remedy under Section 145. The second proviso to subsection (4) and Sub- section (6) contemplate not a fugitive act of trespass or interference with the possession of the applicant, the dispossession there referred to is one that amounts to a completed act of forcible and wrongful driving out a party from his possession: [of. Subarna Sunami v. Kartika Kudal, MANU/OR/0054/1954 : AIR1954Ori183]. It is thus fairly clear that the fact that dispossession of the appellant was a completed act and the appellant had filed a criminal complaint and the police had taken action thereunder do not mean that the Magistrate could not proceed under Section 145 and give directions permissible under Sub- section (6).

15. In our view, the High Court erred in holding that merely because dispossession of the appellant was complete before June 20, 1966, there was no dispute existing on that day which was likely to lead to breach of peace or that the Magistrate was, therefore, prevented from passing his preliminary order and proceeding thence to continue the enquiry and pass his final order. In our view, reading Section 145 as a whole, it is clear that even though respondent 1 had taken over possession of the said cabin, since that incident took place within the prescribed period of two months next before the date of the preliminary order, the appellant was deemed to be in possession on the date of that order and the Magistrate was competent to pass the final order directing restoration of possession and restraining respondent 1 from interfering with that possession until the appellant's eviction in due course of law.

16. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the High Court's order and restore that of the Trial Magistrate.

Criminal Appeal No. 10 of 1979

JUDGMENT

O. Chinnappa Reddy, J.

1. On the report of the Station House Officer, Manak Chowk, Ratlam, that there was a dispute between Mathuralal and Bhanwarlal concerning a house situated in Kambalpatti, Ghas Bazar, Ratlam, which was likely to cause a breach of the peace, the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Ratlam, passed a preliminary order under Section 145(1) of the CrPC 1973, on 1st March, 1978. On 2nd March, 1978, the learned Magistrate attached the subject of dispute under Section 145(1) Criminal Procedure Code considering the case to be one of emergency. Thereafter, when the learned Magistrate wanted to proceed with the enquiry under Section 145 Criminal Procedure Code, an objection was raised by Mathuralal that such an enquiry was incompetent once the subject of the dispute had been attached under Section 146 Criminal Procedure Code. The objection was overruled by the learned Magistrate. Successive Revisions taken before the Sessions Judge and the High Court having borne no fruit, Mathuralat has filed the present appeal by special leave of this Court. The High Court, we may mention here, thought that the matter was concluded against the appellant by the decision of this Court in Chandu Naik and Ors. v. Sitaram B. Naik and Anr. MANU/SC/0382/1977 : 1978CriLJ356

2. Shri Mukherji, learned Counsel for the appellant urged that under Section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1973, an attachment of the subject of dispute could be effected in three situations : (i) if the Magistrate at any time after making the order under Section 145(1) considered the case to be one of emergency, or (ii) if he decided that none of the parties was then in such possession as was referred to in Section 145, or (iii) if he was unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was then in such possession of the subject of dispute. The attachment so effected, regardless of the situation consequent upon which it was effected, was to subsist until a competent Court determined the rights of the parties with regard to the person entitled to possession. This, he urged, clearly indicated that after an attachment was effected it was the Civil Court and not the Magistrate that was to have further jurisdiction in the matter. He contrasted the provisions of Section 146(1) of the present code with the provisions of Section 146(1) and the third proviso to Section 145(4) of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898 as amended by Act 26 of 1955. He drew our attention to the circumstance that the third proviso to Section 145(4) of the old Code empowered the Magistrate, if he considered the case one of emergency, to attach the subject of dispute pending his decision under that Section, while Section 146(1) of the previous Code empowered the Magistrate to attach the subject of dispute if the Magistrate was of the opinion that none of the parties was then in possession or if the Magistrate was unable to decide as to which of them was in such possession and thereafter to refer to the Civil Court for decision the question whether any and which of the parties was in possession of the subject of dispute. Therefore, he said, under the previous Code, in the case of attachment because of emergency the Magistrate was himself competent to decide the question of possession and in the other two cases he was to refer the dispute to the Civil Court, whereas, under the present Code, in all the three situations the Magistrate was to leave the matter for adjudication by the Civil Court. Thus, the submission of Shri Mukherji was that while under the previous Code it was permissible to attach the subject of dispute pending enquiry by the Magistrate as contemplated by Section 145, such attachment pending decision by the Magistrate was not permissible under the provisions of the present Code. According to him so soon as the Magistrate effected an attachment he had nothing further to do except await the decision or the directions of the Civil Court.

3. Though at first blush there appeared to be force in the submissions of Shri Mukherji, a closer scrutiny of the provisions of Sections 145 and 146 exposes their unsoundness. It may perhaps be desirable, at this stage to extract the provisions of Sections 145 and 146, to the extent that they are relevant, in the Code of 1898 before it was amended in 1955, in the Code of 1898 after it was amended in 1955 and in the Code, of 1973 :

(Their Lordships then quoted Secs. 145 and 146 as they stood prior to amendment in 1955; after the amendment of 1955 and of the Code of 1973 and proceeded on to observe- - Editor)

4. Quite obviously, Sections 145 and 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code together constitute a scheme for the resolution of a situation where there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace because of a dispute concerning any land or water or their boundaries. If Section 146 is torn out of its setting and read independently of Section 145, it is capable of being construed to mean that once an attachment is effected in any of the three situations mentioned therein, the dispute can only be resolved by a competent Court and not by the Magistrate effecting the attachment. But Section 146 cannot be so separated from Section 145. It can only be read in the context of Section 145. Contextual construction must surely prevail over isolationist construction. Otherwise, it may mislead. That is one of the first principles of construction. Let us therefore look at Section 145 and consider Section 146 in that context. Section 145 contemplates, first, the satisfaction of the Magistrate that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water or their boundaries, and, next, the issuance of an order, known to lawyers practising in the Criminal Courts as a preliminary order, stating the grounds of his satisfaction and requiring the parties concerned to attend his Court and to put in written statements of their respective claims as regards the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute. A preliminary order is considered so basic to a proceeding under Section 145 that a failure to draw up a preliminary order has been held by several High Courts to vitiate all the subsequent proceedings. It is by making a preliminary order that the Magistrate assumes jurisdiction to proceed under Sections 145 and 146. In fact, the first of the situations in which an attachment may be effected under Section 146 of the 1973 Code has to be "at any time after making the order under Sub-section (1) of Section 145" while the other two situations have, necessarily, to be at the final stage of the proceeding initiated by the preliminary order. Now, the preliminary order is required to enjoin the parties not only to appear before the Magistrate on a specified date but also to put in their written statements. Sub- section (3) of Section 145 prescribes the mode of service of the preliminary order on the parties. Sub- section (4) casts a duty on the Magistrate to peruse the written statements of the parties, to receive the evidence adduced by them, to take further evidence if necessary and, if possible, to decide which of the parties was in possession on the date of the preliminary order. If the Magistrate decides that one of the parties was in possession he is to make a final order in the manner provided by Sub- section (6). Provision for the two situations where the Magistrate is unable to decide which of the parties was in possession of where he is of the view that neither of them was in possession is made in Section 146 under which he may attach the subject of dispute until the determination of the rights of parties by a competent Court. The scheme of Sections 145 and 146 is that the Magistrate, on being satisfied about the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, issues a preliminary order stating the grounds of his satisfaction and calling upon the parties to appear before him and submit their written statements. Then he proceeds to peruse the statements, to receive and to take evidence and to decide which of the parties was in possession on the date of the preliminary order. On the other hand if he is unable to decide who was in such possession or if he is of the view that none of the parties was in such possession he may say so. If he decides that one of the parties was in possession, he declares the possession of such party. In the other two situations he attaches the property. Thus a proceeding begun with a preliminary order must be followed up by an enquiry and end with the Magistrate deciding in one of three ways and making consequential orders. There is no half way house, there is no question of stopping in the middle and leaving the parties to go to the Civil Court. Proceeding may however be stopped at any time if one or other of the parties satisfies the magistrate that there has never been or there is no longer any dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. If there is no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, the foundation for the jurisdiction of the magistrate disappears. The magistrate then cancels the preliminary order. This is provided by Section 145 Sub- section (5). Except for the reason that there is no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace and as provided by Section 145(5), a proceeding initiated by a preliminary order under Section 145(1) must run its full course. Now, in a case of emergency, a magistrate may attach the property, at any time after making the preliminary order. This is the first of the situations provided in Section 146(1) in which an attachment may be effected. There is no express stipulation in Section 146 that the jurisdiction of the magistrate ends with the attachment. Nor is it implied. Far from it. The obligation to proceed with the enquiry as prescribed by Section 145 Sub- section 4 is against any such implication. Suppose a magistrate draws up a preliminary order under Section 145(1) and immediately follows it up with an attachment under Section 146(1), the whole exercise of stating the grounds of his satisfaction and calling upon the parties to appear before him and submit their written statements becomes futile if he is to have no further jurisdiction in the matter. And yet he cannot make an order of attachment under Section 146(1) on the ground of emergency without first making a preliminary order in the manner prescribed by Section 145(1). There is no reason why we should adopt a construction which will lead to such inevitable contradictions. We mentioned a little earlier that the only provision for stopping the proceeding and cancelling the preliminary order is to be found in Section 145(5) and it can only be on the ground that there is no longer any dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. An emergency is the basis of attachment under the first limb of Section 146(1) and if there is an emergency, no one can say that there is no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace.

5. Let us examine if a comparative study of the provisions as they stood, before 1955 and after 1955 under the old Code and as they now stand under the 1973 Code lead us to a conclusion other than that indicated in the preceding paragraph. From the comparative table of the provisions, it is seen that there were two principal changes made by the 1955 amendment. The first was that the preliminary order was also to require the parties to put in documents and the affidavits of such persons as they intended to rely upon in support of their claims. The magistrate was to decide the case on a consideration of the written statements the documents and the affidavits put in by the parties and after hearing them. The position earlier was that the parties had the right to adduce evidence and the magistrate could take further evidence if he so desired. The second change was that in the two situations where he was unable to satisfy himself as to which of the parties was in possession or where he decided that none of the parties was in possession, after attaching the property, the magistrate was himself to refer the dispute to the Civil Court instead of leaving it to the parties to go to the Civil Court. He was to obtain the finding of the Civil Court and thereafter conclude the proceeding under Section 145 Criminal Procedure Code in conformity with the decision of the Civil Court. The revised procedure introduced by the 1955 amendment was not found to work satisfactorily and, therefore, it was, apparently, thought desirable to revert to the old procedure. The provisions of Sections 145 and 146 of the 1973 Code are substantially the same as the corresponding provisions before the 1955 amendment. The only noticeable change is that the second proviso to Section 145(4) (as it stood before the 1955 amendment) has now been transposed to Section 146 but without the words "pending his decision under this Section" and with the words "at any time after making the order under Section 145(1)" super- added. The change, clearly, is in the interests of convenient draftsmanship. All situations in which an attachment may be made are now mentioned together in Section 146. The words "pending his decision under this section" have apparently been omitted as unnecessary since Section 145 provides how the proceeding initiated by a preliminary order must proceed and end and therefore an attachment made at any time after making under Section 145(1)' can only continue until the termination of the proceeding. At the termination of the proceeding, if he finds one of the parties was in possession as stipulated, the magistrate must make an order as provided in Section 145(6) and withdraw the attachment as provided in Section 146(1) since there can be no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace once an order in terms of Section 145(6) is made.

6. In our view, it is wrong to hold that the magistrate's Jurisdiction ends as soon as an attachment is made on the ground of emergency. A large number of cases decided by several High Courts some taking one view and the other a different view were read to us, We do not consider it necessary to refer to them except to acknowledge that we derived considerable assistance from the judgment of Lahiri, J., in Kshetra Mohan Sarkar v. Paran Chandra Mandal(l), in arriving at our conclusion. We may also add that the question now at issue did not arise for consideration in Chandu Naik and Ors. v. Sitaram B. Naik and Anr. (supra). What was decided there was that a proceeding under Section 145 Criminal Procedure Code did not abate because of Section 8 of the Maharashtra Vacant Land (Prohibition of unauthorised Occupation and Summary Eviction) Act, 1975. In the result the appeal is dismissed.

JUDGMENT

Authored By : S.S. Sandhawalia, Satish Chandra Mittal, Ajit Singh Bains

S.S. Sandhawalia, C. J.

1. Whether the prescription of a minimum sentence of imprisonment in Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914 would operate as an absolute bar against the application of Sections 360 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 or of Sections 4 and 6 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 ?- is the somewhat meaningful question which is before the Full Bench in two references, which would be disposed of by this judgment.

2. It is manifest from the above that the question here is pristinely legal and the individual facts of the two cases before us would be of no great relevance. It would, therefore, suffice to mention that in Joginder Singh's case, the petitioner was convicted under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914 for having been found in possession of a working still and sentenced to the statutory minimum sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1000/- . On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge upheld the conviction and the sentence. Apparently finding no sub- stance on the merits of the case, the admission of the revision petition was expressly confined to the issue of sentence only by the learned Judge admitting the same. The question posed at the outset was first raised before J.V. Gupta, J. who referred it for decision to a Division Bench which in turn has directed it to be placed before a Full Bench, in view of the earlier reference in Khazan Singh's case.

3. In Khazan Singh's case, the petitioner was convicted under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act and sentenced to l1/2 year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 5,000/- . On appeal, the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur dismissed the case on merits, but reduced the sentence to the statutory minimum of one year's rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 5,000/- only as fine. At the motion stage, C.S. Tiwana, J., whilst admitting the petition, confined it expressly to the question of sentence in the context of the issue, whether the benefit of Section 360 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 could be granted to the petitioner.

4. Perhaps, at the very outset, it may be pointedly noticed that within this jurisdiction, judicial opinion has so far been uniform that the mere prescription of a minimum sentence under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914, does not totally bar the discretion of the court to grant probation to the convict either under the Criminal Procedure Code itself or expressly under the relevant sections of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958. In the State of Haryana v. Ramji Lal Devi Sahai MANU/PH/0249/1971, the Division Bench after a lucid examination of the question held that in an appropriate case, it was open to the court to take resort to the provisions of Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act 1958, even with regard to a conviction under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914. Reliance therein was specifically placed on an early unreported Division Bench judgment of this Court in Prita v. State, Criminal Revn. No. 754 of 1962 decided on 23- 10- 1963 wherein also a Division Bench had ruled that there was no legal bar to the application of Section 562 of the old Criminal Procedure Code, to a case in which conviction had been recorded under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914. There is, however, no gainsaying the fact that in the exhaustive reference order in Khazan Singh's case, C.S. Tiwana, J. has tended to take a view contrary to the aforesaid decisions and has sought to project the matter from a different angle by reference to Section 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, placing particular emphasis on Sub- section (2) thereof. This aspect of the case would be adverted to in detail later.

5. Before entering into the examination of the question before us, I may first dispose of an issue on which there was little or no controversy. On behalf of the petitioners, it was contended that the provisions of Sections 300 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Code') are mandatory in nature. This appears to us as too well settled to deserve any elaboration. In Surendra Kumar v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/0271/1979 : 1979CriLJ907 their lordships assumed Section 360 of the Code to be mandatory in nature and gave the benefit thereof to the appellant in a short judgment. The same view has been reiterated in Bishnu Deo Shaw v. State of West Bengal MANU/SC/0089/1979 : 1979CriLJ841 . Lastly, apparently on a concession, Bhagwati, J. sitting singly seems to have taken the same view in Nirmal Singh v. State of PunjabMANU/SC/0680/1977 : (1977) 79 PLR 580(SC).

6. Apart from precedent, it deserves notice that Section 361 of the Code prescribes that where in any case the court could have dealt with an accused person under Section 360 of the Code, but has not done so, it shall record in its judgment special reasons for not having done so, which again would be a pointer to' the mandatory nature of the provision. I would, therefore, hold the provisions of Section 360 of the Code are mandatory in nature.

7. Having held so, one may proceed to examine the matter with reference to the language of Section 360 of the Code itself. The argument that the prescription of a minimum sentence of imprisonment would ipso facto exclude the applicability of this Section, cannot easily hold water. It deserves highlighting that the provisions of Section 360 of the Code in itself laid down the limitation within which it is to operate. It is attracted as regards persons above 21 years of age only when the conviction is for an offence punishable with fine only or with imprisonment for a term of seven years or less. As regards persons below 21 years of age or any woman, the provision is a little more liberal, and can be applied even for conviction of an offence not punishable with death or imprisonment for life, if no previous conviction is proved against the offender. It would, therefore, be evident that Section 360 of the Code itself refers only to the maximum sentences provided for the offence for which an accused person may be convicted with regard to its applicability. Its provisions do not lay down anywhere that in the case of the prescription of minimum sentence, Section 360 of the Code would not be applicable. It may, therefore, be inapt to impose such a bar by a process of interpretation, when the provisions of the section whilst prescribing its applicability, have laid down no such limitation.

8. The aforesaid argument is further strengthened when reference is made to the recent insertion of Section 20AA of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954. It deserves recalling that under Section 16 of the said Act, a minimum sentence had been provided since long. This was apparently never construed by the courts as a legal bar to the application of either the Probation of Offenders- Act or of Section 360 of the Code. Therefore, it was only by an express intendment that a legal bar was created by virtue of Section 20AA of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, which was enacted in 1976. This is in the following terms:

20AA. Application of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 and Section 360 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973.- Nothing contained in the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 (20 of 1958), or Section 360 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 (2 of 1974) shall apply to a person convicted of an offence under this Act unless that person is under eighteen years of age.

It would follow by necessary implication that before the enactment of the aforesaid provision inevitably both Section 360 of the Code and the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, were attracted to offences under Section 16 despite the fact that it prescribed a minimum sentence therefor.

9. Reference may again be made to Section 18 of the Probation of Offenders Act which is in the following terms:

Saving of operation of certain enactments- Nothing in this Act shall affect the provisions of Section 31 of the Reformatory Schools Act, 1887, or Sub- section (2) of Section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, or the Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act, 1956, or of any law in force in any State relating to juvenile offenders or borstal schools.

It is evident from the above that specific mention is made herein of Sub- section (2) of Section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947. For facility of reference this may also be set down:

5. "Criminal misconduct in discharge of official duty.-

(1) A public servant is said to commit the offence of criminal misconduct-

x x x x x x x x x

(2) Any public servant who commits criminal misconduct (* * *), shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which shall not be less then one year but which may extend to seven years and shall also be liable to fine:

Provided that the Court may, for any special reasons recorded in writing, impose a sentence of imprisonment of less then one year.

x x x x x x x x x

Plainly this provision provides for a minimum sentence which can be deviated from only for special reasons. Now if the legislature had either assumed or intended that probationary provisions are not to be at all applied to cases where a minimum sentence of imprisonment is prescribed, there would be no rationale in specifying Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 in Section 18 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958. There is no dearth of statutory provisions which now provide for minimum sentences of imprisonment. The fact that out of all of them, Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 was incorporated in Section 18 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, would clearly indicate that as regards other offences for which the minimum sentence is prescribed, the provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act can possibly be invoked. It follows that if one mere prescription of a minimum sentence alone were to automatically exclude the probationary provisions, then no express specification of Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 was necessary in Section 18 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958.

10. Now apart from rationale and statutory provisions, it appears to me that the issue before us is so completely covered by way of analogy by the binding precedents of the final Court that it would preclude any further elaboration Undoubtedly, Section 16 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 again provides for a minimum sentence of imprisonment. Equally, undeniable it is, that this statute is a Special Act which does not in itself provide for the procedure of criminal trials for offences committed thereunder and Section 4(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 is plainly applicable to it. The position is identical as regards Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914. This again provides a minimum sentence and the Excise Act is a special statute not prescribing the procedure for trials thereunder and is squarely within the ambit of Section 4(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 with regard thereto. Therefore, it is plain that the position as regards offences under Section 16 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 and Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914, is one of total identity. This being so, the issue arose virtually in similar analogous terms before their lordships under Section 16 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954. In Isher Dass v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0136/1972 : 1972CriLJ874 , Khanna, J. speaking for the Bench posed the question in the following terms:

The question which arises for determination is whether despite the fact that a minimum sentence of imprisonment for a term of six months and a fine of rupees one thousand has been prescribed by the legislature for a person found guilty of the offence under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, the Court can resort to the provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act....

And, after a detailed discussion on principle and the relevant statutory provisions, returned the following answer:

"The provisions of Probation of Offenders Act, in our opinion, point to the conclusion that their operation is not excluded in the case of persons found guilty of offences under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. Assuming that there was reasonable doubt or ambiguity, the principle to be applied in construing a penal act is that such doubt or ambiguity should be resolved in favour of the person who would be liable to the penalty (see Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes P. 239 (12th Edition). It has also to be borne in mind that the Probation of Offenders Act was enacted in 1958 sub- sequent to the enactment in 1954 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. As the legislature enacted the Probation of Offenders Act despite the existence on the statute book of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, the operation of the provisions of Probation of Offenders Act cannot be whittled down or circumscribed because of the provisions of the earlier enactment, viz, Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. Indeed as mentioned earlier, the non obstante clause in Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act is a clear manifestation of the intention of the legislature that the provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act would have effect notwithstanding any other law for the time being in force..." In the light of the aforesaid observations, it may perhaps also be noticed that both the provisions of Sections 360 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 and the Probation of Offenders Act were enacted long after the Punjab Excise Act. 1914 and the relevant amendments thereto.

11. It would inevitably, follow from the above that in view of the aforementioned precedent of the final Court, the provisions of Sections 4 and 6 of the Probation of Offenders Act would in strictness be applicable to offence under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914 as well. Once that is so, one fails to see as to how the position under Sections 360 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code 1973 can in any way be different and as to why these would not also be applicable within the limitations prescribed thereunder;-

12. As already stands noticed earlier, the position within this Court again is not different. A bare look at Section 562 of the old Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 and the provisions of Section 360 of the new Code would make it manifest that the two provisions, if not in pari materia, are practically the same. In Prita v. The State, Cri. Revn. No. 754 of 1962 decided on 23- 10- 1963 (Punj.) the question was raised before the Division Bench that there was a legal bar to the application of Section 562 of the old Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 to a case in which conviction had been recorded under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914, because of the prescription of a minimum sentence therein. Repelling this contention, the Bench held as follows:

The answer to the legal point referred to the Bench, therefore, is that there is no legal bar to the application of Section 562 of the Code to a case in which conviction has been registered under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act....

An analogous, if not identical issue was again raised before the Division Bench in State of Haryana v. Ramji Lal Devi SahaiMANU/PH/0249/1971, that the provisions of Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act could not be applied to a conviction under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914 in view of the prescription of a minimum sentence therein as also because of Part III Chapter XXI, Volume III of the Rules and Orders of the Punjab High Court. Negativing the argument, it was concluded as follows:

For the reasons recorded above we hold that, in an appropriate case, it is, open to the Court to take resort to the provisions of Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 and keep in abeyance the imposition of punishment envisaged under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914....

It may be pointedly noticed that not a hint of criticism was offered on behalf of the respondent-State to the correctness of the aforesaid judgments of this Court. We are inclined to unreservedly affirm their ratio.

13. Even though, there is an unbroken line of precedent without a hint of dissent on the point, it nevertheless becomes necessary to examine the view projected by C.S. Tiwana, J in his detailed order of reference in Khazan Singh's case (supra). The tenor of the same would indicate that the learned Judge is inclined to take a contrary view and has presented the issue in a refreshing manner from an altogether different angle. Primary reliance has been placed therein on Section 4(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, which may be quoted for facility of reference:

(1) All offences under the Indian Penal Code shall be investigated, inquired into, tried and otherwise dealt with according to the provisions hereinafter contained.

(2) All offences under any other law shall be investigated, inquired into, tried and otherwise dealt with according to the same provisions, but subject to any enactment for the time being in force regulating the manner or place of investigating, inquiring into, trying or otherwise dealing with such offences." It would be evident from the above that the Code of Criminal Procedure would be generally attracted to the investigation and trial of offences under the special statutes including the Punjab Excise Act, 1914, but subject to the provisions of the said Act. However, no special procedural provisions have been laid therein. Holding that the imposition of sentence was part of the trial, the learned Judge seems to opine that the provision of sentence under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914 was a special procedural provision which would exclude or override Sections 360 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973.

14. Apparently, to escape the ambit of the aforesaid reference order (Khazan Singh's case), Mr. H.S. Brar, learned Counsel for the petitioner had attempted to urge that the imposition of a sentence was not a part of a trial at all which according to him stands concluded by the rendering of a judgment of conviction or acquittal. A reference was made by him to Sections 435(2), 353 and 437(7) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, for seeking some sketchy support for the aforesaid contention. Counsel also fell back on a few passing observations in Public Prosecutor v. Chockalinga MANU/TN/0159/1928made in the context of the transfer of cases under Section 526 of the old Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. Reliance was also placed on In re China Somayya MANU/TN/0257/1932 : AIR 1933 Mad 251 : 34 Cri LJ 117, wherein with regard to the pronouncing of a judgment by a successor Magistrate it was held that the same was not illegal.

15. I am of the view that it is not at all possible to sub- scribe to the hyper- technical argument that the imposition of a sentence is not part of a criminal trial. Indeed it appears to me on principle as an integral part thereof and indeed the final culmination of a trial. Now it seems that the foothold for the tenuous argument raised by Mr. Brar can be easily explained away by the history of the legislation. It would perhaps be undeniable that under the prior Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, the findings of conviction and sentence were part and parcel of the same judgment and indeed indivisible from each other. Under that Code, it would obviously be impossible to draw any line between the order of conviction and the sentence imposed thereunder. that Code prescribed the mode in which judgment was to be rendered and in a case of conviction inevitably, the sentence therefore must follow and be the culminating or the concluding part of the judgment. It was only later in the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 that in view of the desirability of giving a convict a specific opportunity for a hearing on the point of sentence that a thin line was drawn betwixt a conviction simpliciter and the imposition of the sentence later. This, however, to my mind would in no way lead to the untenable inference that whilst rendering of the judgment of conviction is part of the trial, the hearing provided now on the point of sentence and the imposition thereof is something extraneous or alien to the same criminal trial. On principle, therefore, there is no option but to hold that the sentencing process is as much a part of the criminal trial as the necessary preceding steps thereto.

16. What appears to be plain on principle and rationale seems to be equally evident by the provisions of Sections 247 and 248 of the present Code.

"247. The accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence; and the provisions of Section 243 shall apply to the case.

C.- Conclusion of trial.

"248. (1) If, in any case under this Chapter in which a charge has been framed, the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order bf acquittal.

(2) Where in any case under this Chapter the Magistrate finds the accused guilty, but does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section 325 or Section 360 he shall, after hearing the accused on the question of sentence, pass sentence upon him according to law.

X X X X X X X X X X

The very language of the aforesaid provisions, the detailed reference to the sentencing process and the heading of the Section would show that in fact the imposition of sentence is the finale or the conclusion of a criminal trial and therefore must be construed as an integral part thereof.

17. On this point, apart from principle and the specific statutory provisions, the position appears to be equally plain on precedent. A plethora of judgments have held to the same effect and it would be instructive in this connection to refer to Rex v. Grant. (1951) 1 KB 500; Basil Ranger Lawrence v. Emperor MANU/PR/0103/1933; The State v. Naramuddin Ahmed MANU/GH/0024/1954and Queen Empress v. McCarthy MANU/UP/0025/1887 : ILR (1887) All 420.

18. In fairness to Mr. Brar, I may mention that the statutory provisions relied upon by him are no warrant for holding that the imposition of sentence is not part of a trial. Similarly the two Madras judgments MANU/TN/0159/1928 : AIR 1929 Mad 201 : 30 Cri LJ 908 and MANU/TN/0257/1932(supra), which were relied upon by him, appear to be distinguishable. In Public Prosecutor v. Chockalinga Ambalam MANU/TN/0159/1928the observation was made in the context of transfer of a case under Section 526(8) of the old Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, whilst in China Somayya v. Emperor MANU/TN/0257/1932 : AIR 1933 Mad 251: 34 Cri LJ 117 the case related to the validity of a judgment pronounced by the successor magistrate. The question was not directly and pointedly raised in the said cases and if they are to be viewed as authorities for the proposition that even the rendering of a judgment is not part of a criminal trial, then I would respectfully dissent from the same.

19. Even though I hold that the sentencing process is an integral part of the trial, with respect, I am unable to agree that this would in any way affect the issue of the applicability of Sections 360 and 361 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 to the sentencing process. Indeed, it may be said that if sentencing is an integral part of the trial then the Code which governs it would inevitably be applicable to this part also with the same force as it is to the other parts of the trial. Consequently, the provisions of Sections 360 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 would be as much attracted as the other provisions of the Code to a sentence under a special statute. What perhaps deserves highlighting is the fact that Sections 360 and 361 of the 1973 Code do not prescribe any sentence for any offence. They inevitably come into play in a situation where the sentence is prescribed by any other statute be it the Indian Penal Code or any other special penal statute. Therefore, Sections 360 and 361 of the Code are in no way in conflict with or in sub-stitution of any section of a special statute which prescribes the sentence for an offence. To my mind, they are plainly supplementary to the sentencing provision whether spelled out in the basic penal law; namely Indian Penal Code or other special statute like the Punjab Excise Act to which by virtue of Section 4, the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code would be applicable. Therefore, even though a Special Act may provide the sentence for an offence whether fixing a minimum therefore or otherwise, this would be no reason for saying that these provisions would be excluded or be inapplicable. I am unable to sub- scribe to the view that a sentencing provision like Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914 is a special procedural provision which would, override Sections 360 and 361 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973.

20. In the above context, it may particularly be noticed that Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code provides a minimum sentence in cases not punishable with death or life imprisonment. If the prescription of the minimum sentence alone were to operate as a bar to the application of Sections 360 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 then even to a sentence under Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code, these provisions will have to be excluded. No judgment or principle could be advanced before us to show as to why the Code of Criminal Procedure, which in its totality would apply to the offences under the Indian Penal Code, would, as regards Sections 360 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 be inapplicable to a conviction under Section 397 thereof merely because it lays down a minimum sentence therefor. To hold that even as regards offences under the Indian Penal Code. Sections 360 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 would be inapplicable, seems to me as rather plainly untenable.

21. To conclude on the legal aspect, therefore, it must be held that the mere prescription of the minimum sentence under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act 1914 is no bar to the applicability of Sections 360 and 361 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 and the same is not a special reason for denying the benefit of probation to a person convicted thereunder. In the alternative it is equally no bar to the applicability of Sections 4 and 6 of the Probation of Offenders Act. The answer to the question posed at the outset is rendered in the negative.

22. Though as a matter of law. the aforesaid answer has been rendered a note of caution must necessarily be sounded as regards the sentencing policy thereunder. Herein again, the observations of the final Court appear to me as conclusive. With regard to the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, their lordships have set their face firmly against any facile application of the Probation of Offenders Act to offences thereunder prior to 1976 when the legislature itself intervened to create a legal bar. Indeed, whilst holding that as a matter of law. probation could be resorted to with regard to offences under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. a virtual ban on a resort thereto has been laid in actual practice. In Isher Das v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0136/1972. it was observed as follows:

Adulteration of food is a menace to public health. The Prevention of Food Adulteration Act has been enacted with the aim of eradicating that anti- social evil and for ensuring purity in the articles of food. In view of the above object of the Act and the intention of the legislature as revealed by a fact that a minimum sentence of imprisonment for a period of six months and a fine of rupees one thousand has been prescribed, the courts should not lightly resort to the provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act in the case of persons above 21 years of age found guilty of offences under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act....

Reiterating the aforesaid view, Krishna Iyer,.1. speaking for the constitution Bench in Pyarali K. Tejani v. Mahadeo Ramchandra Dange MANU/SC/0146/1973 : 1974CriLJ313 , seems to take even a stricter view in the following words:

"The kindly application of the probation principle is negatived by the imperatives of social defence and the improbabilities of moral proselytisation. No chances can be taken by society with a man whose anti- social operations, disguised as a respectable trade, imperil numerous innocents. He is a security risk. Secondly, these economic offences committed by white collar criminals are unlikely to be dissuaded by the gentle probationary process. Neither casual pro-vocation nor motive against particular persons but planned profit- making from numbers of consumers furnishes the incentive not easily humanised by the therapeutic probationary measure. It is not without significance that the recent report (47th report) of the Law Commission of India has recommended the exclusion of the Act to social and economic offences by suitable amendments.

x x x x x x x x x x

...In the current Indian conditions the probation movement has not yet attained sufficient strength to correct these intractable . May be, under more developed conditions a different approach may have to be made. For the present, we cannot accede to the invitation to let off the accused on probation.

The aforesaid view has been reiterated with force again in Prem Ball ah v. State MANU/SC/0157/1976 : 1977CriLJ12 .

23. It appears to be plain that what has been said above in the context of edible food and economic offences applies with even greater emphasis to the commercial production of illicit liquor illegally by running working stills. The dangers herein are inherent and sometimes more immediately fatal then those under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. The spate of deaths resulting from the clandestine imbibing of poisonous illicit liquor, as often reported in the press provides a red- light signal. The legislative trend is again evident in enhancing the minimum sentence under Section 61(1)(c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914 to two years' rigorous imprisonment and fine of Rs. 5,000/- by the Amendment Act No. 31 of 1976. The following observations of my learned brother S.C. Mital, J. in Harnam Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/PH/0137/1976are most apposite in this context:

On principle, prescribing of the minimum punishment may not deprive the court of its power to release a person on probation, but the fact remains that by so doing the Legislature has clearly expressed its intention of punishing the offender with deterrent effect. It is common knowledge that illicit liquor is manufactured not only unscientifically but also under unhygienic conditions. Drinking of such liquor is hazardous to public health. The persons indulging in illicit distillation are motivated by greed of money to such an extent that they have no regard for human life. The other sordid aspect of this trade is that it is carried out by preparing schemes involving active participation of several persons. For the foregoing reasons the release of a person on probation indulging in illicit distillation of liquor has to be for very exceptional reason, which is lacking in this case. In the result it is not at all expedient to release Harnam Singh on probation.

24. It will be plain from the aforesaid catena of authorities that it is only in exceptional circumstances and for specific weighty reasons recorded that the broad policy of declining the benefit of probation to an accused person in these cases can be possibly deviated from.

25. Adverting now to the merits of the two cases before us, it bears repetition that they were admitted on the point of sentence only. Learned Counsel for the' petitioners were wholly unable to point out anything exceptional which could possibly merit the invoking of the beneficent provisions of probations either under Section 360 of the Indian Penal Code or under the Probation of Offenders Act itself. Applying the principle laid above, we do not find the least justification for interfering with the sentences imposed by the courts below. The revision petitions are hereby dismissed.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Writ Petition (Criminal) No. 68 of 2008, Contempt Petition (Civil) No. D26722 of 2008 in Writ Petition (Criminal) No. 68 of 2008, SLP (Crl.) No. 5986 of 2006, SLP (Crl.) No. 5200 of 2009, Criminal Appeal No. 1410 of 2011 and Criminal Appeal No. 1267 of 2007 (Under Article 32 of the Constitution of India)

Decided On: 12.11.2013

Lalita Kumari Vs. Govt. of U.P. and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

P. Sathasivam, C.J.I., B.S. Chauhan, Ranjana Prakash Desai, Ranjan Gogoi and S.A. Bobde, JJ.

JUDGMENT

P. Sathasivam, C.J.I.

1. The important issue which arises for consideration in the referred matter is whether "a police officer is bound to register a First Information Report (FIR) upon receiving any information relating to commission of a cognizable offence under Section 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (in short 'the Code') or the police officer has the power to conduct a "preliminary inquiry" in order to test the veracity of such information before registering the same?"

2. The present writ petition, under Article 32 of the Constitution, has been filed by one Lalita Kumari (minor) through her father, viz., Shri Bhola Kamat for the issuance of a writ of Habeas Corpus or direction(s) of like nature against the Respondents herein for the protection of his minor daughter who has been kidnapped. The grievance in the said writ petition is that on 11.05.2008, a written report was submitted by the Petitioner before the officer in- charge of the police station concerned who did not take any action on the same. Thereafter, when the Superintendent of Police was moved, an FIR was registered. According to the Petitioner, even thereafter, steps were not taken either for apprehending the accused or for the recovery of the minor girl child.

3. A two- Judge Bench of this Court in, Lalita Kumari v. Government of Uttar Pradesh and Ors. (2008) 7 SCC 164, after noticing the disparity in registration of FIRs by police officers on case to case basis across the country, issued notice to the Union of India, the Chief Secretaries of all the States and Union Territories and Director Generals of Police/Commissioners of Police to the effect that if steps are not taken for registration of FIRs immediately and the copies thereof are not handed over to the complainants, they may move the Magistrates concerned by filing complaint petitions for appropriate direction(s) to the police to register the case immediately and for apprehending the accused persons, failing which, contempt proceedings must be initiated against such delinquent police officers if no sufficient cause is shown.

4. Pursuant to the above directions, when the matter was heard by the very same Bench in Lalita Kumari v. Government of Uttar Pradesh and Ors. (2008) 14 SCC 337, Mr. S.B. Upadhyay, learned senior counsel for the Petitioner, projected his claim that upon receipt of information by a police officer in- charge of a police station disclosing a cognizable offence, it is imperative for him to register a case under Section 154 of the Code and placed reliance upon two- Judge Bench decisions of this Court in State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal MANU/SC/0115/1992 : 1992 Supp. (1) SCC 335, Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi) MANU/SC/8037/2006 : (2006) 2 SCC 677 and Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/5415/2006 : (2007) 1 SCC 1. On the other hand, Mr. Shekhar Naphade, learned senior Counsel for the State of Maharashtra submitted that an officer in- charge of a police station is not obliged under law, upon receipt of information disclosing commission of a cognizable offence, to register a case rather the discretion lies with him, in appropriate cases, to hold some sort of preliminary inquiry in relation to the veracity or otherwise of the accusations made in the report. In support of his submission, he placed reliance upon two-Judge Bench decisions of this Court in P. Sirajuddin v. State of Madras MANU/SC/0158/1970 : (1970) 1 SCC 595, Sevi v. State of Tamil Nadu MANU/SC/0218/1981 : 1981 Supp SCC 43, Shashikant v. Central Bureau of Investigation MANU/SC/8639/2006 : (2007) 1 SCC 630, and Rajinder Singh Katoch v. Chandigarh Admn. MANU/SC/8052/2007 : (2007) 10 SCC 69. In view of the conflicting decisions of this Court on the issue, the said bench, vide order dated 16.09.2008, referred the same to a larger bench.

5. Ensuing compliance to the above direction, the matter pertaining to Lalita Kumari was heard by a Bench of three- Judges in Lalita Kumari v. Government of Uttar Pradesh and Ors. MANU/SC/0157/2012 : (2012) 4 SCC 1 wherein, this Court, after hearing various counsel representing Union of India, States and Union Territories and also after adverting to all the conflicting decisions extensively, referred the matter to a Constitution Bench while concluding as under:

97. We have carefully analysed various judgments delivered by this Court in the last several decades. We clearly discern divergent judicial opinions of this Court on the main issue: whether under Section 154 Code of Criminal Procedure, a police officer is bound to register an FIR when a cognizable offence is made out or he (police officer) has an option, discretion or latitude of conducting some kind of preliminary inquiry before registering the FIR.

98. The learned Counsel appearing for the Union of India and different States have expressed totally divergent views even before this Court. This Court also carved out a special category in the case of medical doctors in the aforementioned cases of Santosh Kumar and Suresh Gupta where preliminary inquiry had been postulated before registering an FIR. Some counsel also submitted that the CBI Manual also envisages some kind of preliminary inquiry before registering the FIR.

99. The issue which has arisen for consideration in these cases is of great public importance. In view of the divergent opinions in a large number of cases decided by this Court, it has become extremely important to have a clear enunciation of law and adjudication by a larger Bench of this Court for the benefit of all concerned- - the courts, the investigating agencies and the citizens.

100. Consequently, we request the Hon'ble the Chief Justice to refer these matters to a Constitution Bench of at least five Judges of this Court for an authoritative judgment.

6. Therefore, the only question before this Constitution Bench relates to the interpretation of Section 154 of the Code and incidentally to consider Sections 156 and 157 also.

7. Heard Mr. S.B. Upadhyay, learned senior counsel for the Petitioner, Mr. K.V. Vishwanathan, learned Additional Solicitor General for the Union of India, Mr. Sidharth Luthra, learned Additional Solicitor General for the State of Chhattisgarh, Mr. Shekhar Naphade, Mr. R.K. Dash, Ms. Vibha Datta Makhija, learned senior counsel for the State of Maharashtra, U.P. and M.P. respectively, Mr. G. Sivabalamurugan, learned Counsel for the accused, Dr. Ashok Dhamija, learned Counsel for the CBI, Mr. Kalyan Bandopodhya, learned senior counsel for the State of West Bengal, Dr. Manish Singhvi, learned AAG for the State of Rajasthan and Mr. Sudarshan Singh Rawat.

8. In order to answer the main issue posed before this Bench, it is useful to refer the following Sections of the Code:

154. Information in cognizable cases.- - (1) Every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence, if given orally to an officer in charge of a police station, shall be reduced to writing by him or under his direction, and be read over to the informant; and every such information, whether given in writing or reduced to writing as aforesaid, shall be signed by the person giving it, and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the State Government may prescribe in this behalf.

(2) A copy of the information as recorded under Sub- section (1) shall be given forthwith, free of cost, to the informant.

(3) Any person aggrieved by a refusal on the part of an officer in charge of a police station to record the information referred to in Sub- section (1) may send the substance of such information, in writing and by post, to the Superintendent of Police concerned who, if satisfied that such information discloses the commission of a cognizable offence, shall either investigate the case himself or direct an investigation to be made by any police officer subordinate to him, in the manner provided by this Code, and such officer shall have all the powers of an officer in charge of the police station in relation to that offence.

156. Police officer's power to investigate cognizable case. (1) Any officer in charge of a police station may, without the order of a Magistrate, investigate any cognizable case which a Court having jurisdiction over the local area within the limits of such station would have power to inquire into or try under the provisions of Chapter XIII.

(2) No proceeding of a police officer in any such case shall at any stage be called in question on the ground that the case was one which such officer was not empowered under this section to investigate.

(3) Any Magistrate empowered under Section 190 may order such an investigation as above-mentioned.

157. Procedure for investigation: (1) If, from information received or otherwise, an officer in charge of a police station has reason to suspect the commission of an offence which he is empowered under Section 156 to investigate, he shall forthwith send a report of the same to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of such offence upon a police report and shall proceed in person, or shall depute one of his subordinate officers not being below such rank as the State Government may, by general or special order, prescribe in this behalf, to proceed, to the spot, to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case, and, if necessary, to take measures for the discovery and arrest of the offender:

Provided that-

(a) when information as to the commission of any such offence is given against any person by name and the case is not of a serious nature, the officer in charge of a police station need not proceed in person or depute a subordinate officer to make an investigation on the spot;

(b) if it appears to the officer in charge of a police station that there is no sufficient ground for entering on an investigation, he shall not investigate the case.

Provided further that in relation to an offence of rape, the recording of statement of the victim shall be conducted at the residence of the victim or in the place of her choice and as far as practicable by a woman police officer in the presence of her parents or guardian or near relatives or social worker of the locality.

(2) In each of the cases mentioned in Clauses (a) and (b) of the proviso to Sub- section (1), the officer in charge of the police station shall state in his report his reasons for not fully complying with the requirements of that subsection, and, in the case mentioned in Clause (b) of the said proviso, the officer shall also forthwith notify to the informant, if any, in such manner as may be prescribed by the State Government, the fact that he will not investigate the case or cause it to be investigated.

Contentions:

9. At the foremost, Mr. S.B. Upadhyay, learned senior counsel, while explaining the conditions mentioned in Section 154 submitted that Section 154(1) is mandatory as the use of the word 'shall' is indicative of the statutory intent of the legislature. He also contended that there is no discretion left to the police officer except to register an FIR. In support of the above proposition, he relied on the following decisions, viz., B. Premanand and Ors. v. Mohan Koikal and Ors. MANU/SC/0249/2011 : (2011) 4 SCC 266, M/s. Hiralal Rattanlal Etc. Etc. v. State of U.P. and Anr. Etc. Etc. MANU/SC/0553/1972 : (1973) 1 SCC 216 and Govindlal Chhaganlal Patel v. Agricultural Produce Market Committee, Godhra and Ors. MANU/SC/0125/1975 : (1975) 2 SCC 482.

10. Mr. Upadhyay, by further drawing our attention to the language used in Section 154(1) of the Code, contended that it merely mentions 'information' without prefixing the words 'reasonable' or 'credible'. In order to substantiate this claim, he relied on the following decisions, viz., Bhajan Lal (supra), Ganesh Bhavan Patel and Anr. v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0083/1978 : (1978) 4 SCC 371, Aleque Padamsee and Ors. v. Union of India and Ors. MANU/SC/2975/2007 : (2007) 6 SCC 171, Ramesh Kumari (supra), Ram Lal Narang v. State (Delhi Administration) MANU/SC/0216/1979 : (1979) 2 SCC 322 and Lallan Chaudhary and Ors. v. State of Bihar and Anr. MANU/SC/4524/2006 : (2006) 12 SCC 229. Besides, he also brought to light various adverse impacts of allowing police officers to hold preliminary inquiry before registering an FIR.

11. Mr. K.V. Viswanathan, learned Additional Solicitor General appearing on behalf of Union of India submitted that in all the cases where information is received under Section 154 of the Code, it is mandatory for the police to forthwith enter the same into the register maintained for the said purpose, if the same relates to commission of a cognizable offence. According to learned ASG, the police authorities have no discretion or authority, whatsoever, to ascertain the veracity of such information before deciding to register it. He also pointed out that a police officer, who proceeds to the spot under Sections 156 and 157 of the Code, on the basis of either a cryptic information or source information, or a rumour etc., has to immediately, on gathering information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence, send a report (ruqqa) to the police station so that the same can be registered as FIR. He also highlighted the scheme of the Code relating to the registration of FIR, arrest, various protections provided to the accused and the power of police to close investigation. In support of his claim, he relied on various decisions of this Court viz., Bhajan Lal (supra), Ramesh Kumari (supra) and Aleque Padamsee (supra). He also deliberated upon the distinguishable judgments in conflict with the mandatory proposition, viz., State of Uttar Pradesh v. Bhagwant Kishore Joshi MANU/SC/0066/1963 : (1964) 3 SCR 71, P. Sirajuddin (supra), Sevi (supra), Shashikant (supra), Rajinder Singh Katoch (supra), Jacob Mathew v. State of Punjab and Anr. MANU/SC/0457/2005 : (2005) 6 SCC 1. He concluded his arguments by saying that if any information disclosing a cognizable offence is led before an officer in- charge of a police station satisfying the requirements of Section 154(1) of the Code, the said police officer has no other option except to enter the substance thereof in the prescribed form, that is to say, to register a case on the basis of such information. Further, he emphasized upon various safeguards provided under the Code against filing a false case.

12. Dr. Ashok Dhamija, learned Counsel for the CBI, submitted that the use of the word "shall" under Section 154(1) of the Code clearly mandates that if the information given to a police officer relates to the commission of a cognizable offence, then it is mandatory for him to register the offence. According to learned Counsel, in such circumstances, there is no option or discretion given to the police. He further contended that the word "shall" clearly implies a mandate and is unmistakably indicative of the statutory intent. What is necessary, according to him, is only that the information given to the police must disclose commission of a cognizable offence. He also contended that Section 154 of the Code uses the word "information" simpliciter and does not use the qualified words such as "credible information" or "reasonable complaint". Thus, the intention of the Parliament is unequivocally clear from the language employed that a mere information relating to commission of a cognizable offence is sufficient to register an FIR. He also relied on Bhajan Lal (supra), Ramesh Kumari (supra), Aleque Padamsee (supra), Lallan Chaudhary (supra), Superintendent of Police, CBI v. Tapan Kumar Singh MANU/SC/0299/2003 : (2003) 6 SCC 175, M/s. Hiralal Rattanlal (supra), B. Premanand (supra), Khub Chand v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/0015/1966 : AIR 1967 SC 1074, P. Sirajuddin (supra), Rajinder Singh Katoch (supra), Bhagwant Kishore Joshi (supra), State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, West Bengal MANU/SC/0121/2010 : (2010) 3 SCC 571. He also pointed out various safeguards provided in the Code against filing a false case. In the end, he concluded by reiterating that the registration of FIR is mandatory under Section 154 of the Code, if the information discloses commission of a cognizable offence and no preliminary inquiry is permissible in such a situation. Further, he also clarified that the preliminary inquiry conducted by the CBI, under certain situations, as provided under the CBI Crime Manual, stands on a different footing due to the special provisions relating to the CBI contained in the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946, which is saved under Sections 4(2) and 5 of the Code.

13. Mr. Kalyan Bandopadhyay, learned senior Counsel appearing on behalf of the State of West Bengal, submitted that whenever any information relating to commission of a cognizable offence is received, it is the duty of the officer in- charge of a police station to record the same and a copy of such information, shall be given forthwith, free of cost, to the informant under Section 154(2) of the Code. According to him, a police officer has no other alternative but to record the information in relation to a cognizable offence in the first instance. He also highlighted various subsequent steps to be followed by the police officer pursuant to the registration of an FIR. With regard to the scope of Section 154 of the Code, he relied on H.N. Rishbud and Inder Singh v. State of Delhi MANU/SC/0049/1954 : AIR 1955 SC 196, Bhajan Lal (supra), S.N. Sharma v. Bipen

Kumar Tiwari MANU/SC/0182/1970 : (1970) 1 SCC 653, Union of India v. Prakash P. Hinduja MANU/SC/0446/2003 : (2003) 6 SCC 195, Sheikh Hasib alias Tabarak v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0180/1971 : (1972) 4 SCC 773, Shashikant (supra), Ashok Kumar Todi v. Kishwar Jahan and Ors. MANU/SC/0162/2011 : (2011) 3 SCC 758, Padma Sundara Rao (Dead) and Ors. v. State of T.N. and Ors. MANU/SC/0182/2002 : (2002) 3 SCC 533, P. Sirajuddin (supra), Rajinder Singh Katoch (supra), Bhagwant Kishore Joshi (supra) and Mannalal Khatic v. The State MANU/WB/0117/1967 : AIR 1967 Cal 478.

14. Dr. Manish Singhvi, learned Additional Advocate General for the State of Rajasthan, submitted that Section 154(1) of the Code mandates compulsory registration of FIR. He also highlighted various safeguards inbuilt in the Code for lodging of false FIRs. He also pointed out that the only exception relates to cases arising under the Prevention of Corruption Act as, in those cases, sanction is necessary before taking cognizance by the Magistrates and the public servants are accorded some kind of protection so that vexatious cases cannot be filed to harass them.

15. Mr. G. Sivabalamurugan, learned Counsel for the Appellant in Criminal Appeal No. 1410 of 2011, after tracing the earlier history, viz., the relevant provisions in the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1861, 1872, 1882 and 1898 stressed as to why the compulsory registration of FIR is mandatory. He also highlighted the recommendations of the Report of the 41st Law Commission and insertion of Section 13 of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 2013 with effect from 03.02.2013.

16. Mr. R.K. Dash, learned senior counsel appearing for the State of Uttar Pradesh, though initially commenced his arguments by asserting that in order to check unnecessary harassment to innocent persons at the behest of unscrupulous complainants, it is desirable that a preliminary inquiry into the allegations should precede with the registration of FIR but subsequently after considering the salient features of the Code, various provisions like Sections 2(4)(h), 156(1), 202(1), 164, various provisions from the U.P. Police Regulations, learned senior counsel contended that in no case recording of FIR should be deferred till verification of its truth or otherwise in case of information relating to a cognizable offence. In addition to the same, he also relied on various pronouncements of this Court, such as, Mohindro v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/1010/2001 : (2001) 9 SCC 581, Ramesh Kumari (supra), Bhajan Lal (supra), Parkash Singh Badal (supra), Munna Lal v. State of Himachal Pradesh MANU/HP/0033/1991 : 1992 Crl. L.J. 1558, Giridhari Lal Kanak v. State and Ors. MANU/MP/0620/2001 : 2002 Crl. L.J. 2113 and Katteri Moideen Kutty Haji v. State of Kerala MANU/KE/0071/2002 : 2002 (2) Crimes 143. Finally, he concluded that when the statutory provisions, as envisaged in Chapter XII of the Code, are clear and unambiguous, it would not be legally permissible to allow the police to make a preliminary inquiry into the allegations before registering an FIR under Section 154 of the Code.

17. Mr. Sidharth Luthra, learned Additional Solicitor General appearing for the State of Chhattisgarh, commenced his arguments by emphasizing the scope of reference before the Constitution Bench. Subsequently, he elaborated on various judgments which held that an investigating officer, on receiving information of commission of a cognizable offence under Section 154 of the Code, has power to conduct preliminary inquiry before registration of FIR, viz., Bhagwant Kishore Joshi (supra), P. Sirajuddin (supra), Sevi (supra) and Rajinder Singh Katoch (supra). Concurrently, he also brought to our notice the following decisions, viz., Bhajan Lal (supra), Ramesh Kumari (supra), Parkash Singh Badal (supra), and Aleque Padamsee (supra), which held that a police officer is duty bound to register an FIR, upon receipt of information disclosing commission of a cognizable offence and the power of preliminary inquiry does not exist under the mandate of Section 154. Learned ASG has put forth a comparative analysis of Section 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1898 and of 1973. He also highlighted that every activity which occurs in a police station [Section 2(s)] is entered in a diary maintained at the police station which may be called as the General Diary, Station Diary or Daily Diary. He underlined the relevance of General Diary by referring to various judicial decisions such as Tapan Kumar Singh (supra), Re: Subbaratnam and Ors. AIR 1949 Madras 663. He further pointed out that, presently, throughout the country, in matrimonial, commercial, medical negligence and corruption related offences, there exist provisions for conducting an inquiry or preliminary inquiry by the police, without/before registering an FIR under Section 154 of the Code. He also brought to our notice various police rules prevailing in the States of Punjab, Rajasthan, U.P., Madhya Pradesh, Kolkata, Bombay, etc., for conducting an inquiry before registering an FIR. Besides, he also attempted to draw an inference from the Crime Manual of the CBI to highlight that a preliminary inquiry before registering a case is permissible and legitimate in the eyes of law. Adverting to the above contentions, he concluded by pleading that preliminary inquiry before registration of an FIR should be held permissible. Further, he emphasized that the power to carry out an inquiry or preliminary inquiry by the police, which precedes the registration of FIR will eliminate the misuse of the process, as the registration of FIR serves as an impediment against a person for various important activities like applying for a job or a passport, etc. Learned ASG further requested this Court to frame guidelines for certain category of cases in which preliminary inquiry should be made.

18. Mr. Shekhar Naphade, learned senior counsel appearing on behalf of the State of Maharashtra, submitted that ordinarily the Station House Officer (SHO) should record an FIR upon receiving a complaint disclosing the ingredients of a cognizable offence, but in certain situations, in case of doubt about the correctness or credibility of the information, he should have the discretion of holding a preliminary inquiry and thereafter, if he is satisfied that there is a prima facie case for investigation, register the FIR. A mandatory duty of registering FIR should not be cast upon him. According to him, this interpretation would harmonize two extreme positions, viz., the proposition that the moment the complaint disclosing ingredients of a cognizable offence is lodged, the police officer must register an FIR without any scrutiny whatsoever is an extreme proposition and is contrary to the mandate of Article 21 of the Constitution of India, similarly, the other extreme point of view is that the police officer must investigate the case substantially before registering an FIR. Accordingly, he pointed out that both must be rejected and a middle path must be chosen. He also submitted the following judgments, viz., Bhajan Lal (supra), Ramesh Kumari (supra), Parkash Singh Badal (supra), and Aleque Padamsee (supra) wherein it has been held that if a complaint alleging commission of a cognizable offence is received in the police station, then the SHO has no other option but to register an FIR under Section 154 of the Code. According to learned senior counsel, these verdicts require reconsideration as they have interpreted Section 154 de hors the other provisions of the Code and have failed to consider the impact of Article 21 on Section 154 of the Code.

19. Alongside, he pointed out the following decisions, viz., Rajinder Singh Katoch (supra), P. Sirajuddin (supra), Bhagwant Kishore Joshi (supra) and Sevi (supra), which hold that before registering an FIR under Section 154 of the Code, it is open to the police officer to hold a preliminary inquiry to ascertain whether there is a prima facie case of commission of a cognizable offence or not. According to learned senior counsel, Section 154 of the Code forms part of a chain of statutory provisions relating to investigation and, therefore, the scheme of provisions of Sections 41, 157, 167, 169, etc., must have a bearing on the interpretation of Section 154. In addition, he emphasized that giving a literal interpretation would reduce the registration of FIR to a mechanical act. Parallelly, he underscored the impact of Article 21 on Section 154 of the Code by referring to Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India MANU/SC/0133/1978 : (1978) 1 SCC 248, wherein this Court has applied Article 21 to several provisions relating to criminal law. This Court has also stated that the expression "law" contained in Article 21 necessarily postulates law which is reasonable and not merely statutory provisions irrespective of its reasonableness or otherwise. Learned senior counsel pleaded that in the light of Article 21, provisions of Section 154 of the Code must be read down to mean that before registering an FIR, the police officer must be satisfied that there is a prima facie case for investigation. He also emphasized that Section 154 contains implied power of the police officer to hold preliminary inquiry if he bona fide possess serious doubts about the credibility of the information given to him. By pointing out Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 2013, particularly, Section 166A, Mr. Naphade contended that as far as other cognizable offences (apart from those mentioned in Section 166A) are concerned, police has a discretion to hold preliminary inquiry if there is some doubt about the correctness of the information.

20. In case of allegations relating to medical negligence on the part of the doctors, it is pointed out by drawing our attention to some of the decisions of this Court viz., Tapan Kumar Singh (supra), Jacob Mathew (supra) etc., that no medical professional should be prosecuted merely on the basis of the allegations in the complaint. By pointing out various decisions, Mr. Naphade emphasized that in appropriate cases, it would be proper for a police officer, on receipt of a complaint of a cognizable offence, to satisfy himself that at least prima facie allegations levelled against the accused in the complaint are credible. He also contended that no single provision of a statute can be read and interpreted in isolation, but the statute must be read as a whole. Accordingly, he prayed that the provisions of Sections 41, 57, 156, 157, 159, 167, 190, 200 and 202 of the Code must be read together. He also pointed out that Section 154(3) of the Code enables any complainant whose complaint is not registered as an FIR by the officer in- charge of the police station to approach the higher police officer for the purpose of getting his complaint registered as an FIR and in such a case, the higher police officer has all the powers of recording an FIR and directing investigation into the matter. In addition to the remedy available to an aggrieved person of approaching higher police officer, he can also move the concerned Magistrate by making a complaint under Section 190 thereof. He further emphasized that the fact that the legislature has provided adequate remedies against refusal to register FIR and to hold investigation in cognizable offences, is indicative of legislative intent that the police officer is not bound to record FIR merely because the ingredients of a cognizable offence are disclosed in the complaint, if he has doubts about the veracity of the complaint. He also pointed out that the word "shall" used in the statute does not always mean absence of any discretion in the matter. For the said proposition, he also highlighted that this Court has preferred the rule of purposive interpretation to the rule of literal interpretation for which he relied on Chairman Board of Mining Examination and Chief Inspector of Mines and Anr. v. Ramjee MANU/SC/0061/1977 : (1977) 2 SCC 256, Lalit Mohan Pandey v. Pooran Singh MANU/SC/0422/2004 : (2004) 6 SCC 626, Prativa Bose v. Kumar Rupendra Deb Raikat MANU/SC/0251/1963 : (1964) 4 SCR 69. He further pointed out that it is impossible to put the provisions of Section 154 of the Code in a straightjacket formula. He also prayed for framing of some guidelines as regards registration or non- registration of FIR. Finally, he pointed out that the requirement of Article 21 is that the procedure should be fair and just. According to him, if the police officer has doubts in the matter, it is imperative that he should have the discretion of holding a preliminary inquiry in the matter. If he is debarred from holding such a preliminary inquiry, the procedure would then suffer from the vice of arbitrariness and unreasonableness. Thus, he concluded his arguments by pleading that Section 154 of the Code must be interpreted in the light of Article 21.

21. Ms. Vibha Datta Makhija, learned senior counsel appearing for the State of Madhya Pradesh submitted that a plain reading of Section 154 and other provisions of the Code shows that it may not be mandatory but is absolutely obligatory on the part of the police officer to register an FIR prior to taking any steps or conducting investigation into a cognizable offence. She further pointed out that after receiving the first information of an offence and prior to the registration of the said report (whether oral or written) in the First Information Book maintained at the police station under various State Government Regulations, only some preliminary inquiry or investigative steps are permissible under the statutory framework of the Code to the extent as is justifiable and is within the window of statutory discretion granted strictly for the purpose of ascertaining whether there has been a commission or not of a cognizable offence. Hence, an investigation, culminating into a Final Report under Section 173 of the Code, cannot be called into question and be quashed due to the reason that a part of the inquiry, investigation or steps taken during investigation are conducted after receiving the first information but prior to registering the same unless it is found that the said investigation is unfair, illegal, mala fide and has resulted in grave prejudice to the right of the accused to fair investigation. In support of the above contentions, she traced the earlier provisions of the Code and current statutory framework, viz., Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 2013 with reference to various decisions of this Court. She concluded that Section 154 of the Code leaves no area of doubt that where a cognizable offence is disclosed, there is no discretion on the part of the police to record or not to record the said information, however, it may differ from case to case.

22. The issues before the Constitution Bench of this Court arise out of two main conflicting areas of concern, viz.,

(i) Whether the immediate non- registration of FIR leads to scope for manipulation by the police which affects the right of the victim/complainant to have a complaint immediately investigated upon allegations being made; and

(ii) Whether in cases where the complaint/information does not clearly disclose the commission of a cognizable offence but the FIR is compulsorily registered then does it infringe the rights of an accused.

Discussion:

23. The FIR is a pertinent document in the criminal law procedure of our country and its main object from the point of view of the informant is to set the criminal law in motion and from the point of view of the investigating authorities is to obtain information about the alleged criminal activity so as to be able to take suitable steps to trace and to bring to book the guilty.

24. Historical experience has thrown up cases from both the sides where the grievance of the victim/informant of non- registration of valid FIRs as well as that of the accused of being unnecessarily harassed and investigated upon false charges have been found to be correct.

25. An example of the first category of cases is found in State of Maharashtra v. Sarangdharsingh Shivdassingh Chavan and Anr. MANU/SC/1055/2010 : (2011) 1 SCC 577 wherein a writ petition was filed challenging the order of the Collector in the District of Buldhana directing not to register any crime against Mr. Gokulchand Sananda, without obtaining clearance from the District Anti-Money Lending Committee and the District Government Pleader. From the record, it was revealed that out of 74 cases, only in seven cases, charge sheets were filed alleging illegal moneylending. This Court found that upon instructions given by the Chief Minister to the District Collector, there was no registration of FIR of the poor farmers. In these circumstances, this Court held the said instructions to be ultra vires and quashed the same. It is argued that cases like above exhibit the mandatory character of Section 154, and if it is held otherwise, it shall lead to grave injustice.

26. In Aleque Padamsee (supra), while dealing with the issue whether it is within the powers of courts to issue a writ directing the police to register a First Information Report in a case where it was alleged that the accused had made speeches likely to disturb communal harmony, this Court held that "the police officials ought to register the FIR whenever facts brought to their notice show that a cognizable offence has been made out. In case the police officials fail to do so, the modalities to be adopted are as set out in Section 190 read with Section 200 of the Code." As such, the Code itself provides several checks for refusal on the part of the police authorities under Section 154 of the Code.

27. However, on the other hand, there are a number of cases which exhibit that there are instances where the power of the police to register an FIR and initiate an investigation thereto are misused where a cognizable offence is not made out from the contents of the complaint. A significant case in this context is the case of Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand MANU/SC/0592/2010 : (2010) 7 SCC 667 wherein this Court has expressed its anxiety over misuse of Section 498A of the Indian Penal Code, 1860 (in short 'the Indian Penal Code') with respect to which a large number of frivolous reports were lodged. This Court expressed its desire that the legislature must take into consideration the informed public opinion and the pragmatic realities to make necessary changes in law.

28. The above said judgment resulted in the 243rd Report of the Law Commission of India submitted on 30th August, 2012. The Law Commission, in its Report, concluded that though the offence under Section 498A could be made compoundable, however, the extent of misuse was not established by empirical data, and, thus, could not be a ground to denude the provision of its efficacy. The Law Commission also observed that the law on the question whether the registration of FIR could be postponed for a reasonable time is in a state of uncertainty and can be crystallized only upon this Court putting at rest the present controversy.

29. In order to arrive at a conclusion in the light of divergent views on the point and also to answer the above contentions, it is pertinent to have a look at the historical background of the Section and corresponding provisions that existed in the previous enactments of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861

139. Every complaint or information preferred to an officer in charge of a police station, shall be reduced into writing and the substance thereof shall be entered in a diary to be kept by such officer, in such form as shall be prescribed by the local government.

Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872

112. Every complaint preferred to an officer in charge of a police station, shall be reduced into writing, and shall be signed, sealed or marked by the person making it; and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in the form prescribed by the local government.

Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882

154. Every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence if given orally to an officer in charge of a police station, shall be reduced to writing by him, or under his direction, and be read over to the informant; and every such information, whether given in writing or reduced to writing as aforesaid, shall be signed by the person giving it, and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such form as the government may prescribe in this behalf.

Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898

154. Every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence if given orally to an officer in charge of a police station, shall be reduced to writing by him or under his direction, and be read over to the informant; and every such information, whether given in writing or reduced to writing as aforesaid, shall be signed by the person giving it, and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the Government may prescribe in this behalf.

Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

154. Information in cognizable cases: 1) Every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence, it given orally to an officer in charge of a police station, shall be reduced to writing by him or under his direction, and be read over to the informant; and every such information, whether given in writing or reduced to writing as aforesaid, shall be signed by the person giving it, and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the State Government may prescribe in this behalf.

[Provided that if the information is given by the woman against whom an offence under Sections 326A, 326B, 354, 354A, 354B, 354C, 354D, 376, 376A, 376B, 376C, 376D, 376E or Section 509 of the Indian Penal Code is alleged to have been committed or attempted, then such information shall be recorded by a woman police officer or any woman officer:

Provided further that:

(a) in the event that the person against whom an offence under Sections 354, 354A, 354B, 354C, 354D, 376, 376A, 376B, 376C, 376D, 376E or Section 509 of the Indian Penal code is alleged to have been committed or attempted is temporarily or permanently mentally or physically disabled then such information shall be recorded by a police officer, at the residence of the person seeking to report such offence or at a convenient place of such person's choice, in the presence of an interpreter or a special educator, as the case may be;

(b) the recording of such information shall be videographed;

(c) the police officer shall get the statement of the person recorded by a Judicial Magistrate under Clause (a) of Sub- section (5A) of Section 164 as soon as possible.]

(Inserted by Section 13 of 'The Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 2013 w.e.f. 03.02.2013)

(2) A copy of the information as recorded under Sub- section (1) shall be given forthwith, free of cost, to the informant.

(3) Any person aggrieved by a refusal on the part of an officer in charge of a police station to record the information referred to in Sub- section (1) may send the substance of such information, in writing and by post, to the Superintendent of Police concerned who, if satisfied that such information discloses the commission of a cognizable offence, shall either investigate the case himself or direct an investigation to be made by any police officer subordinate to him, in the manner provided by this Code, and such officer shall have all the powers of an officer in charge of the police station in relation to that offence.

A perusal of the above said provisions manifests the legislative intent in both old codes and the new code for compulsory registration of FIR in a case of cognizable offence without conducting any Preliminary Inquiry.

30. The precursor to the present Code of 1973 is the Code of 1898 wherein substantial changes were made in the powers and procedure of the police to investigate. The starting point of the powers of police was changed from the power of the officer in- charge of a police station to investigate into a cognizable offence without the order of a Magistrate, to the reduction of the first information regarding commission of a cognizable offence, whether received orally or in writing, into writing and into the book separately prescribed by the Provincial government for recording such first information.

31. As such, a significant change that took place by way of the 1898 Code was with respect to the placement of Section 154, i.e., the provision imposing requirement of recording the first information regarding commission of a cognizable offence in the special book prior to Section 156, i.e., the provision empowering the police officer to investigate a cognizable offence. As such, the objective of such placement of provisions was clear which was to ensure that the recording of the first information should be the starting point of any investigation by the police. In the interest of expediency of investigation since there was no safeguard of obtaining permission from the Magistrate to commence an investigation, the said procedure of recording first information in their books along with the signature/seal of the informant, would act as an "extremely valuable safeguard" against the excessive, mala fide and illegal exercise of investigative powers by the police.

32. Provisions contained in Chapter XII of the Code deal with information to the police and their powers to investigate. The said Chapter sets out the procedure to be followed during investigation. The objective to be achieved by the procedure prescribed in the said Chapter is to set the criminal law in motion and to provide for all procedural safeguards so as to ensure that the investigation is fair and is not mala fide and there is no scope of tampering with the evidence collected during the investigation.

33. In addition, Mr. Shekhar Naphade, learned senior counsel contended that insertion of Section 166A in Indian Penal Code indicates that registration of FIR is not compulsory for all offences other than what is specified in the said Section. By Criminal Law (Amendment) Act 2013, Section 166A was inserted in Indian Penal Code which reads as under:

Section 166A- - Whoever, being a public servant.-

(a) knowingly disobeys any direction of the law which prohibits him from requiring the attendance at any place of any person for the purpose of investigation into an offence or any other matter, or

(b) knowingly disobeys, to the prejudice of any person, any other direction of the law regulating the manner in which he shall conduct such investigation, or

(c) fails to record any information given to him under Sub- section (1) of Section 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, in relation to cognizable offence punishable under Section 326A, Section 326B, Section 354, Section 354B, Section 370, Section 370A, Section 376, Section 376A, Section 376B, Section 376C, Section 376D, Section 376E, Section 509 shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which shall not be less than six months but which may extend to two years and shall also be liable to fine.

Section 166A(c) lays down that if a public servant (Police Officer) fails to record any information given to him under Section 154(1) of the Code in relation to cognizable offences punishable under Sections 326A, 326B, 354, 354B, 370, 370A, 376, 376A, 376B, 376C, 376D, 376E or Section 509, he shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which shall not be less than six months but may extend to two years and shall also be liable to fine. Thus, it is the stand of learned Counsel that this provision clearly indicates that registration of FIR is imperative and police officer has no discretion in the matter in respect of offences specified in the said section. Therefore, according to him, the legislature accepts that as far as other cognizable offences are concerned, police has discretion to hold a preliminary inquiry if there is doubt about the correctness of the information.

34. Although, the argument is as persuasive as it appears, yet, we doubt whether such a presumption can be drawn in contravention to the unambiguous words employed in the said provision. Hence, insertion of Section 166A in the Indian Penal Code vide Criminal Law (Amendment) Act 2013, must be read in consonance with the provision and not contrary to it. The insertion of Section 166A was in the light of recent unfortunate occurrence of offences against women. The intention of the legislature in putting forth this amendment was to tighten the already existing provisions to provide enhanced safeguards to women. Therefore, the legislature, after noticing the increasing crimes against women in our country, thought it appropriate to expressly punish the police officers for their failure to register FIRs in these cases. No other meaning than this can be assigned to for the insertion of the same.

35. With this background, let us discuss the submissions in the light of various decisions both in favour and against the referred issue.

Interpretation of Section 154:

36. It may be mentioned in this connection that the first and foremost principle of interpretation of a statute in every system of interpretation is the literal rule of interpretation. All that we have to see at the very outset is what does the provision say? As a result, the language employed in Section 154 is the determinative factor of the legislative intent. A plain reading of Section 154(1) of the Code provides that any information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence if given orally to an officer- in- charge of a police station shall be reduced into writing by him or under his direction. There is no ambiguity in the language of Section 154(1) of the Code.

37. At this juncture, it is apposite to refer to the following observations of this Court in M/s. Hiralal Rattanlal (supra) which are as under:

22...In construing a statutory provision, the first and the foremost rule of construction is the literary construction. All that we have to see at the very outset is what does that provision say? If the provision is unambiguous and if from that provision, the legislative intent is clear, we need not call into aid the other rules of construction of statutes. The other rules of construction of statutes are called into aid only when the legislative intention is not clear....

The above decision was followed by this Court in B. Premanand (supra) and after referring the abovesaid observations in the case of Hiralal Rattanlal (supra), this Court observed as under:

9. It may be mentioned in this connection that the first and foremost principle of interpretation of a statute in every system of interpretation is the literal rule of interpretation. The other rules of interpretation e.g. the mischief rule, purposive interpretation, etc. can only be resorted to when the plain words of a statute are ambiguous or lead to no intelligible results or if read literally would nullify the very object of the statute. Where the words of a statute are absolutely clear and unambiguous, recourse cannot be had to the principles of interpretation other than the literal rule, vide Swedish Match AB v. SEBI MANU/SC/0693/2004 : (2004) 11 SCC 641.

The language of Section 154(1), therefore, admits of no other construction but the literal construction.

38. The legislative intent of Section 154 is vividly elaborated in Bhajan Lal (supra) which is as under:

30. The legal mandate enshrined in Section 154(1) is that every information relating to the commission of a "cognizable offence" (as defined Under Section 2(c) of the Code) if given orally (in which case it is to be reduced into writing) or in writing to "an officer incharge of a police station" (within the meaning of Section 2(o) of the Code) and signed by the informant should be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the State Government may prescribe which form is commonly called as "First Information Report" and which act of entering the information in the said form is known as registration of a crime or a case.

31. At the stage of registration of a crime or a case on the basis of the information disclosing a cognizable offence in compliance with the mandate of Section 154(1) of the Code, the concerned police officer cannot embark upon an inquiry as to whether the information, laid by the informant is reliable and genuine or otherwise and refuse to register a case on the ground that the information is not reliable or credible. On the other hand, the officer in charge of a police station is statutorily obliged to register a case and then to proceed with the investigation if he has reason to suspect the commission of an offence which he is empowered under Section 156 of the Code to investigate, subject to the proviso to Section 157. (As we have proposed to make a detailed discussion about the power of a police officer in the field of investigation of a cognizable offence within the ambit of Sections 156 and 157 of the Code in the ensuing part of this judgment, we do not propose to deal with those sections in extenso in the present context.) In case, an officer in charge of a police station refuses to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him and to register a case on the information of a cognizable offence reported and thereby violates the statutory duty cast upon him, the person aggrieved by such refusal can send the substance of the information in writing and by post to the Superintendent of Police concerned who if satisfied that the information forwarded to him discloses a cognizable offence, should either investigate the case himself or direct an investigation to be made by any police officer subordinate to him in the manner provided by Sub- section (3) of Section 154 of the Code.

32. Be it noted that in Section 154(1) of the Code, the legislature in its collective wisdom has carefully and cautiously used the expression "information" without qualifying the same as in Section 41(1)(a) or (g) of the Code wherein the expressions, "reasonable complaint" and "credible information" are used. Evidently, the non qualification of the word "information" in Section 154(1) unlike in Section 41(1)(a) and (g) of the Code may be for the reason that the police officer should not refuse to record an information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence and to register a case thereon on the ground that he is not satisfied with the reasonableness or credibility of the information. In other words, 'reasonableness' or 'credibility' of the said information is not a condition precedent for registration of a case. A comparison of the present Section 154 with those of the earlier Codes will indicate that the legislature had purposely thought it fit to employ only the word "information" without qualifying the said word. Section 139 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1861 (Act 25 of 1861) passed by the Legislative Council of India read that 'every complaint or information' preferred to an officer in charge of a police station should be reduced into writing which provision was subsequently modified by Section 112 of the Code of 1872 (Act 10 of 1872) which thereafter read that 'every complaint' preferred to an officer in charge of a police station shall be reduced in writing. The word 'complaint' which occurred in previous two Codes of 1861 and 1872 was deleted and in that place the word 'information' was used in the Codes of 1882 and 1898 which word is now used in Sections 154, 155, 157 and 190(c) of the present Code of 1973 (Act 2 of 1974). An overall reading of all the Codes makes it clear that the condition which is sine qua non for recording a first information report is that there must be information and that information must disclose a cognizable offence.

33. It is, therefore, manifestly clear that if any information disclosing a cognizable offence is laid before an officer in charge of a police station satisfying the requirements of Section 154(1) of the Code, the said police officer has no other option except to enter the substance thereof in the prescribed form, that is to say, to register a case on the basis of such information.

39. Consequently, the condition that is sine qua non for recording an FIR under Section 154 of the Code is that there must be information and that information must disclose a cognizable offence. If any information disclosing a cognizable offence is led before an officer in charge of the police station satisfying the requirement of Section 154(1), the said police officer has no other option except to enter the substance thereof in the prescribed form, that is to say, to register a case on the basis of such information. The provision of Section 154 of the Code is mandatory and the concerned officer is duty bound to register the case on the basis of information disclosing a cognizable offence. Thus, the plain words of Section 154(1) of the Code have to be given their literal meaning.

'Shall'

40. The use of the word "shall" in Section 154(1) of the Code clearly shows the legislative intent that it is mandatory to register an FIR if the information given to the police discloses the commission of a cognizable offence.

41. In Khub Chand (supra), this Court observed as under:

7...The term "shall" in its ordinary significance is mandatory and the court shall ordinarily give that interpretation to that term unless such an interpretation leads to some absurd or inconvenient consequence or be at variance with the intent of the legislature, to be collected from other parts of the Act. The construction of the said expression depends on the provisions of a particular Act, the setting in which the expression appears, the object for which the direction is given, the consequences that would flow from the infringement of the direction and such other considerations....

42. It is relevant to mention that the object of using the word "shall" in the context of Section 154(1) of the Code is to ensure that all information relating to all cognizable offences is promptly registered by the police and investigated in accordance with the provisions of law.

43. Investigation of offences and prosecution of offenders are the duties of the State. For "cognizable offences", a duty has been cast upon the police to register FIR and to conduct investigation except as otherwise permitted specifically under Section 157 of the Code. If a discretion, option or latitude is allowed to the police in the matter of registration of FIRs, it can have serious consequences on the public order situation and can also adversely affect the rights of the victims including violating their fundamental right to equality.

44. Therefore, the context in which the word "shall" appears in Section 154(1) of the Code, the object for which it has been used and the consequences that will follow from the infringement of the direction to register FIRs, all these factors clearly show that the word "shall" used in Section 154(1) needs to be given its ordinary meaning of being of "mandatory" character. The provisions of Section 154(1) of the Code, read in the light of the statutory scheme, do not admit of conferring any discretion on the officer in- charge of the police station for embarking upon a preliminary inquiry prior to the registration of an FIR. It is settled position of law that if the provision is unambiguous and the legislative intent is clear, the court need not call into it any other rules of construction.

45. In view of the above, the use of the word 'shall' coupled with the Scheme of the Act lead to the conclusion that the legislators intended that if an information relating to commission of a cognizable offence is given, then it would mandatorily be registered by the officer in- charge of the police station. Reading 'shall' as 'may', as contended by some counsel, would be against the Scheme of the Code. Section 154 of the Code should be strictly construed and the word 'shall' should be given its natural meaning. The golden rule of interpretation can be given a go- by only in cases where the language of the section is ambiguous and/or leads to an absurdity.

46. In view of the above, we are satisfied that Section 154(1) of the Code does not have any ambiguity in this regard and is in clear terms. It is relevant to mention that Section 39 of the Code casts a statutory duty on every person to inform about commission of certain offences which includes offences covered by Sections 121 to 126, 302, 64A, 382, 392 etc., of the Indian Penal Code. It would be incongruous to suggest that though it is the duty of every citizen to inform about commission of an offence, but it is not obligatory on the officer- incharge of a Police Station to register the report. The word 'shall' occurring in Section 39 of the Code has to be given the same meaning as the word 'shall' occurring in Section 154(1) of the Code.

'Book'/'Diary'

47. It is contented by learned ASG appearing for the State of Chhattisgarh that the recording of first information under Section 154 in the 'book' is subsequent to the entry in the General Diary/Station Diary/Daily Diary, which is maintained in police station. Therefore, according to learned ASG, first information is a document at the earliest in the general diary, then if any preliminary inquiry is needed the police officer may conduct the same and thereafter the information will be registered as FIR.

48. This interpretation is wholly unfounded. The First Information Report is in fact the "information" that is received first in point of time, which is either given in writing or is reduced to writing. It is not the "substance" of it, which is to be entered in the diary prescribed by the State Government. The term 'General Diary' (also called as 'Station Diary' or 'Daily Diary' in some States) is maintained not under Section 154 of the Code but under the provisions of Section 44 of the Police Act, 1861 in the States to which it applies, or under the respective provisions of the Police Act(s) applicable to a State or under the Police Manual of a State, as the case may be. Section 44 of the Police Act, 1861 is reproduced below:

44. Police- officers to keep diary.- - It shall be the duty of every officer in charge of a police- station to keep a general diary in such form as shall, from time to time, be prescribed by the State Government and to record therein all complaints and charged preferred, the names of all persons arrested, the names of the complainants, the offences charged against them, the weapons or property that shall have been taken from their possession or otherwise, and the names of the witnesses who shall have been examined. The Magistrate of the district shall be at liberty to call for any inspect such diary.

49. It is pertinent to note that during the year 1861, when the aforesaid Police Act, 1861 was passed, the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861 was also passed. Section 139 of that Code dealt with registration of FIR and this Section is also referred to the word "diary", as can be seen from the language of this Section, as reproduced below:

139. Every complaint or information preferred to an officer in charge of a Police Station, shall be reduced into writing, and the substance thereof shall be entered in a diary to be kept by such officer, in such form as shall be prescribed by the local government.

Thus, Police Act, 1861 and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861, both of which were passed in the same year, used the same word "diary".

50. However, in the year 1872, a new Code came to be passed which was called the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872. Section 112 of the Code dealt with the issue of registration of FIR and is reproduced below:

112. Every complaint preferred to an officer in charge of a Police station shall be reduced into writing, and shall be signed, sealed, or marked by the person making it; and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in the form prescribed by the Local Government.

51. It is, thus, clear that in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872, a departure was made and the word 'book' was used in place of 'diary'. The word 'book' clearly referred to FIR book to be maintained under the Code for registration of FIRs.

52. The question that whether the FIR is to be recorded in the FIR Book or in General Diary, is no more res integra. This issue has already been decided authoritatively by this Court.

53. In Madhu Bala v. Suresh Kumar MANU/SC/0806/1997 : (1997) 8 SCC 476, this Court has held that FIR must be registered in the FIR Register which shall be a book consisting of 200 pages. It is true that the substance of the information is also to be mentioned in the Daily diary (or the general diary). But, the basic requirement is to register the FIR in the FIR Book or Register. Even in Bhajan Lal (supra), this Court held that FIR has to be entered in a book in a form which is commonly called the First Information Report.

54. It is thus clear that registration of FIR is to be done in a book called FIR book or FIR Register. of course, in addition, the gist of the FIR or the substance of the FIR may also be mentioned simultaneously in the General Diary as mandated in the respective Police Act or Rules, as the case may be, under the relevant State provisions.

55. The General Diary is a record of all important transactions/events taking place in a police station, including departure and arrival of police staff, handing over or taking over of charge, arrest of a person, details of law and order duties, visit of senior officers etc. It is in this context that gist or substance of each FIR being registered in the police station is also mentioned in the General Diary since registration of FIR also happens to be a very important event in the police station. Since General Diary is a record that is maintained chronologically on day- today basis (on each day, starting with new number 1), the General Diary entry reference is also mentioned simultaneously in the FIR Book, while FIR number is mentioned in the General Diary entry since both of these are prepared simultaneously.

56. It is relevant to point out that FIR Book is maintained with its number given on an annual basis. This means that each FIR has a unique annual number given to it. This is on similar lines as the Case Numbers given in courts. Due to this reason, it is possible to keep a strict control and track over the registration of FIRs by the supervisory police officers and by the courts, wherever necessary. Copy of each FIR is sent to the superior officers and to the concerned Judicial Magistrate.

57. On the other hand, General Diary contains a huge number of other details of the proceedings of each day. Copy of General Diary is not sent to the Judicial Magistrate having jurisdiction over the police station, though its copy is sent to a superior police officer. Thus, it is not possible to keep strict control of each and every FIR recorded in the General Diary by superior police officers and/or the court in view of enormous amount of other details mentioned therein and the numbers changing every day.

58. The signature of the complainant is obtained in the FIR Book as and when the complaint is given to the police station. On the other hand, there is no such requirement of obtaining signature of the complainant in the general diary. Moreover, at times, the complaint given may consist of large number of pages, in which case it is only the gist of the complaint which is to be recorded in the General Diary and not the full complaint. This does not fit in with the suggestion that what is recorded in General Diary should be considered to be the fulfillment/compliance of the requirement of Section 154 of registration of FIR. In fact, the usual practice is to record the complete complaint in the FIR book (or annex it with the FIR form) but record only about one or two paragraphs (gist of the information) in the General Diary.

59. In view of the above, it is useful to point out that the Code was enacted under Entry 2 of the Concurrent List of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution which is reproduced below:

2. Criminal procedure, including all matters included in the Code of Criminal Procedure at the commencement of this Constitution.

On the other hand, Police Act, 1861 (or other similar Acts in respective States) were enacted under Entry 2 of the State List of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution, which is reproduced below:

2. Police (including railway and village police) subject to the provisions of Entry 2A of List I.

60. Now, at this juncture, it is pertinent to refer Article 254(1) of the Constitution, which lays down the provisions relating to inconsistencies between the laws made by the Parliament and the State Legislatures. Article 254(1) is reproduced as under:

254. Inconsistency between laws made by Parliament and laws made by the Legislatures of States

(1) If any provision of a law made by the Legislature of a State is repugnant to any provision of a law made by Parliament which Parliament is competent to enact, or to any provision of an existing law with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent List, then, subject to the provisions of Clause (2), the law made by Parliament, whether passed before or after the law made by the Legislature of such State, or, as the case may be, the existing law, shall prevail and the law made by the Legislature of the State shall, to the extent of the repugnancy, be void.

Thus it is clear from the mandate of Article 254(1) of the Constitution that if there is any inconsistency between the provisions of the Code and the Police Act, 1861, the provisions of the Code will prevail and the provisions of the Police Act would be void to the extent of the repugnancy.

61. If at all, there is any inconsistency in the provisions of Section 154 of the Code and Section 44 of the Police Act, 1861, with regard to the fact as to whether the FIR is to be registered in the FIR book or in the General Diary, the provisions of Section 154 of the Code will prevail and the provisions of Section 44 of the Police Act, 1861 (or similar provisions of the respective corresponding Police Act or Rules in other respective States) shall be void to the extent of the repugnancy. Thus, FIR is to be recorded in the FIR Book, as mandated under Section 154 of the Code, and it is not correct to state that information will be first recorded in the General Diary and only after preliminary inquiry, if required, the information will be registered as FIR.

62. However, this Court in Tapan Kumar Singh (supra), held that a GD entry may be treated as First information in an appropriate case, where it discloses the commission of a cognizable offence. It was held as under:

15. It is the correctness of this finding which is assailed before us by the Appellants. They contend that the information recorded in the GD entry does disclose the commission of a cognizable offence. They submitted that even if their contention, that after recording the GD entry only a preliminary inquiry was made, is not accepted, they are still entitled to sustain the legality of the investigation on the basis that the GD entry may be treated as a first information report, since it disclosed the commission of a cognizable offence.

16. The parties before us did not dispute the legal position that a GD entry may be treated as a first information report in an appropriate case, where it discloses the commission of a cognizable offence. If the contention of the Appellants is upheld, the order of the High Court must be set aside because if there was in law a first information report disclosing the commission of a cognizable offence, the police had the power and jurisdiction to investigate, and in the process of investigation to conduct search and seizure. It is, therefore, not necessary for us to consider the authorities cited at the Bar on the question of validity of the preliminary inquiry and the validity of the search and seizure.

19. The High Court fell into an error in thinking that the information received by the police could not be treated as a first information report since the allegation was vague inasmuch as it was not stated from whom the sum of rupees one lakh was demanded and accepted. Nor was it stated that such demand or acceptance was made as motive or reward for doing or forbearing to do any official act, or for showing or forbearing to show in exercise of his official function, favour or disfavour to any person or for rendering, attempting to render any service or disservice to any person. Thus there was no basis for a police officer to suspect the commission of an offence which he was empowered under Section 156 of the Code to investigate.

63. It is thus unequivocally clear that registration of FIR is mandatory and also that it is to be recorded in the FIR Book by giving a unique annual number to each FIR to enable strict tracking of each and every registered FIR by the superior police officers as well as by the competent court to which copies of each FIR are required to be sent.

'Information'

64. The legislature has consciously used the expression "information" in Section 154(1) of the Code as against the expression used in Section 41(1)(a) and (g) where the expression used for arresting a person without warrant is "reasonable complaint" or "credible information". The expression under Section 154(1) of the Code is not qualified by the prefix "reasonable" or "credible". The non qualification of the word "information" in Section 154(1) unlike in Section 41(1)(a) and (g) of the Code is for the reason that the police officer should not refuse to record any information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence on the ground that he is not satisfied with the reasonableness or credibility of the information. In other words, reasonableness or credibility of the said information is not a condition precedent for the registration of a case.

65. The above view has been expressed by this Court in Bhajan Lal (supra) which is as under:

32...in Section 154(1) of the Code, the legislature in its collective wisdom has carefully and cautiously used the expression "information" without qualifying the same as in Section 41(1)(a) or (g) of the Code wherein the expressions, "reasonable complaint" and "credible information" are used. Evidently, the non- qualification of the word "information" in Section 154(1) unlike in Section 41(1)(a) and (g) of the Code may be for the reason that the police officer should not refuse to record an information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence and to register a case thereon on the ground that he is not satisfied with the reasonableness or credibility of the information. In other words, 'reasonableness' or 'credibility' of the said information is not a condition precedent for registration of a case. A comparison of the present Section 154 with those of the earlier Codes will indicate that the legislature had purposely thought it fit to employ only the word "information" without qualifying the said word.

66. In Parkash Singh Badal (supra), this Court held as under:

65. The legal mandate enshrined in Section 154(1) is that every information relating to the commission of a "cognizable offence" [as defined under Section 2(c) of the Code] if given orally (in which case it is to be reduced into writing) or in writing to "an officer in charge of a police station" [within the meaning of Section 2(o) of the Code] and signed by the informant should be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the State Government may prescribe which form is commonly called as "first information report" and which act of entering the information in the said form is known as registration of a crime or a case.

66. At the stage of registration of a crime or a case on the basis of the information disclosing a cognizable offence in compliance with the mandate of Section 154(1) of the Code, the police officer concerned cannot embark upon an inquiry as to whether the information laid by the informant is reliable and genuine or otherwise and refuse to register a case on the ground that the information is not reliable or credible. On the other hand, the officer in charge of a police station is statutorily obliged to register a case and then to proceed with the investigation if he has reason to suspect the commission of an offence which he is empowered under Section 156 of the Code to investigate, subject to the proviso to Section 157 thereof. In case an officer in charge of a police station refuses to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him and to register a case on the information of a cognizable offence reported and thereby violates the statutory duty cast upon him, the person aggrieved by such refusal can send the substance of the information in writing and by post to the Superintendent of Police concerned who if satisfied that the information forwarded to him discloses a cognizable offence, should either investigate the case himself or direct an investigation to be made by any police officer subordinate to him in the manner provided by Sub- section (3) of Section 154 of the Code.

67. It has to be noted that in Section 154(1) of the Code, the legislature in its collective wisdom has carefully and cautiously used the expression "information" without qualifying the same as in Sections 41(1)(a) or (g) of the Code wherein the expressions "reasonable complaint" and "credible information" are used. Evidently, the non qualification of the word "information" in Section 154(1) unlike in Sections 41(1)(a) and (g) of the Code may be for the reason that the police officer should not refuse to record an information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence and to register a case thereon on the ground that he is not satisfied with the reasonableness or credibility of the information. In other words, "reasonableness" or "credibility" of the said information is not a condition precedent for registration of a case. A comparison of the present Section 154 with those of the earlier Codes will indicate that the legislature had purposely thought it fit to employ only the word "information" without qualifying the said word. Section 139 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1861 (Act 25 of 1861) passed by the Legislative Council of India read that "every complaint or information" preferred to an officer in charge of a police station should be reduced into writing which provision was subsequently modified by Section 112 of the Code of 1872 (Act 10 of 1872) which thereafter read that "every complaint" preferred to an officer in charge of a police station shall be reduced in writing. The word "complaint" which occurred in previous two Codes of 1861 and 1872 was deleted and in that place the word "information" was used in the Codes of 1882 and 1898 which word is now used in Sections 154, 155, 157 and 190(c) of the Code. An overall reading of all the Codes makes it clear that the condition which is sine qua non for recording a first information report is that there must be an information and that information must disclose a cognizable offence.

68. It is, therefore, manifestly clear that if any information disclosing a cognizable offence is laid before an officer in charge of a police station satisfying the requirements of Section 154(1) of the Code, the said police officer has no other option except to enter the substance thereof in the prescribed form, that is to say, to register a case on the basis of such information.

67. In Ramesh Kumari (supra), this Court held as under:

4. That a police officer mandatorily registers a case on a complaint of a cognizable offence by the citizen under Section 154 of the Code is no more res integra. The point of law has been set at rest by this Court in State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal. This Court after examining the whole gamut and intricacies of the mandatory nature of Section 154 of the Code has arrived at the finding in paras 31 and 32 of the judgment as under:

31. At the stage of registration of a crime or a case on the basis of the information disclosing a cognizable offence in compliance with the mandate of Section 154(1) of the Code, the police officer concerned cannot embark upon an inquiry as to whether the information, laid by the informant is reliable and genuine or otherwise and refuse to register a case on the ground that the information is not reliable or credible. On the other hand, the officer in charge of a police station is statutorily obliged to register a case and then to proceed with the investigation if he has reason to suspect the commission of an offence which he is empowered under Section 156 of the Code to investigate, subject to the proviso to Section 157. (As we have proposed to make a detailed discussion about the power of a police officer in the field of investigation of a cognizable offence within the ambit of Sections 156 and 157 of the Code in the ensuing part of this judgment, we do not propose to deal with those sections in extenso in the present context.) In case, an officer in charge of a police station refuses to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him and to register a case on the information of a cognizable offence reported and thereby violates the statutory duty cast upon him, the person aggrieved by such refusal can send the substance of the information in writing and by post to the Superintendent of Police concerned who if satisfied that the information forwarded to him discloses a cognizable offence, should either investigate the case himself or direct an investigation to be made by any police officer subordinate to him in the manner provided by Sub- section (3) of Section 154 of the Code.

32. Be it noted that in Section 154(1) of the Code, the legislature in its collective wisdom has carefully and cautiously used the expression 'information' without qualifying the same as in Section 41(1)(a) or (g) of the Code wherein the expressions, 'reasonable complaint' and 'credible information' are used. Evidently, the non qualification of the word 'information' in Section 154(1) unlike in Section 41(1)(a) and (g) of the Code may be for the reason that the police officer should not refuse to record an information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence and to register a case thereon on the ground that he is not satisfied with the reasonableness or credibility of the information. In other words, 'reasonableness' or 'credibility' of the said information is not a condition precedent for registration of a case. A comparison of the present Section 154 with those of the earlier Codes will indicate that the legislature had purposely thought it fit to employ only the word 'information' without qualifying the said word. Section 139 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1861 (Act 25 of 1861) passed by the Legislative Council of India read that 'every complaint or information' preferred to an officer in charge of a police station should be reduced into writing which provision was subsequently modified by Section 112 of the Code of 1872 (Act 10 of 1872) which thereafter read that 'every complaint' preferred to an officer in charge of a police station shall be reduced in writing. The word 'complaint' which occurred in previous two Codes of 1861 and 1872 was deleted and in that place the word 'information' was used in the Codes of 1882 and 1898 which word is now used in Sections 154, 155, 157 and 190(c) of the present Code of 1973 (Act 2 of 1974). An overall reading of all the Codes makes it clear that the condition which is sine qua non for recording a first information report is that there must be information and that information must disclose a cognizable offence.

(Emphasis in original)

Finally, this Court in para 33 said:

33. It is, therefore, manifestly clear that if any information disclosing a cognizable offence is laid before an officer in charge of a police station satisfying the requirements of Section 154(1) of the Code, the said police officer has no other option except to enter the substance thereof in the prescribed form, that is to say, to register a case on the basis of such information.

5. The views expressed by this Court in paras 31, 32 and 33 as quoted above leave no manner of doubt that the provision of Section 154 of the Code is mandatory and the officer concerned is duty- bound to register the case on the basis of such information disclosing cognizable offence.

68. In Ram Lal Narang (supra), this Court held as under:

14. Under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, whenever an officer in charge of the police station received information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence, he was required to enter the substance thereof in a book kept by him, for that purpose, in the prescribed form (Section 154 Code of Criminal Procedure). Section 156 of the Code of Criminal Procedure invested the Police with the power to investigate into cognizable offences without the order of a Court. If, from the information received or otherwise, the officer in charge of a police station suspected the commission of a cognizable offence, he was required to send forthwith a report of the same to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of such offence upon a police report and then to proceed in person or depute one of his subordinate officers to proceed to the spot, to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case and to take measures for the discovery and arrest of the offender (Section 157 Code of Criminal Procedure). He was required to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay, and, as soon as it was completed, to forward to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence upon a police report, a report in the prescribed form, setting forth the names of the parties, the nature of the information and the names of the persons who appeared to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case [Section 173(1) Code of Criminal Procedure]. He was also required to state whether the accused had been forwarded in custody or had been released on bail. Upon receipt of the report submitted under Section 173(1) Code of Criminal Procedure by the officer in charge of the police station, the Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of an offence upon a police report might take cognizance of the offence [Section 190(1)(b) Code of Criminal Procedure]. Thereafter, if, in the opinion of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence, there was sufficient ground for proceeding, the Magistrate was required to issue the necessary process to secure the attendance of the accused (Section 204 Code of Criminal Procedure). The scheme of the Code thus was that the FIR was followed by investigation, the investigation led to the submission of a report to the Magistrate, the Magistrate took cognizance of the offence on receipt of the police report and, finally, the Magistrate taking cognizance issued process to the accused.

15. The police thus had the statutory right and duty to "register" every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence. The police also had the statutory right and duty to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case where the commission of a cognizable offence was suspected and to submit the report of such investigation to the Magistrate having jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence upon a police report. These statutory rights and duties of the police were not circumscribed by any power of superintendence or interference in the Magistrate; nor was any sanction required from a Magistrate to empower the Police to investigate into a cognizable offence. This position in law was well- established. In King Emperor v. Khwaja Nazir Ahmad the Privy Council observed as follows:

Just as it is essential that everyone accused of a crime should have free access to a Court of justice, so that he may be duly acquitted if found not guilty of the offence with which he is charged, so it is of the utmost importance that the judiciary should not interfere with the police in matters which are within their province and into which the law imposes on them the duty of inquiry. In India, as has been shown, there is a statutory right on the part of the police to investigate the circumstances of an alleged cognizable crime without requiring any authority from the judicial authorities, and it would, as Their Lordships think, be an unfortunate result if it should be held possible to interfere with those statutory rules by an exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of the Court. The functions of the judiciary and the police are complementary, not overlapping, and the combination of individual liberty with a due observance of law and order is only to be obtained by leaving each to exercise its own function, always of course, subject to the right of the Courts to intervene in an appropriate case when moved under Section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to give directions in the nature of Habeas Corpus. In such a case as the present, however, the Court's functions begin when a charge is preferred before it and not until then... In the present case, the police have under Sections 154 and 156 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a statutory right to investigate a cognizable offence without requiring the sanction of the Court....

Ordinarily, the right and duty of the police would end with the submission of a report under Section 173(1) Code of Criminal Procedure upon receipt of which it was up to the Magistrate to take or not to take cognizance of the offence. There was no provision in the 1898 Code prescribing the procedure to be followed by the police, where, after the submission of a report under Section 173(1) Code of Criminal Procedure and after the Magistrate had taken cognizance of the offence, fresh facts came to light which required further investigation. There was, of course, no express provision prohibiting the police from launching upon an investigation into the fresh facts coming to light after the submission of the report under Section 173(1) or after the Magistrate had taken cognizance of the offence. As we shall presently point out, it was generally thought by many High Courts, though doubted by a few, that the police were not barred from further investigation by the circumstance that a report under Section 173(1) had already been submitted and a Magistrate had already taken cognizance of the offence. The Law Commission in its 41st report recognized the position and recommended that the right of the police to make further investigation should be statutorily affirmed. The Law Commission said:

14.23. A report under Section 173 is normally the end of the investigation. Sometimes, however, the police officer after submitting the report under Section 173 comes upon evidence bearing on the guilt or innocence of the accused. We should have thought that the police officer can collect that evidence and send it to the Magistrate concerned. It appears, however, that Courts have sometimes taken the narrow view that once a final report under Section 173 has been sent, the police cannot touch the case again and cannot re- open the investigation. This view places a hindrance in the way of the investigating agency, which can be very unfair to the prosecution and, for that matter, even to the accused. It should be made clear in Section 173 that the competent police officer can examine such evidence and send a report to the Magistrate. Copies concerning the fresh material must of course be furnished to the accused.

Accordingly, in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, a new provision, Section 173(8), was introduced and it says:

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to preclude further investigation in respect of an offence after a report under Sub- section (2) has been forwarded to the Magistrate and, where upon such investigation, the officer in charge of the police station obtains further evidence, oral or documentary, he shall forward to the Magistrate a further report or reports regarding such evidence in the form prescribed; and the provisions of Sub- sections (2) to (6) shall, as far as may be, apply in relation to such report or reports as they apply in relation to a report forwarded under Sub- section (2).

69. In Lallan Chaudhary (supra), this Court held as under:

8. Section 154 of the Code thus casts a statutory duty upon the police officer to register the case, as disclosed in the complaint, and then to proceed with the investigation. The mandate of Section 154 is manifestly clear that if any information disclosing a cognizable offence is laid before an officer in charge of a police station, such police officer has no other option except to register the case on the basis of such information.

9. In Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi) this Court has held that the provision of Section 154 is mandatory. Hence, the police officer concerned is duty- bound to register the case on receiving information disclosing cognizable offence. Genuineness or credibility of the information is not a condition precedent for registration of a case. That can only be considered after registration of the case.

10. The mandate of Section 154 of the Code is that at the stage of registration of a crime or a case on the basis of the information disclosing a cognizable offence, the police officer concerned cannot embark upon an inquiry as to whether the information, laid by the informant is reliable and genuine or otherwise and refuse to register a case on the ground that the information is not relevant or credible. In other words, reliability, genuineness and credibility of the information are not the conditions precedent for registering a case under Section 154 of the Code.

A perusal of the above- referred judgments clarify that the reasonableness or creditability of the information is not a condition precedent for the registration of a case.

Preliminary Inquiry

70. Mr. Naphade relied on the following decisions in support of his arguments that if the police officer has a doubt about the veracity of the accusation, he has to conduct preliminary inquiry, viz., E.P. Royappa v. State of Tamil Nadu MANU/SC/0380/1973 : (1974) 4 SCC 3, Maneka Gandhi (supra), S.M.D. Kiran Pasha v. Government of Andhra Pradesh MANU/SC/0473/1989 : (1990) 1 SCC 328, D.K. Basu v. State of W.B. MANU/SC/0157/1997 : (1997) 1 SCC 416, Uma Shankar Sitani v. Commissioner of Police, Delhi and Ors. : (1996) 11 SCC 714, Preeti Gupta (supra), Francis Coralie Mullin v. Administrator, Union Territory of Delhi MANU/SC/0517/1981 : (1981) 1 SCC 608, Common Cause, A Registered Society v. Union of India MANU/SC/0437/1999 : (1999) 6 SCC 667, District Registrar and Collector, Hyderabad v. Canara Bank MANU/SC/0935/2004 : (2005) 1 SCC 496 and Ranjitsing Brahmajeetsing Sharma v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0268/2005 : (2005) 5 SCC 294.

71. Learned senior counsel for the State further vehemently contended that in appropriate cases, it would be proper for a police officer, on receipt of a complaint of a cognizable offence, to satisfy himself that prima facie the allegations levelled against the accused in the complaint are credible. In this regard, Mr. Naphade cited the following decisions, viz. Tapan Kumar Singh (supra), Bhagwant Kishore Joshi (supra), P. Sirajuddin (supra), Sevi (supra), Shashikant (supra), Rajinder Singh Katoch (supra), Vineet Narain v. Union of India MANU/SC/0827/1998 : (1998) 1 SCC 226, Elumalai v. State of Tamil Nadu MANU/TN/0610/1983 : 1983 LW (CRL) 121, A. Lakshmanarao v. Judicial Magistrate, Parvatipuram MANU/SC/0076/1970 : AIR 1971 SC 186, State of Uttar Pradesh v. Ram Sagar Yadav and Ors. MANU/SC/0118/1985 : (1985) 1 SCC 552, Mona Panwar v. High Court of Judicature of Allahabad MANU/SC/0087/2011 : (2011) 3 SCC 496, Apren Joseph v. State of Kerala MANU/SC/0078/1972 : (1973) 3 SCC 114, King Emperor v. Khwaja Nazir Ahmad MANU/PR/0007/1944 : AIR 1945 PC 18 and Sarangdharsingh Shivdassingh Chavan (supra).

72. He further pointed out that the provisions have to be read in the light of the principle of malicious prosecution and the fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 14, 19 and 21. It is the stand of learned senior counsel that every citizen has a right not to be subjected to malicious prosecution and every police officer has an in- built duty under Section 154 to ensure that an innocent person is not falsely implicated in a criminal case. If despite the fact that the police officer is not prima facie satisfied, as regards commission of a cognizable offence and proceeds to register an FIR and carries out an investigation, it would result in putting the liberty of a citizen in jeopardy. Therefore, learned senior counsel vehemently pleaded for a preliminary inquiry before registration of FIR.

73. In terms of the language used in Section 154 of the Code, the police is duty bound to proceed to conduct investigation into a cognizable offence even without receiving information (i.e. FIR) about commission of such an offence, if the officer in charge of the police station otherwise suspects the commission of such an offence. The legislative intent is therefore quite clear, i.e., to ensure that every cognizable offence is promptly investigated in accordance with law. This being the legal position, there is no reason that there should be any discretion or option left with the police to register or not to register an FIR when information is given about the commission of a cognizable offence. Every cognizable offence must be investigated promptly in accordance with law and all information provided under Section 154 of the Code about the commission of a cognizable offence must be registered as an FIR so as to initiate an offence. The requirement of Section 154 of the Code is only that the report must disclose the commission of a cognizable offence and that is sufficient to set the investigating machinery into action.

74. The insertion of Sub- section (3) of Section 154, by way of an amendment, reveals the intention of the legislature to ensure that no information of commission of a cognizable offence must be ignored or not acted upon which would result in unjustified protection of the alleged offender/accused.

75. The maxim expression unius est exclusion alterius (expression of one thing is the exclusion of another) applies in the interpretation of Section 154 of the Code, where the mandate of recording the information in writing excludes the possibility of not recording an information of commission of a cognizable crime in the special register.

76. Therefore, conducting an investigation into an offence after registration of FIR under Section 154 of the Code is the "procedure established by law" and, thus, is in conformity with Article 21 of the Constitution. Accordingly, the right of the accused under Article 21 of the Constitution is protected if the FIR is registered first and then the investigation is conducted in accordance with the provisions of law.

77. The term inquiry as per Section 2(g) of the Code reads as under:

2(g) - "inquiry" means every inquiry, other than a trial, conducted under this Code by a Magistrate or Court.

Hence, it is clear that inquiry under the Code is relatable to a judicial act and not to the steps taken by the Police which are either investigation after the stage of Section 154 of the Code or termed as 'Preliminary Inquiry' and which are prior to the registration of FIR, even though, no entry in the General Diary/Station Diary/Daily Diary has been made.

78. Though there is reference to the term 'preliminary inquiry' and 'inquiry' under Sections 159 and Sections 202 and 340 of the Code, that is a judicial exercise undertaken by the Court and not by the Police and is not relevant for the purpose of the present reference.

79. Besides, learned senior counsel relied on the special procedures prescribed under the CBI manual to be read into Section 154. It is true that the concept of "preliminary inquiry" is contained in Chapter IX of the Crime Manual of the CBI. However, this Crime Manual is not a statute and has not been enacted by the legislature. It is a set of administrative orders issued for internal guidance of the CBI officers. It cannot supersede the Code. Moreover, in the absence of any indication to the contrary in the Code itself, the provisions of the CBI Crime Manual cannot be relied upon to import the concept of holding of preliminary inquiry in the scheme of the Code of Criminal Procedure. At this juncture, it is also pertinent to submit that the CBI is constituted under a Special Act, namely, the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946 and it derive its power to investigate from this Act.

80. It may be submitted that Sections 4(2) and 5 of the Code permit special procedures to be followed for special Acts. Section 4 of the Code lays down as under:

Section 4. Trial of offences under the Indian Penal Code and other laws. (1) All offences under the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860) shall be investigated, inquired into, tried, and otherwise dealt with according to the provisions hereinafter contained.

(2) All offences under any other law shall be investigated, inquired into, tried, and otherwise dealt with according to the same provisions, but subject to any enactment for the time being in force regulating the manner or place of investigating, inquiring into, trying or otherwise dealing with such offences.

It is thus clear that for offences under laws other than Indian Penal Code, different provisions can be laid down under a special Act to regulate the investigation, inquiry, trial etc., of those offences. Section 4(2) of the Code protects such special provisions.

81. Moreover, Section 5 of the Code lays down as under:

Section 5. Saving- Nothing contained in this Code shall, in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary, affect any special or local law for the time being in force, or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed, by any other law for the time being in force.

Thus, special provisions contained in the DSPE Act relating to the powers of the CBI are protected also by Section 5 of the Code.

82. In view of the above specific provisions in the Code, the powers of the CBI under the DSPE Act, cannot be equated with the powers of the regular State Police under the Code.

Significance and Compelling reasons for registration of FIR at the earliest

83. The object sought to be achieved by registering the earliest information as FIR is inter alia two fold: one, that the criminal process is set into motion and is well documented from the very start; and second, that the earliest information received in relation to the commission of a cognizable offence is recorded so that there cannot be any embellishment etc., later.

84. Principles of democracy and liberty demand a regular and efficient check on police powers. One way of keeping check on authorities with such powers is by documenting every action of theirs. Accordingly, under the Code, actions of the police etc., are provided to be written and documented. For example, in case of arrest under Section 41(1)(b) of the Code, arrest memo along with the grounds has to be in writing mandatorily; under Section 55 of the Code, if an officer is deputed to make an arrest, then the superior officer has to write down and record the offence etc., for which the person is to be arrested; under Section 91 of the Code, a written order has to be passed by the concerned officer to seek documents; under Section 160 of the Code, a written notice has to be issued to the witness so that he can be called for recording of his/her statement, seizure memo/panchnama has to be drawn for every article seized etc.

85. The police is required to maintain several records including Case Diary as provided under Section 172 of the Code, General Diary as provided under Section 44 of the Police Act etc., which helps in documenting every information collected, spot visited and all the actions of the police officers so that their activities can be documented. Moreover, every information received relating to commission of a non- cognizable offence also has to be registered under Section 155 of the Code.

86. The underpinnings of compulsory registration of FIR is not only to ensure transparency in the criminal justice delivery system but also to ensure 'judicial oversight'. Section 157(1) deploys the word 'forthwith'. Thus, any information received under Section 154(1) or otherwise has to be duly informed in the form of a report to the Magistrate. Thus, the commission of a cognizable offence is not only brought to the knowledge of the investigating agency but also to the subordinate judiciary.

87. The Code contemplates two kinds of FIRs. The duly signed FIR under Section 154(1) is by the informant to the concerned officer at the police station. The second kind of FIR could be which is registered by the police itself on any information received or other than by way of an informant [Section 157(1)] and even this information has to be duly recorded and the copy should be sent to the Magistrate forthwith.

88. The registration of FIR either on the basis of the information furnished by the informant under Section 154(1) of the Code or otherwise under Section 157(1) of the Code is obligatory. The obligation to register FIR has inherent advantages:

a) It is the first step to 'access to justice' for a victim.

b) It upholds the 'Rule of Law' inasmuch as the ordinary person brings forth the commission of a cognizable crime in the knowledge of the State.

c) It also facilitates swift investigation and sometimes even prevention of the crime. In both cases, it only effectuates the regime of law.

d) It leads to less manipulation in criminal cases and lessens incidents of 'ante- dates' FIR or deliberately delayed FIR.

89. In Thulia Kali v. State of Tamil Nadu MANU/SC/0276/1972 : (1972) 3 SCC 393, this Court held as under:

12...First information report in a criminal case is an extremely vital and valuable piece of evidence for the purpose of corroborating the oral evidence adduced at the trial. The importance of the above report can hardly be overestimated from the standpoint of the accused. The object of insisting upon prompt lodging of the report to the police in respect of commission of an offence is to obtain early information regarding the circumstances in which the crime was committed, the names of the actual culprits and the part played by them as well as the names of eyewitnesses present at the scene of occurrence. Delay in lodging the first information report quite often results in embellishment which is a creature of afterthought. On account of delay, the report not only gets bereft of the advantage of spontaneity, danger creeps in of the introduction of coloured version, exaggerated account or concocted story as a result of deliberation and consultation. It is, therefore, essential that the delay in the lodging of the first information report should be satisfactorily explained....

90. In Tapan Kumar Singh (supra), it was held as under:

20. It is well settled that a first information report is not an encyclopaedia, which must disclose all facts and details relating to the offence reported. An informant may lodge a report about the commission of an offence though he may not know the name of the victim or his assailant. He may not even know how the occurrence took place. A first informant need not necessarily be an eyewitness so as to be able to disclose in great detail all aspects of the offence committed. What is of significance is that the information given must disclose the commission of a cognizable offence and the information so lodged must provide a basis for the police officer to suspect the commission of a cognizable offence. At this stage it is enough if the police officer on the basis of the information given suspects the commission of a cognizable offence, and not that he must be convinced or satisfied that a cognizable offence has been committed. If he has reasons to suspect, on the basis of information received, that a cognizable offence may have been committed, he is bound to record the information and conduct an investigation. At this stage it is also not necessary for him to satisfy himself about the truthfulness of the information. It is only after a complete investigation that he may be able to report on the truthfulness or otherwise of the information. Similarly, even if the information does not furnish all the details he must find out those details in the course of investigation and collect all the necessary evidence. The information given disclosing the commission of a cognizable offence only sets in motion the investigative machinery, with a view to collect all necessary evidence, and thereafter to take action in accordance with law. The true test is whether the information furnished provides a reason to suspect the commission of an offence, which the police officer concerned is empowered under Section 156 of the Code to investigate. If it does, he has no option but to record the information and proceed to investigate the case either himself or depute any other competent officer to conduct the investigation. The question as to whether the report is true, whether it discloses full details regarding the manner of occurrence, whether the accused is named, and whether there is sufficient evidence to support the allegations are all matters which are alien to the consideration of the question whether the report discloses the commission of a cognizable offence. Even if the information does not give full details regarding these matters, the investigating officer is not absolved of his duty to investigate the case and discover the true facts, if he can.

91. In Madhu Bala (supra), this Court held:

6. Coming first to the relevant provisions of the Code, Section 2(d) defines "complaint" to mean any allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate, with a view to his taking action under the Code, that some person, whether known or unknown has committed an offence, but does not include a police report. Under Section 2(c) "cognizable offence" means an offence for which, and "cognizable case" means a case in which a police officer may in accordance with the First Schedule (of the Code) or under any other law for the time being in force, arrest without a warrant. Under Section 2(r) "police report" means a report forwarded by a police officer to a Magistrate under Sub- section (2) of Section 173 of the Code. Chapter XII of the Code comprising Sections 154 to 176 relates to information to the police and their powers to investigate. Section 154 provides, inter alia, that the officer in charge of a police station shall reduce into writing every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence given to him orally and every such information if given in writing shall be signed by the person giving it and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the State Government may prescribe in this behalf. Section 156 of the Code with which we are primarily concerned in these appeals reads as under....

9. The mode and manner of registration of such cases are laid down in the Rules framed by the different State Governments under the Indian Police Act, 1861. As in the instant case we are concerned with Punjab Police Rules, 1934 (which are applicable to Punjab, Haryana, Himachal Pradesh and Delhi) framed under the said Act we may now refer to the relevant provisions of those Rules. Chapter XXIV of the said Rules lays down the procedure an officer in charge of a police station has to follow on receipt of information of commission of crime. Under Rule 24.1 appearing in the Chapter every information covered by Section 154 of the Code must be entered in the First Information Report Register and the substance thereof in the daily diary. Rule 24.5 says that the First Information Report Register shall be a printed book in Form 24.5(1) consisting of 200 pages and shall be completely filled before a new one is commenced. It further requires that the cases shall bear an annual serial number in each police station for each calendar year. The other requirements of the said Rules need not be detailed as they have no relevance to the point at issue.

10. From the foregoing discussion it is evident that whenever a Magistrate directs an investigation on a "complaint" the police has to register a cognizable case on that complaint treating the same as the FIR and comply with the requirements of the above Rules. It, therefore, passes our comprehension as to how the direction of a Magistrate asking the police to "register a case" makes an order of investigation under Section 156(3) legally unsustainable. Indeed, even if a Magistrate does not pass a direction to register a case, still in view of the provisions of Section 156(1) of the Code which empowers the police to investigate into a cognizable "case" and the Rules framed under the Indian Police Act, 1861 it (the police) is duty- bound to formally register a case and then investigate into the same. The provisions of the Code, therefore, do not in any way stand in the way of a Magistrate to direct the police to register a case at the police station and then investigate into the same. In our opinion when an order for investigation under Section 156(3) of the Code is to be made the proper direction to the police would be "to register a case at the police station treating the complaint as the first information report and investigate into the same.

92. According to the Statement of Objects and Reasons, protection of the interests of the poor is clearly one of the main objects of the Code. Making registration of information relating to commission of a cognizable offence mandatory would help the society, especially, the poor in rural and remote areas of the country.

93. The Committee on Reforms of Criminal Justice System headed by Dr. Justice V.S. Malimath also noticed the plight faced by several people due to non- registration of FIRs and recommended that action should be taken against police officers who refuse to register such information. The Committee observed:

7.19.1 According to the Section 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the office incharge of a police station is mandated to register every information oral or written relating to the commission of a cognizable offence. Non- registration of cases is a serious complaint against the police. The National Police Commission in its 4th report lamented that the police "evade registering cases for taking up investigation where specific complaints are lodged at the police stations". It referred to a study conducted by the Indian Institute of Public Opinion, New Delhi regarding "Image of the Police in India" which observed that over 50% of the Respondents mention non- registration of complaints as a common practice in police stations.

7.19.2 The Committee recommends that all complaints should be registered promptly, failing which appropriate action should be taken. This would necessitate change in the mind - set of the political executive and that of senior officers.

7.19.4 There are two more aspects relating to registration. The first is minimization of offences by the police by way of not invoking appropriate sections of law. We disapprove of this tendency. Appropriate sections of law should be invoked in each case unmindful of the gravity of offences involved. The second issue is relating to the registration of written complaints. There is an increasing tendency amongst the police station officers to advise the informants, who come to give oral complaints, to bring written complaints. This is wrong. Registration is delayed resulting in valuable loss of time in launching the investigation and apprehension of criminals. Besides, the complainant gets an opportunity to consult his friends, relatives and sometimes even lawyers and often tends to exaggerate the crime and implicate innocent persons. This eventually has adverse effect at the trial. The information should be reduced in writing by the SH, if given orally, without any loss of time so that the first version of the alleged crime comes on record.

7.20.11 It has come to the notice of the Committee that even in cognizable cases quite often the Police officers do not entertain the complaint and send the complainant away saying that the offence is not cognizable. Sometimes the police twist facts to bring the case within the cognizable category even though it is non- cognizable, due to political or other pressures or corruption. This menace can be stopped by making it obligatory on the police officer to register every complaint received by him. Breach of this duty should become an offence punishable in law to prevent misuse of the power by the police officer.

94. It means that the number of FIRs not registered is approximately equivalent to the number of FIRs actually registered. Keeping in view the NCRB figures that show that about 60 lakh cognizable offences were registered in India during the year 2012, the burking of crime may itself be in the range of about 60 lakh every year. Thus, it is seen that such a large number of FIRs are not registered every year, which is a clear violation of the rights of the victims of such a large number of crimes.

95. Burking of crime leads to dilution of the rule of law in the short run; and also has a very negative impact on the rule of law in the long run since people stop having respect for rule of law. Thus, non- registration of such a large number of FIRs leads to a definite lawlessness in the society.

96. Therefore, reading Section 154 in any other form would not only be detrimental to the Scheme of the Code but also to the society as a whole. It is thus seen that this Court has repeatedly held in various decided cases that registration of FIR is mandatory if the information given to the police under Section 154 of the Code discloses the commission of a cognizable offence.

Is there a likelihood of misuse of the provision?

97. Another, stimulating argument raised in support of preliminary inquiry is that mandatory registration of FIRs will lead to arbitrary arrest, which will directly be in contravention of Article 21 of the Constitution.

98. While registration of FIR is mandatory, arrest of the accused immediately on registration of FIR is not at all mandatory. In fact, registration of FIR and arrest of an accused person are two entirely different concepts under the law, and there are several safeguards available against arrest. Moreover, it is also pertinent to mention that an accused person also has a right to apply for "anticipatory bail" under the provisions of Section 438 of the Code if the conditions mentioned therein are satisfied. Thus, in appropriate cases, he can avoid the arrest under that provision by obtaining an order from the Court.

99. It is also relevant to note that in Joginder Kumar v. State of U.P. and Ors. MANU/SC/0311/1994 : (1994) 4 SCC 260, this Court has held that arrest cannot be made by police in a routine manner. Some important observations are reproduced as under:

20...No arrest can be made in a routine manner on a mere allegation of commission of an offence made against a person. It would be prudent for a police officer in the interest of protection of the constitutional rights of a citizen and perhaps in his own interest that no arrest should be made without a reasonable satisfaction reached after some investigation as to the genuineness and bona fides of a complaint and a reasonable belief both as to the person's complicity and even so as to the need to effect arrest. Denying a person of his liberty is a serious matter. The recommendations of the Police Commission merely reflect the constitutional concomitants of the fundamental right to personal liberty and freedom. A person is not liable to arrest merely on the suspicion of complicity in an offence. There must be some reasonable justification in the opinion of the officer effecting the arrest that such arrest is necessary and justified. Except in heinous offences, an arrest must be avoided if a police officer issues notice to person to attend the Station House and not to leave the Station without permission would do.

100. The registration of FIR under Section 154 of the Code and arrest of an accused person under Section 41 are two entirely different things. It is not correct to say that just because FIR is registered, the accused person can be arrested immediately. It is the imaginary fear that "merely because FIR has been registered, it would require arrest of the accused and thereby leading to loss of his reputation" and it should not be allowed by this Court to hold that registration of FIR is not mandatory to avoid such inconvenience to some persons. The remedy lies in strictly enforcing the safeguards available against arbitrary arrests made by the police and not in allowing the police to avoid mandatory registration of FIR when the information discloses commission of a cognizable offence.

101. This can also be seen from the fact that Section 151 of the Code allows a police officer to arrest a person, even before the commission of a cognizable offence, in order to prevent the commission of that offence, if it cannot be prevented otherwise. Such preventive arrests can be valid for 24 hours. However, a Maharashtra State amendment to Section 151 allows the custody of a person in that State even for up to a period of 30 days (with the order of the Judicial Magistrate) even before a cognizable offence is committed in order to prevent commission of such offence. Thus, the arrest of a person and registration of FIR are not directly and/or irreversibly linked and they are entirely different concepts operating under entirely different parameters. On the other hand, if a police officer misuses his power of arrest, he can be tried and punished under Section 166.

102. Besides, the Code gives power to the police to close a matter both before and after investigation. A police officer can foreclose an FIR before an investigation under Section 157 of the Code, if it appears to him that there is no sufficient ground to investigate the same. The Section itself states that a police officer can start investigation when he has a 'reason to suspect the commission of an offence'. Therefore, the requirements of launching an investigation under Section 157 of the Code are higher than the requirement under Section 154 of the Code. The police officer can also, in a given case, investigate the matter and then file a final report under Section 173 of the Code seeking closure of the matter. Therefore, the police is not liable to launch an investigation in every FIR which is mandatorily registered on receiving information relating to commission of a cognizable offence.

103. Likewise, giving power to the police to close an investigation, Section 157 of the Code also acts like a check on the police to make sure that it is dispensing its function of investigating cognizable offences. This has been recorded in the 41st Report of the Law Commission of India on the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 as follows:

14.1...If the offence does not appear to be serious and if the station- house officer thinks there is no sufficient ground for starting an investigation, he need not investigate but, here again, he has to send a report to the Magistrate who can direct the police to investigate, or if the Magistrate thinks fit, hold an inquiry himself.

14.2. A noticeable feature of the scheme as outlined above is that a Magistrate is kept in the picture at all stages of the police investigation, but he is not authorized to interfere with the actual investigation or to direct the police how that investigation is to be conducted.

Therefore, the Scheme of the Code not only ensures that the time of the police should not be wasted on false and frivolous information but also that the police should not intentionally refrain from doing their duty of investigating cognizable offences. As a result, the apprehension of misuse of the provision of mandatory registration of FIR is unfounded and speculative in nature.

104. It is the stand of Mr. Naphade, learned senior Counsel for the State of Maharashtra that when an innocent person is falsely implicated, he not only suffers from loss of reputation but also from mental tension and his personal liberty is seriously impaired. He relied on the Maneka Gandhi (supra), which held the proposition that the law which deprives a person of his personal liberty must be reasonable both from the stand point of substantive as well as procedural aspect is now firmly established in our Constitutional law. Therefore, he pleaded for a fresh look at Section 154 of the Code, which interprets Section 154 of the Code in conformity with the mandate of Article 21.

105. It is true that a delicate balance has to be maintained between the interest of the society and protecting the liberty of an individual. As already discussed above, there are already sufficient safeguards provided in the Code which duly protect the liberty of an individual in case of registration of false FIR. At the same time, Section 154 was drafted keeping in mind the interest of the victim and the society. Therefore, we are of the cogent view that mandatory registration of FIRs under Section 154 of the Code will not be in contravention of Article 21 of the Constitution as purported by various counsel.

Exceptions:

106. Although, we, in unequivocal terms, hold that Section 154 of the Code postulates the mandatory registration of FIRs on receipt of all cognizable offence, yet, there may be instances where preliminary inquiry may be required owing to the change in genesis and novelty of crimes with the passage of time. One such instance is in the case of allegations relating to medical negligence on the part of doctors. It will be unfair and inequitable to prosecute a medical professional only on the basis of the allegations in the complaint.

107. In the context of medical negligence cases, in Jacob Mathew (supra), it was held by this Court as under:

51. We may not be understood as holding that doctors can never be prosecuted for an offence of which rashness or negligence is an essential ingredient. All that we are doing is to emphasise the need for care and caution in the interest of society; for, the service which the medical profession renders to human beings is probably the noblest of all, and hence there is a need for protecting doctors from frivolous or unjust prosecutions. Many a complainant prefer recourse to criminal process as a tool for pressurising the medical professional for extracting uncalled for or unjust compensation. Such malicious proceedings have to be guarded against.

52. Statutory rules or executive instructions incorporating certain guidelines need to be framed and issued by the Government of India and/or the State Governments in consultation with the Medical Council of India. So long as it is not done, we propose to lay down certain guidelines for the future which should govern the prosecution of doctors for offences of which criminal rashness or criminal negligence is an ingredient. A private complaint may not be entertained unless the complainant has produced prima facie evidence before the court in the form of a credible opinion given by another competent doctor to support the charge of rashness or negligence on the part of the accused doctor. The investigating officer should, before proceeding against the doctor accused of rash or negligent act or omission, obtain an independent and competent medical opinion preferably from a doctor in government service, qualified in that branch of medical practice who can normally be expected to give an impartial and unbiased opinion applying the Bolam test to the facts collected in the investigation. A doctor accused of rashness or negligence, may not be arrested in a routine manner (simply because a charge has been levelled against him). Unless his arrest is necessary for furthering the investigation or for collecting evidence or unless the investigating officer feels satisfied that the doctor proceeded against would not make himself available to face the prosecution unless arrested, the arrest may be withheld.

108. In the context of offences relating to corruption, this Court in P. Sirajuddin (supra) expressed the need for a preliminary inquiry before proceeding against public servants.

109. Similarly, in Tapan Kumar Singh (supra), this Court has validated a preliminary inquiry prior to registering an FIR only on the ground that at the time the first information is received, the same does not disclose a cognizable offence.

110. Therefore, in view of various counter claims regarding registration or non- registration, what is necessary is only that the information given to the police must disclose the commission of a cognizable offence. In such a situation, registration of an FIR is mandatory. However, if no cognizable offence is made out in the information given, then the FIR need not be registered immediately and perhaps the police can conduct a sort of preliminary verification or inquiry for the limited purpose of ascertaining as to whether a cognizable offence has been committed. But, if the information given clearly mentions the commission of a cognizable offence, there is no other option but to register an FIR forthwith. Other considerations are not relevant at the stage of registration of FIR, such as, whether the information is falsely given, whether the information is genuine, whether the information is credible etc. These are the issues that have to be verified during the investigation of the FIR. At the stage of registration of FIR, what is to be seen is merely whether the information given ex facie discloses the commission of a cognizable offence. If, after investigation, the information given is found to be false, there is always an option to prosecute the complainant for filing a false FIR.

Conclusion/Directions:

111. In view of the aforesaid discussion, we hold:

(i) Registration of FIR is mandatory under Section 154 of the Code, if the information discloses commission of a cognizable offence and no preliminary inquiry is permissible in such a situation.

(ii) If the information received does not disclose a cognizable offence but indicates the necessity for an inquiry, a preliminary inquiry may be conducted only to ascertain whether cognizable offence is disclosed or not.

(iii) If the inquiry discloses the commission of a cognizable offence, the FIR must be registered. In cases where preliminary inquiry ends in closing the complaint, a copy of the entry of such closure must be supplied to the first informant forthwith and not later than one week. It must disclose reasons in brief for closing the complaint and not proceeding further.

(iv) The police officer cannot avoid his duty of registering offence if cognizable offence is disclosed. Action must be taken against erring officers who do not register the FIR if information received by him discloses a cognizable offence.

(v) The scope of preliminary inquiry is not to verify the veracity or otherwise of the information received but only to ascertain whether the information reveals any cognizable offence.

(vi) As to what type and in which cases preliminary inquiry is to be conducted will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. The category of cases in which preliminary inquiry may be made are as under:

(a) Matrimonial disputes/family disputes

(b) Commercial offences

(c) Medical negligence cases

(d) Corruption cases

(e) Cases where there is abnormal delay/laches in initiating criminal prosecution, for example, over 3 months delay in reporting the matter without satisfactorily explaining the reasons for delay.

The aforesaid are only illustrations and not exhaustive of all conditions which may warrant preliminary inquiry.

(vii) While ensuring and protecting the rights of the accused and the complainant, a preliminary inquiry should be made time bound and in any case it should not exceed fifteen days generally and in exceptional cases, by giving adequate reasons, six weeks time is provided. The fact of such delay and the causes of it must be reflected in the General Diary entry.

(viii) Since the General Diary/Station Diary/Daily Diary is the record of all information received in a police station, we direct that all information relating to cognizable offences, whether resulting in registration of FIR or leading to an inquiry, must be mandatorily and meticulously reflected in the said Diary and the decision to conduct a preliminary inquiry must also be reflected, as mentioned above.

112. With the above directions, we dispose of the reference made to us. List all the matters before the appropriate Bench for disposal on merits.

Back to Section 156 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 1685 of 2007 (Arising out of SLP (Crl.) No. 6404/2007)

Decided On: 07.12.2007

Sakiri Vasu Vs. State of U.P. and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.K. Mathur and Markandey Katju, JJ.

JUDGMENT

Markandey Katju, J.

1. Leave granted.

2. This appeal is directed against the impugned judgment and order dated 13.7.2007 passed by the Allahabad High Court in Criminal Misc. Writ Petition No. 9308 of 2007.

3. Heard learned Counsel for the parties and perused the record.

4. The son of the appellant was a Major in the Indian Army. His dead body was found on 23.8.2003 at Mathura Railway Station. The G.R.P, Mathura investigated the matter and gave a detailed report on 29.8.2003 stating that the death was due to an accident or suicide.

5. The Army officials at Mathura also held two Courts of Inquiry and both times submitted the report that the deceased Major S. Ravishankar had committed suicide at the railway track at Mathura junction. The Court of Inquiry relied on the statement of the Sahayak (domestic servant) Pradeep Kumar who made a statement that "deceased Major Ravishankar never looked cheerful; he used to sit on a chair in the verandah gazing at the roof with blank eyes and deeply involved in some thoughts and used to remain oblivious of the surroundings". The Court of Inquiry also relied on the deposition of the main eye- witness, gangman Roop Singh, who stated that Major Ravishankar was hit by a goods train that came from Delhi.

6. The appellant who is the father of Major Ravishankar alleged that in fact it was a case of murder and not suicide. He alleged that in the Mathura unit of the Army there was rampant corruption about which Major Ravishankar came to know and he made oral complaints about it to his superiors and also to his father. According to the appellant, it was for this reason that his son was murdered.

7. The first Court of Inquiry was held by the Army which gave its report in September, 2003 stating that it was a case of suicide. The appellant was not satisfied with the findings of this Court of Inquiry and hence on 22.4.2004 he made a representation to the then Chief of the Army Staff, General N.C. Vij, as a result of which another Court of Inquiry was held. However, the second Court of Inquiry came to the same conclusion as that of the first inquiry namely, that it was a case of suicide.

8. Aggrieved, a writ petition was filed in the High Court which was dismissed by the impugned judgment. Hence this appeal.

9. The petitioner (appellant herein) prayed in the writ petition that the matter be ordered to be investigated by the Central Bureau of Investigation (in short 'CBI'). Since his prayer was rejected by the High Court, hence this appeal by way of special leave.

10. It has been held by this Court in CBI and Anr. v. Rajesh Gandhi and Anr. MANU/SC/0030/1997 : 1997CriLJ63 that no one can insist that an offence be investigated by a particular agency. We fully agree with the view in the aforesaid decision. An aggrieved person can only claim that the offence he alleges be investigated properly, but he has no right to claim that it be investigated by any particular agency of his choice.

11. In this connection we would like to state that if a person has a grievance that the police station is not registering his FIR under Section 154 Cr.P.C., then he can approach the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) Cr.P.C. by an application in writing. Even if that does not yield any satisfactory result in the sense that either the FIR is still not registered, or that even after registering it no proper investigation is held, it is open to the aggrieved person to file an application under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. before the learned Magistrate concerned. If such an application under Section 156(3) is filed before the Magistrate, the Magistrate can direct the FIR to be registered and also can direct a proper investigation to be made, in a case where, according to the aggrieved person, no proper investigation was made. The Magistrate can also under the same provision monitor the investigation to ensure a proper investigation.

12. Thus in Mohd. Yousuf v. Smt. Afaq Jahan and Anr. MANU/SC/8888/2006 : 2006CriLJ788 , this Court observed:

The clear position therefore is that any judicial Magistrate, before taking cognizance of the offence, can order investigation under Section 156(3) of the Code. If he does so, he is not to examine the complainant on oath because he was not taking cognizance of any offence therein. For the purpose of enabling the police to start investigation it is open to the Magistrate to direct the police to register an FIR. There is nothing illegal in doing so. After all registration of an FIR involves only the process of entering the substance of the information relating to the commission of the cognizable offence in a book kept by the officer in charge of the police station as indicated in Section 154 of the Code. Even if a Magistrate does not say in so many words while directing investigating under Section 156(3) of the Code that an FIR should be registered, it is the duty of the officer in charge of the police station to register the FIR regarding the cognizable offence disclosed by the complaint because that police officer could take further steps contemplated in Chapter XII of the Code only thereafter.

13. The same view was taken by this Court in Dilawar Singh v. State of Delhi MANU/SC/3678/2007 : 2007CriLJ4709 (vide para 17). We would further clarify that even if an FIR has been registered and even if the police has made the investigation, or is actually making the investigation, which the aggrieved person feels is not proper, such a person can approach the Magistrate under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C., and if the Magistrate is satisfied he can order a proper investigation and take other suitable steps and pass such order orders as he thinks necessary for ensuring a proper investigation. All these powers a Magistrate enjoys under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C.

14. Section 156(3) states:

Any Magistrate empowered under Section 190 may order such an investigation as abovementioned.

The words `as abovementioned' obviously refer to Section 156(1), which contemplates investigation by the officer in charge of the Police Station.

15. Section 156(3) provides for a check by the Magistrate on the police performing its duties under Chapter XII Cr.P.C. In cases where the Magistrate finds that the police has not done its duty of investigating the case at all, or has not done it satisfactorily, he can issue a direction to the police to do the investigation properly, and can monitor the same.

16. The power in the Magistrate to order further investigation under Section 156(3) is an independent power, and does not affect the power of the investigating officer to further investigate the case even after submission of his report vide Section 173(8). Hence the Magistrate can order re- opening of the investigation even after the police submits the final report, vide State of Bihar v. A.C. Saldanna MANU/SC/0253/1979 : 1980CriLJ98 .

17. In our opinion Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. is wide enough to include all such powers in a Magistrate which are necessary for ensuring a proper investigation, and it includes the power to order registration of an F.I.R. and of ordering a proper investigation if the Magistrate is satisfied that a proper investigation has not been done, or is not being done by the police. Section 156(3) Cr.P.C., though briefly worded, in our opinion, is very wide and it will include all such incidental powers as are necessary for ensuring a proper investigation.

18. It is well- settled that when a power is given to an authority to do something it includes such incidental or implied powers which would ensure the proper doing of that thing. In other words, when any power is expressly granted by the statute, there is impliedly included in the grant, even without special mention, every power and every control the denial of which would render the grant itself ineffective. Thus where an Act confers jurisdiction it impliedly also grants the power of doing all such acts or employ such means as are essentially necessary to its execution.

19. The reason for the rule (doctrine of implied power) is quite apparent. Many matters of minor details are omitted from legislation. As Crawford observes in his 'Statutory Construction' (3rd edn. page 267):

If these details could not be inserted by implication, the drafting of legislation would be an indeterminable process and the legislative intent would likely be defeated by a most insignificant omission.

20. In ascertaining a necessary implication, the Court simply determines the legislative will and makes it effective. What is necessarily implied is as much part of the statute as if it were specifically written therein.

21. An express grant of statutory powers carries with it by necessary implication the authority to use all reasonable means to make such grant effective. Thus in ITO, Cannanore v. M.K. Mohammad Kunhi AIR 1969 SC 430, this Court held that the income tax appellate tribunal has implied powers to grant stay, although no such power has been expressly granted to it by the Income Tax Act.

22. Similar examples where this Court has affirmed the doctrine of implied powers are Union of India v. Paras Laminates MANU/SC/0173/1991 : [1990]186ITR722(SC) , Reserve Bank of India v. Peerless General Finance and Investment Company Ltd. MANU/SC/0165/1996 : [1996]1SCR58 , Chief Executive Officer and Vice Chairman Gujarat Maritime Board v. Haji Daud Haji Harun Abu MANU/SC/1719/1996 : (1996)11SCC23 , J.K. Synthetics Ltd. v. Collector of Central Excise MANU/SC/0972/1996 : 1996(86)ELT472(SC) , State of Karnataka v. Vishwabharati House Building Co- op Society MANU/SC/0033/2003 : [2003]1SCR397 etc.

23. In Savitri v. Govind Singh Rawat MANU/SC/0104/1985 : 1986CriLJ41 this Court held that the power conferred on the Magistrate under Section 125 Cr.P.C. to grant maintenance to the wife implies the power to grant interim maintenance during the pendency of the proceeding, otherwise she may starve during this period.

24. In view of the abovementioned legal position, we are of the view that although Section 156(3) is very briefly worded, there is an implied power in the Magistrate under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. to order registration of a criminal offence and/or to direct the officer in charge of the concerned police station to hold a proper investigation and take all such necessary steps that may be necessary for ensuring a proper investigation including monitoring the same. Even though these powers have not been expressly mentioned in Section 156(3) Cr.P.C., we are of the opinion that they are implied in the above provision.

25. We have elaborated on the above matter because we often find that when someone has a grievance that his FIR has not been registered at the police station and/or a proper investigation is not being done by the police, he rushes to the High Court to file a writ petition or a petition under Section 482 Cr.P.C. We are of the opinion that the High Court should not encourage this practice and should ordinarily refuse to interfere in such matters, and relegate the petitioner to his alternating remedy, firstly under Section 154(3) and Section 36 Cr.P.C. before the concerned police officers, and if that is of no avail, by approaching the concerned Magistrate under Section 156(3).

26. If a person has a grievance that his FIR has not been registered by the police station his first remedy is to approach the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) Cr.P.C. or other police officer referred to in Section 36 Cr.P.C. If despite approaching the Superintendent of Police or the officer referred to in Section 36 his grievance still persists, then he can approach a Magistrate under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. instead of rushing to the High Court by way of a writ petition or a petition under Section 482 Cr.P.C. Moreover he has a further remedy of filing a criminal complaint under Section 200 Cr.P.C. Why then should writ petitions or Section 482 petitions be entertained when there are so many alternative remedies?

27. As we have already observed above, the Magistrate has very wide powers to direct registration of an FIR and to ensure a proper investigation, and for this purpose he can monitor the investigation to ensure that the investigation is done properly (though he cannot investigate himself). The High Court should discourage the practice of filing a writ petition or petition under Section 482 Cr.P.C. simply because a person has a grievance that his FIR has not been registered by the police, or after being registered, proper investigation has not been done by the police. For this grievance, the remedy lies under Sections 36 and 154(3) before the concerned police officers, and if that is of no avail, under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. before the Magistrate or by filing a criminal complaint under Section 200 Cr.P.C. and not by filing a writ petition or a petition under Section 482 Cr.P.C.

28. It is true that alternative remedy is not an absolute bar to a writ petition, but it is equally well settled that if there is an alternative remedy the High Court should not ordinarily interfere.

29. In Union of India v. Prakash P. Hinduja and Anr. MANU/SC/0446/2003 : 2003CriLJ3117 , it has been observed by this Court that a Magistrate cannot interfere with the investigation by the police. However, in our opinion, the ratio of this decision would only apply when a proper investigation is being done by the police. If the Magistrate on an application under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. is satisfied that proper investigation has not been done, or is not being done by the officer-in- charge of the concerned police station, he can certainly direct the officer in charge of the police station to make a proper investigation and can further monitor the same (though he should not himself investigate).

30. It may be further mentioned that in view of Section 36 Cr.P.C. if a person is aggrieved that a proper investigation has not been made by the officer- in- charge of the concerned police station, such aggrieved person can approach the Superintendent of Police or other police officer superior in rank to the officer- in- charge of the police station and such superior officer can, if he so wishes, do the investigation vide CBI v. State of Rajasthan and Anr. MANU/SC/0042/2001 : 2001CriLJ968 , R.P. Kapur v. S.P. Singh MANU/SC/0070/1960 : [1961]2SCR143 etc. Also, the State Government is competent to direct the Inspector General, Vigilance to take over the investigation of a cognizable offence registered at a police station vide State of Bihar v. A.C. Saldanna (supra).

31. No doubt the Magistrate cannot order investigation by the CBI vide CBI v. State of Rajasthan and Anr. (Supra), but this Court or the High Court has power under Article 136 or Article 226 to order investigation by the CBI. That, however should be done only in some rare and exceptional case, otherwise, the CBI would be flooded with a large number of cases and would find it impossible to properly investigate all of them.

32. In the present case, there was an investigation by the G.R.P., Mathura and also two Courts of Inquiry held by the Army authorities and they found that it was a case of suicide. Hence, in our opinion, the High Court was justified in rejecting the prayer for a CBI inquiry.

33. In Secretary, Minor Irrigation & Rural Engineering Services U.P. and Ors. v. Sahngoo Ram Arya and Anr. MANU/SC/0441/2002 : 2002CriLJ2942 , this Court observed that although the High Court has power to order a CBI inquiry, that power should only be exercised if the High Court after considering the material on record comes to a conclusion that such material discloses prima facie a case calling for investigation by the CBI or by any other similar agency. A CBI inquiry cannot be ordered as a matter of routine or merely because the party makes some allegation.

34. In the present case, we are of the opinion that the material on record does not disclose a prima facie case calling for an investigation by the CBI. The mere allegation of the appellant that his son was murdered because he had discovered some corruption cannot, in our opinion, justify a CBI inquiry, particularly when inquiries were held by the Army authorities as well as by the G.R.P. at Mathura, which revealed that it was a case of suicide.

35. It has been stated in the impugned order of the High Court that the G.R.P. at Mathura had investigated the matter and gave a detailed report on 29.8.2003. It is not clear whether this report was accepted by the Magistrate or not. If the report has been accepted by the Magistrate and no appeal/revision was filed against the order of the learned Magistrate accepting the police report, then that is the end of the matter. However, if the Magistrate has not yet passed any order on the police report, he may do so in accordance with law and in the light of the observations made above.

36. With the above observations, this appeal stands dismissed.

37. Let a copy of this judgment be sent by the Secretary General of this Court to the Registrar Generals/Registrars of all the High Courts, who shall circulate a copy of this Judgment to all the Hon'ble Judges of the High Courts.

MANU/SC/0322/1988

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Writ Petition (Criminal) Nos. 49 and 129 of 1987

Decided On: 14.10.1988

Mukund Lal and Ors. Vs. Union of India (UOI) and Ors.

Back to Section 161 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Back to Section 172 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ.

JUDGMENT

M.P. Thakkar, J.

1. Constitutional validity of a part of a provision enjoining a police officer engaged in an investigation under Chapter XII of the CrPC (Cr.P.C.) has been called into question. The provision which so enjoins an investigation officer is embodied in Section 172, Clause (1) whereof imposes the duty. It is a part of this provision namely Clause (3) which is the target of the challenge made by one of the two accused in a Criminal case. The High Court having repulsed the challenge, the accused have approached this Court by way of the present petition in order to reiterate the challenge on the premise that the High Court had erred in sustaining the validity of the impugned provision.

2. The analysis of Section 172 (Section 172(3)- "Neither the accused nor his agents shall be entitled to call for such diaries, nor shall he or they be entitled to see them merely because they are referred to by the Court; but, if they are used by the police officer who made them to refresh his memory, or if the Court uses them for the purpose of contradicting such police officer, the provisions of Section 161 or 145 as the case may be, of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 shall apply), Clause (3) whereof has given rise to the challenge to its constitutionally reveals:

(1) That it embodies a complete scheme relating to the matter of maintaining a diary.

(2) Clause (1) imposes the obligation to do so and provides for the contents thereof.

(3) The Court is empowered to call for such diaries to aid it in inquiry or trial subject to the rider that it can not be used as evidence thereat.

(4) Merely because the Court calls for the diary, the accused (or his agent) can not claim the right to peruse it.

(5) The accused can peruse that particular part 2 of the diary in the context of Section 161 (Section 161 "Any writing referred to under the provisions of the two last preceding sections must be produced and shown to the adverse party if he requires it; such party may, if he pleases, cross-examine the witness thereupon) of the Indian Evidence Act or Section 145 (Section 145 "A witness may be cross- examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing, and relevant to matters in question, without such writing being shown to him, or being proved; but if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him) thereof in case:

(a) if it is used by the police officer concerned to refresh his memory;

(b) if the Court uses it for contradicting the police official concerned.

3. The High Court has repelled the plea by recourse to the reasoning reflected in the relevant passage extracted hereinbelow:

So far as Section 172(3) is concerned, the embargo on the right of the accused or his representative in calling for the diary or seeing any part of it is only a partial one and not absolute because if a part of the diary has been used by the police officer to refresh his memory or the court uses it for the purpose of contradicting such police officer, the provisions of Section 161 and 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, will be applicable. So far as the other parts are concerned, the accused need not necessarily have a right of access to them because in a criminal trial or enquiry, whatever is sought to be proved against the accused, will have to be proved by the evidence other than the diary itself and the diary can only be used for a very limited purpose by the Court or the police officer as stated above. Even then, a safeguard has already been provided in the Section itself to protect the right of the accused. The investigating Officer deposes before the Court on the basis of the entries in the diary. If the accused or his counsel thinks that he is stating something against the diary or is trying to hide something which may be in the diary he can put question in that respect to the Investigating Officer, and if the accused or his counsel has any doubt about the veracity of the statement made by the Investigation Officer, he may always request the court to look into the diary and verify the facts and, this right of the accused can always be safeguarded. It is true that it is for the court to decide whether the facts stated are borne out by the diary or not, but then this much reliance has always to be placed on the court and it has to be trusted as it is trusted in the case under Section 123 of the Evidence Act in order to decide whether any privilege can be claimed with respect to the documents in question. Even according to the authorities relied upon by the learned Counsel for the petitioner pertaining to Section 123 of the Evidence Act, it is the right of the court to decide whether the privileged document contains any material affecting the public interest or a particular affair of the State, which need not be disclosed.

When in the enquiry or trial, everything which may appear against the accused has to be established and brought before the Court by evidence other than the diary and the accused can have the benefit of cross- examining the witnesses and the court has power to call for the diary and use it, of course not as evidence but in aid of the enquiry or trial, I am clearly of the opinion, that the provisions under Section 172(3) Cr.P.C. cannot be said to be unconstitutional.

We fully endorse the reasoning of the High Court and concur with its conclusion. We are of the opinion that the provision embodied in Sub- section (3) of Section 172 of the Cr.P.C. cannot be characterised as unreasonable or arbitrary. Under Sub- section (2) of Section 172 Cr.P.C. the Court itself has the unfettered power to examine the entries in the diaries. This is a very important safeguard. The Legislature has reposed complete trust in the court which is conducting the inquiry or the trial. It has empowered the court to call for any such relevant case diary, if there is any inconsistency or contradiction arising in the context of the case dairy the Court can use the entries for the purpose of contradicting the Police Officer as provided in Sub- section (3) of Section 172 of the Cr.P.C. Ultimately there can be no better custodian or guardian of the interest of justice than the Court trying the case. No court will deny to itself the power to make use of the entries in the diary to the advantage of the accused by contradicting the police officer with reference to the contents of the diaries. In view of this safeguard, the charge of unreasonableness or arbitrariness cannot stand scrutiny. The petitioners claim an unfettered right to make roving inspection of the entries in the case diary regardless of whether these entries are used by the police officer concerned to refresh his memory or regardless of the fact whether the court has used these entries for the purpose of contradicting such police officer. It cannot be said that unless such unfettered right is conferred and recognised, the embargo engrafted in Sub- section (3) of Section 172 of the Cr.P.C. would fail to meet the test of reasonableness. For instance in the case diary there might be a note as regards the identity of the informant who gave some information which resulted in investigation into a particular aspect. Public Interest demands that such an entry is not made available to the accused for it might endanger the safety of the informants and it might deter the informants from giving any information to assist the investigating agency, as observed in Mohinder Singh v. Emperor MANU/LA/0069/1931 : AIR 1932 Lah 103:

The accused has no right to insist upon a police witness referring to his diary in order to elicit information which is privileged. The contents of the diary are not at the disposal of the defence and cannot be used except strictly in accordance with the provisions of Sections 162 and 172. Section 172 shows that witness may refresh his memory by reference to them but such use is at the discretion of the witness and the Judge, whose duty it is to ensure that the privilege attaching to them by statute is strictly enforced.

and also as observed in Mahabirji Birajman Mandir v. Prem Narain Shukla and Ors. MANU/UP/0141/1965 : AIR1965All494 .

The case diary contains not only the statements of witnesses recorded under Section 161 Cr.P.C. and the site plan or other documents prepared by the Investigating Officer, but also reports or observations of the Investigating Officer or his superiors. These reports are of a confidential nature and privilege can be claimed thereof. Further, the disclosure of the contents of such reports cannot help any of the parties to the litigation, as the report invariably contains the opinion of such officers and their opinion is inadmissible in evidence.

4. The public interest requirement from the stand point of the need to ensure a fair trial for an accused is more than sufficiently met by the power conferred on the court, which is the ultimate custodian of the interest of justice and can always be trusted to be vigilant to ensure that the interest of accused persons standing the trial, is fully safeguarded.

This is a factor which must be accorded its due weight. There would be no prejudice or failure of justice to the accused person since the court can be trusted to look into the police diary for the purpose of protecting his interest. Therefore, the public interest requirement from the perspective of safeguarding the interest of all persons standing trial, is not compromised. On the other hand the public interest requirement from the perspective of enabling the investigation agency to investigate the crime against the society in order that the interest of the community to ensure that a culprit is traced and brought to book is also safeguarded. The argument inspired by the observations in Raj Narain's case MANU/SC/0032/1975 : [1975]3SCR333 and S.P. Gupta's case MANU/SC/0080/1981 : [1982]2SCR365 in the context of claim for privilege in regard to Section 123 of Evidence Act, which have no direct bearing, is also effectively answered in the light of the foregoing discussion as the 'Public Interest' aspect is also taken care of. In the ultimate analysis, it is not possible to sustain the plea of the petitioners, which is rooted in the mistrust of the court itself, that the provision is unreasonable and arbitrary. There is also another dimension of the issue. Section 172 embodies a composite scheme. The duty cast under Clause (1) and the rider added by Clause(13) thereof from integral part of the scheme. Clause (3) cannot be struck down in isolation whilst retaining Clause (1). The legislature in its wisdom has cast this obligation only subject to the rider. Clause (3) cannot be viewed in isolation. Under the circumstances, we concur with the view of the High Court and repulse the challenge. These are the reasons which impelled us to dismiss the petitions.

ORDER

1. The question which arises before us for consideration is whether certain documents called for by the Court by its order dated 16th February, 1981 are liable to be produced by the State or their production is barred under some provision of law. The documents called for are set out in the order dated 16th February, 1981 and they are as follows:

1. the CID report submitted by L.V. Singh,. DIG, CID (Anti- Dacoity) on December 9, 1980;

2. the CID reports on all the 24 cases submitted by L.V. Singh and his associates between January 10 and January 20, 1981;

3. the letters number 4/R dated 3rd January, 1981 and number 20/R dated 7th January, 1981 from L.V. Singh to the IG, Police;

4. the files containing all correspondence and notings exchange between L.V. Singh, DIG and M.K. Jha, Additional IG, regarding the CID inquiry into the Windings, and

5. the file (presently in the office of the IG, S.K. Chatterjee) containing the reports submitted by Inspector and Sub- Inspector of CID to Gajendra Narain, DIG, Bhagalpur, on 18th July or thereabouts and his letter to K.D. Singh, SP, CID, Patna which has the hand- written observations of M.K. Jha.

2. The State has objected to the production of these documents on the ground that they are protected from disclosure under Sections 162 and 172 of the CrPC 1973 and the petitioners are not entitled to see them or to make any use of them in the present proceeding. This contention raises a question of some importance and it has been debated with great farvour on both sides but we do not think it presents any serious difficulty in its resolution, if we have regard to the terms of Sections 162 and 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code on which reliance has been placed on behalf of the State.

3. We will first consider the question in regard to the reports submitted by Sh. L.V. Singh, Deputy Inspector General CID (Anti- Dacoity) on 2nd December, 1980 and the reports submitted by him 1 and his associates Sh. R.R. Prasad, S.P. (Anti- Dacoity) and Smt. Manjuri Jaurahar, S.P. (Anti-Dacoity) between 10th and 20th January, 1981. These reports have been handed over to us for our perusal by Mr. K.G. Bhagat learned advocate appearing on behalf of the State and it is clear from these reports, and that has also been 1 stated before us on behalf of the State, that by an order dated 28- 29th November, 1980 made by the State Government under Section 3 of the Indian Police Act 1861, Sh. (sic) L.V. Singh was directed by the State Government to investigate into 24 cases of blinding of under- trial prisoners and it was in discharge of this official duty entrusted to him that he with the associates Sh. R.R. Prasad and Smt. Manjuri Jaurahar investigated these cases and made these reports. These reports set out the conclusions reached by him as a result of his investigation into these cases. The question is whether the production of these reports is hit by Sections 162 and' 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It may be pointed out that these are the only provisions of law under which the State resists production of these reports. The State has not claimed privilege in regard to these reports under Section 123 or Section 124 of the Indian Evidence Act. All that is necessary therefore is to examine the applicability of Sections 162 and 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code in the present base.

4. Before we refer to the provisions of Sections 162 and 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it would be convenient to set out briefly a few relevant provisions of that Code. Section 2 is the definition Section and Clause (g) of that Section defines 'Inquiry' to mean "every inquiry, other than a trial conducted under this Code by a Magistrate or Court". Clause (h) of Section 2 gives the definition of 'investigation' and it says that investigation includes "all the proceedings under this Code for the collection of evidence conducted by a police officer or by any person (other than a Magistrate) who is authorised by a Magistrate in this behalf". Section (4) provide

4(1) All offences under the Indian Penal Code shall be investigated, inquired into, tried, and otherwise dealt with according to the provisions hereinafter contained.

(2) All offences under any other law shall be investigated, inquired into, tried, and otherwise dealt with according to the same provisions, but subject to any enactment for the time being in force regulating the manner or place of investigating inquiring into, trying or otherwise dealing with such offences.

5. It is apparent from this Section that the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code are applicable where an offence under the Indian Penal Code or under any other law is being investigated, inquired into, tried or otherwise dealt with. Then we come straight to Section 162 which occurs in chapter XII dealing with the powers of the Police to investigate into offences. That Section, so far as material, reads as under.

162 (1) No statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this chapter, shall, if reduced to writing, be signed by the person making it; nor shall any such statement or any record thereof, whether in a police diary or otherwise, or any part of such statement or record be used for any purpose, save as hereinafter provided, at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made:

Provided that when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid, any part of his statement, if duly proved, may be used by the accused, and with the permission of the Court, by the prosecution, to contradict such witness in the manner provided by Section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872; and when any part of such statement is so used, any part thereof may also be used in the re-examination of such witness, but for the purpose only of explaining any matter referred to in his cross- examination.

(2) Nothing in this Section shall be deemed to apply to any statement falling within the provisions of Clause (1) of Section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, or to affect the provisions of Section 27 of that Act.

It bars the use of any statement made before a police officer in the course of an investigation under chapter XII, whether recorded in a police dairy or otherwise, but by the express terms of Section, this bar is applicable only were such statement is sought to be used 'at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made'. If the statement made before a police officer in course of an investigation under chapter XII is sought to be used in any proceeding other than an inquiry or trial or even at an inquiry or trial but in respect of an offence other than that which was under investigation at the time when such statement was made, the bar of Section 162 would not be attracted.

This section has been enacted for the benefit of the accused, as pointed out by this Court in Tehsildar Singh and Anr. v. The State of Uttar Pradesh MANU/SC/0053/1959 : (1959) Supp. 2 S.C.R. 875, it is intended "to protect the accused against the user of statements of witnesses made before the police during investigation, at the trial presumably on the assumption that the said statements were not made under circumstances inspiring confidence." This court, in Tehsildar Singh's case approved the following observations of Braund, J. in Emperor v. Aftab Mohd. Khan MANU/UP/0243/1939 : AIR1940All291 .

As it seems to us it is to protect accused persons from being prejudiced by statements made to police officers who by reason of the fact that an investigation is known to be on foot at the time the statement is made, may be in a position to influence the maker of it, and, on the other hand, to protect accused persons from the prejudice at the hands of persons who in the knowledge that an investigation has already started, are prepared to tell untruths.

and expressed its agreement with the view taken by the Division Bench of the Nagpur High Court in Baliram Tikaram Marathe v. Emperor MR (1945) Nag 1 that "the object of the section is to protect the accused both against overzealous police officers and untruthful witnesses." Protection against the use of statement made before the police during investigation is, therefore, granted to the accused by providing that such statement shall not be allowed to be used except for the limited purpose set out in the provision to the section, at any inquiry or trial in respect of the offence which was under investigation at the time when such statement was made. But, this protection is unnecessary in any proceeding other than an inquiry or trial in respect of the offence under investigation and hence the bar created by the section is a limited bar. It has no application, for example in a civil proceeding or in a proceeding under Article 32 or 226 of the Constitution and a statement made before a police officer in the course of investigation can be used as evidence in such proceeding, provided it is otherwise relevant under the Indian Evidence Act. There are a number of decisions of various High Courts which have taken this view and amongst them may be mentioned the decision of Jaganmohan Reddy, J. in Malakaya Surya Rao v. Janakamma MANU/AP/0089/1964 : AIR1964AP198 . The present proceeding before us is a writ petition under Article 32 of the Constitution filed by the petitioners for enforcing their Fundamental Rights under Article 21 and it is neither an "inquiry" nor a "trial" in respect of any offence and hence it is difficult to see how Section 162 can be invoked by the State in the present case. The procedure to be followed in a writ petition under Article 32 of the Constitution is prescribed in Order XXXV of the Supreme Court Rules, 1966, and Sub- rule (9) of Rule 10 lays down that at the hearing of the rule nisi, if the court is of the opinion that an opportunity be given to the party to establish their respective cases by leading further evidence, the court may take such evidence or cause such evidence to be taken in such manner as it may deem fit and proper and obviously the reception of such evidence will be governed by the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. It is obvious, therefore, that even a statement made before a police officer during investigation can be produced and used in evidence in a writ petition under Article 32 provided it is relevant under the Indian Evidence Act and Section 162 cannot be urged as a bar against its production or use. The reports submitted by Shri L.V. Singh setting forth the result of his investigation cannot, in the circumstances, be shut out from being produced and considered in evidence under Section 162, even it they refer to any statements made before him and his associates during investigation, provided they are otherwise relevant under some provision of the Indian Evidence Act.

6. We now turn to Section 172 which is the other section relied upon by the State. That section reads as follows:

172. Diary of proceedings in investigation- - (1) Every police officer making an investigation under this Chapter shall day by day enter his proceedings in the investigation in a diary, setting forth the time at which the information reached him, the time at which he began and closed his investigation, the place or places visited by him, and a statement of the circumstances ascertained through his investigation.

(2) Any Criminal Court may send for the police diaries of a case under enquiry or trial in such Court, and may use such diaries, not as evidence in the case, but to aid it in such inquiry or trial.

(3) Neither the accused nor his agents shall be entitled to call for such diaries, nor shall they be entitled to see them merely because they are referred to by the court; but, if they are used by the police officer who made them to refresh his memory, or if the court uses them for the purpose of contradicting such police officers, the provisions of Section 161 or Section 145, as the case may be, of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 (1 of 1872) shall apply.

The first question which arises for consideration under this section is whether the reports made by Shri L.V. Singh as a result of the investigation carried out by him and his associates could be said to form part of case diary within the meaning of this section. The argument of Mrs. Mingorani and Dr. Chitale was that these reports did not form part of case diary as contemplated in this section, since the investigation which was carried out by Shri L.V. Singh was pursuant to a direction given to him by the State Government under Section 3 of the Indian Police Act 1861, and it was not an investigation under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code which alone would attract the applicability of Section 172. Mrs. Hingorani sought to support his proposition by relying upon the decision of this Court in State of Bihar v. J.A.C. Saldhana MANU/SC/0253/1979 : 1980CriLJ98 . Mr. K.G. Bhagat, learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the State however, submitted that even though Shri L.V. Singh earring out the investigation under the direction given by the State Government in exercise of the power conferred under Section 3 of the Indian Police Act, 1861, the investigation carried out by him was one under Chapter XII and Section 172 was therefore applicable in respect of the reports made by him setting out the result of the investigation. He conceded that it was undoubtedly laid down by this Court in State of Bihar v. J.A.C. Saldhana (supra) that the State Government has power to direct investigation or further investigation under Section 3 of the Indian Police Act 1861, but contended that it was equally clear from the decision in that case that "power to direct investigation or further investigation is entirely different from the method and procedure of investigation and the competence of the person who Investigates." He urged that Section 36 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that police officers superior in rank to an officer in- charge of a police station may exercise the same powers throughout the local area to which they are appointed as may be exercised by such officer within the limits of his station and Shri L.V. Singh being the Deputy Inspector General of Police, was superior in sank to an officer in charge of a police station and was, therefore, competent to investigate the offences arising from the blinding of the undertrial prisoners and the State Government acted within its powers under Section 3 of the Indian Police Act, 1861 in directing Shri L.V. Singh to investigate into these offences. But, "the method and procedure of investigation" was to be the same as that prescribed for investigation by an officer in charge of a police station under Chapter XII and therefore the investigation made by Shri L.V. Singh was an investigation under that Chapter so as to bring in the applicability of Section 172. These rival contentions raise two interesting questions, first, whether an investigation carried out by a superior officer by virtue of a direction given to him by the State Government under Section 3 of the Indian Police Act 1861 is an investigation under Chapter XII so as to attract the applicability of Section 172 to a diary maintained by him in the course of such investigation and secondly, whether the report made by such officer as a result of the investigation carried out by him forms part of case diary within the meaning of Section 172. We do not, however, think it necessary to enter upon a consideration of these two questions and we shall assume for the purpose of our discussion that Mr. K.G. Bhagat, learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the State, is right in his submission in regard to both these questions and that the reports made by Shri L.V. Singh setting out the result of his investigation form part of case diary so as to invite the applicability of Section 172. But, even if that be so, the question is whether these reports are protected from disclosure under Section 172 and that depends upon a consideration of the terms of this section.

7. The object of Section 172 in providing for the maintenance of a diary of his proceedings by the police officer making in investigation under Chapter XII has been admirably stated by Edge, C.J. in Queen- Empress v. Mannu (1897) 19 All. 360 in the following words:

The early stages of the investigation which follows on the commission of a crime must necessarily in the vast majority of cases be left to the police, and until the honesty, the capacity, the discretion and the judgment of the police can be thoroughly trusted, it is necessary, for the protection of the public against criminals, for the vindication of the law and for the protection of those who are charged with having committed a criminal offence that the Magistrate or Judge before whom the case is for investigation or for trial should have the means of ascertaining what was the information, true, false, or misleading which was obtained from day to day by the police officer who was investigating the case and what such police officer acted.

The criminal Court holding an inquiry or trial of a case is therefore empowered by Sub- section (2) of Section 172 to send for the police: diary of the case and the criminal court can use such diary, not as evidence in the case, but to aid it in such inquiry or trial. But, by reason of Sub- section (3) of Section 172, merely because the case diary is referred to by the criminal court, neither the accused nor his agent are entitled to call for such diary nor are they entitled to see it. If however the case diary is used by the police officer who has made it to refresh his memory or if the criminal court uses it for the purpose of contradicting such police officer in the inquiry Or trial, the provisions of Section 145, as the case may be, of the Indian Evidence Act would apply and the accused would be entitled to see the particular entry in the case diary which has been referred to for either of these purposes and so much of the diary as in the opinion of the Court is necessary to a full understanding of the particular entry so used. It will thus be seen that the bar against production and use of case diary enacted in Section 172 is intended to operate only in an inquiry or trial for an offence and even this bar is a limited bar, because in an inquiry or trial, the bar does not operate if the case diary is used by the police officer for refreshing his memory or the criminal court uses it for the purpose of contradicting such police officer. This bar can obviously have no application where a case diary is sought to be A produced and used in evidence in a civil proceeding under Article 32 or 226 of the Constitution and particularly when the party calling for the case diary is neither an accused nor his agent in respect of the offence to which the case diary relates. Now plainly and unquestionably the present writ petition which has been filed under Article 32 of 4 the Constitution to enforce the fundamental right guaranteed under Article 21 is neither an 'inquiry' nor a 'trial' for an offence nor is this Court hearing the writ petition a criminal court not are the petitttioners, accused or their agents so far as the offences arising out of their blinding are concerned. Therefore, even if the reports submitted by 5 Shri L.V. Singh as a result of his investigation could be said to form part of 'case diary', it is difficult to see how their production and use in the present writ petition under Article 32 of the Constitution could be said to be barred under Section 172.

8. Realising this difficulty created in his way by the specific language 5 of Section 172, Mr. K.G. Bhagat, learned advocate appearing on behalf of the State, made a valiant attempt to invoke the principle behind Section 172 for the purpose of excluding the reports of investigation submitted by Sh. L.V. Singh. He contended that if, under the terras of Section 172, the accused in an inquiry or trial is not entitled to call for the case diary or to look at it, save for a limited purpose, it is difficult to believe that the Legislature could have ever intended that the complainant or a third party should be entitled to call for or look at the case diary in some other proceeding, for that would jeopardise the secrecy of the investigation and defeat the object and purpose of Section 172 and therefore, applying the principle of that section, we should hold that the case diary is totally protected from disclosure and even the complainant or a third party cannot call for it or look at it in a civil proceeding. This contention is in our opinion wholly unfounded. It is based on what may be called an appeal to the spirit of Section 172 which is totally impermissible under any recognised canon of construction. Either production and use of case diary in a proceeding is barred under the terms of Section 172 or it is not; it is difficult to see how it can be said to be barred on an extended or analogical application of the principle supposed to be underlying that section, if it is not covered by its express terms. It must be remembered that we have adopted the adversary system of justice and in order that truth may emerge from the clash between contesting parties under this system, it is necessary that all facts relevant to the inquiry must be brought before the Court and no relevant fact must be shut- out, for otherwise the Court may get a distorted or incomplete picture of the facts and that might result in miscarriage of justice. To quote the words of the Supreme Court of United States in United States v. Nixon 418 v. 683 : 41 lawyers Edition (2nd series) 1039 "The need to develop all relevant facts in the adversary system is both fundamental and comprehensive. The ends of justice would be defeated if judgments were to be founded on a partial or speculative presentation of the facts. The very integrity of the judicial system and public confidence in the system depend on full disclosure of all the facts within the frame work of the rules of evidence", it is imperative to the proper functioning of . the judicial process and satisfactory and certain ascertainment of truth that all relevant facts must be made available to the Court. But the law may, in exceptional cases, in order to protect more weighty and compelling competing interests, provide that a particular piece of evidence, though relevarft, shall not be liable to be found, infer alia, in Sections 122, 123, 124, 126 and 129 of the Indian Evidence Act and Sections 162 and 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But being exceptions to the legitimate demand for reception of all relevant evidence in the interest of justice, they must be strictly interpreted and not expansively constiued. "for they are in derogation of the search for truth". It would not, therefore, be right to extend the prohibition of Section 172 to cases not falling strictly within the terms of the section, by appealing to what may be regarded as the principle or spirit of the section. That is a feeble reed which cannot sustain the argument of the learned advocate appearing on behalf of the State. It would in fact be inconsistent with the Constitutional commitment of this Court to the rule of law.

9. That takes us to the question whether the reports made by Sh. L.V. Singh as a result of the investigation carried by him and his associates are relevant under any provision of the Indian Evidence Act so as to be liable to be produced and received in evidence. It is necessary, in order to answer this question, to consider what is the nature of the proceeding before us and what are the issues which arise in it. The proceeding is a writ petition under Article 32 for enforcing the fundamental right of the petitioners enshrined in Article 21, The petitioners complain that after arrest, whilst under police custody, they were blinded by the members of the police force, acting not in their private capacity, but as police officials and their fundamental right to life guaranteed under Article 21 was therefore violated and for this violation, the State is liable to pay compensation to them. The learned Attorney General who at one stage appeared on behalf of the State at the hearing of the writ petition contended that the inquiry upon which the Court was embarking in order to find out whether or not the petitioners were blinded by the police officials whilst in police custody was irrelevant, since, in his submission, even if the petitioners were so blinded, the State was not liable to pay compensation to the petitioners first, because the State was not constitutionally or legally responsible for the acts of the police officers out side the scope of their power or authority and the Windings of the undertrial prisoners effected by the police could not therefore be said to constitute violation of their fundamental right under Article 21 by the State and secondly, even if there was violation of the fundamental right of the petitioners under Article 21 by reason of the Windings effected by the police officials, there was, on a true construction of that Article, no liability on the State to pay compensation to the petitioners. The attempt of the learned Attorney General in advancing this contention was obviously to preempt the inquiry which was being made by this Court, so that the Court may not proceed to probe further in the matter. But we do not think we can accede to this contention of the learned Attorney General. The two questions raised by the learned Attorney General are undoubtedly important but the arguments urged by him in regard to these two questions are not prime facie so strong and appealing as to persuade us to decide them as preliminary objections without first inquiring into the facts. Some serious doubts arise when we consider the argument of the learned Attorney General, if an officer of the State acting in his official capacity threatens to deprive a person of his life or personal liberty without the authority of law, can such person not approach the Court for injuncting the State from acting through such officer in violation of his fundamental right under Article 21 ? Can the State urge in defence in such a case that it is not infringing the fundamental right of the petitioner under Article 21, because the officer who is threatening, to do so is acting outside the law and therefore beyond the scope of his authority and hence the State is not responsible for his action? Would this not make a mockery of Article 21 and reduce it to nullity, a mere rape of sand, for, on this view, if the officer is acting according to law there would ex concessions be no breach of Article 21 and if he is acting without the authority of law, the State would be able to contend that it is not responsible for his action and therefore there is no violation of Article 21. So also if there is any threatened invasion by the State of the Fundamental Right guaranteed under Article 21, the petitioner who is aggrieved can move the Court under Article 32 for a writ injuncting such threatened invasion and if there is any continuing action of the State which is violative of the Fundamental Right under Article 21, the petitioner can approach the court under Article 32 and ask for a writ striking down the continuance of such action, but where the action taken by the State has already resulted in breach of the Fundamental Right under Article 21 by deprivation of some limb of the petitioner, would the petitioner have no remedy under Article 32 for breach of the Fundamental Right guaranteed to him? Would the court permit itself to become helpless spectator of the violation of the Fundamental Right of the petitioner by the State and tell the petitioner that though the Constitution has guaranteed the Fundamental Right to him and has also given him the Fundamental Right of moving the court for enforcement of his Fundamental Right, the court cannot give him any relief. These are some of the doubts which arise in our mind even in a prima facie consideration of the contention of the learned Attorney General and we do not, therefore, think it would be right to entertain this contention as a preliminary objection without inquiring into the facts of the case. If we look at the averments made in the writ petition, it is obvious that the petitioners cannot succeed in claiming relief under Article 32 unless they establish that their Fundamental Right under Article 21 was violated and in order to establish such violation, they must show that they were blinded by the police officials at the time of arrest or whilst in police custody. This is the fundamental fact which must be established before the petitioners can claim relief under Article 32 and logically therefore the first issue to which we must address ourselves is whether this foundational fact is shown to exist by the petitioners. It is only if the petitioners can establish that they were blinded by the members of the police force at the time of arrest or whilst in police custody that the other questions raised by the learned Attorney General would arise for consideration and it would be wholly academic to consider them if the petitioners fail to establish this foundational fact. We are, therefore, of the view, as at present advised, that we should first inquire whether the petitioners were blinded by the police officials at the time of arrest or after arrest, whilst in police custody, and it is in the context of this inquiry that we must consider whether the reports made by Sh. L.V. Singh are relevant under the Indian Evidence Act so as to be receivable in evidence.

10. We may at this stage refer to one other contention raised by Mr. 3 K.G. Bhagat on behalf of the State that if the Court proceeds to hold an inquiry and comes to the conclusion that the petitioners were blinded by the members of the police force at the time of arrest or whilst in police custody, it would be tantamount to adjudicating upon the guilt of the police officers without their being parties (sic) the present writ petition and that would be grossly unfair and hence this inquiry should not be held by the Court until the investigation is completed and the guilt or innocence of the police officer is established. We cannot accept this contention of Mr. K.G. Bhagat. When the Court trying the writ petition proceeds to inquire into the issue whether the petitioners were blinded by police officials at the time of arrest or whilst in police custody, it does so, not for the purpose of adjudicating upon the guilt of any particular officer with a view to punishing him but for the purpose of deciding whether the fundamental right of the petitioners under Article 21 has been violated and the State is liable to pay compensation to them for such violation. The nature and object of the inquiry is altogether different from that in a criminal case and any decision arrived at in the writ petition on this issue cannot, have any relevance much less any binding effect, in any criminal proceeding which may be taken against a particular police officer. A situation of this kind sometimes arises when a claim for compensation for accident caused by negligent driving of a motor vehicle is made in a civil Court or Tribunal and in such a proceeding it has to be determined by the Court, for the purpose of awarding. compensation to the claimant, whether the driver of the motor vehicle was negligent in driving, even though a criminal case for rash and negligent driving may be pending against the driver. The pendency of a criminal proceeding cannot be urged as a bar against the Court trying a civil proceeding or a writ petition where a similar issue is involved. The two are entirely distinct and separate proceedings and neither is a bar against the other. It may be that in a given case if the investigation is still proceeding, the Court may defer the inquiry before it, until the investigation is completed or if the Court considers it necessary in the interests of Justice, it may postpone its inquiry even after the prosecution following upon the investigation is terminated, but that is the matter entirely for the exercise of the discretion of the Court and there is no bar precluding the Court from proceeding with the inquiry before it merely because the investigation or prosecution is pending.

11. It is clear from the aforesaid discussion that the fact in issue in the inquiry before the Court in the present writ petition is whether the petitioners were blinded by the members of the police force at the time of the arrest or whilst in police custody. Now in order to determine whether the reports made by Sh. L.V. Singh as a result of the investigation carried out by him and his associates are relevant, it is necessary to consider whether they have any bearing on the fact in issue required to be decided by the Court. It is common ground that Sh. L.V. Singh was directed by the State Government under Section 3 of the Indian Police Act, 1861 to investigate into twenty four cases of blinding of under- trial prisoners and First Information Reports were lodged that they were blinded by the police officers whilst in police custody. Sh. L.V. Singh through his associates carried out this investigation and submitted his reports in the discharge of the official duty entrusted to him by the State Government. These reports clearly relate to the issue as to how, in what manner and by whom the twenty- four undertrial prisoners were blinded, for that is the matter which Shri L.V. Singh was directed by the State Government to investigate. If that be so, it is difficult to say how the State can resist the production of these reports and their use as evidence in the present proceeding. These reports are clearly relevant under Section 35 of the Indian Evidence Act which reads as follows:

35. An entry in any public or other official book, register or record, stating a fact in issue or relevant fact, and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, or by any other person in performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country in which such book, register of record is kept, is itself a relevant fact.

These reports are part of official record and they relate to the fact in issue as to how, and by whom the twenty- four under- trial prisoners were blinded and they are admittedly made by Sh. L.V. Singh, a public servant, in the discharge of his official duty and hence they are plainly and indubitably covered by Section 35. The language of Section 35 is so clear that it is not necessary to refer to any decided cases on the interpretation of that section, but we may cite two decisions to illustrate the applicability of this section in the present case. The first is the decision of this Court in Kanwar Lal Gupta v. Amar Nath Chawla MANU/SC/0277/1974 : [1975]2SCR259 . There the question was whether reports made by officers of the CID (Special Branch) relating to public meetings covered by them at the time of the election were relevant under Section 35 and this Court held that they were on the ground that they were "made by public servants, in discharge of their official duty and they were relevant under the first part of Section 35 of the Evidence Act, since they contained statements showing what were the public meetings held by the first respondent." This Court 5 in fact followed an earlier decision of the Court in P.C.P. Reddiar v. S. Perumal MANU/SC/0454/1971 : [1972]2SCR646 . So also in Jagdat v. Sheopal AIR 1927 Oudh 323, Wazirhasan J. held that the result of an inquiry by a Kanungo under Section 202 of the CrPC 1898 embodied in the report is an entry in a public record stating a fact in issue and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties and the report is therefore admissible in evidence under Section 35. We find that a similar view was taken by a Division Bench of the Nagpur High Court in Chandulal v. Pushkar Rai AIR 1952 Nagpur 271 where the learned Judges held that reports made by Revenue Officers, though not regarded as having judicial authority, where they express opinions on the private rights of the parties are relevant under Section 35 as reports made by public officers in the discharge of their official duties, in so far as they supply information of official proceedings and historical facts. The Calcutta High Court also held in Lionell Edweris Limited v. State of West Bengal MANU/WB/0056/1967 :

AIR1967Cal191 , that official correspondence from the Forest Officers to his superior, the conservator of Forests, carried on by the Forest Officer, in the discharge of his official duty would be admissible m evidence under Section 35. There is therefore no doubt in our mind that the reports made by Sh. L.V. Singh setting forth the result of the investigation carried on by him and his associates are clearly relevant under Section 35 since they relate to a fact in issue and are made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty. It is indeed difficult to see how in a writ petition against the State Government where the complaint is that the police officials of the State Government blinded the petitioners at the time of arrest or whilst m police custody, the State Government can resist production of a report in regard to the truth or otherwise of the complaint, made by a highly placed officer persuant to the direction issued by the Mate Government. We are clearly of the view that the reports made by Shri L.V. Singh as a result of the investigation carried out ', by him and his associates are relevant under Section 35 and they are liable to be produced by the State Government and used in evidence in the present writ petition. Of course, what evidentiary value must attach to the statements contained in these reports is a matter which would have to be decided by the Court after considering these reports. It may ultimately be found that these reports have not much evidentiary value and even if they contain any statements adverse to the Mate Government, it may be possible for the State Government to dispute their correctness or to explain them away, but it cannot be said that these reports are not relevant. These reports must therefore be produced by the State and taken on record of the present writ postition. We may point out that though in our order dated 16th February 1981, we have referred to these reports as having been made by Shri L.V. Singh and his associates between January 10 and January 20, 1981, it seems that there has been some error on our part m mentioning the outer date as January 20, 1981 for we find that some of these reports were submitted by Shri L.V. Singh even after January 20, 1981 and the last of them was submitted on 27th January 1981 . All these reports including the report submitted on 9th December, 1980 must therefore be filed by the State and taken as 5 forming part of the record to be considered by the Court in deciding the question at issue between the parties.

12. What we have said above must apply equally in regard to the correspondence and notings referred to as items three and four in the order dated 16th February 1981 made by us. These notings and 5 correspondence would throw light on the extent of involvement, whether by acts of commission or acts of omission, of the State in the Winding episode and having been made by Shri L.V Singh and M.K. Jha in discharge of their official duties, they are clearly relevant under Section 35 and they must therefore be produced and taken on record in the writ petition, so also the reports submitted by Inspector and Sub- Inspector of CID to Gajendra Narain, DIG, Bhagalpur on 18th July and his letter to Shri K.D. Singh, Superintendent of Police, CID, Patna containing hand- written endorsement of Shri M.K. Jha must for the same reasons be held to be relevant under Section 35 and must be produced by the State and be taken as forming part of the record of the writ petition.

13. Since all these documents are required by the Central Bureau of Investigation for the purpose of carrying out the investigation which has been commenced by them pursuant to the approval given by the State Government under section 6 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, we would direct that five sets of photostat copies of these documents may be prepared by the office, one for Mrs. Hingorani, learned advocate appearing on behalf of the petitioners, one for Mr. K.G.

Bhagat, learned advocate appearing on behalf of the State, one for Dr. Chitale who is appearing amicus curiae at our request and two for the Court, and after taking such photostat copies these documents along with the other documents which have been handed over to the Court by the State shall be returned immediately to Mr. K.G. Bhagat, learned advocate appearing on behalf of the State, for being immediately made available to the Central Bureau of Investigation for carrying out its investigation so that the investigation by the Central Bureau of Investigation may not be impeded or delayed. We hope and trust that the Central Bureau of Investigation will complete its investigation expeditiously without any avoidable delay.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 31 of 1962

Decided On: 16.08.1963

State of Uttar Pradesh Vs. Singhara Singh and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.K. Sarkar, J.C. Shah and M. Hidayatullah, JJ.

JUDGMENT

A.K. Sarkar, J.

1. On March 20, 1959 Raja Ram, a shop- keeper, of Afzalgarh in the State of Uttar Pradesh was murdered by gunshot in his shop. Seven persons including the three respondents, Singhara Singh, Bir Singh and Tega Singh were prosecuted for this murder. The learned Additional Sessions Judge of Bijnor before whom the trial was held, convicted the respondent Singhara Singh of the murder under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to death. He convicted the respondent Bir Singh and Tega Singh of abetment of the murder under s. 302 read with Sections 120B, 109 and 114 of the said Code and sentenced Bir Singh to death and Tega Singh to imprisonment for life. He acquitted the other accused persons.

2. The respondents appealed from the conviction to the High Court at Allahabad and the State from the acquittal. The High Court had also before it the usual reference for confirmation of the sentences of death. The High Court allowed the appeals of the respondents, dismissed the appeals of the State and rejected the reference. The State has now filed this appeal against the judgment of the High Court by special leave. This Court however granted the leave only so far as the judgment of the High Court concerned the three respondents. We are not, therefore, concerned with the other accused persons and the order acquitting them is no more in question.

3. The only point argued in this appeal was as to the admissibility of certain oral evidence. It is conceded that if that evidence was not admissible, then there is not other evidence on which the respondents can be convicted. In other words, it is not in dispute that if that evidence was not admissible the High Court's decision acquitting the respondents cannot be questioned. It is therefore not necessary to state the facts in details.

4. Now, the evident with which this case is concerned was given by a learned magistrate, Mr. Dixit, of confessions of guilt made to him by the respondents and purported to have been recorded by him under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The terms of that section and certain other section of the Code on the interpretation of which this case depends are as follows :

S. 164 (1) Any Presidency Magistrate, any Magistrate of the first class and any Magistrate of the second class specially empowered in this behalf by the State Government may, if he is not a police- officer record, any statement or confession made to him in the course of an investigation under this Chapter or under any other law for the time being in force or at any time afterwards before the commencement of the inquiry or trial.

(2) Such statement shall be recorded in such of the manners hereinafter prescribed for recording evidence as is, in his opinion, best fitted for the circumstances of the case. Such confessions shall be recorded and signed in the manner provided in section 364, and such statements or confessions shall then be forwarded to the Magistrate by whom the case is to be inquired into or tried.

(3) A Magistrate shall, before recording any such confession, explain to the person making it that he is not bound to make a confession and that if he does so it may be used as evidence against him and no Magistrate shall record and such confession unless, upon questioning the person making it, he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily; and, where records any confession, he shall make a memorandum at the foot of such record to the following effect :-

I have explained to (name) that the does not bound make a confession and that, if he does so, any confession he may make may be used as evidence against him and I believe that this confession was voluntary made. It was taken in my presence and hearing and was read over to the person making it and admitted by him to be correct, and it contains a full and true account of the statement made by him.

5. (Signed) A. B. Magistrate.

S. 364 (1) Whenever the accused is examined by and Magistrate, or by any Court other than a High Court for a Part A State or a Part B State the whole of such examination, including every question put to him and every answer given by him, shall be recorded in full in the language in which he is examined, or, if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court or in English; and such record shall be shown or read to him, or, if he does not understand the language in which it is written, shall be interpreted to him in a language which he understands, and he shall be at liberty to explain or add to his answers.

(2) When the whole is made conformable to what he declares is the truth, the record shall be signed by the accused and the Magistrate or Judge of such Court, and such Magistrate or Judge shall certify under his own hand that the examination was taken in his presence and hearing and that the record contains full and true account of the statement made by the accused.

(3) In cases in which the examination of the accused is not recorded by the Magistrate or Judge himself, he shall be bound, as the examination proceeds, to make a memorandum thereof in the language of the Court, or in English, if he is sufficiently acquainted with the latter language; and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Judge was his own hand, and shall be annexed to the record. If the Magistrate or Judge is unable to make a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of such inability.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to the examination of an accused person under section 263 or in the course of a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate.

S. 533 (1) If any Court, before which a confession or other statement of an accused person recorded or purporting to be recorded under section 164 or section 364 is tendered or has been received in evidence, finds that any of the provisions of either of such sections have not been complied with by the Magistrate recording the statement, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded; and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, section 91 such statement shall be admitted if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits.

(2) The provisions of this section apply to Courts of Appeal, Reference and Revision.

6. A confession duly recorded under s. 164 would no doubt be a public document under s. 74 of the Evidence Act which would prove itself under s. 80 of that Act. Mr. Dixit, who recorded the confession in this case was a second class magistrate and the prosecution was unable to prove that he had been specially empowered by the State Government to record a statement or confession under s. 164 of the Code. The trial, therefore, proceeded on the basis that he had not been so empowered. That being so, it was rightly held that the confessions had not been recorded under s. 164 and the record could not be put in evidence under Sections 74 and 80 of the Evidence Act to prove them. The prosecution, thereupon called Mr. Dixit to prove these confessions, the record being used only to refresh his memory under s. 159 of the Evidence Act. It is the admissibility of this oral evidence that is in question.

7. The Judicial Committee in Nazir Ahmed v. The King Emperor L.R. 63 IndAp 372 held that when a magistrate of the first class records a confession under s. 164 but does not follow the procedure laid down in that section, oral evidence of the confession in inadmissible. Nazir Ahmed's L.R. 63 IndAp 372. case naturally figured largely in the arguments presented to the Court and the Court below. The learned trial Judge following Ashrafi v. The State I.L.R. [1960] 2All. 488 to which we will have to refer latter, held that Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372.

had no application where, as in the present case, a magistrate not authorised to do so purports to recorded a confession under s. 164 and on that basis admitted the oral evidence. The learned Judges of the High Court observed that the present case was governed by Nazir Ahmed's case (L.R. 63 IndAp 372.) and that Asharfi's case I.L.R. [1960] 2All. 488 had no application because it dealt "with the question of identification parades held by Magistrates. There was no occasion to discuss the question of confession recorded before Magistrates." In this view of the matter the learned Judges of the High Court held the oral evidence inadmissible and acquitted the respondents. It would help to clear the ground to state that it had not been argued in Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372 that s. 533 of the Code had any operation in making any oral evidence admissible and the position is the same in the present case. It would not, therefore, be necessary for us to consider whether that section had any effect in this case in making any evidence admissible.

8. In Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372 the Judicial Committee observed that the principle applied in Taylor v. Taylor [1875] 1 Ch. D. 426 a Court, namely, that where a power is given to do a certain thing in a certain way, the thing must be done in that or nor at all and that other methods of performance are necessarily forbidden, applied to judicial officers making records under s. 164 and, therefore, held that magistrate could not give oral evidence of the confession made to him which he had purported to record under s. 164 of the Code. It was said that otherwise all the precautions and safe guards laid down in Sections 164 and 364, both which had to be read together, would become of such trifling value as to be almost idle and that "it would be an unnatural construction to hold that any other procedure was permitted than which is laid down with such minute particularity in the section themselves."

9. The rule adopted in Taylor v. Taylor [1875] 1 Ch. D. 426 is well recognised and is founded on sound principle. Its result is that if a statue has conferred a power to do an act and has laid down the method in which power has to be exercised, it necessarily prohibits the doing of the act in any other manner than that which has been prescribed. The principle behind the rule is that if this were not so, the statutory provision might as well not have been enacted.

A magistrate, therefore, cannot in the course of investigation record a confession except in the manner laid down in s. 164. The power to record the confession had obviously been given so that the confession might be proved by the record of it made in the manner laid down. If proof of the confession by other means was permissible the whole provision of s. 164 including the safeguards contained in it for the protection of accused persons would be rendered nugatory. The section, therefore, by conferring on magistrates the power to record statements or confessions, by necessary implication, prohibited a magistrate from giving oral evidence of the statements or confessions made to him.

10. Mr. Aggarwala does not question the validity of the principle but says that Nazi Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372 was wrongly decided as the principle was not applicable to its facts. He put his challenge to the correctness of the decision on two grounds, the first of which was that the principle applied in Taylor v. Taylor [1875] 1 Ch. 426 had no application where the statutory provision conferring the power was not mandatory and that the provisions of s. 164 were not mandatory as would appear from the term of s. 533.

11. This contention seems to us to be without foundation. Quite clearly, the power conferred by s. 164 to record a statement or confession is not one which must be exercised. The Judicial Committee expressly said so in Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372 and we did not understand Mr. Aggarwala to question this part of the judgment. What he meant was that s. 533 of the Code showed that in recording a statement or confession under s. 164, it was not obligatory for the magistrate to follow the procedure mentioned in it. Section 533 says that if the court before which a statement or confession of an accused person purporting to be recorded under s. 164 or s. 364 is tendered, in evidence, "finds that and of the provisions of either of such sections have not been complex with by the magistrate recording the statement, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded." Now a statement would not have been "duly made" unless the procedure for making it laid down in s. 164 had been followed. What s. 533 therefore, does is to permit oral evidence to be given to prove that the procedure laid down in s. 164 had in fact been followed when the court finds that the record produced before it does not show that that was so. If the oral evidence establishes that the procedure had been followed, then only can the record be admitted. Therefore, far from showing that the procedure laid down in s. 164 is not intended to be obligatory, s. 533 really emphasises that that procedure has to be followed. The section only permits oral evidence to prove that the procedure had actually been followed in certain cases where the record which ought to show that does not on the face of it do so.

12. The second ground on which Mr. Aggarwala challenged the decision in Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372. was that object of s. 164 of the Code is to permit a record being kept so as to take advantage of Sections 74 and 80 of the Evidence Act and avoid the inconvenience of having to call the magistrate to whom the statement or confession had been made, to prove it. The contention apparently is that the section was only intended to confer a benefit on the prosecution and, therefore, the sole effect of the disregard of its provisions would be to deprive the prosecution of that benefit, for it cannot then rely on Sections 74 and 80 the Evidence Act and has to prove the confession by other evidence including the oral evidence of the magistrate recording it. It was, therefore, said that the principle adopted in Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372 had no application in interpreting s. 164.

13. A similar argument was advanced in Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372 and rejected by the Judicial Committee. We respectfully agree with that view. The section gives power make a record of the confession made by an accused which may be used in evidence against him and at the same time it provides certain safeguards for his protection by laying down the procedure subject to which alone the record may be made and used in evidence. The record, if duly made, may no doubt be admitted in evidence without further proof but if it had not been so made and other evidence was admissible to prove that the statements recorded had been made, then the creation of the safeguards would have been futile. The safeguards were obviously not created for nothing and it could not have been intended that the safeguards might at will of the prosecution, be bypassed. That is what would happen if oral evidence was admissible to prove a confession purported to have been recorded under s. 164. Therefore it seems to us that the object of s. 164 was not to give the prosecution the advantage of Sections 74 and 80 of the Evidence Act but to provide for evidence being made available to the prosecution subject to due protection of the interest of the accused.

14. We have to point out that the correctness of the decision of Nazir Ahmed's case L.R.63 IndAp 372 has been accepted by this Court in at least two cases, namely, Rao Shiv Bahadur Chand v. The State of Vindhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0053/1954 : 1954CriLJ910 and Deep Chand v. State of Rajasthan MANU/SC/0118/1961 : [1962]1SCR662 . We have found no reason to take a different view.

15. Mr. Aggarwala then contended that Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372 was distinguishable. He said that all that the Judicial Committee decided in Nazir Ahmed's case was that if a Presidency Magistrate, a Magistrate of the first class or a Magistrate of the second class specially empowered in that behalf records a statement or confession under s. 164 but the procedure laid down in it is not complied with, he cannot give oral evidence to prove the statement or confession. According to Mr. Aggarwala, it does not follow from that decision that a Magistrate of a class not mentioned in the section, for example, a magistrate of the second class not specially, empowered by the State Government cannot give oral evidence of a confession made to him which he had purported to record under s. 164 of the Code.

16. It is true that the Judicial Committee did not have to deal with a case like the present one where a magistrate of the second class not specially empowered had purported to record a confession under s. 164. The principle applied in that decision would however equally prevent such magistrate from giving oral evidence of the confession. When a statute confers a power on certain judicial officers that power can obviously be exercised only by those officers. No other officer can exercise that power, for it has not been given to him. Now the power has been conferred by s. 164 on certain magistrates of higher classes. Obviously it was not intended to confer the power on magistrates of lower classes. If, therefore, a proper construction of s. 164 as we have held, is that a magistrate of a higher class prevented from giving oral evidence of a confession made to him because thereby the safeguards created for the benefit of an accused person by s. 164 would be rendered nugatory, it would be an unnatural construction of the section to hold that the safeguards were not thought necessary and could be ignored, where the confession had been made to a magistrate of lower class and that such a magistrate was, therefore, free to give oral evidence of confession made to him. We cannot put an interpretation on s. 164 which produces the a anomaly that while its possible for higher class magistrates to practically abrogate the safeguards created in s. 164 for the benefit of an accused person, it is open to lower class magistrate to do so. We, therefore, think that the decision in Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372 also covers the case in had and that on the principles there applied, here too oral evidence given by Mr. Dixit of the confession made to him must be held inadmissible.

17. It remains now to notice in some of the decisions on which Mr. Aggarwala relied in support of his contention. First of all we have to refer to Asharfi's case I.L.R. [1960] 2 All. 488. That was a case which was concerned with the memorandum of an identification parade prepared by a magistrate of the first class. It was observed in that case that Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372. was authority for the proposition that where a magistrate belongs to a class mentioned in s. 164, be must Act in terms of it or not at all, but where the proceedings are held before any to the magistrate the statement is of under the unwritten general law and Nazir Ahmed's case had no application. It was also observed that an identification memorandum was statement recorded under s. 164 when the record was made by a magistrate of a class mentioned in it but where the memorandum was prepared by magistrate of another class it was not a record made under that section and the magistrate making the record can give oral evidence in proof of the statements in the memorandum. We are not very clear as to what exactly was intended to be laid down in this case about s. 164. Furthermore it does not appear to us from the report how the observations referred to above were necessary for the decision of the case, for, as earlier stated, the identification memorandum considered there had been prepared by a magistrate of the first class. It is not necessary for us in this judgment to decide whether or how far a memorandum of identification proceeding is a statement recorded under s. 164 and we do not wish to be understood as lending our support to the view expressed on that question in Asharfi's case I.L.R. [1960] 2 All. 488. We think it enough to state that for the reasons earlier mentioned, we are unable to share the view - if that was the view expressed in Asharfi's case - that where a statement or confession is made in the course of investigation to a magistrate not belonging to one of the classes mentioned in s. 164, he can prove the statement or confession by oral evidence. We may state here that later judgment of the same High Court has expressed some doubt about the correctness of that case : see Ram Sanehi v. State MANU/UP/0087/1963 : AIR1963All308 .

18. The next case to which reference was made by Mr. Aggarwala was Ghulam Hussain v. The King L.R. 77 IndAp 65.. That case dealt with the question whether statement recorded under s. 164 which did not amount to a confession could be used against the maker as an admission by him within Sections 18 to 21 of the Evidence Act and it was held, that it could. The Judicial Committee observed that "the fact that an admission is made to a Magistrate while he is functioning under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot take it outside the scope of the Evidence Act." That case only held that the relevancy of a statement recorded under s. 164 had to be decided by the provisions of the Evidence Act. We have nothing to do with any question as to relevance of evidence. The question before us is whether a confession which is relevant can be proved by oral evidence in view of the provision of s. 164 of the Code. The question dealt with in Ghulam Hussain's case L.R. 77 IndAp 65. was quite different and that case has no bearing on the question before us.

19. It is clear that the observation quoted earlier from Ghulam Hussain's case L.R. 77 IndAp 65. does not, as argued by Mr. Aggarwala, support the contention that where a confession has been purported to be recorded under s. 164 but by a magistrate who is not one of those mentioned it, the Evidence Act can sill be called in aid to admit oral evidence to prove the confession. All that the Judicial Committee did in that case was to hold that an admission in a statement duly recorded under s. 164 was substantive evidence of the facts stated in it under Sections 18 to 21 of the Evidence Act. The Judicial Committee made that observation for this purpose only and to reject an argument that the cases of Brij Bhushan Singh v. King Emperor L.R. 73 IndAp 1, and Bhuboni Sahu v. The King L.R. 76 IndAp 147. showed that the admission made in the statement recorded under s. 164 could not be used against an accused person as substantive evidence of a fact stated. The Judicial Committee pointed out that "In these cases the Board was considering whether a statement made, by a witness under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure could be used against the accused substantive evidence of the facts stated, and it was held that such a statement could not be used in that way."

20. Another case cited was Emperor v. Ram Naresh I.L.R. [1939] All. 377.. What had happened there was that two accused persons walled into the court of a magistrate and wanted to make a confession. The magistrate called a petition- writer and the accused persons dictated an application to him and that was taken down by the petition- writer and signed by them That petition was admitted in evidence under s. 21 of the Evidence Act. It was held, and we think rightly, that Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372. did not prevent the petition being admitted in evidence because it only forbade certain oral evidence being given. This case turned on wholly different facts and is of no assistance.

21. We may also refer to, In re Natesan A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 443 where it was observed that the decision in Nazir Ahmed's case L.R. 63 IndAp 372. might require reconsideration in view of the observations of this Court in Willie Slaney v. The State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0038/1955 : 1956CriLJ291 . The actual decision in In re Natesan does not affect the question before us and with regard to the aforesaid observation made in it we think it enough on the present occasion to say that we are unable to accept it as correct.

22. We think that the High Court in the present case rightly rejected the oral evidence of Mr. Dixit.

23. The result is that the appeal fails is dismissed.

24. Appeal dismissed.

1. Leave granted.

2. An important question that arises for consideration is whether a person arrested and produced before the nearest Magistrate as required under Section 167(1) CrPC can still be remanded to police custody after the expiry of the initial period of 15 days. We propose to consider the issue elaborately as there is no judgment of this Court on this point. The facts giving rise to this question may briefly be stated. A case relating to abduction of four Bombay based diamond merchants and one Shri Kulkarni was registered at Police Station, Tughlak Road, New Delhi on 16.9.91 and the investigation was entrusted to C.B.I. During investigation it was disclosed that not only the four diamond merchants but also Shri Kulkarni, who is the respondent before us and one driver Babulal were kidnapped between 14th and 15th September, 1991 from two Hotels at Delhi. It emerged during investigation that the said Shri Kulkarni was one of the associates of the accused one Shri R. Chaudhary responsible for the said kidnapping of the diamond merchants. On the basis of some available material Shri Kulkarni was arrested on 4.10.91 and was produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, Delhi on 5.10.91. On the request of the C.B.I. Shri Kulkarni was remanded to judicial custody till 11.10.91. On 10.10.91 a test identification parade was arranged but Shri Kulkarni refused to cooperate and his refusal was recorded by the concerned Munsif Magistrate. On 11.10.91 an application was moved by the investigating officer seeking police custody of Shri Kulkarni which was allowed. When he was being taken on the way Shri Kulkarni pretended to be indisposed and he was taken to the Hospital the same evening where he remained confined on the ground of illness upto 21.10.91 and then he was referred to Cardiac Out- patient Department of G.B.Pant Hospital. Upto 29.10.91 Shri Kulkarni was again remanded to judicial custody by the Magistrate and thereafter was sent to Jail. In view of the fact that the Police could not take him into police custody all these days the investigating officer again applied to the court of Chief Metropolitan Magistrate for police custody of Shri Kulkarni. The Chief Metropolitan Magistrate relying on a judgment of the Delhi High Court in State (Delhi Admn.)

v. Dharam Pal and Ors. MANU/DE/0059/1981 : 1982 Cri L.J. 1103 refused police remand. Questioning the same a revision was filed before the High Court of Delhi. The learned Single Judge in the first instance considered whether there was material to make out a case of kidnapping or abduction against Shri Kulkarni and observed that even the abducted persons namely the four diamond merchants do not point an accusing finger against Shri Kulkarni and that at any rate Shri Kulkarni himself has been interrogated in jail for almost seven days by the C.B.I. and nothing has been divulged by him, therefore, it is not desirable to confine him in jail and in that view of the matter he granted him bail. The High Court, however, did not decide the question whether or not after the expiry of the initial period of 15 days a person can still be remanded to police custody by the magistrate before whom he was produced. The said order is challenged in these appeals.

3. The learned Additional Solicitor General appearing for the C.B.I. the appellant contended that the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate erred in not granting police custody and that Dharam Pal's case on which he placed reliance has been wrongly decided. The further contention is that the High Court has erred in granting bail to Shri Kulkarni without deciding the question whether he can be remanded to police custody as prayed for by the C.B.I. Shri Ram Jethmalani, learned Counsel for the respondent accused submitted that the language of Section 167 Cr. PC is clear and that the police custody if at all be granted by the Magistrate should be only during the period of first 15 days from the date of production of the accused before the magistrate and not later and that subsequent custody if any should only be judicial custody and the question of granting police custody after the expiry of first 15 days remand does not arise.

4. Section 167 Cr. PC 1973 after some changes reads as under:

167. Procedure when investigation cannot be completed in twenty- four hours.- (1) Whenever any person is arrested and detained in custody, and it appears that the investigation cannot be completed within the period of twenty- four hours fixed by Section 57, and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well founded, the officer- in- charge of the police station or the police officer making the investigation, he if is not below the rank of sub- inspector, shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Judicial Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall at the same time forward the accused to such Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate to whom an accused person is forwarded under this section may, whether he has or has not jurisdiction to try the case, from time to time, authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as such Magistrate thinks fit, for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole; and if he has no jurisdiction to try the case or commit it for trial, and considers further detention unnecessary, he may order the accused to be forwarded to a Magistrate having such jurisdiction:

Provided that-

(i) ninety days, where the investigation relates to an offence punishable with death, imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of not less than ten years;

(ii) sixty days, where the investigation relates to any other offence., And, on the expiry of the said period of ninety days, or sixty days, as the case may be, the accused person shall be released on bail if he is prepared to and does furnish bail, and every person released on bail under this sub-section shall be deemed to be so released under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII for the purposes of that Chapter;

(b) no Magistrate shall authorise detention in any custody under this section unless the accused is produced before him;

(c) no Magistrate of the second class, not specially empowered in this behalf by the High Court, shall authorise detention in the custody of the police.

Explanation 1 - For the avoidance of doubts, it is hereby declared that, notwithstanding the expiry of the period specified in paragraph (a), the accused shall be so detained in custody so long as he does not furnish bail.

Explanation II.- If any question arises whether an accused person was produced before the Magistrate as required under paragraph (b), the production of the accused person may be proved by his signature on the order authorising detention.

(2A) Notwithstanding anything contained in Sub- section (1) or Sub- section (2), the officer in charge of the police station or the police officer making the investigation, if he is not below the rank of a sub- inspector, may, where a Judicial Magistrate is not available, transmit to the nearest Executive Magistrate, on whom the powers of a Judicial Magistrate or Metropolitan Magistrate have been conferred a copy of the entry in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall, at the same time, forward the accused to such Executive Magistrate, and thereupon such Executive Magistrate may, for reasons to be recorded in writing, authorise the detention of the accused person in such custody, as he may think for a term not exceeding seven days in the aggregate, and, on the expiry of the period of the detention so authorised, the accused person shall be released on bail except where an order for further detention of the accused person has been made by a Magistrate competent to make such order; and, where an order for such further detention is made, the period during which the accused person was detained in custody under the orders made by an Executive Magistrate under this sub- section, shall be taken into account in computing the period specified in paragraph 2(a) of the proviso to Sub- section (2);

Provided that before the expiry of the period aforesaid, the Executive Magistrate shall transmit to the nearest Judicial Magistrate the records of the case together with a copy of the entries in the diary relating to the case which was transmitted to him by the officer in charge of the police station or the police officer making the investigation, as the case may be.

(3) A Magistrate authorising under this section detention in the custody of the police shall record his reasons for so doing.

(4) Any Magistrate other than the Chief Judicial Magistrate making such order shall forward a copy of his order, with his reasons for making it, to the Chief Judicial Magistrate.

(5) If in any case triable by a Magistrate as a summons- case, the investigation is not concluded within a period of six months from the date on which the accused was arrested, the Magistrate shall make an order stopping further investigation into the offence unless the officer making the investigation satisfies the Magistrate that for special reasons and in the interests of justice the continuation of the investigation beyond the period of six months is necessary.

(6) Where any order stopping further investigation into an offence has been made under Sub-section (5), the Sessions Judge may, if he is satisfied, on an application made to him or otherwise, that further investigation into the offence ought to be made, vacate the order made under Sub-section (5) and direct further investigation to be made into the offence subject to such directions with regard to bail and other matters as he may specify.

Before proceeding further it may be necessary to advert to the legislative history of this section. The old Section 167 of 1898 Code provided for the detention of an accused in custody for a term not exceeding 15 days on the whole. It was noted that this was honoured more in the breach than in the observance and that a practice of doubtful legality grew up namely the police used to file an incomplete preliminary charge- sheet and move the court for remand under Section 344 corresponding to the present Section 309 which was not meant for during investigation. Having regard to the fact that there may be genuine cases where investigation might not be completed in 15 days, the Law Commission made certain recommendations to confer power on the Magistrate to extend the period of 15 days detention. These recommendations are noticed in the objects and reasons of the Bill thus:

...At present, Section 167 enables the Magistrate to authorise detention of an accused in custody for a term not exceeding 15 days on the whole. There is a complaint that this provision is honoured more in the breach than in the observance and that the police investigation takes a much longer period in practice. A practice of doubtful legality has grown whereby the police file a "preliminary" or incomplete chargesheet and move the court for remand under Section 344 which is not intended to apply to the stage of investigation. While in some cases the delay in investigation may be due to the fault of the police, it cannot be denied that there may be genuine cases where it may not be practicable to complete the investigation in 15 days. The Commission recommended that the period should be extended to 60 days, but if this is done, 60 days would become the rule and there is no guarantee that the illegal practice referred to above would not continue. It is considered that the most satisfactory solution of the problem would be to confer on the Magistrate the power to extend the period of extension beyond 15 days, whenever he is satisfied that adequate grounds exist for granting such extension....

The Joint Committee, however, with a view to have the desired effect made provision for the release of the accused if investigation is not duly completed in case where accused has been in custody for some period. Sub- sections (5) and (6) relating to offences punishable for imprisonment for two years were inserted and the Magistrate was authorised to stop further investigation and discharge the accused if the investigation could not be completed within six months. By the Cr.PC Amendment Act 1978 proviso (a) to Sub- section (2) of Section 167 has been further amended and the Magistrate is empowered to authorise the detention of accused in custody during investigation for an aggregate period of 90 days in cases relating to major offences and in other cases 60 days. This provision for custody for 90 days intended to remove difficulties which actually arise in completion of the investigation of offences of serious nature. A new Sub-section (2A) also has been inserted empowering the Executive Magistrate to make an order for remand but only for a period not exceeding seven days in the aggregate and in cases where Judicial Magistrate is not available. This provision further lays down that period of detention ordered by such Executive Magistrate should be taken into account in computing the total period specified in Clause (a) of Sub- section (2) of Section 167. Now coming to the object and scope of Section 167 it is well- settled that it is supplementary to Section 57. It is clear from Section 57 that the investigation should be completed in the first instance within 24 hours if not the arrested person should be brought by the police before a magistrate as provided under Section 167. The law does not authorise a police officer to detain an arrested person for more than 24 hours exclusive of the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the magistrate court. Sub- section (1) of Section 167 covers all this procedure and also lays down that the police officer while forwarding the accused to the nearest magistrate should also transmit a copy of the entries in the diary relating to the case. The entries in the diary are meant to afford to the magistrate the necessary information upon which he can take the decision whether the accused should be detained in the custody further or not. It may be noted even at this stage the magistrate can release him on bail if an application is made and if he is satisfied that there are no grounds to remand him to custody but if he is satisfied that further remand is necessary then he should act as provided under Section 167. It is at this stage Sub- section (2) comes into operation which is very much relevant for our purpose. It lays down that the magistrate to whom the accused person is thus forwarded may, whether he has or has not jurisdiction to try the case, from time to time, authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as he thinks fit for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole. If such magistrate has no jurisdiction to try the case or commit it for trial and if he considers further detention unnecessary, he may order the accused to be forwarded to a magistrate having such jurisdiction. The section is clear in its terms. The magistrate under this section can authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as he thinks fit but it should not exceed fifteen days in the whole. Therefore the custody initially should not exceed fifteen days in the whole. The custody can be police custody or judicial custody as the magistrate thinks fit. The words "such custody" and "for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole" are very significant. It is also well- settled now that the period of fifteen days starts running as soon as the accused is produced before the Magistrate.

5. Now comes the proviso inserted by Act no. 45 of 1978 which is of vital importance in deciding the question before us. This proviso comes into operation where the magistrate thinks fit that further detention beyond the period of fifteen days is necessary and it lays down that the magistrate may authorise the detention of the accused person otherwise than in the custody of the police beyond the period of fifteen days. The words "otherwise than in the custody of the police beyond the period of fifteen days" are again very significant.

6. The learned Additional Solicitor General appearing for the C.B.I. contended that a combined reading of Section 167(2) and the proviso therein would make it clear that if for any reason the police custody cannot be obtained during the period of first fifteen days yet a remand to the police custody even later is not precluded and what all that is required is that such police custody in the whole should not exceed fifteen days. According to him there could be cases where a remand to police custody would become absolutely necessary at a later stage even though such an accused is under judicial custody as per the orders of the magistrate passed under the proviso. The learned Additional Solicitor General gave some instances like holding an identification parade or interrogation on the basis of the new material discovered during the investigation. He also submitted that some of the judgments of the High Courts particularly that of the Delhi High Court relied upon by the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate do not lay down the correct position of law in this regard. In Gian Singh v. State (Delhi Administration) MANU/DE/0052/1982 : 1981 Cri.L.J. 100 a learned Single Judge of the High Court held that once the accused is remanded to judicial custody he cannot be sent back again to police custody in connection with or in continuation of the same investigation even though the first period of fifteen days has not exhausted. Again the same learned Judge Justice M.L. Jain in Trilochan Singh v. The State (Delhi Administration) MANU/DE/0248/1981 : 20(1981)DLT20 took the same view. In State (Delhi Administration) v. Dharam Pal and Ors. MANU/DE/0059/1981 : 1982 Cri.L.J. 1103 a Division Bench of the Delhi High Court overruled the learned Single Judge's judgments in Gian Singh's case and Trilochan Singh's case. The Division Bench held that the words "from time to time" occurring in the Section show that several orders can be passed under Section 167(2) and that the nature of the custody can be altered from judicial custody to police custody and vice- versa during the first period of fifteen days mentioned in Section 167(2) of the Code and that after fifteen days the accused could only be kept in judicial custody or any other custody as ordered by the magistrate but not in the custody of the police. In arriving at this conclusion the Division Bench sought support on an earlier decision in State v. Mehar Chand MANU/DE/0102/1967 : 1969 Delhi Law Times 179. In that case the accused had been arrested for an offence of kidnapping and after the expiry of the first period of fifteen days the accused was in judicial custody under Section 344 Cr. PC (old code). At that stage the police found on investigation that an offence of murder also was prima facie made out against the said accused. Then the question arose whether the said accused who was in judicial custody should be sent to the police custody on the basis of the discovery that there was aggravated offence. The magistrate refused to permit the accused to be put in police custody. The same was questioned before the High Court. Hardy, J. held that an accused who is in magisterial custody in one case can be allowed to be remanded to police custody in other case and on the same rule he can be remanded to police custody at a subsequent stage of investigation in the same case when the information discloses his complicity in more serious offences and that on principle, there is no difference at all between the two types of cases. The learned Judge further stated as under:

I see no insuperable difficulty in the way of the police arresting the accused for the second time for the offence for which he is now wanted by them. The accused being already in magisterial custody it is open to the learned Magistrate under Section 167(2) to take the accused out of jail or judicial custody and hand him over to the police for the maximum period of 15 days provided in that Section. All that he is required to do is to satisfy himself that a good case is made out for detaining the accused in police custody in connection with investigation of the case. It may be that the offences for which the accused is now wanted by the police relate to the same case but these are altogether different offences and in a way therefore it is quite legitimate to say that it is a different case in which the complicity of the accused has been discovered and police in order to complete their investigation of that case require that the accused should be associated with that investigation in some way.

The Division Bench in Dharam Pal's case referring to these observations of Hardy, J. observed that "We completely agree with Hardy, J. in coming to the conclusion that the Magistrate has to find out whether there is a good case for grant of police custody," A perusal of the later part of the judgment in Dharam Pal's case would show that the Division Bench referred to these observations in support of the view that the nature of the custody can be altered from judicial custody to police custody or vice- versa during the first period of fifteen days mentioned in Section 167(2) of the Code, but however firmly concluded that after fifteen days the accused could only be in judicial custody or any other custody as ordered by the magistrate but not in police custody. Then there is one more decision of the Delhi High Court in State (Delhi Administration) v. Ravinder Kumar Bhatnagar MANU/DE/0052/1982 : 1982 Cri.L.J. 2366 where a Single Judge after relying on the judgment of the Division Bench in Dharam Pal's case held that the language of Section 167(2) is plain and that words "for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole" would clearly indicate that those fifteen days begin to run immediately after the accused is produced before the magistrate in accordance with Sub- section (1) and the police custody cannot be granted after the lapse of the "first fifteen days". In State of Kerala v. Sadanandan 1984 K.L.T. 747 a Single Judge of the Kerala High Court held that the initial detention of the accused by the magistrate can be only for fifteen days in the whole and it may be either police custody or judicial custody and during the period the magistrate has jurisdiction to convert judicial custody to police custody and vice- versa and the maximum period under which the accused can be so detained is only fifteen days and that after the expiry of fifteen days the proviso comes into operation which expressly refers to police custody and enjoins that there shall be no police custody and judicial custody alone is possible when power is exercised under the proviso. The learned Single Judge stated that in the case before him the accused has already been in police custody for fifteen days and therefore he could not be remanded to police custody either under Section 167 or Section 309 Cr.PC

7. The learned Additional Solicitor General submitted that the observations made by Hardy, J. in Mehar Chand's case would indicate that during the investigation of the same case in which the accused is arrested and is already in custody if more offences committed in the same case come to light there should be no bar to turn over the accused to police custody even after the first period of fifteen days and during the period of ninety days or sixty days in respect of the investigation of the cases mentioned in provisos (a)(i) and (ii) respectively. It may be noted firstly that the Mehar Chand's case was decided in respect of a case arising under the old Code. If we examine the background in enacting the new Section 167(2) and the proviso (a) as well as Section 309 of the new Code it becomes clear that the legislature recognised that such custody namely police, judicial or any other custody like detaining the arrested person in Nari Sadans etc. should be in the whole for fifteen days and the further custody under the proviso to Section 167 or under Section 309 should only be judicial. In Chaganti Satyanarayana and Ors. v. State of Andhra Pradesh MANU/SC/0165/1986 : [1986]2SCR1128 this Court examined the scope of Section 167(2) provisos (a)(i) and (ii) and held that the period of fifteen days, ninety days or sixty days prescribed therein are to be computed from the date of remand of the accused and not from the date of his arrest under Section 57 and that remand to police custody cannot be beyond the period of fifteen days and the further remand must be to judicial custody. Though the point that precisely arose before this Court was whether the period of remand prescribed should be computed from the date of remand or from the date of arrest under Section 57, there are certain observations throwing some light on the scope of the nature of custody after the expiry of the first remand of fifteen days and when the proviso comes into operation. It was observed thus:

As Sub- section (2) of Section 167 as well as proviso (1) of Sub- section (2) of Section 309 relate to the powers of remand of a magistrate, though under different situations, the two provisions call for a harmonious reading insofar as the periods of remand are concerned. It would, therefore, follow that the words "15 days in the while' occurring in Sub- section (2) of Section 167 would be tantamount to a period of "15 days at a time" but subject to the condition that if the accused is to be remanded to police custody the remand should be for such period as is commensurate with the requirements of a case with provision for further extensions for restricted periods, if need be, but in no case should the total period of remand to police custody exceed 15 days. Where an accused is placed in police custody for the maximum period of 15 days allowed under law either pursuant to a single order of remand or to more than one order, when the remand is restricted on each occasion to a lesser number of days, further detention of the accused, if warranted, has to be necessarily to judicial custody and not otherwise. The legislature having provided for an accused being placed under police custody under orders of remand for effective investigation of cases has at the same time taken care to see that the interests of the accused are not jeopardised by his being placed under police custody beyond a total period of 15 days, under any circumstances, irrespective of the gravity of the offence or the serious nature of the case.

These observations make it clear that if an accused is detained in police custody the maximum period during which he can be kept in such custody is only fifteen days either pursuant to a single order or more than one when such orders are for lesser number of days but on the whole such custody cannot be beyond fifteen days and the further remand to facilitate the investigation can only be by detention of the accused in judicial custody.

8. Having regard to the words ' 'in such custody as such Magistrate thinks fit for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole" occurring in Sub- section (2) of Section 167 now the question is whether it can be construed that the police custody, if any, should be within this period of first fifteen days and not later or alternatively in a case if such remand had not been obtained or the number of days of police custody in the first fifteen days are less whether the police can ask subsequently for police custody for full period of fifteen days not availed earlier or for the remaining days during the rest of the periods of ninety days or sixty days covered by the proviso. The decisions mentioned above do not deal with this question precisely except the judgment of the Delhi High Court in Dharam Pal's case. Taking the plain language into consideration particularly the words otherwise than in the custody of the police beyond the period of fifteen days" in the proviso it has to be held that the custody after the expiry of the first fifteen days can only be judicial custody during the rest of the periods of ninety days or sixty days and that police custody if found necessary can be ordered only during the first period of fifteen days. To this extent the view taken in Dharam Pal's case is correct.

9. At this juncture we want to make another aspect clear namely the computation of period of remand. The proviso to Section 167(2) clearly lays down that the total period of detention should not exceed ninety days in cases where the investigation relates to serious offences mentioned therein and sixty days in other cases and if by that time cognizance is not taken on the expiry of the said periods the accused shall be released on bail as mentioned therein. In Chaganti Satyanarayana's case it was held that "It, therefore, stands to reason that the total period of 90 days or 60 days can begin to run from the date of order of remand." Therefore the first period of detention should be computed from the date of order of remand. Section 167(2A) which has been introduced for pragmatic reasons states that if an arrested person is produced before an Executive Magistrate for remand the said Magistrate may authorise the detention of the accused not exceeding seven days in aggregate. It further provides that the period of remand by the Executive Magistrate should also be taken into account for computing the period specified in the proviso i.e., aggregate periods of ninety days or sixty days. Since the Executive Magistrate is empowered to order detention only for seven days in such custody as he thinks fit, he should therefore either release the accused or transmit him to the nearest Judicial Magistrate together with the entries in the diary before the expiry of seven days. The Section also lays down that the Judicial Magistrate who is competent to make further orders of detention, for the purpose of computing the period of detention has to take into consideration the period of detention ordered by the Executive Magistrate. Therefore on a combined reading of Sections 167(2) and (2A) it emerges that the Judicial Magistrate to whom the Executive Magistrate has forwarded the arrested accused can order detention in such custody namely police custody or judicial custody under Section 167(2) for the rest of the first fifteen days after deducting the period of detention ordered by the Executive Magistrate. The detention thereafter could only be in judicial custody. Likewise the remand under Section 309 Cr.PC can be only to judicial custody in terms mentioned therein. This has been concluded by this Court and the language of the section also is clear. Section 309 comes into operation after taking cognizance and not during the period of investigation and the remand under this provision can only be to judicial custody and there cannot be any controversy about the same. (vide Natabar Parida and Ors. v. State of Orissa MANU/SC/0157/1975 : AIR1975SC1465

10. The learned Additional Solicitor General however submitted that in some of the cases of grave crimes it would be impossible for the police to gather all the materials within first fifteen days and if some valuable information is disclosed at a later stage and if police custody is denied the investigation will be hampered and will result in failure of justice. There may be some force in this submission but the purpose of police custody and the approach of the legislature in placing limitations on this are obvious. The proviso to Section 167 is explicit on this aspect. The detention in police custody is generally disfavoured by law. The provisions of law lay down that such detention can be allowed only in special circumstances and that can be only by a remand granted by a magistrate for reasons judicially scrutinised and for such limited purposes as the necessities of the case may require. The scheme of Section 167 is obvious and is intended to protect the accused from the methods which may be adopted by some overzealous and unscrupulous police officers. Article 22(2) of the Constitution of India and Section 57 of Cr. PC give a mandate that every person who is arrested and detained in police custody shall be produced before the nearest magistrate within a period of 24 hours of such arrest excluding the time necessary for the journey from the place of the arrest to the court of the magistrate and no such person shall be detained in the custody beyond the said period without the authority of a magistrate. These two provisions clearly manifest the intention of the law in this regard and therefore it is the magistrate who has to judicially scrutinise circumstances and if satisfied can order the detention of the accused in police custody. Section 167(3) requires that the magistrate should give reasons for authorising the detention in the custody of the police. It can be thus seen that the whole scheme underlying the section is intended to limit the period of police custody. However, taking into account the difficulties which may arise in completion of the investigation of cases of serious nature the legislature added the proviso providing for further detention of the accused for a period of ninety days but in clear terms it is mentioned in the proviso that such detention could only be in the judicial custody. During this period the police are expected to complete the investigation even in serious cases. Likewise within the period of sixty days they are expected to complete the investigation in respect of other offences. The legislature however disfavoured even the prolonged judicial custody during investigation. That is why the proviso lays down that on the expiry of ninety days or sixty days the accused shall be released on bail if he is prepared to and does furnish bail. If as contended by the learned Additional Solicitor General a further interrogation is necessary after the expiry of the period of first fifteen days there is no bar for interrogating the accused who is in judicial custody during the periods of 90 days or 60 days. We are therefore unable to accept this contention.

11. A question may then arise whether a person arrested in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by him during an occurrence can be detained again in police custody in respect of another offence committed by him in the same case and which fact comes to light after the expiry of the period of first fifteen days of his arrest. The learned Additional Solicitor General submitted that as a result of the investigation carried on and the evidence collected by the police the arrested accused may be found to be involved in more serious offences than the one for which he was originally arrested and that in such a case there is no reason as to why the accused who is in magisterial custody should not be turned over to police custody at a subsequent stage of investigation when the information discloses his complicity in more serious offences. We are unable to agree. In one occurrence it may so happen that the accused might have committed several offences and the police may arrest him in connection with one or two offences on the basis of the available information and obtain police custody. If during the investigation his complicity in more sessions offences during the same occurrence is disclosed that does not authorise the police to ask for police custody for a further period after the expiry of the first fifteen days. If that is permitted than the police can go on adding some offence or the other of a serious nature at various stages and seek further detention in police custody repeatedly, this would defeat the very object underlying Section 167. However, we must clarify that this limitation shall not apply to a different occurrence in which complicity of the arrested accused in disclosed. That would be a different transaction and if an accused is in judicial custody in connection with one case and to enable the police to complete their investigation of the other case they can require his detention in police custody for the purpose of associating him with the investigation of the other case. In such a situation he must be for formally arrested in connection with other case and then obtain the order of the magistrate for detention in police custody. The learned Additional Solicitor General however strongly relied on some of the observations made by Hardy, J. in Mehar Chand's case extracted above in support of his contention namely that an arrested accused who is in judicial custody can be turned over to police custody even after the expiry of first fifteen days at a subsequent stage of the investigation in the same case if the information discloses his complicity in more serious offences. We are unable to agree that the mere fact that some more offences alleged to have been committed by the arrested accused in the same case are discovered in the same case would by itself render it to be a different case. All these offences including the so- called serious offences discovered at a later stage arise out of the same- transaction in connection with which the accused was arrested. Therefore there is a marked difference between the two situations. The occurrences constituting two different transactions give rise to two different cases and the exercise of power under Sections 167(1) and (2) should be in consonance with the object underlying the said provision in respect of each of those occurrences which constitute two different cases. Investigation in one specific case cannot be the same as in the other. Arrest and detention in custody in the context of Sections 167(1) and (2) of the Code has to be truly viewed with regard to the investigation of that specific case in which the accused person has been taken into custody. In S. Harsimran Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/PH/0290/1983 a Division Bench of the Punjab and Haryana High Court considered the question whether the limit of police custody exceeding fifteen days as prescribed by Section 167(2) is applicable only to a single case or is attracted to a series of different cases requiring investigation against the same accused and held thus:

We see no inflexible bar against a person in custody with regard to the investigation of a particular offence being either re- arrested for the purpose of the investigation of an altogether different offence. To put it in other words, there is no insurmountable hurdle in the conversion of judicial custody into police custody by an order of the Magistrate under Section 167(2) of the Code for investigating another offence. Therefore, a re- arrest or second arrest in a different case is not necessarily beyond the ken of law.

This view of the Division Bench of the Punjab & Haryana High Court appears to be practicable and also conforms to Section 167. We may, however, like to make it explicit that such re- arrest or second arrest and seeking police custody after the expiry of the period of first fifteen days should be with regard to the investigation of a different case other than the specific one in respect of which the accused is already in custody. A literal construction of Section 167(2) to the effect that a fresh remand for police custody of a person already in judicial custody during investigation of a specific case cannot under any circumstances be issued, would seriously hamper the very investigation of the other case the importance of which needs no special emphasis. The procedural law is meant to further the ends of justice and not to frustrate the same. It is an accepted rule that an interpretation which furthers the ends of justice should be preferred. It is true that the police custody is not the be- all and end- all of the whole investigation but yet it is one of its primary requisites particularly in the investigation of serious and heinous crimes. The legislature also noticed this and permitted limited police custody. The period of first fifteen days should naturally apply in respect of the investigation of that specific case for which the accused is held in custody. But such custody cannot further held to be a bar for invoking a fresh remand to such custody like police custody in respect of an altogether different case involving the same accused.

12. As the points considered above have an important bearing in discharge of the day- to- day magisterial powers contemplated under Section 167(2), we think it appropriate to sum up briefly our conclusions as under:

13. Whenever any person is arrested under Section 57 Cr. PC he should be produced before the nearest Magistrate within 24 hours as mentioned therein. Such Magistrate may or may not have jurisdiction to try the case. If Judicial Magistrate is not available, the police officer may transmit the arrested accused to the nearest Executive Magistrate on whom the judicial powers have been conferred. The Judicial Magistrate can in the first instance authorise the detention of the accused in such custody i.e., either police or judicial from time time but the total period of detention cannot exceed fifteen days in the whole. Within this period of fifteen days there can be more than one order changing the nature of such custody either from police to judicial or vice- versa. If the arrested accused is produced before the Executive Magistrate he is empowered to authorise the detention in such custody either police or judicial only for a week, in the same manner namely by one or more orders but after one week he should transmit him to the nearest Judicial Magistrate alongwith the records. When the arrested accused is so transmitted the Judicial Magistrate, for the remaining period, that is to say excluding one week or the number of days of detention ordered by the Executive Magistrate, may authorise further detention within that period of first fifteen days to such custody either police or judicial. After the expiry of the first period of fifteen days the further remand during the period of investigation - can only be in judicial custody. There can not be any detention in the police custody after the expiry of first fifteen days even in a case where some more offences either serious or otherwise committed by him in the same transaction come to light at a later stage. But this bar does not apply if the same arrested accused is involved in a different case arising out of a different transaction. Even if he is in judicial custody in connection with the investigation of the earlier - case he can formally be arrested regarding his involvement in the different case and associate him with the investigation of that other case and the Magistrate can act as provided under Section 167(2) and the proviso and can remand him to such custody as mentioned therein during the first period of fifteen days and thereafter in accordance with the proviso as discussed above. If the investigation is not completed within the period of ninety days or sixty days then the accused has to be released on bail as provided under the proviso to Section 167(2). The period of ninety days or sixty days has to be computed from the date of detention as per the orders of the Magistrate and not from the date of arrest by the police. Consequently the first period of fifteen days mentioned in Section 167(2) has to be computed from the date of such detention and after the expiry of the period of first fifteen days it should be only judicial custody.

14. We may, however, in the end clarify that the position of law stated above applies to Section 167 as it stands in the Code. If there are any State amendments enlarging the periods of detention, different considerations may arise on the basis of the language employed in those amendments.

15. The appeals are accordingly dismissed.

MANU/SC/0063/1985

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Contempt Petition No. 4998 of 1983 in Writ Petition (Criminal) No. 6607 of 1981

Decided On: 25.04.1985

Bhagwant Singh Vs. Commissioner of Police and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.N. Sen, D.P. Madon and P.N. Bhagwati, JJ.

JUDGMENT

1. The short question that arises for consideration in this writ petition is whether in a case where First Information Report is lodged and after completion of investigation initiated on the basis of the First Information Report, the police submits a report that no offence appears to have been committed, the Magistrate can accept the report and drop the proceeding without issuing notice to the first informant or to the injured or in case the incident has resulted in death, to the relatives of the deceased. It is not necessary to state the facts giving rise to this writ petition, because so far as this writ petition is concerned, we have already directed by our order dated 28 November, 1983 that before any final order is passed on the report of the Central Bureau of Investigation by the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, the petitioner who is the father of the unfortunate Gurinder Kaur should be heard. Gurinder Kaur died as a result of burns received by her and allegedly she was burnt by her husband and his parents on account of failure to satisfy their demand for dowry. The circumstances in which Gurinder Kaur met with her unnatural death were investigated by the Central Bureau of Investigation and a report was filed by the Central Bureau of Investigation in the court of the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate on 11 August, 1982 stating that in their opinion in respect of the unnatural death of Gurinder Kaur no offence appeared to have been committed. The petitioner was however not aware that such a report had been submitted by the Central Bureau of Investigation and he, therefore, brought an application for initiating proceedings for contempt against the Central Bureau of Investigation on the ground that the Central Bureau of Investigation had not completed their investigation and submitted their report within the period stipulated by the Court by its earlier order dated 6 May, 1983. It was in reply to this application for initiation of contempt proceedings that the Central Bureau of Investigation intimated that they had already filed their report in the Court of the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate on 11 August, 1982 and the report was pending consideration by the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate. When this fact was brought to our notice we immediately passed an order dated 28 November, 1983 directing that the petitioner should be heard before any final order was passed on the report. There was no objection on the part of the respondents to the making of this order, but since the question whether incases of this kind, the first informant or any relative of the deceased or any other aggrieved person is entitled to be heard at the time of consideration of the report by the Magistrate and whether the Magistrate is bound to issue notice to any such person, is a question of general importance which is likely to arise frequently in criminal proceedings, we thought that it would be desirable to finally settle this question so as to afford guidance to the courts of magistrates all over the country and we accordingly proceeded to hear the arguments on both sides in regard to this question.

2. It is necessary to refer to a few provisions of the Code of Criminal procedure, 1973 in order to arrive at a proper determination of this question. Chapter XII of the CrPC, 1973 deals with information to the police and their powers to investigate. Sub- section (1) of Section 154 provides that every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence, if given orally to an officer- in- charge of a police station, shall be reduced in writing by him or under his direction and be read over to the informant and every such information, whether given in writing or reduced to writing, shall be signed by the person giving it and Sub- section (2) of that section requires that a copy of such information shall be given forthwith, free of cost, to the informant. Section 156 Sub- section (1) vests in the officer- in- charge of a police station the power to investigate any cognizable case without the order of a magistrate and Sub- section (3) of that section authorises the magistrate empowered under Section 190 to order an investigation as mentioned in Sub- section (1) of that section. Section 157 Sub- section (1) lays down that if, from information received or otherwise an officer in charge of a police station has reason to suspect the commission of an offence which he is empowered under Section 156 to investigate, he shall forthwith send a report of the same to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of such offence upon a police report and shall proceed to the spot to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case and, if necessary, to take measures for the discovery and arrest of the offender. But there are of the First Information Report lodged by him. No sooner he lodges the First Information Report, a copy of it has to be supplied to him, free of cost, under Sub- section (2) of Section 154. If, two provisos to this sub- section. Proviso (b) enacts that if it appears to the officer- in- charge of a police station that there is no sufficient ground for entering on an investigation, he shall not investigate the case, but in such a case, Sub- section (2) of Section 157 requires that the officer shall forthwith notify to the informant the fact that he will not investigate the case or cause it to be investigated. What the officer in charge of a police station is required to do on completion of the investigation is set out in Section 173. Sub- section (2)(i) of Section 173 provides that as soon as investigation is completed, the officer in charge of a police station shall forward to the magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence on a police report, a report in the form prescribed by the State Government setting out various particulars including whether, in the opinion of the officer, as offence appears to have been committed and if so, by whom. Sub- section (2)(ii) of Section 173 states that the officer shall also communicate, in such manner as may be prescribed by the State Government, the action taken by him to the person, if any, by whom the information relating to the commission of the offence was first given. Section 190 Sub- section (1) then proceeds to enact that any magistrate of the first class and any magistrate of the second class specially empowered in this behalf under Sub- section (2) may take cognizance of any offence : (a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence or (b) upon a police report of such facts or (c) upon information received from any person other than a police officer, or upon his own knowledge, that such offence has been committed. We are concerned in this case only with Clause (b), because the question we are examining here is whether the magistrate is bound to issue notice to the first informant or to the injured or to any relative of the deceased when he is considering the police report submitted under Section 173 Sub- section (2).

3. It will be seen from the provisions to which we have referred in the preceding paragraph that when an informant lodges the First Information Report with the officer- in- charge of a police station, he does not fade away with the lodging of the First Information Report. He is very much concerned with what action is initiated by the officer in charge of the police station on the basis of the First Information Report lodged by him on sooner he lodges the First Information Report, a copy of it has to be supplied him, free of cost, under Sub- section (2) of Section 154. if notwithstanding the First Information Report, the officer- in- charge of a police station decides not to investigate the case on the view that there is no sufficient ground for entering on an investigation, he is required under Sub- section (2) of Section 157 to notify to the informant the fact that he is not going to investigate the case because it to be investigated. Then again, the officer in charge of a police station is obligated under Sub- section (2)(ii) of Section 173 to communicate the action taken by him to the informant and the report forwarded by him to the magistrate under Sub- section (2)(i) has therefore to be supplied by him to the informant. The question immediately arises as to why action taken by the officer in charge of a police station on the First Information Report is required to be communicated and the report forwarded to the Magistrate under Sub-section (2)(i) of Section 173 required to be supplied to the informant. Obviously, the reason is that the informant who sets the machinery of investigation into motion by filing the First Information Report must know what is the result of the investigation initiated on the basis of the First Information Report, The informant having taken the initiative in lodging the First Information Report with a view to initiating investigation by the police for the purpose of ascertaining whether any offence has been committed and, if so, by whom, is vitally interested in the result of the investigation and hence the law requires that the action taken by the officer- in- charge of a police station on the First Information Report should be communicated to him and the report forwarded by such officer to the Magistrate under Sub- section (2)(i) of Section 173 should also be supplied to him.

4. Now, when the report forwarded by the officer- in charge of a police station to the Magistrate under Sub- section (2)(i) of Section 173 comes up for consideration by the Magistrate, one of two different situation may arise, The report may conclude that an offence appears to have been committed by a particular person or persons and in such a case, the Magistrate may do one of three things : (1) he may accept the report and take cognizance of the offence and issue process or (2) he may disagree with the report and drop the proceeding or (3) he may direct further investigation under Sub- section (3) of Section 156 and require the police to make a further report. The report may on the other hand state that, in the opinion of the police, no offence appears to have been committed and where such a report has been made, the Magistrate again has an option to adopt one of three courses : (1) he may accept the report and drop the proceeding or (2) he may disagree with the report and taking the view that there is sufficient ground for proceeding further, take cognizance of the offence and issue process or (3) he may direct further investigation to be made by the police under Sub- section (3) of Section 156.

Where, in either of these two situations, the Magistrate decides to take cognizance of the offence and to issue process, the informant is not prejudicially affected nor is the injured or in case of death, any relative of the deceased aggrieved, because cognizance of the offence is taken by the Magistrate and it is decided by the Magistrate that the case shall proceed. But if the Magistrate decides that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding further and drops the proceeding or takes the view that though there is sufficient ground for proceeding against some, there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against others mentioned in the First Information Report, the informant would certainly be prejudiced because the First Information Report lodged by him would have failed of its purpose, wholly or in part.

Moreover, when the interest of the informant in prompt and effective action being taken on the First Information Report lodged by him is clearly recognised by the provisions contained in Sub-section (2) of Section 154, Sub- section (2) of Section 157 and Sub- section (2)(ii) of Section 173, it must be presumed that the informant would equally be interested in seeing that the Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence and issues process, because that would be culmination of the First Information Report lodged by him. There can, therefore, be no doubt that when, on a consideration of the report made by the officer in charge of a police station under Sub- section (2)(i) of Section 173, the Magistrate is not inclined to take cognizance of the offence and issue process, the informant must be given an opportunity of being heard so that he can make his submissions to persuade the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence and issue process. We are accordingly of the view that in a case where the magistrate to whom a report is forwarded under Sub- section (2)(i) of Section 173 decides not to take cognizance of the offence and to drop the proceeding or takes the view that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against some of the persons mentioned in the First Information Report, the magistrate must give notice to the informant and provide him an opportunity to be heard at the time of consideration of the report. It was urged before us on behalf of the respondents that if in such a case notice is required to be given to the informant, it might result in unnecessary delay on account of the difficulty of effecting service of the notice on the informant. But we do not think this can be regarded as a valid objection against the view we are taking, because in any case the action taken by the police on the First Information Report has to be communicated to the informant and a copy of the report has to be supplied to him under Sub- section (2)(i) of Section 173 if that be so, we do not see any reason why it should be difficult to serve notice of the consideration of the report on the informant. Moreover, in any event, the difficulty of service of notice on the informant cannot possibly provide any justification for depriving the informant of the opportunity of being heard at the time when the report is considered by the Magistrate.

5. The position may however, be a little different when we consider the question whether the injured person or a relative of the deceased, who is not the informant, is entitled to notice when the report comes up for consideration by the Magistrate. We cannot spell out either from the provisions of the Code of Criminal procedure, 1973 or from the principles of natural justice, any obligation on the Magistrate to issue notice to the injured person or to a relative of the deceased for providing such person an opportunity to be heard at the time of consideration of the report, unless such person is the informant who has lodged the First Information Report. But even if such person is not entitled to notice from the Magistrate, he can appear before the Magistrate and make his submissions when the report is considered by the Magistrate for the purpose of deciding what action he should take on the report. The injured person or any relative of the deceased, though not entitled to notice from the Magistrate, has locus to appear before the Magistrate at the time of consideration of the report, if he otherwise comes to know that the report is going to be considered by the Magistrate and if he wants to make his submissions in regard to the report, the Magistrate is bound to hear him. We may also observe that even though the Magistrate is not bound to give notice of the hearing fixed for consideration of the report to the injured person or to any relative of the deceased, he may, in the exercise of his discretion, if he so thinks fit, give such notice to the injured person or to any particular relative of or relative the deceased, but not giving of such notice will not have any invalidating effect on the order which may be made by the Magistrate on a consideration of the report.

6. This is our view in regard to the question which has arisen for consideration before us. Since the question is one of general importance, we would direct that copies of this judgment shall be sent to the High Courts in all the States so that the High Courts may in their turn circulate this judgment amongst the Magistrates within their respective jurisdiction.

MANU/RH/0023/1987

IN THE HIGH COURT OF RAJASTHAN (JAIPUR BENCH)

FULL BENCH

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 309 of 1986 in Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 292 of 1978

Decided On: 05.12.1986

Habu Vs. State of Rajasthan

Back to Section 173 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

V.S. Dave, I.S. Israni and Mohini Kapoor, JJ.

JUDGMENT

V.S. Dave, J.

1. This larger Bench has been constituted by the orders of the Chief Justice, dt. July 3, 1986, to answer a question referred to larger Bench by our brother Hon'ble G. K. Sharma, J. vide his order of reference, dated May 28, 1986 wherein he has framed the following question :

"Whether the judgment given in absence of the appellant or his counsel but the case decided on merits, can be re- called by the Court in its inherent powers under Section 482, Cr.P.C."

2. The petitioner, Habu, had filed a revision petition in this Court in the year 1978 challenging his conviction and sentence. This revision- petition was admitted on Oct. 25, 1978, and was ordered to be heard in due course on May 26, 1979. Thereafter it came up for hearing on Jan. 11, 1985 before Hon'ble Sharma, J. The accused petitioner who was on bail neither appeared in person npr his counsel was present and Hon'ble Sharma, J. after hearing the learned Public Prosecutor dismissed the revision- petition on merits. The petitioner thereafter moved an application on Mar. 14, 1986 under Section 482, CnP.C. wherein it was prayed by him that he had engaged a lawyer Shri Manak Chand Jain who did not inform him of the date of hearing and as such he himself also did not appear and made arguments on his behalf. It was a surprise to him when a warrant of arrest came and he was arrested, then he learnt that his revision petition has been dismissed. He wrote a letter to his counsel but failed to get any reply; hence he engaged another lawyer to find out the position and moved this application after more than a year of the passing of the judgment. This application was heard by Hon'ble Sharma, J. who passed the order of reference. He stated in his judgment, "the case of Dhanna, (MANU/RH/0034/1963 : AIR 1963 Raj 104) decided by Hon'ble Bhargava, J. (C.B.) has been referred by Hon'ble G. M. Lodha, J. and he has tried to distinguish it. This case is identical to the present case and I perfectly agree with the principle laid down by Hon'ble Bhargava, J. but Hon'ble Lodha, J. (G.M.) in Jacob's case 1986 Raj LR 506 had different view, not agreeing with the views of Hon'ble Bhargava, J., in case of Dhanna v. State (MANU/RH/0034/1963 : AIR 1963 Raj 104)".

3. Before the reference came up for hearing we thought it proper to issue a general notice inviting assistance of learned members of the Bar to assist us as intervenors because in our opinion the matter was of general interest and importance. Several learned counsel whose names have been mentioned above intervened and addressed us.

4. Shri Satish Chandra, who was counsel in C. Jacob's case decided by Hon'ble Lodha G. M. J. to which reference has been made by Hon'ble Sharma, J. in his order of reference, raised preliminary objections and submitted that the order of reference itself is bad and there is no necessity to answer the question referred to the Full Bench. His submission is that Hon'ble G. K. Sharma, J. in his order of reference has already agreed with the principle laid down by Hon'ble Bhargava, J. and has further held that "in the present case the revision petition was, no doubt, disposed of with the assistance of the learned Public Prosecutor, but keeping in view that more assistance would have been given by the learned counsel for the petitioner also, I am of the opinion that in view of Shaukin Singh's case the petition under Section 482, Cr.P.C. can be accepted". Thus, when he has already arrived at a conclusion and has agreed with the view taken by Hon'ble Bhargava, J. and also has arrived at a finding in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Shaukin Singh's case there could not have been any reference as there is a definite expression of opinion. He submits that once a Court arrives at a conclusion that the petition under Section 462, Cr.P.C. can be accepted in view of decision in Shaukin Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, MANU/SC/0223/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 1698 no jurisdiction vested in him to refer the matter to a larger Bench. It is further submitted that the reference is wholly uncalled for as he has arrived at further finding that the case of Dhanna v. State of Rajasthan, MANU/RH/0034/1963 : AIR 1963 Raj 104, is more or less similar to the present case.

5. His another objection about maintainability of the reference is that from the language of the question framed by learned Judge is such which does not include the absence of both, i.e., the appellant and his counsel, as the learned Judge has used the word 'or' in the question instead of 'and', therefore, the learned Judge contemplates a position where absence is of the appellant or his counsel which means absence of either of them or presence of only one of them and such a situation having not been the subject- matter of decision in Dhanna's or Jacob's case, the question framed cannot be answered in vacuum. He, therefore, submitted that because of these preliminary objections, point, referred to, need not be answered.

6. We have given our thoughtful consideration to the preliminary objections. In the instant case the accused who filed the revision petition in the year 1978 and was on bail since then. His revision petition was dismissed by the learned single Judge vide his order dated January 11, 1985, and his sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200/- , in default of payment of fine two months' simple imprisonment was maintained. Compliance of this order was issued by the High Court on Jan. 11, 1985. Thereafter the accused was arrested, in pursuance of the warrants issued by the trial Court, for custody of the accused- petitioner to serve out the remaining sentence, as he had also been in custody for about a month during trial and in between the period his appeal was dismissed by appellate Court and his bail was granted by this Court in revision- petition. The accused when learnt that the revision- petition has been dismissed filed an application for recalling of the judgment on Mar. 11, 1986, on which this reference has been made to Full Bench on May 28, 1986. It has been listed before us after obtaining orders from Hon'ble Chief Justice on July 21, 1986, when the case came before us, we were informed that the accused has served out the sentence passed against him. This is an extremely regrettable situation that a poor rustic villager has not been able to get justice for want of timely proper legal assistance. We are called upon to do this academic exercise, which, of course, is of great importance, in a case, where we are unable to provide real justice to the man who knocked the doors of this Court in expectation of justice. Hon'ble Sharma, J. in his order of reference though opined that he is of the opinion that in view of Shaukin Singh's case (MANU/SC/0223/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 1698) petition under Section 482, Cr.P.C. can be accepted but it appears that no application was moved before him for suspending the sentence of the accused or to release him on interim bail under Section 482, Cr.P.C. itself till the Full Bench answers the reference and he too did not do so suo motu. I am at a loss to understand when his Lordship Hon'ble Sharma, J. took the pains of dictating judgment during summer vacations got it delivered through one of us who was vacation Judge on May 28, 1986, then why it took one month in reaching the file from the Court to section and then was placed before Hon'ble Chief Justice on July 3, 1986, why no efforts were made for getting the case listed earlier, and why it was not brought to the knowledge either of the Chief Justice or before us when we fixed the date and told the Deputy Registrar to list this case on July 21, 1986, that the accused is in jail. We expect from the registry that the record must disclose whether the accused is in jail or not, when it is placed before the Court. It must appear from the title cover. Thus in charge of stamp reporting must ensure that in the cause title as well as on the file cover it must be shown as to what is the position of the accused at the time when the case is presented. Had the Registry in this case taken proper care to see that there is mention that the accused is in jail or had the learned counsel brought the fact to the notice of Hon'ble Sharma, J., possibly the accused would have been benefited of being on interim bail during the pendency. The draft of the entire miscellaneous application only shows one line in para 7, "that when the accused has been arrested, then he could know that his case has been dismissed." Besides this there is not a word in the entire record of the case as to since what date the accused is in jail, in which jail and on what date he had surrendered. We find an affidavit filed by the accused sworn in Jaipur on Mar. 7, 1986 where he has accepted the correctness of the facts mentioned in application, dt. Mar. 11, 1986 which has been presented on Mar. 3, 1986. We are at a loss to understand when an application has been typed and drafted on March 11, 1986 how it could be sworn before the Oath Commissioner on Mar. 7, 1986. We asked the learned counsel for the petitioner, Shri Kasliwal, to explain the anomaly and the circumstances in which the proper facts have not been placed before the Court and which has resulted in making a false record in this case. Mr. Kasliwal thereupon filed an application signed by Shri Pradeep Chaudhary the learned counsel who had brought the case to him from Ajmer. According to this application the accused was arrested on Feb. 17, 1986 and has been released on July 16, 1986 having served out the entire sentence awarded to him by this Court. He has also stated in the application that he got the affidavit verified on Mar. 7, 1986 by Oath Commissioner at Jaipur identifying the accused who was already in Central Jail, Ajmer and as there were typing errors one page was got re- typed on Mar. 11, 1986, and signature of Oath Commissioner taken. He has submitted that these mistakes have been committed by him as he is a new entrant to the Bar and was not knowing the procedure. He has expressed his regrets and has prayed that looking to his inexperience and future in the profession he may be excused. It is unfortunate that due to the negligence and the illegal procedure followed by the learned counsel the accused has served out the sentence and the facts could not be properly placed on the record. The manner in which the affidavit has been filed and has been got sworn in is unknown to the fair practice and the law concerning swearing in of the affidavits. Neither the Oath Commissioner nor the learned counsel has acted in accordance with law and in fact it amounts to making a false record. However, looking to the extreme youth of the learned counsel and that the Oath Commissioner is also in the evening of his life, we refrain from ordering the prosecution or reference of the matter to the Bar Council suo motu but sound a note of warning and express our strong displeasure on their conduct.

7. Coming to the preliminary objection it is worthwhile to reproduce Rule 59 of the High Court Rules which reads as under:

"Rule 59. Reference of a case to a larger Bench- - The Chief Justice may constitute a Bench of two or more Judges to decide a case or any question or questions of law formulated by a Bench hearing a case. In the latter even the decision of such Bench on the questions so formulated shall be returned to the Bench hearing the case and that Bench shall follow that decision on such question or questions and dispose of the case after deciding the remaining questions, if any, arising therein."

8. On a plain reading of the aforesaid rule it is obvious that this bench is called upon to determine only the question formulated by Hon'ble S. Sharma, J. We do not find any other rule in the High Court rules which gives power to Hon'ble the Chief Justice to constitute a Bench of two or more Judges for deciding a case or any question referred to. The argument of the learned counsel is that reference could not be made to this Bench as the learned Judge himself has agreed with one of the views taken by this Court and once he was in agreement the reference was incompetent. We are unable to accept this contention because despite the fact that learned Judge accepted the view in Shaukin's case (MANU/SC/0223/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 1698) yet he had a right to refer the matter to Hon'ble the Chief Justice for referring it to Full Bench, It is for the Full Bench to consider thereafter whether the question framed has to be answered in affirmative or negative or not to answer at all. It is true that the scope of the Full Bench is only to the extent the rule provides, as has been held by the Full Bench of this Court in State of Rajasthan v. Shamlal, MANU/RH/0068/1960 : AIR 1960 Raj 256, where this Court held :

"It appears to me, therefore, that Rule 59 cannot be exhaustive of the powers which the Chief Justice must process in regulating the functioning of the Court to constitute appropriate Benches for the decision of such questions which may, from time to time, necessarily arise."

Since Hon'ble Sarjoo Prasad, J. who was then Chief Justice was himself presiding over the Bench he further held as under

"Since I have the honour of presiding myself over this Special Bench constituted for the purpose, I think that there can be no valid objection to my enlarging the scope of the enquiry in the present case, and formulating the auxiliary question in the manner that I have done, so that this Special Bench of three Judges may conveniently address itself to this important question of law bearing on the interpretation of Article 295 of the Constitution, and the decision given by this Court may be binding as an authority in future."

9. The word 'case' in Rule 59 again came up for consideration before the Division Bench of this Court in Umrao Singh Dhabariya v. Yashwant Singh Nagar, MANU/RH/0032/1970 : AIR 1970 Raj 134. This Court held as under :

"Rule 59 of the High Court Rules for Rajasthan contemplates a reference to a larger Bench to decide a case or any question or questions of law formulated by a Bench. The word 'case' may be used in a narrow sense to imply the whole case or in a wider sense to connote a part of the case or to any state of facts requiring judicial determination. If the wider view is adopted, the decision on issue by the single Judge before the reference to a larger Bench remains a case finally decided and required no reopening and the larger Bench need only decide the controversy remaining alive at the time of the reference. If, on the other hand, a narrower view is adopted, then evidently the Bench has to apply its mind to all the controversies, arising in the case including those earlier decided.

The Court felt inclined to adopt the narrow view of the word 'case' in the rule and to hold that a larger Bench should decide the case as a whole including the controversy already decided by the single Judges."

Reading' the rule coupled with the aforementioned two cases we are of the opinion that nothing prevents us from answering the question referred to us by the learned single Judge despite the facts that he has already agreed with one of the views.

10. The another objection is that there is no controversy between Shaukin Singh's case (MANU/SC/0223/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 1698) and Dhanna's case (MANU/RH/0034/1963 : AIR 1963 Raj 104) and, therefore, the reference is incompetent. We will consider this argument while considering the merits of the reference as the question whether there is any controversy or there is difference of opinion can only be answered after we go through both the cases and in light of the arguments advanced before us by various learned counsel. Regarding another objection about the maintainability of the reference for using the word 'or' suffice it to say that in the facts and circumstances in which the reference has been made neither the appellant nor his counsel was present and obviously the word 'and' can be read instead of the word 'or' as the question which has been referred to us relates to those cases where a case has been decided on merits in the absence of the party and/or counsel representing the party. There is no substance in this argument and we overrule the preliminary objections and proceed to examine the points referred to us, namely:

"Whether the judgment given in the absence of the appellant or his counsel, but the case decided on merits, can be re- called by the Court in its inherent powers under Section 482, Cr.P.C."

11. The aforesaid question has been raised in view of the previsions contained in Section 362 Cr.P.C. which corresponds to Section 369 of the old Cr.P.C. Section 362, Cr.P.C. reads as under:-

"Section 362, Cr.P.C. Court not to alter judgment.- - Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, no Court, when it has signed its judgment or final order disposing of a case, shall alter or review the same except to correct a clerical or arithmetical error."

12. A plain reading of the aforesaid section puts a complete bar for altering or reviewing of judgment or a final order on merits and the only power given to the Court is that it can correct a clerical or arithmetical error. But the question posed before us is whether in these circumstances where the judgment or the final order has been passed without affording an opportunity of being heard to the accused- appellant.

13. Shri S. C. Agarwal submitted that in an application under Section 482, Cr.P.C. this Court has ample powers to re- call its judgment as recalling is not a bar under Section 362, Cr.P.C. He submits that the provisions of Section 482, Cr.P.C. are wide enough to meet any eventuality and if the Court is satisfied that injustice has been done to a person it can always recall its judgment in order to secure the ends of justice. It is submitted that the ban imposed under Section 362, Cr.P.C. is about reviewing or altering the judgment, i.e., interfering with the findings which had been given in the judgment but when it is re- called it means complete abrogation as if there is no judgment at all and, therefore, this Court has to make a distinction between review, alter and re-call. He submits that it is mandatory to give an opportunity of hearing to an accused person in the Court and he should not be condemned unheard. He referred to proviso (b) to Sub- section (1) of Section 384, Cr.P.C. and submitted that no appeal can be dismissed except after giving the appellant a reasonable opportunity of being heard and this means that the presence of the appellant or his counsel is a condition precedent. He submits that if Section 362, Cr.P.C. is given a narrow connotation, then it will make the provisions of Section 384, Cr.P.C. redundant. He referred to a decision reported in T. Somu Naidu, MANU/TN/0350/1923 : AIR 1924 Mad 640 where the Court re- called the earlier judgment and directed the case to be heard afresh. This case came up on a reference made by learned single Judge and a similar question was raised as in the instant case. Their Lordships after considering the various authorities held as under:

"that in exceptional circumstances the judgment has to be re- called since it is either void ab initio or is otherwise null and void. It was held that sound judicial view is that reasonable opportunity for the accused to be heard is essential condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction under Section 439, Cr.P.C. when the Court is considering the question of enhancing the punishment inflicted on him. The Court further held that where the condition laid down by law as precedent and requisite to the bearing of a case are not observed the case has to be re- heard and it does not amount to review or revising the order."

14. Reference was then made to Muhammad Sadiq v. The Crown AIR 1925 Lah 355 where the scope of Section 561(A) of the then Cr.P.C. which corresponds to Section 482, Cr.P.C. was considered. It was held that "where an appeal has been dismissed without the appellant or his pleader being given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same, the order refusing the appeal must be held to have been passed without jurisdiction and the Court has inherent power to make an order that the appeal should be re- heard after giving the appellant or his counsel a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same." In this case their Lordships considered the various cases before coming to the conclusion that the Court has a power to rehearing the case. Reference was then made to Emperor v. Shivadatt (: (MANU/OU/0012/1928 : AIR 1928 Oudh 402 : 1928) 111 Ind Cas 573) wherein it has held as under :

"Where owing to counsel's carelessness in not appearing in the Court at the time when a case is called on for hearing, his client's case goes unrepresented and an ex parte order is passed, the High Court has jurisdiction under Section 561A of the Cr.P.C. to entertain an application to re-hear the matter, if, in its discretion, it considers, it necessary to do so in order to secure the ends of justice."

15. Reference was then made to Sangam Lal v. Rent Control and Eviction Officer, Allahabad, MANU/UP/0078/1966 : AIR 1966 All 221 a Full Bench decision wherein interpretation to the High Court Rules was given and it was held as under :

"There is power of review both in cases where judgment has been delivered but not signed and cases in which judgment has been delivered, signed and sealed. In the former case, the power to alter or amend or even to change completely is unlimited provided notice is given to the parties and they are heard before the proposed change is made, while in the latter case the power is limited and review is permitted only on very narrow grounds. Hence a judgment which has been orally dictated in open Court can be completely changed before it is signed and sealed provided notice is given to all parties concerned and they are heard before the change is made".

In our opinion this judgment has no bearing on the facts of this case as the point involved therein was absolutely different. The Court was only considering whether a judgment which has been delivered in open Court but not signed can be changed. Hence as mentioned above this case is neither applicable on facts nor on law. Reference was then made to Swarth Mahto v. Dharmdeo Narain Singh, MANU/SC/0272/1972 : AIR 1972 SC 1300 which is a case of improper publication of the cause- list where neither the name of the respondent nor his advocates were properly mentioned. In this case in Patna High Court when an appeal against acquittal came up for hearing after 2 1/2 years after issuance of notice neither the name of the accused- respondent nor his advocate appeared in the cause- list and the State appeal was allowed ex parte. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that "when the names of the accused- respondent and his advocate did not appear in the causelist resulting in conviction of the accused without hearing his counsel it could not be said that the accused was given reasonable opportunity of hearing and the application filed by him for re- hearing of appeal afresh by the High Court was allowed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court".

16. Reliance was then placed on Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal v. Mohan Singh, MANU/SC/0223/1974 : (1975) 3 SCC 706 : (AIR 1975 SC 1002) wherein their Lordships held as under :

"S. 561- A preserves the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as it deems fit to prevent abuse of the process of the Court or to secure the ends of justice and the High Court must therefore exercise its inherent powers having regard to the situation prevailing at the particular point of time when its inherent jurisdiction is sought to be invoked."

17. Reference was made to Galos Hirad v. The King AIR 1944 PC 93. In the aforesaid case their Lordships of the Privy Council were considering the scope of Poor Persons Defence Ordinance and were further considering whether an appeal decided in the absence of a lawyer should be re-heard or not. Their Lordships held as under :

"The importance of persons accused of a serious crime having the advantage of counsel to assist them before the Courts cannot be doubted by anybody who remembers the long struggle which took place in this country and which ultimately resulted in such persons having the right to be represented by counsel; see Holdworth History of English Law, Vol. 9, p. 226, et. seq. This is a much stronger case. Just as a conviction following a trial cannot stand if there has been a refusal to hear the counsel for the accused so it seems to their Lordships, an appeal cannot stand where there has been a refusal to adjourn an appeal in which the appellant was entitled as of right to be heard by a counsel assigned to him by the Govt. who was unable, without any default on his part to reach the Court in time to conduct the appeal. The result is that the appeal to the Protectorate Court of Appeal which appears to have been properly lodged has not been effectively heard, The present appeal must therefore be allowed. Steps must be taken to restore the appeal for hearing either with Mr. Manilal or some other advocate properly assigned to the appellants under circumstances which will enable him to conduct the appeal. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly".

18. Reference then was made to Ganesharam v. State of Raj. MANU/RH/0081/1968 where at the time of disposal of the main case provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act were not brought to the notice of the Court and the same were brought to the notice by way of an application under Section 561- A Cr.P.C. His Lordship Hon'bte Tyagi held as under :

"S. 561- A Cr.P.C. envisages three circumstances in which the Court can exercise that power, namely, when it is necessary (1) for securing the ends of justice, (2) for preventing abuse of the process of Court, and (3) to give effect to any order under this Code.

It is now well settled that this section doesn't confer any power on the High Court. It only saves such inherent power which the Court possessed before the Cr.P.C. was enacted. If such a power is so included it can be exercised for the purposes mentioned in the Section and it would be a matter for determination by the Court in each individual case whether the circumstance obtaining in that case makes out that purpose and makes inherent on the Court to exercise such a power to achieve the objects mentioned in the section".

19. Reference was made to Kailash Nath Lahiri v. Shamilal Khushaldas and Bros. Pvt. Ltd. 1977 Cri LJ 1520) (Goa) wherein it was held as under :

"High Court has inherent power to set aside order dismissing a revision for default of appearance. What Section 362 forbids is the alteration or review of the "final order disposing of a case", but it does not prohibit the total obliteration of such order. The alteration or review pre- supposes the continuation of the initial order and the effectuation of some changes in it, whereas the setting aside of the order means the complete abrogation of it. There is therefore, no specific bar contained in Section 362 or in any other section of the Code against the setting aside of an order of dismissal for default. It follows that the inherent powers of High Court are not taken away as far as the setting aside of the orders of dismissal ex parte are concerned".

In totality Mr. Agarwal's contention is that this Court has ample power to re- call its judgment/order in case it is satisfied that one of the three essentials of Section 482, Cr.P.C. so warrants.

20. Mr. Ravi Kasliwal referred to Deepak Thanwardas Balwani v. State of Maharashtra (1984) 1 Crimes 736 : (1985 Cri LJ 23) wherein it was held as under :

"In its inherent powers as provided under Section 482, Cr.P.C., 1973, the High Court can review or revise its judgment if such a judgment is pronounced without giving an opportunity of being heard to a party who is entitled to a hearing and that party is not at fault. For the mistake of the Court, a party cannot suffer".

He also referred to Raj Narain v. The State, (MANU/UP/0075/1959 : AIR 1959 All 315) which is again a Full Bench decision and where the High Court's power to revoke, review, re- call or alter its own earlier decision in a criminal revision and rehear the same came up for consideration. The question referred to the Full Bench was whether this Court has power to revoke, review, re- call or alter its earlier decision in a criminal revision and re- hear the same and if so in what circumstances. Their Lordships answered the question as under :

"1. that this Court has power to revoke, review, recall or alter its own earlier decision in a criminal revision and re- hear the same.

2. that this can be done only in cases falling under one or the other of the three conditions mentioned in Section 561- A, namely :

(i) for the purpose of giving effect to any order passed under the Code of Criminal Procedure,

(ii) for the purpose of preventing abuse of the process of any Court,

(iii) for otherwise securing the ends of justice.

Reference answered accordingly".

In Makkapati Nageswara Sastri v. S. S. Satyanarayan, MANU/SC/0156/1980 : AIR 1981 SC 1156 their Lordships held that the view taken by the High Court that in a revision party was not entitled to be heard as of right and though the counsel did not appear due to non- appearance of his name in the cause- list yet decided the revision ex parte. Their Lordships held that the view taken by the High Court is manifestly contrary to audi alteram partem rule of natural justice which was applicable to the proceedings before the High Court.

21. Mr. A. K. Bhandari submitted that there is a great difference between the word 'review' or 're-call'. He submitted that what is a bar under Section 362, Cr.P.C. is a review or alteration but not the re- call. He referred to Chambers Dictionary and submitted that review means a re-consideration, a critical examination, to look back etc. while re- call means to call back, to revoke etc. which means that in one there is an examination of the judgment and then on viewing the same from a different angle it has to be reviewed. While in another it is not only abrading it but to revoke it as a whole as if everything is obliterated from the record. In one earlier judgment remains on record with correction of the errors while in another it completely goes out. Therefore, what is contemplated in Section 482, Cr.P.C. is re- calling the judgment and not reviewing the same. In other words it is submitted that Section 362, Cr.P.C. bars the review or alteration but not the re- calling. He submits, that in Swarth Mahto v. Dharmdeo, (MANU/SC/0272/1972 : AIR 1972 SC 1300) their Lordships were conscious of the phraseology and have used the word 're-hearing' and not 'reviewing'. It is further submitted that in all other Courts except High Court the presence of an accused on each date of hearing is a condition precedent, while in the High Court it is not so except that according to Section 385, Cr.P.C. when the appellate Court does not dismiss the appeal summarily it has to cause notice of the time and place at which such appeal will be heard to be given to the appellant or his pleader and by the High Court Rules the notice of time and place is given through cause- list. He, therefore, submits that if either the name is wrongly printed or omitted to be printed or the description of the case is erroneous or for any other reason there is defect in the list, it is non- compliance of Section 385, Cr.P.C. and in case the appeal is heard in non- compliance of Section 385, Cr.P.C. then it is not hearing at all and it violates the principles of natural justice as well.

22. Mr. Subhash Zindal relied on the observations made by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in State of Orissa v. Ram Chandra Agrawal, MANU/SC/0179/1978 : AIR 1979 SC 87 where it was observed :

"That this Court entertained the application for quashing the proceedings on the ground that a subsequent application to quash would not amount to review or revise the order made by this Court."

In our opinion this case has a limited bearing and will be considered at an appropriate place on a different point i.e. whether the provisions of Section 561- A, Cr.P.C. can be invoked for exercise of powers which are specifically prohibited by the Court.

23. Mr. Bapna submitted that Section 482, Cr.P.C. does not confer any new jurisdiction on the High Court. It is inherent on the Court and whenever this Court feels that injustice has been done it has to invoke that jurisdiction which is inherent in every Court. He places' reliance on Manohar Lal Chopra v. Rai Bahadur Rao Raja Seth Hiraial, MANU/SC/0056/1961 : AIR 1962 SC 527 wherein their Lordships of the Supreme Court in reference to Section 151, C.P.C. held that the inherent power has not been conferred upon the Court. It is a power inherent in the Court by virtue of its duty to do justice between the parties before it. It is then submitted that Section 482, Cr.P.C. only makes this power inherent. Further it is always the duty of the Court to do justice between the parties and in doing so nothing can come as an impediment. It is submitted that when there is an anxiety to do justice Section 362, Cr.P.C. would not operate as a bar because that only prohibits altering or reviewing judgments, neither the correction has to be done nor the judgment has to be dressed. Section 362, Cr.P.C. will only be a bar when there will be some fault finding in the judgment. Learned counsel then relied on Sankatha Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, MANU/SC/0142/1962 : AIR 1962 SC 1208. On the strength of this case it is submitted that a Court cannot pass a judgment in the absence of the accused or his counsel and though the order is not without jurisdiction yet the hearing should be given. In this judgment, however, the Court has held that Sessions Judge could not pass the order rehearing of the appeal in exercise of such power that Section 362 read with Section 424, Cr.P.C. specifically prohibits the alter or reviewing of its order by a Court. Inherent powers cannot be exercised to do what the Code specifically prohibits the Court from doing. Reliance was then placed on Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. Kali Singh, MANU/SC/0100/1976 : AIR 1977 SC 2432. In this case their Lordships of the Supreme Court have made a distinction between the jurisdiction vested in the subordinate Courts and in the High Court. It has been held that "there is no provision in Code of Criminal Procedure empowering a Magistrate to review or recall a judicial order passed by him. Inherent powers under Section 561- A are only given to High Court and unlike Section 151, C.P.C. subordinate Criminal Courts have no inherent powers". Thus, this case in fact impliedly explains what has been held in Sankatha Singh v. State of U.P. and clearly lays down that the High Court has the inherent powers while the lower Courts do not possess it. It is submitted that deciding the case in the absence of the party or his lawyer would amount to denial of justice as the view point of the accused is not before the Court and there is likely to be a prejudice to his case.

24. Mr. Ganpat Singh Singhvi submitted that there is yet another angle of looking at the entire case and if need be this Court should go in the constitutional validity of the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, particularly Section 362, Cr.P.C. which is basically against the rights of the citizens. He submits that if that strict interpretation is taken that Section 362, Cr.P.C., puts a complete bar for rehearing the cases even in case where the principles of natural justice are violated, then this provision would be ultra vires of Article 21 of the Constitution. It is submitted that even in matters of property rights the settled law is that none can be deprived of the property in violation of principles of natural justice. He submits that up to 1978 this view was generally acceptable only in the property matters and an individual's liberty was not put at the same pedestal but that was the capitalistic way of looking at things. Now after 1978 the Courts have given new dimensions to Article 21 of the Constitution and right from Hussainara, Khatoon's case (MANU/SC/0119/1979 : AIR 1979 SC 1360) till date their Lordships of the Supreme Court by series of decisions have opened new vistas and it is in the same sequence that this Court must take a view that Section 482, Cr.P.C. is wide enough to give effect to the spirit of principles of natural justice. It is submitted that there is no inherent prohibition and even if there is one in Section 362, Cr.P.C. the same must be held to be violative to the principles of natural justice and Article 41 of the Constitution. It is submitted that this Court should not take a view that right of hearing of an appeal is completely taken away. In support of his aforesaid contentions he placed reliance on the following observations in Central Inland Water Transport Corporation Ltd. v.

Brojo Nath Ganguly (and another Civil Appeal), MANU/SC/0439/1986 : (1986) 3 SCC 156 : (AIR 1986 SC 1571) wherein it has been held as under :

"The law exists to serve the needs of the society which is governed by it. If the law is to play its plotted role of serving the needs of the society, it must reflect the ideas and ideologies of that society. It must keep time with the heartbeats of the society and with the needs and aspirations of the people. As the society changes, the law cannot remain immutable. The early nineteenth century essayist and wit, Sydney Smith said : "When I hear any man talk of an unalterable law, I am convinced that he is an unalterable Fool", The law must, therefore, in a changing society march in tune with the changed ideas and ideologies. Legislatures are, however, not best fitted for the role of adapting the law to the necessities of the time for the legislative process is to slow and the legislatures often divided by politics, slowed down by periodic elections and overburdened with myriad other legislative activities. A constitutional document is even less suited to this task, for the philosophy and the ideologies underlying it must of necessity be expressed in broad and general terms and the process of amending a Constitution is too cumbersome and time-consuming to meet the immediate needs. This task must, therefore, of necessity fall upon the Courts because the Courts can by the process of judicial interpretation adapt the law to suit the needs of the society".

He then referred to Nawabkhan Abbaskhan v. State of Gujarat AIR 1971 SC 1471 wherein it has been held as under :

"Decisions are legion where the conditions for the exercise of power have been contravened and the order treated as void. And when there is excess or error of jurisdiction the end product is a semblance, not an actual order, although where the error is within jurisdiction it is good, particularly when a finality clause exists. The order becomes 'infallible in error' a peculiar legal phenomenon like the hybrid beast of voidable voidness for which, according to a learned author, Lord Denning is largely responsible. The legal chaos on this branch of jurisprudence should be avoided by evolving simpler concepts which work in practice in Indian conditions. Legislation, rather than judicial law- making will meet the needs more adequately. The only safe course, until simple and sure light is shed from a legislative source, is to treat as void and ineffectual to bind parties from the beginning any order made without hearing the party affected if the injury is to a constitutionally guaranteed right. In other cases, the order in violation of natural justice is void in the limited sense of being liable to be avoided by Court with retroactive force.

In the present case, a fundamental right of the petitioner has been encroached upon by the police commissioner without due hearing. So the Court quashed it not killed it then but performed the formal obsequies of the order which had died at birth. The legal result is that the accused was never guilty of flouting an order which never legally existed."

Reliance has been placed on the following observations of their Lordships in Suk Das v. Union Territory of Arunachal Pradesh, MANU/SC/0140/1986 : AIR 1986 SC 991. It is submitted that this judgment is a landmark and extends the horizons of Article 21 of the Constitution of India and has an important bearing in deciding this reference. Then reference has been made to A. K. Roy v. Union of India, MANU/SC/0051/1981 : AIR 1982 SC 710 wherein it has been held as under :

"If the detaining authority or the Government takes the aid of a legal practitioner or a legal adviser before the Advisory Board, the detenu must be allowed the facility of appearing before the Board through a legal practitioner.

The embargo on the appearance of legal practitioners should not be extended so as to prevent the detenu from being aided or assisted by a friend who, in truth and substance, is not a legal practitioner. Every person, whose interests are adversely affected as a result of the proceedings which have a serious import, is entitled to be heard in those proceedings and be assisted by a friend."

Reliance has also been placed on the Board of Trustees of the Port of Bombay v. Dilipkumar Raghavendranath Nadkarni, MANU/SC/0184/1982 : AIR 1983 SC 109, wherein it has been held as under :

"In this connection, we would like to refer to a weighty observation on this point where despite constitutional inhibition this Court conceded such a right. In A. K. Roy v. Union of India, MANU/SC/0051/1981 : (1982) 1 SCC 271 at P. 335 (para 93) : (AIR 1982 SC 710 at p. 747 para 93), the learned Chief Justice while rejecting the contention that a detenu should be entitled to appear through a legal adviser before the Advisory Board observed that Article 22(3)(b) makes it clear that a legal practitioner should not be permitted to appear before an Advisory Board for any party. While noting this constitutional mandate, the learned Chief Justice proceeded to examine, what would be the effect if the department is represented before the Advisory Board by a legally trained person. It was held that in such situation despite the inhibition of Article 22(3)(b) the fair procedure as contemplated by Article 21 requires that a detenu be permitted to appear by a legal practitioner."

On the strength of the aforesaid two authorities it is submitted that their Lordships of the Supreme Court have accepted the right of being heard by a legal expert even in those cases where there was prohibition by law. Reliance has also been placed on Mariabhilli Ramanna v. Andhavarapu Dharmayya 1986 Cri LJ 738 (Andh Pra) and stated that power of re- call is different than the power of review. It has been held in this case that "it is fairly settled that the Court has no power to review its order unless there is a provision specifically empowering the Court to exercise the power of review. The inherent power conferred on the High Court under Section 482, Cr. P.C. cannot be called in aid in a situation where the Magistrate seeks to review the matter. The power of review lacks sanction of any of the provisions of Criminal P.C. Therefore, I am unable to agree with the decision of the Patna High Court."

25. Mr. Ajeet Bhandari placed reliance on Rafiq v. Munshilal, MANU/SC/0076/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 1400 wherein it has been held as under :

"Where an appeal filed by the appellant was disposed of in absence of his counsel, so also his application for recall of order of dismissal was rejected by the High Court, the Supreme Court in appeal set aside both the orders of dismissal on ground that a party who as per the present adversary legal system, has selected his advocate, briefed him and paid his fee can remain supremely confident that his lawyer will look after his interest and such a innocent party who has done everything in his power and expected of him, should not suffer for the inaction, deliberate omission or misdemeanour of his counsel".

It is submitted that" though this was the civil case but the principle laid down therein shall also be applicable in criminal cases.

26. Mr. A. K. Gupta submits that Section 304, Cr. P.C. and Article 39A of the Constitution where right to defend the accused at the State expenditure has been accepted then not to order rehearing of cases decided in the absence of the counsel - must be seriously deprecated. He submits that according to Section 304, Cr. P.C. in a Sessions trial as well as in the appeals legal aid has to be provided at the State expenditure and a notification is also contemplated. While in Article 39A of the Constitution, the framers have categorically enacted that the State shall secure for providing free legal aid by suitable legislation or schemes or in any other way. Seeking support from these it is submitted that whenever case is decided in the absence of legal aid to an accused then keeping in spirit all the aforesaid provisions that judgment should be re- called in the inherent powers of the Court in case it is found that same is prejudicial to the interest of the accused.

27. Mr. Tibrewal submitted that harmonious construction has to be given to the provisions of Section 362, Cr. P.C. and Section 482, Cr. P.C. He submits that under Section 362, Cr. P.C. review or alteration is prohibited but Court has also to bear in mind that power of review is always a creation of a statute and since it has not been created in Code of Criminal Procedure, rather, there is a specific bar, no review is permissible but the question is whether order of review is an order of recall, it has to be considered that whether Section 362, Cr. P.C. can be considered to be a complete bar even if there is gross injustice done to an accused whether the Court will only remain a silent spectator. He submits that in appropriate cases despite bar under Section 362, Cr. P.C. Court is obliged to grant relief to secure ends of justice. Learned counsel has placed reliance on a Full Bench decision of this Court reported in Noor Taki Mammu v. State of Rajasthan 1986 Raj LR 195 : (1986 Cri U 1488) wherein it has been held that in exceptional cases despite the bar contained in Section 397, Cr. P.C. interference can be made with interlocutory orders under Section 482, Cr. P.C. as it gives unfettered powers to this Court for securing the ends of justice. In the aforesaid case the Court was considering the question of releasing an approver on bail who was not on bail at the time of granting pardon. After considering the various authorities the Court held as under :

"A perusal of the aforesaid cases coupled with that of many other cases, like that of Sunil Batra v. Delhi Administration : 1980 Cri LJ 1099 : (MANU/SC/0184/1978 : AIR 1980 SC 1579), and yet another case of Hussainara Khatoon reported in MANU/SC/0119/1979 : AIR 1979 SC 1360, we have no hesitation in holding that detention of a person even by due process of law has to be reasonable, fair and just and if it is not so, it will amount to violation of Article 21 of the Constitution of India. Reasonable expeditious trial is warranted by the provisions of Cr. P.C. and in case this is not done and an approver is detained for a period which is longer than what can be considered to be reasonable in the circumstances of each case, the Court has always power to declare his detention either illegal or enlarge him to bail while exercising its inherent powers. Section 482, Cr. P.C. gives wide power to this Court in three circumstances. Firstly, where the jurisdiction is invoked to give effect to an order of the Court. Secondly if there is an abuse of the process of the Court and thirdly in 'order to. secure the ends of justice. There may be occasions where a case of approver may fall within latter two categories. For example in a case where there are large number of witnesses a long period is taken in trial where irregularities and illegalities have been committed by the Court and a re- trial is ordered and while doing so the accused persons are released on bail, the release of the approver will be occasioned for securing the ends of justice. Similarly, there may be cases that there may be an abuse of the process of the Court and the accused might be trying to delay the proceedings by absconding one after another, the approver may approach this Court for seeking indulgence. But this too will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Broadly, the parameters may be given but no hard and fast rule can be laid down. For instance, an approver, who has already been examined and has supported the prosecution version and has also not violated the terms of pardon coupled with the fact that no early end of the trial is visible, then he may be released by invoking the powers under Section 482, Cr. P.C. Section 482, Cr. P.C. gives only power to the High Court. Sessions Judge cannot invoke the provisions of the same. High Court therefore in suitable cases can examine the expediency of the release of an approver. We are not inclined to accept the contention of the learned Public Prosecutor that since there is a specific bar under Section 306(4)(b), Cr. P.C. Section 482, Cr. P.C. should not be made applicable. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court have said it in times without number that there is nothing in the Code to fetter the powers of the High Court under Section 482, Cr. P.C. Even if there is a bar in different provisions for the three purposes mentioned in Section 482, Cr. P.C., and one glaring example quoted is that though Section 397 gives a bar for interference with interlocutory order yet Section 482, Cr. P.C. has been made applicable in exceptional cases. Secondly revision by the same petitioner is barred yet this Court in exceptional cases invokes the provisions of Section 482, Cr. P.C. Therefore, Section 482, Cr. P.C. give sample power to this Court. However, in exceptional cases, to enlarge the approver on bail, we answer the question that according to Section 306(4)(b), Cr. P.C. the approver should be detained in custody till the termination of trial, if he is not already on bail, at the same time in exceptional and reasonable cases this Court has power under Section 482, Cr. P.C. to enlarge him on bail or in case there are circumstances to suggest that his detention had been so much prolonged, which would otherwise outlive the period of sentence, if convicted his detention can be declared to be illegal, as violative of Article 21 of the Constitution."

Relying on Ranchod Mathur Wasawa v. State of Gujarat, MANU/SC/0442/1973 : (1974) 3 SCC 581: (AIR 1974 SC 1143) it is submitted that adequate opportunity and facility should be provided to the counsel for an accused to prepare the case. He relied on the following passage of the judgment :

"Indigence should never be a ground for denying fair trial or equal justice. Therefore, particular attention should be paid to appoint competent advocates, equal to handling the complex cases -- not patronising gestures to raw entrants to the Bar. Sufficient time and complete papers should also be made available, so that the Advocate chosen may serve the cause of justice with all the ability at his command. In all these cases there should be a sensitive approach made by the Court to see that the accused feels confident that his counsel chosen by the Court has had adequate time and material to defend him properly".

Reliance was placed on a Full Bench decision of Travancore Cochin reported in State v. Kunjan Pillai Alyappan Pillai AIR 1952 Trav Co 210, where power to review was considered. Their Lordships though held that Section 561A does not confer any power on the High Courts even under Section 561A to review or alter the judgment, yet observed that in the circumstances of that particular case since there was no abuse of the process of the Court or any grave injustice was done to the party, they were dismissing the petition. They however, did not express any specific view about the correctness of the law laid down in different cases wherein power of re- call had been accepted. The Full Bench of Allahabad High Court in Mahesh v. State consisting of five Judges considered the scope of inherent powers of the High Court and held as under :

"The inherent power cannot affect the substantive rights. It can be invoked only to law down the procedure in cases not covered by the provisions of the Code. The inherent power is to be exercised in exceptional cases, and even then carefully and with caution, when there is no other remedy which can be effectively availed of. The High Court will also be justified to exercise its inherent power in those exceptional cases which could not be in the mind of the legislature at the time of enacting the Code even though for usual cases a provision was made therein. Whenever the inherent power is exercised, it shall be for one of the three purposes mentioned in Section 561A, Cr. P.C. that is, to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court or to secure the ends of justice".

A Full Bench consisting of four Judges of Jammu and Kashmir High Court in Prem Singh v. State MANU/JK/0040/1981, held as under :

"If there is no decision because it is a nullity, the bar under Section 369 cannot operate. Cases are conceivable where the order passed in appeal or revision is a nullity not because of any procedural non- compliance by the Court of appeal or revision, which goes to the roof of the matter, but because the order passed by the trial Court itself is found to be a nullity. That may be so where the trial Court has violation of principles of natural justice and the appellate or the revisional Court had no jurisdiction of its own to make an order but its jurisdiction is only to confirm or set aside the order of the trial Court. In such cases, the order passed in appeal or revision would be a nullity because in law the order of the trial Court will be deemed to be non-existent and it would necessarily follow that there was no order which the appellate Court or the revisional Court would confirm or set aside. Consequently, it shall be open to the appellate Court or the revisional Court, as the case may be, to proceed to rehear the case as if the order already passed by it did not exist, Section 369, Cr. P.C. would not stand in its way".

Reliance has also been placed on Deepak Thanwardas Balwani v. State of Maharashtra 1985 Cri LJ 23 (Bom) wherein it has been held as under :

"In its inherent powers as provided in Section 482, the High Court can review or revise its judgment if such a judgment is pronounced without giving an opportunity of being heard to a party who is entitled to a hearing and that party is not at fault. For the mistake of the Court, a party cannot suffer".

28. Mr. Dalip Singh laid emphasis on the right recognised for providing in engaging a lawyer and hearing them. He relied on the observations of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in State of Madhya Pradesh v. Shobharam, MANU/SC/0271/1966 : AIR 1966 SC 1910 wherein it has been held as under :

"But the right to be defended by a legal practitioner is not conferred only on a person arrested. The right to be defended by a legal practitioner extends also to a case of defence in a trial which may result in the loss of personal liberty. On the other hand, where a person is subjected to a trial under a law which does not provide for an order resulting in the loss of his personal liberty, he is not entitled to the constitutional right to defend himself at the trial by a legal practitioner. The reason is that Articles 21 & 22 of the Constitution are concerned only with giving protection to personal liberty. That is strongly indicated by the language used in these Articles and by the context in which they occur in the Constitution. It would follow that the requirement laid down in Art, 22(1) is not a constitutional necessity in any enactment which does not affect life or personal liberty."

29- 30. Mr. Jagdeep Dhankhar also laid emphasis on Articles 21 & 39A of the Constitution of India and further submitted that scope of Section 482, Cr. P.C. is very wide enough and Section 362, Cr. P.C. cannot be said to be a bar in all cases under Code of Criminal Procedure. He submits that this Court while interpreting an order under Section 68 IPC wherein an accused has not paid the fine during the period given to him has negatived the argument of the Government Advocate that Section 362, Cr. P.C. would come into operation and this Court cannot now review the order. In this light he has referred to Sheduram v. State of Rajasthan 1985 Cri LR 703 (Raj). Reliance was also placed on an order of the Supreme Court reported in Chakreshwarnath Jain v. State of Uttar Pradesh : (MANU/SC/0128/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 2009 (2) : 1981 (Supp) SCC 11, where a revision petition was ex parte decided by the Allahabad High Court. Their Lordships set aside the order and sent the case back to Allahabad High Court for a decision afresh. Reliance was also placed on a decision of the Supreme Court in Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs W.B. v. Mohan Singh (MANU/SC/0223/1974 : AIR 1975 SC 1002 : 1975 Cri LJ 812) wherein it has been held as under :

"Inherent power of High Court to quash criminal proceedings in lower Court - - Proceedings long drawn out - - No prima facie case made out against accused - - Proceedings may be quashed by High Court to prevent abuse of process of Court and to secure ends of justice - - Fact that a similar application for quashing the proceedings on a former occasion was rejected by the High Court on the ground that questions involved were purely questions of fact which were for the Court of fact to decide, is no bar to the quashing of the proceedings at the later stage - - Such quashing will not amount to revision or review of the High Court's earlier order - - Order under Section 561- A should be passed in view of the circumstances existing at the time when the order is passed."

31. Mr. M.I. Khan Additional Advocate General submitted that this question is of much wider importance and should be referred to a still larger Bench. He submits that one of us has already taken view in Noortaki's case {MANU/RH/0015/1987 : 1986 Cri LJ 1488) (Raj) (supra), that even when there is specific prohibition under same provision in exceptional cases inherent powers of the Court can be invoked, he submits that Noortaki's case requires reconsideration and it has to be considered whether scope of Article 21 of the Constitution can be extended to that extent. He submits that according to Article 21 of the Constitution there are only two riders that no person should be deprived of his life or personal liberty and that if it is to be curtailed it can only be in accordance with the procedure established by law. He submits that it is essential to consider Article 21 of the Constitution and it is submitted that even on consideration of it it cannot be said that the provisions of Section 362, Cr. P.C. can be circumvented by taking resort to Section 482, Cr. P.C. It is submitted that Section 362, Cr. P.C. starts with the word save as 'otherwise provided by this Code, therefore, unless there is some provision specifically giving effect to the bar contained in Section 362, Cr. P.C this Court cannot widen the horizans by taking resort to Section 482, Cr. P.C. He relies on Smt. Sooraj Devi v. Pyare Lal, 1981 Cri LJ 296 : (MANU/SC/0228/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 736) and specifically refers to the following observations of their Lordship of the Supreme Court:

"The appellant points out that he invoked the inherent power of the High Court saved by Section 482 of the Code and that notwithstanding the prohibition imposed by Section 362 the High Court had power to grant relief. Now it is well settled that the inherent power of the Court cannot be exercised for doing that which is specifically prohibited by the Code. Sankatha Singh v. State of U.P., MANU/SC/0142/1962 : AIR 1962 SC 1208. It is true that the prohibition in Section 362 against the Court altering or reviewing its judgment is subject to what is "otherwise provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force". Those words, however, refer to those provisions only where the Court has been expressly authorised by the Code or other law to alter or review its judgment. The inherent power of the Court is not contemplated by the saving provision contained in Section 362 and, therefore, the attempt to invoke that power can be of no avail".

He submits that their Lordships in the aforesaid case have categorically held that inherent powers cannot be invoked when there is a complete bar. He has also placed reliance on Nandlal Chunilal Bodiwala v. Emperor, MANU/MH/0072/1945 : AIR 1946 Bom 276 and submitted that the Full Bench of Bombay High Court considered the meaning of the word 'judgment' as occurred in then Section 369, Cr. P.C. and the scope of reviewing and altering the said judgment. Section 438, Cr. P.C. was made for hearing the effect of the petition still it would not affect its validity and the binding nature on the petitioner. He also relied on S. Kuppuswami Rao v. The King AIR 1949 FCI to substantiate that the term 'judgment' indicates the judicial decision given on the merits of the dispute before the Court and in criminal case the expression 'judgment' or 'final order' cannot cover a preliminary or interlocutory order made on a preliminary objection. On the strength of this case it is submitted that if the judgment is final order then there is a bar for reviewing or altering the same. Mr. Khan also submitted that when a reference has been made to this Bench it should only answer the question referred to and the scope is limited. He refers to Eknath Shankarrao Mukkawar v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0087/1977 and submits that the reference made is competent.

32. Mr. Mohammad Rafiq submitted that power to re- call must be derived only from some specific provisions in the Code and there being none the Code cannot enlarge the scope which otherwise has been restricted by the negative provisions of Section 362 Cr. P.C. He submitted that the inherent power regarding review or alteration of the judgment in Section 482 Cr. P.C. has been deleted by virtue of Section 362 Cr. P.C. He has further submitted that a judgment is a termination of a proceeding and once the proceeding is terminated that Court is functus officio and to give effect to this principle of functus officio the legislature has incorporated Section 362 Cr. P.C. It is submitted that the express provision of Section 367 Cr. P.C. would override even inherent powers as the same is prohibitory. He also emphasized on the words 'save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any other law' and submits that these words make it clear that the only authority vested with power is Supreme Court. He submits that Supreme Court possesses three types of , jurisdiction, namely, appellate jurisdiction, power to correct the errors of subordinate Courts and to lay down the law under Article 141 of the Constitution of India. It is submitted that the Supreme Court has held that there are no inherent powers vested in a court when there is specific bar against it and that being the law binding on this Court the Court cannot now enlarge the jurisdiction by giving wider interpretation to Section 482 Cr. P.C. He relies on Manohar Nathurao Samarth v. Marotrao, MANU/SC/0350/1979 : (1979) 4 SCC 93 : (AIR 1979 SC 1084) and submits that the emphasis while interpreting a law should be on the function, utility, aim and purpose which the provision has to fulfil He has relied on para 14 of this judgment which reads as under :

"Even assuming ' that literality in construction has tenability in given circumstances, the doctrinal development in the nature of judicial interpretation takes us to other methods like the teleological , the textual, the contextual and the functional. The strictly literal may not often be logical if the context indicates a contrary legislative intent. Courts are not victims of verbalism but are agents of the functional success of legislation, given flexibility of meaning, if the law will thereby hit the target intended by the law- maker. Here the emphasis lies on the function, utility, aim and purpose which the provision has to fulfil. A policy oriented, understanding of a legal provision which does not do violence to the text or the context gains preference as against a narrow reading of the words used. Indeed, this approach is a version of the plain meaning rule, and has judicial sanction. In Huttonv. Phillips (1948 45 Del 156) the Supreme Court or Delaware said :

(Interpreation) involves for more than picking out dictionary definitions of words or expressions used. Consideration of the context saying that a verbal expression is plain or unambiguous, we mean little more than that we are convinced that virtually anyone competent to understand it, and desiring fairly and impartially to ascertain its signification, would attribute to the expression in its context a meaning such as the one we derive, rather than any other; and would consider any different meaning, by comparison, strained, or farfetched, or unusual, or unlikely."

He also referred to Addl. District Magistrate, Jabalpur v. Shivakant Shukla, MANU/SC/0062/1976 : AIR 1976 SC 1207 and submitted that while interpreting the provisions and considering the observations of a High Judicial Authority like the Supreme Court greatest possible care must be taken to relate the observations of a Judge to the precise issues before him and to confine such observations, even though expressed in broad terms, in the general compass of the question before him, unless he makes it clear that he intended his remarks : to have a wider ambit. His Lordship Hon'ble Mr. Justice Bhagwati in the aforesaid case has observed that it is not possible for Judges always to express their judgments so as to exclude entirely the risk that in some subsequent case their language may be misapplied and any attempt at such perfection of expression can only lead to the opposite result of uncertainty and even obscurity as regards the case in hand. He also placed strong reliance on Soorajdevi's case (MANU/SC/0228/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 736) (supra) relied upon by Mr. Khan. He also placed reliance on B. R. V. Satyanarayana v. The State MANU/AP/0227/1976 (Andh Pra) and submitted that the High Court cannot review its own order. He relied on the following observations :

"It is an universal principle of law that when a matter has been finally disposed of by a Court, such Court is functus officio in respect of that matter. In the absence of a direct statutory provision, the Court which became functus officio cannot entertain a fresh prayer for the same relief unless and until the previous order of final disposal has been set aside. It is this cardinal principle that has been incorporated in Section 362 of the Code. Admittedly, there is no provision in any other law permitting the High Court to alter or review a final order passed by it in a criminal revision case. Inherent powers under Section 482 cannot be exercised to do what the Code specifically prohibits the Court from doing. When Section 362 expressly prohibits the Court from altering or reviewing its final order after the same is signed, it would not be open to High Court to review or alter the order by admitting a fresh revision application. Case law reviewed.

Where the order of dismissal of a revision petition was a regular order passed on merits after hearing the petitioner's counsel, it cannot be said that the order is without jurisdiction or that it was passed without affording an opportunity to petitioner. Even a summary dismissal at the admission stage of a revision case after due hearing of the petitioner or his counsel is as much a dismissal after full hearing and the order having been pronounced and signed by the Judge, the same cannot be altered or reviewed in view of the express prohibition contained in Section 362 Cr. P.C."

He also relied on Naresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, MANU/SC/0192/1981 where the High Court had altered the quantum of sentence. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that the High Court was wholly wrong in altering the judgment passed by them disposing the criminal appeals. He also relied on Chandrabali v. State MANU/UP/0275/1979 (All) wherein also it was held that Section 482 Cr. P.C. is not applicable in which it has been held as under :

"We may also point out that in the Full Bench case of Raj Narain (MANU/UP/0075/1959 : AIR 1959 All 315) (supra) it was observed in the majority judgment that Section 561- A, did not authorise this Court to rehear a case where the applicant or appellant was not heard due to some fault of his or his counsel Thus the applicant cannot get any assistance even from the majority judgment in Raj Narain's case (supra) which on this point has not been overruled by their Lordships of the Supreme Court. Thus the applicant in the case on hand will not be entitled to claim rehearing even if we were to hold that the applicant could invoke inherent jurisdiction of this Court reserved under Section 482 Cr. P.C.".

He then relied on Har Bilas v. Ram Niwas Bansal MANU/UP/0177/1983 (All). The Court held that Section 362 Cr. P.C. is a bar. But in this case we may observe that the name of the counsel was printed in the cause- list and there was no adjournment slip also nor any mention was made and it was an application under Section 482 Cr. P.C. which was decided and in those circumstances their Lordships held that S. 362 will operate as a bar. A reference has then been made to Ajit Singh v. State of Punjab (1983) 2 Crimes 60 : AIR 1982 NOC 219 (Punj & Har) (FB) wherein it has been held as under :

"It seems to be more than manifest that both with regard to the appellate and the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court there is no power to review or revise its earlier judgment, except to correct clerical errors. In face of the all pervading dictum there is no option but to hold that Lal Singh's case MANU/PH/0007/1970) (supra) can no longer hold the field and is hereby overruled. Consequently the answer to the first question has to be rendered in the affirmative and it is held that the High Court has no power to review or alter its earlier judgment within the criminal jurisdiction accept to correct clerical errors."

The learned counsel also submitted that the word 'alter' appearing in Section 362 Cr. P.C. is wider in scope than the word 're- call'. He referred to Law Lex icon by Venkataramayya 1978 Edition page 128 and submitted that 'recall' included the word 'review'. He finally submitted that legislature always intended a finality to a judgment and it should not be permitted to be tested by taking resort to Section 482 Cr. P.C. He submitted that the cancellation of earlier judgments is not permissible. He has also placed reliance on Collector of Customs v. Digvijay Singhji Spinning & Weaving Mills Ltd., Jamnagar, MANU/SC/0365/1961 : AIR 1961 SC 1549. In Shivanarayan Kabra v. State of Madras, MANU/SC/0091/1966 : AIR 1967 SC 986 it has been observed as under :

"It is a sound rule of interpretation that a statute should be so construed as to prevent the mischief and to advance remedy according to the true intention of the makers of the statute."

In The Commr. of Sales Tax U.P. v. Mangal Sen Shyamlal, MANU/SC/0448/1975 : AIR 1975 SC 1106 it has been held as under :

"A statute is supposed to be an authentic repository of the legislative will and the function of a Court is to interpret it "according to the intent of them that made it". From that function the Court is not to resile. It has to abide by the maxim ut res magis valeat quam pereat, lest the intention of the legislature may go in vain or be left to evaporate into thin air. Where that intent is clearly expressed in the language of the Act, there is little difficulty in giving effect to it. But where such intent is covert and couched in language which is imperfect, imprecise and deficient or is ambiguous or enigmatic and external aids to interpretation are few, scant and indeterminate, the Court may, despite application of all its experience, ingenuity and ratiocination, find itself in a position no better than that of a person solving a cross word puzzle with a few given hints and hunches. In such a situation a mere reference to the High Court of a question of opinion may not afford an adequate solution. Only legislative amendment may furnish an efficacious and speedy remedy."

He also referred Rule 64 of the Rajasthan High Court Rules and said that for the purpose of review there are specific rules which have to be observed.

33. Mr. S. P. Tyagi submitted that once the judgment is given and signed it has become final for the Court which has delivered and there is no provision of law which empowers the Court to alter or change the same by way of review, recall, reconsideration or rehearing. In other words he submits that the Court is functus officio and whatever may be the circumstances there being a jurisdictional power provided by Section 362 Cr. P.C. no jurisdiction express or implied is vested in the Court. He relies on two decisions of their Lordships of the Supreme Court, one reported in Sankatha Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (MANU/SC/0142/1962 : AIR 1962 SC 1208) (supra) and another in State of Orissa v. Ramchander Agarwala, (MANU/SC/0179/1978 : AIR 1979 SC 87) (supra).

34. Mr. Mathur, Government Advocate, adopted the arguments of the Addl. Advocate General and Mr. Mohd. Rafiq and further submitted that Section 393 Cr. P.C. read with Sections 377, 378 and 384(4) makes it abundantly clear that there is a finality attached to the judgments and orders and Section 362 Cr. P.C. provides a bar which cannot be lifted by Section 482 Cr. P.C.

35. Mr. S. C. Agrawal in his rejoinder submitted that Advocates presence has always been felt necessary and the Courts have been zealous in looking to the fact that the case of the accused has not in any manner been prejudiced. He has placed reliance on Raj Kapoor v. State (Delhi Administration), MANU/SC/0210/1979 : AIR 1980 SC 258 where their Lordships of the Supreme Court have held that the High Court must exercise the inherent powers very sparingly. One such case would be the desirability of the quashing of a criminal proceeding initialed illegally, vexatiously or as without jurisdiction. Learned counsel has also relied upon a judgment delivered by this Court in Baluram v. State, S. B. Cr. Misc. Appl. No. 154/82 wherein an application under Section 482 Cr. P.C. was dismissed.

36. We shall first quote and discuss the cases considered by Hon'ble Sharma, J.

37. We have given our earnest and thoughtful consideration to the rival contentions and have carefully gone through the cases cited above.

38. There are two views available on the point. According to one view Section 362 Cr. P.C. has been held to be mandatory and puts complete bar and it has been therefore, held that Section 482 Cr. P.C. can also not be invoked for the purposes of reviewing or altering the judgment. The other view is that re- calling is different than reviewing and altering and if the Court is of the opinion that gross injustice has been done, then Section 482 Cr. P.C. should be invoked to re- call the judgment and re- hear the case. !n fact the earlier view has impliedly been done away with by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Sankatha Singh's case (MANU/SC/0142/1962 : AIR 1962

SC 1208) (supra). Their Lordships have held that the appellate Court had no power to review or restore an appeal which has been disposed of under Sections 424 and 369 Cr. P.C. (old). Similar was the view taken in State of Orissa v. Ram Chandra, (MANU/SC/0179/1978 : AIR 1979 SC 87) (supra). Sankatha Singh's case has been referred to in Sooraj Devi's case (MANU/SC/0228/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 736) (supra) wherein also their Lordships have held that inherent powers cannot be invoked when there is a complete bar. Scope of Section 482 Cr. P.C. was then considered by their Lordships in Manohar Nathu Sao Samarth v. Marot Rao, (MANU/SC/0350/1979 : AIR 1979 SC 1084) (supra). Thus on one side as mentioned above the principles which have been laid down by their Lordships of the Supreme Court can be summarised as under :- -

1. That the powers to deal with the case must flow from the statute,

2. That the powers given under Section 362 Cr. P.C. (S. 369 Cr. P.C. old) given to the Court for reviewing or altering is limited only for correcting an arithmetical or clerical error and specifically prohibits Courts from touching the judgment by taking away the powers altering or reviewing the judgment or the final order and as such principle of functus officio has been accepted.

3. That the prohibition contained in Section 362 Cr. P.C. (Section 369 Cr. P.C. Old) is not only restricted to the trial Court but also extends to appellate Court or the revisional Court.

4. That the inherent powers of the Court cannot be invoked where there is an express prohibition and in other words Section 482 Cr. P.C. cannot be invoked.

39. As against this the analogical deduction which comes out from another set of cases is- -

(i) Right of the accused to be heard is his valuable right which cannot be taken away by any provision of law,

(ii) If the accused has not been given an opportunity of being heard or is not provided with the counsel when not duly represented it will be violative of principles of natural justice as well as Article 21 of the Constitution,

(iii) That to provide defence counsel in case the accused is not in a position to engage is fundamental duty of the State and has throughout been recognized and now incorporated in Section 304 Cr. P.C. and in Article 39 A of the Constitution,

(iv) That bar of review or alter is different than the power of re- call,

(v) That inherent powers given under Section 482 Cr. P.C. (Section 561- A Cr. P.C. Old) are wide enough to cover any type of cases if three conditions mentioned therein so warrant, namely- -

(a) for the purpose of giving effect to any order passed under the Code of Criminal Procedure;

(b) for the purposes of preventing the abuse of the process of any Court; and

(c) for securing the ends of justice.

(vi) The principle of audi alteram partem shall be violated if right of hearing is taken away,

(vii) That when the judgment is re- called it is a complete obliteration/abrogation of the earlier judgment and the Appeal or the ' Revision, as the case may be, has to be heard and decided afresh, (viii) That a Court subordinate to High Court cannot exercise the inherent powers and the Code restricts it to the High Court alone.

(ix) That no fixed parameters can be fixed and hard and fast rule also cannot be laid down and Court in appropriate cases where it is specified that one of the three conditions of Section 482 Cr. P.C. are attracted should interfere.

40. Hon'ble Mr. Justice Lodha while deciding C. Jacobs case has taken note of all these factors before he directed re- hearing of the appeals. He has in extent discussed the judgment of the Supreme Court particularly in Sankatha Singh (MANU/SC/0142/1962 : AIR 1962 SC 1208) and Swarth Mathew's cases (MANU/SC/0272/1972 : AIR 1972 SC 1300) (supra) and had then arrived at a conclusion. He has also dealt with Dhanna's case (MANU/RH/0034/1963 : AIR 1963 Raj 104) (supra) and in fact we do not find any anomaly in decisions in Dhanna's and C. Jacobs 1986 Raj LR 506 cases which would have otherwise called for this reference. Hon'ble Mr. Justice Bhargava C. B. in Dhanna's case has discussed various authorities which have been cited before us also and then has categorically held "the inherent powers under Section 561- A should be exercised very sparingly and only when the facts of the case justify the tests laid down in the section itself. They do not authorise the Court to re- direct a case where the appellants or his counsel was not heard on account of their own fault. I am, therefore, not satisfied that the absence of the learned counsel at the time the appeal was called for hearing was due to insufficient cause and the ends of justice require that a re- hearing should be granted to him".

41. Thus in this case the power of rehearing has been accepted by Hon'ble Bhargava, J., of course in cases where sufficient cause had been shown for the absence of the appellant or his counsel He, however, was clearly of the opinion that Section 561- A Cr.P.C. is not meant for abusing the process of the Court, i.e., to say that a lawyer or the appellant deliberately, in order to avoid the Bench, absents himself, then it would not give him a right of being re- heard. The facts in that case were such where it had not been shown that the lawyer was busy elsewhere or that his name might not have been shown in the cause- list and, on merits, therefore, he refused to exercise jurisdiction under Section 561 A Cr. P.C. Hon'ble Lodha, J. distinguished the case on fact and not on the point of law. He on the other law (hand?) accepted the principle laid down by Hon'ble Bhargava, J. Therefore, in our opinion case of Dhanna (MANU/RH/0034/1963 : AIR 1963 Raj 104} (supra) was not sought to be distinguished in the case of C. Jacob 1986 Raj LR 506) by Hon'ble Lodha, J. and there is no need to refer this case before larger Bench particularly when similar principles had been laid down by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Shaukin Singh's case (MANU/SC/0223/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 1698) (supra) relied upon by Hon'ble Sharma, J.

42. Sankatha Singh's case also, in our opinion, does not put a complete bar as their Lordships in that case were considering the scope of the trial Court and it has been explained in Swarth Methue's case (MANU/SC/0272/1972 : AIR 1972 SC 1300) in which case their Lordships set aside the conviction and ordered the rehearing of the appeal. A perusal of the history of the cases shows that in all democratic societies right of hearing has been given utmost importance, rather laws have been enacted from time to time for providing legal aid to the persons who are unable to afford the lawyers. Holds Werth's history on English Law Vol. 9 page 226 deals with history of struggle which took place in England before a litigant's representation in the Court took a final shape in bringing out Poor Persons' Defence Ordinance which came up for scrutiny before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gelosh Hurads AIR 1944 PC 93 (cited above). Very valuable observation has been made therein that if there is a refusal to hear the counsel for the accused an appeal cannot stand. Their Lordships had gone to the extent of holding that even when an adjournment had been sought and refused the accused has to be re- heard because right of hearing cannot be taken away. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court have also advanced this very principle where it was held in couple of cases that if a lawyer does not appear it behoves the Court to appoint an amicus curiae. The same view has been taken in other cases also which have been referred to by the learned counsel above and we are firmly of the opinion that right of hearing cannot be taken away and the sound judicial view would be that reasonable opportunity of being heard must be provided to the accused. Thus, once an appeal or revision is admitted for hearing it should not normally be decided ex parte and if it has been decided ex parte and valid reasons have been shown that there had been failure of justice, inherent powers of this Court should be exercised. This of course, has not to be meant for giving long rope to those persons who either intend to delay the course of justice or to avoid the case from being heard by a particular Bench. Mr. M. I. Khan has cited a passage from Crime in Britain Today by Clive Borrell and Brian Cashinella. He referred to Chapter Eleven Courts, Law and Prisons, particularly the following paragraphs :

"Let there be no doubt, that a minority of criminal lawyers do very well from the proceeds of crime. A reputation for success, achieved by persistent lack of scruple in the defence of the most disreputable, soon attracts other clients who see little hope of acquittal in any other way. Experienced and respected Metropolitan detectives can identify lawyers in criminal practice who are more harmful to society than the clients they represent. A conviction said to result from perjury or wrong- doing by police rightly causes a public outcry. Acquittal, no matter how blatantly perverse, never does, even if brought about by highly paid forensic trickery."

"There is very little reliable information about how and why juries arrive at their verdicts because no one is allowed to listen to the discussions in the jury room. Lawyers obviously believe that public confidence in the jury would be undermined if this were allowed to happen. I find this curious. If exposing the truth about the jury would destroy the public's belief in its value, then surely it is high time that belief was destroyed I cannot think of any other social institution which is protected from rational inquiry because investigation might show that it wasn't doing its job. My own view is that the prosecution of those acquittals relating to those whom experienced police officers believe to be guilty is too high to be acceptable. I would not deny that sometimes commonsense and humanity produce an acquittal which could not be justified in law but this kind of case is much rarer than you might suppose. Much more frequent are the cases in which the defects and uncertainties in the system are ruthlessly exploited by the knowledgeable criminal and his advisers."

42A. Generally speaking we do not have any dispute with what has been said by the author but these observations have hardly any bearing on the question referred to in the case.

43. We have also gone through the observations in the following Article wherein it has been laid down by Shri Ram Jethmalani in an article titled as 'A lawyer Excommunicated' published in LEX ET JURIS wrote- -

"So important is the right of an accused to have the services of a lawyer that the Constitution-makers were not satisfied with the rights created by the successive Codes of Criminal Procedure. The Constitution- makers introduced it in the Fundamental Rights chapter so that no tyrannical regime could curtail or destroy it. Article 22 declares that no accused shall be denied the right to consult and to be defended by a legal practitioner of his choice."

".....The newly added Article 39A mandates that the legal system shall provide free legal aid to ensure that opportunities for securing justice are not denied to any citizen by reason of economic or other disabilities."

In another issue of the same magazine Soli Sorabjee an eminent lawyer wrote an Article 'Our Expanding Liberties wherein he wrote asunder :- -

"At present it is Article 21 which is the fountainhead of the freedom and liberties of the people of India. Yet, it is only ten years ago that the Supreme Court in its disastrous judgment in ADM

Jabalpur MANU/SC/0062/1976 : AIR 1976 SC 1207 held that on account of the suspension of Article 21 during the operation of the proclamation of Emergency the writ of habeas corpus was not available even in the case of an order of detention proven to be mala fide. Fortunately, after the Constitution (Forty- fourth) Amendment Act, which has made Article 21 non- suspendable even during an emergency, no Court can now deny to any person, at anytime, the full amplitude of Article 21 including its enforcement by a writ of habeas corpus or other appropriate writ.

There are indignant critics who charge that by an over- expansive interpretation of Article 21, the Supreme Court is acting as a super- legislature and is dabbling in matters outside its legitimate sphere. These critics forget that it is the proverbial tardiness of legislatures and the inertia, almost boardering on callousness, of the executive branch which provides a proper occasion for judicial activism. The judiciary can neither prevaricate nor procrastinate. It must respond if fundamental rights are to be living realities for the downtrodden and the oppressed. The Court is not legislating. It is adopting certain operational principles and attitudes within the framework of the Constitution.

May be the Court has "gone too far" in interpreting Article 21. If it has erred, it is an error which had made the blessings of liberty available in a real and meaningful way to numerous unfortunate and exploited segments of humanity. Indeed, the Court's recent role in this field indicates its commitment to 'Taking Rights Seriously' or, as Prof. Upendra Baxi has aptly said, "The Court is taking suffering seriously."

Ultimately, that is the real yardstick by which one can answer the question whether the Supreme Court of India is the sentinel on the qui vive for the bulk of its citizens."

A great emphasis has been laid on Article 21 of the Constitution of India which has been given new dimensions. Therefore, while considering the scope of right of hearing we are of the opinion that due consideration has to be given to Section 304 Cr. P.C. Articles 21 and 39A of the Constitution. Section 482 Cr. P.C. will have to be considered in the light of the aforesaid provisions. We have already mentioned above that in all civilized and democratic societies right of hearing has been considered to be one of the most fundamental of the fundamental rights flowing from principles of natural justice and principles enshrined in well known maxim audi alteram partem. Hon'ble Mr. Justice C. B. Bhargava white considering Dhanna's case (MANU/RH/0034/1963 : AIR 1963 Raj 104) did not consider the aforesaid aspect but st.ill after considering the various cases particularly Keshav Lal v. Gaveria, MANU/RH/0022/1952 : AIR 1952 Raj 50, Sri Ram v. Emperor AIR 1945 All 106, Chandrika v. Rex, MANU/UP/0075/1948 : AIR 1949 All 176, Ram Ballabh v. State MANU/BH/0113/1962, Mohan Singh v. Emperor, MANU/BH/0051/1943 : AIR 1944 Pat 209 and Bhagwandas v. The State AIR 1954 M B 10 and also considering his own judgment in Criminal Revision Petition No. 138/62 coupled with Rules 79 and 80 of the Rajasthan High Court Rules, did come to the conclusion that re- hearing of a revision or an appeal can be ordered if the conditions laid down in Section 561- A Cr. P. C. (S. 482 Cr. P.C now) are fulfilled but gave a caution that this power should be sparingly used and the test laid down in the section must be satisfied. Hon'ble Mr. Justice Lodha in C. Jacob's case 1986 Raj LR 506 has not only given due weight to the observations made by Hon'ble Bhargava, J. but has gone further and laid more emphasis on this right of re- hearing. He has only distinguished the same on facts. Hon'ble Justice Bhargava, J. had, on the merits of the case found that it was not clear from the application that the learned counsel was actually arguing any case before another Bench when the appeal was called for hearing. He further held that if the learned counsel had other cases listed on that day before other Benches he could have mentioned this case as provided by Rule 80 of the Rajasthan High Court Rules and, therefore, on merits he did not hear the appeal and it was because of these facts that Hon'ble Justice Lodha, J. in his judgment distinguished the said case and in our considered opinion Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sharma was not right when he held that Hon'ble Lodha, J. in C. Jacob's case had taken a different view not agreeing with the views of Hon'ble Bhargava, J. in case of Dhanna(MANU/RH/0034/1963 : AIR 1963 Raj 104). In fact Hon'ble Mr. Justice Lodha, J. has widened the scope of Section 482 Cr. P.C. and Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sharma himself in his order of reference has accepted that proposition. Considering the various aspects of the matter in our opinion there was no necessity of making a reference to this Court and we do not find that there was any difference of opinion between two Benches of this Court. On the contrary we find that even in the order of reference Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sharma has advanced the same logic and has opined that in view of Shaukin Singh's case (MANU/SC/0223/1981 : AIR 1981 SC 1698) a petition under Section 482 Cr. P.C. can be accepted.

44. Keeping the well known principles of interpretation of statute in our mind we deem it proper to observe that while considering the scope of Section 482 Cr. P.C. we must remember that inherent powers which are always inherent in a court are if (not) specifically provided by the legislature, all pervasive and comprehensive enough to arm the Court for advancing the cause of justice and to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court. It is a well known dictum that justice has not only to be done but it should also appear to have been done and, therefore, whenever a litigant comes before the Court it is essential that he must go having full faith in his mind that the Court has done justice with his case. It is true that all cannot go satisfied with the decision of the Court but at least all must have the satisfaction that they have been heard by the Court. The litigant who comes from different corners of the State cannot be expected to be around the Court when his case is called for hearing unless he has a competent and vigilant lawyer who informs him of approximate date of hearing of a case or the litigant himself is vigilant enough to keep in touch with his case, but most of the people who are illiterate and come to the Court have to bank on the information they receive, the treatment they gel and the advice which is tendered to them by their counsel. It can also not be expected that each and very litigant will have the lawyers of the same competence which the others can afford, but at the same time it is always expected from the learned counsel that they would do their best in the best interest of their client. Equally is the responsibility of the Registry in being cautious about notifying the cases properly when they come up for hearing. What we mean to say is that a litigant is always helpless and is at the mercy of the others, whoever makes a mistake ultimate sufferer is he. If the case is not properly shown in the daily cause- list, i.e. either the number is wrong or the title is not properly given or the name of the counsel representing not shown the case will go unattended and if the lawyer misses the case despite the fact that it is properly shown or is busy elsewhere and is unable to attend the Court again sufferer is the litigant, it is for the Courts to see that the record is properly looked into with the assistance of the counsel before the case is finally decided. At the same time Court must ensure that the absence of the counsel is neither deliberate nor meant to avoid the Bench, nor the litigant or his counsel has tried to over reach the Courts. The Courts in such case must not hesitate in proceeding against such persons.

45. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court in a case of Bhagwant Singh v. Commr. of Police, MANU/SC/0063/1985 : AIR 1985 SC 1285 even while giving interpretation to Section 173(2)(ii) Cr. P.C. have laid great emphasis on the right of hearing and held as under :

"in a case where the Magistrate to whom a report is forwarded under Sub- section (2) of Section 173 decides not to take cognizance of the offence and to drop the proceeding or takes the view that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against some of the persons mentioned in the First Information Report, the Magistrate must give notice to the informant and provide him an opportunity to be heard at the time of consideration of the report."

What we intend to emphasize is that right of hearing is very important right of which no litigant should be deprived. Thus on the consideration of all the cases cited and on the two cases quoted by learned single Judge, we answer the reference as under :

(i) That the power of re- call is different than the power of altering or reviewing the judgment.

(ii) That powers under Section 482 Cr. P.C. can be and should be exercised by this Court for re-calling the judgment in case the hearing is not given to the accused and the case falls within one of the three conditions laid down under Section 482 Cr. P.C.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 15 of 1979

Decided On: 09.11.1982

B.S. Sambhu Vs. T.S. Krishnaswamy

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A. Vardarajan and V.D. Tulzapurkar, JJ.

JUDGMENT

1. The question raised in this appeal is whether sanction under Section 197 Cr. P.C. is required for prosecuting the appellant who at the material time was working as Additional Munsiff and Judicial Magistrate First Class Madhugiri?

2. It appears that the respondent, an Advocate, was representing a party (defendant) in Suit No. 522 of 1973 which was being heard by the appellant. An application for transfer of the suit from his court to some other court was moved by the defendant before the District Court being Misc. Case No. 30 of 1975. The District Judge called for remarks from the appellant regarding certain allegations that were made in the transfer application. The appellant submitted his remarks in the form of DO. letter No. 16/75 dated 5th December, 1975 wherein he made the following statement:

In this connection I may also bring to your Honour's kind notice that the conduct and character of Sri T.S. Krishnaswamy are not good and that he misbehaves in the open Court making all nonsense allegations. Further, it is brought to my notice that Shri T.S. Krishnaswamy is a big gambler in this Town and is a rowdy also and on account of that he exhibits all sorts of rowdism in the open court. The District Judge is requested to safeguard him from the hands of such mischievous elements.

3. It appears that this letter was read out by the learned District Judge in open court. The respondent filed a criminal complaint against the appellant alleging that the aforesaid contents of the D.O. Letter amounted to his defamation under Section 499 I.P.C. A question was raised whether the Court could take cognizance of the offence without the sanction contemplated in Section 197 Cr.P.C. The learned Magistrate negatived the contention of the appellant that the sanction was necessary. In an application under Section 482 the High Court upheld in the Magistrate's view.

4. It was contended before us as was done before the High Court that the D.O. letter sent by the appellant to the District Judge was in discharge of his duties because the District Judge had called for the remarks and hence whatsoever had been written by the appellant was done while acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty and as such the ingredients of Section 197 Cr. P.C. were satisfied. It is not possible to accept this contention for in our view there is no reasonable nexus between the act complained of and the discharge of duty by the appellant. Calling the respondent as 'Rowdy', 'a big gambler' and 'a mischievous element' cannot even remotely be said to be connected with the discharge of official duty which was to offer his remarks regarding the allegations made in the transfer petition. In Matajog Dubey v. H.C. Bharil 1957 (2) SCR 925 this Court has laid down the test in these terms:

There must be a reasonable connection between the, act and the discharge of official duty; the act must bear such "relation to the duty that the accused could lay a reasonable, but not a pretended or fanciful claim, that he did it in the course of the performance of his duty.

Applying this test to the facts of the present case it is impossible to come to the conclusion that the act complained of has any connection with the discharge of official duty by the appellant.

5. We might refer to the decision of this Court in Pukhraj MANU/SC/0145/1973 : 1973CriLJ1795 case where the facts were similar to the facts in the instant case. 1 Pukhraj filed the complaint against the respondent No. 2, his superior officer, in the postal department, under secs. 323 and 502 of I.P.C. alleging that when he went with his certain complaint to the second respondent, the second respondent kicked him at his abdomen and abused him by saying "Sale gunde, bamash...." The second respondent raised the contention that the court could not take cognizance of the offence without sanction of the Government under Section 197 of the Cr.P.C. That contention was negatived and this Court posed the Question whether the acts complained of were done by the second respondent in purported exercise of his duties and applying the test laid down in Matajog Dubey's case held that the acts complained of, namely, kicking the complainant and abusing him could not be said to have been done in the course of the performance of the duty by the second respondent.

6. For the reasons indicated above we are satisfied that the High Court was right in coming to the conclusion that Section 197 was not attracted. There is, therefore, no substance in the appeal and the same is dismissed.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF HIMACHAL PRADESH

Decided On: 11.07.1979

Darshan Kumar Vs. Sushil Kumar Malhotra and Ors.

Back to Section 197 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

T.R. Handa, J.

ORDER

T.R. Handa, J.

1. The petitioner herein filed a criminal complaint under Sections 143, 148, 149, 379, 380, 382, 452, 453, 454, and 461 I. P. C. against all the 63 respondents in the court of Sub Divisional Magistrate, Chamba which complaint was later on with the enforcement of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 transferred to the Court of Chief Judicial Magistrate, Chamba. Respondents Nos. 1, 3 and 4 are admittedly public servants not removable from office save by or with permission of the State Government. The learned Chief Judicial Magistrate after recording the preliminary evidence of the petitioner, vide his order dated 10- 6- 1976 summoned only 21 out of 63 respondents under Sections 143, 379, 380 and 461 read with Section 149, Indian Penal Code. As regards respondents 'Nos. 1, 3 and 4 the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate observed that he could not take cognizance against these respondents without the sanction of the State Government as contemplated by Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as the act complained of against them was committed by them while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of their official duties. He accordingly refused to summon these three respondents.

2. The petitioner has now approached this Court in revision and has challenged the order of the Chief Judicial Magistrate dated 10- 6- 1976 in so far only as it lays down that he could not take cognizance of the offences against respondents Nos. 1, 3 and 4 without the prior sanction of the State Government under Section 197, Cr. P.C.

3. Thus the sole question that falls for consideration in this revision is with regard to the application of the provisions of Section 197, Cr P. C. on the facts of the present case. The very nature of the case, therefore, demands that the facts should be set out at some length.

4. The petitioner is the Director In- charge of Messrs. Stee- Men Limited. This company entered into a contract with the President of India through the then Executive Engineer, Chamba Division, H.P. P. W. D. Chamba for the construction of a 300 ft. span stiffened suspension bridge across

Ravi at Chamba vide agreement No. 10 of 1969- 1970, As both the parties relied upon Clauses 16 to 18 of this agreement, it is considered expedient to quote these Clauses in extenso and the same are reproduced as under:

Clause 16 : - The works comprised in this tender are to be commenced after 15 days on receipt of written orders from the Divisional Officer to commence work. The time allowed 'for carrying out the work as entered in the tender shall be strictly observed by the contractor on the part of the Contractor and shall be reckoned from the fifteenth day after the date on which the order to commence the work is issued to the contractor. The work shall throughout the stipulated period of the contract be proceeded with all due diligence and the contractor shall pay as compensation an amount equal to one per cent, or such smaller amount as the Superintending Engineer (whose decision in writing shall be final) may decide on the amount of the estimated cost of the whole work shown in the tender for every day that work remains uncommenced, or unfinished after the proper dates. And further, to ensure good progress during the execution of the work, the contractor shall be bound in all cases in which the time allowed for any work exceeds, one month (save for special jobs) to complete one- eighth of the whole of the work before one- fourth of the whole of the time allowed under the contract has elapsed, three- eighths of the work before one-half of such time has elapsed, and three- fourths of the whole of the work before three- fourths of such time has elapsed. However, for special jobs if a time schedule has been submitted by the contractor and the same had been accepted by the Engineer- in- Charge, the contractor shall comply with the said time schedule. In the event of the contractor failing to comply with this condition he shall be liable to pay as compensation an amount equal to one per cent or such smaller amount as Superintending Engineer (whose decision in "writing shall be final) may decide on the said estimated cost of the whole work for every day that the due quantity of work remains incomplete, provided always that the entire amount of compensation to be paid under the provisions of this clause shall not exceed ten per cent on the estimated cost of the work as shown in the tender.

Clause 17 : - - In any case in which under any clause or clauses of this contract the contractor(s) shall have rendered himself/themselves liable to pay compensation amounting to the whole of his/their security deposit (whether paid in one sum or deducted by instalment) or committed a breach or a persistent breach of any of the terms contained in Clause 16, the Divisional Officer on behalf of the President of India, shall have power to adopt any of the following courses, as he may deem best suited to the interests of Government,

(a) To rescind the contract of which rescission notice in writing to the contractor(s) under the hand of the Divisional Officer shall be conclusive evidence, and in which case the security deposit of the contractor(s) shall stand forfeited, and be absolutely at the disposal of the Government.

(b) To employ labour paid by the P. W. D. and to supply materials to carry out the work or any part of the work, debiting the contractor(s) with the cost of the labour and the price (certificate of the Divisional Officer shall be final and conclusive) against the contractor (s) and crediting him them with the value of the work done, the certificate of the Divisional Officer as to the value of the work done shall be final and conclusive against the con tractor (s) of the material of the amount of which costs and price.

(c) After giving notice, to the contractor to measure up the work of the contractor and to take such part of the work as shall remain unexecuted out of his/their hands and to give it to another/other contractors to complete in which case any expenses which may be incurred in excess of the sum which would have been paid to the original contractor (s) if the whole work had been executed by him/them (of the amount of which excess the certificate in writing of the Divisional Officer shall be final and conclusive) shall be borne and paid by original contractor(s) and may be deducted from any money due to them by Government. Under the contractor or otherwise or from his/their security deposit or the proceeds of the sale thereof or a sufficient part thereof.

In the event of any of the above courses being adopted by the Divisional Officer the contractor (s) shall have no claim to compensation for any loss sustained by him/them by reasons of his/their having purchased or procured any materials or entered into any engagements or made any advances on account of or with a view to the execution of the work or the performances of the contractor. And in case the contract shall be rescinded under the provision aforesaid the contractor (s) shall not be entitled to recover or be paid any sum for any work therefore actually performed under this contract unless and until the Divisional Officer will have certified in writing the performance of such work and the value payable in respect thereof and he/they shall only be entitled to be paid the value so certified.

Clause 18: - In any case in which any of the powers conferred upon the Divisional Officer, by Clause 17 hereof, shall have become exercisable and the same shall not be exercised the non-exercise thereof shall not constitute a waiver of any of the conditions hereof and such powers shall notwithstanding be exercisable in the event of any future case of default by the contractor(s) for which by any clause or clauses hereof he is/they are declared liable to pay compensation amounting to the whole of his/their security deposit and the liability of the contractor (s) for - past and future compensation shall remain unaffected. In the event of the Divisional Officer putting in force either of the power (s) or/and (c) vested in him and the preceding clause he may if so desired take possession of all or any tools, plant materials and stores in or upon the works or the site thereof or belonging to the contractor procured by him/them are intended to be used for the extension of the work or any part thereof paying or allowing for the same in account at the contract rates or in case of these not being applicable at current market rates to be certified by the Divisional Officer whose certificate thereof shall be final otherwise the Divisional Officer may by notice in writing to the contractor (s) or his/their clerk or the works foreman or other authorised agent require him/them remove such tools, plant, materials or stores from the premises (within a time to be specified in such notice) in the event of the contractor (s) failing to comply with any such requisition the Divisional Officer may remove them at the contractor's expenses or sell them by auction or private sale on account of the contractor (s) and at his/their risk in all respect and the certificate of the Divisional Officer as to the expense of any such sale shall be final and conclusive against the contractors.

5. In pursuance of this agreement the site for the construction of the aforesaid bridge was handed over to the company by the then Executive Engineer, Chamba for execution of the "work. The company after taking possession of the site brought the requisite machinery etc. for the construction of the said bridge except some items like cement, steel, C. I. ropes etc. which were to be supplied by the Department in accordance with the terms of the agreement. On 5- 7- 1971 however, the then Executive Engineer, Chamba Division, rescinded the contract referred to above on the ground of 'slow progress of the work'. The company thereupon approached the Government as a result whereof the order of rescission passed by the Executive Engineer was revoked. An intimation to that effect was conveyed to the company by the Executive Engineer on 5- 11- 4971. The dispute that arose between the company and the Department at the time of the original rescission of the contract were referred to the arbitrator. After the rescission order was withdrawn, the company restarted the construction work and made considerable progress. The then Executive Engineer, Chamba, Shri S. P. Punani, however, vide his order dated 5- 6- 1972 levied a penalty of Rs. 63,000/~ on the company on the ground of slow progress. Two days later on 7- 6- 1972 the said Executive Engineer again issued an order rescinding the contract on the pretext of 'slow progress'. The company thereupon approached the arbitrator with its grievances as the proceedings were still pending before the arbitrator.

6. On 13- 6- 1972 the then Executive Engineer, Chamba for the first time made an attempt to take forcible possession of the site of the bridge along- with the property lying thereon from the company with the assistance of his own men. That attempt of the Executive Engineer was successfully resisted by the petitioner who on coming to know of the designs of the Executive Engineer had arranged for police protection in advance. Thereafter on 13- 9- 1972 respondent No. 1 who had then taken over as Executive Engineer, Chamba sent a telegram to the petitioner . stating therein that under Clause 18 of the agreement, respondent No. 1 would be implementing the order of rescission dated 7- 6- 1972 on 15- 9- 1972 at 10.30 a.m. Respondent No. 1 further directed vide the aforesaid telegram to the petitioner to depute some representatives as respondent No. 1 intended to take final measurements and also the control of the property. In pursuance to that telegram respondent No. 1 accompanied by respondents 3 and 5 and some other 50 Beldars duly armed with Gentis, Belchas and Jhabbals actually came to the spot at 10.30 a.m. on 15- 9- 1972 to take forcible possession from the company. The petitioner, however, did not permit them to enter upon the site unless they showed him some order of a competent court. The petitioner had also arranged for police force and the A. S. I. present on the spot also told respondent No. 1 that he could help respondent No. 1 in taking over possession only after respondent No. 1 produced orders from some competent Court to that effect. As respondent No. 1 insisted to take possession, the A. S. I. informed the District authorities of his difficulties on which the Sub- Divisional Magistrate, Chamba reached the spot by about 12.30 p. m. where he held a conference with respondent No. I and the Managing Director of the company. After holding some talks the Sub Divisional Magistrate left at about 1.30 p. m. without passing any order. Respondent No. 1, after the departure of the Sub Divisional Magistrate again tried to take forcible possession of the site and the material which the petitioner was again successful in resisting with the help of the police. Respondent. No. 1 along with his men had to go back without success. Respondent Nos. 3 and 5, however, on that day made a written complaint to the A. S. I, respondent No. 6 who on that complaint wrongfully arrested the petitioner under Section 353, I. P. C.

7. On the following day, that is, 1.6- 9- 1972 respondent No. 1 accompanied by the other respondents again visited the spot at about 1 p.m. to take forcible possession. It was a local holiday on that day and for that reason the company was also having an off day and no work was in progress on the site. Only three Chowkidars of the company were present to guard the site on that day. The respondents after wrongfully arresting those three Chowkidars on duty, entered upon the site where they broke open the locks of the office, store room, almirahs and Chowkidars' quarters and dishonestly removed movable property of the company from its possession and without its consent. Besides other movables, cash amount of Rs. 14,365- 00 which was lying in the office of the company was also removed by the respondents. Thus according to the petitioner, the respondents after forming themselves into an unlawful assembly with intent to take forcible possession from the company had committed the offences as stated in the complaint.

8. The learned Chief Judicial Magistrate examined four witnesses including Darshan Kumar petitioner, who were produced before him in the course of preliminary enquiry. Out of them P. W. 1 is Shri Darshan Kumar, Director Incharge of the company and P. W. 4 is Shri Gopi Krishan - the Managing Director of the Company. Neither of them was present on the spot at the time of the alleged occurrence and as such ,they are not in a position to, depose as to what actually happened on the spot. The other two witnesses, namely, P. W. 2 Hanif- Ula and P. W. 3 Kesar Singh are stated to be the eye witnesses who witnessed the occurrence. According to versions of these two P. Ws, which are almost identical, respondents 1, 3 and 4 along- with their Beldars and a police party reached the site of the work in the afternoon of 16- 9- 1972 where only three Chowkidara were present at that time. As the Chowkidars refused to allow entry to the respondents, the police party accompanying the respondents arrested all the three Chowkidars. Thereafter the respondents entered upon the site where they fixed their own locks and started construction work. Neither of these witnesses stated if the respondents broke open the locks on the spot or if they removed any article from the site.

9. The petitioner, Shri Darshan Kumar Vig, appearing as P. W. 1 and the Managing Director of the Company Shri Gopi Krishan Khanna appearing as P. W. 4 deposed about the events which are alleged to have taken place prior to the date of actual occurrence, that is 16- 9- 1972. They reiterated the allegations made in the complaint which have already been referred to in details in the earlier part of this judgment.

10. Now to clear the ground for consideration of the application of the provisions of Section 197 Cr. P. C. to the facts of the instant case, it may be stated that from the preliminary evidence produced by the petitioner, the following facts were established before the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate when he passed the impugned order:

(i) That respondents 1, 3 and 4 who were officers of the Public Works Department of the Himachal Pradesh Government were then posted in Chamba Division and they were public servants not removable from office save by or with the permission of the State Government.

(ii) That the company entered into an agreement with the President of India through the Executive Engineer, Chamba which post at the relevant time was held by respondent No. 1, for the construction of a bridge over the river Ravi at Chamba.

(iii) That the work of construction of such bridge was of very urgent nature and for that reason time had been made the essence of the contract between the Government and the Company.

(iv) That respondent No. 1 was the officer responsible to ensure that the progress of the work was effected in accordance with the time schedule.

(v) In case of breach in the time schedule for construction of the bridge, respondent No. 1 had been empowered under the contract aforesaid to:

(a) rescind the contract;

(b) employ Departmental labour and to supply Departmental material at the expense of the company in order to maintain the progress of the work.

(c) After giving notice to the company to measure up the work of the company and to take up the unexecuted part of the work in his own hand for completion either through some other contractor or through Departmental labour.

(vi) That in exercise of such powers, the then Executive Engineer, Chamba for the first time on 5-7- 1971 rescinded the contract on the ground of slow progress of work which rescission was however, later on withdrawn on 5- 11- 1971.

(vii) Again for the some reason, the then Executive Engineer, Chamba, the predecessor- in-interest of respondent No. 1 imposed a penalty of 63.000/- on the company on the ground of slow progress on 5- 6- 1972 and two days later the same , officer rescinded the contract again on the ground of slow progress of work.

(viii) That on 13- 6- 1972 the then Executive Engineer in pursuance of his order rescinding the contract made an attempt to take over the control of the work from the company but that attempt was resisted by the company and hence the Executive Engineer could 'not take control over the work.

(ix) That on 13- 9- 1972 respondent No. 1 sent telegraphic intimation to the company expressing his intention to take over control of the work as per Clause 18 of the agreement in implementation of the order of rescission dated 7- 6- 1972 passed by his predecessor. In his telegram respondent No. 1 notified 15- 9- 1972 as the date and 10.30 a.m. as the hour for taking such action and further advised the company to depute some of his representatives so that final measurements could also be taken along with the control of the property in terms of Clause 18 of the contract.

(x) That as notified earlier vide the telegram referred to above, the respondent No. 1 along with his men visited the site to take measurements and control of the construction work but the company resisted and respondent No. 1 therefore had to return without accomplishing his object.

(xi) That on the following day, that is, 16- 9- 1972 respondent No. 1 again with his men and after securing the police help visited the site in order to take» possession and this time only three chowkidars of the company were found present who refused to surrender. The police accompanying the party of respondent No. 1, accordingly put all the three Chowkidars under arrest whereafter there was nobody to offer resistance on the site. Respondent No. 1 and his men then entered upon the site, affixed their own locks and started construction work to complete the incomplete portion.

(xii) That no, machinery, material, cash or any other article was removed by any of the respondents from the site as is apparent from the evidence of the two eye witnesses examined by the petitioner.

11. The provisions of Section 197 (1), Cr, P. C. which have been attracted by the Chief Judicial Magistrate in his impugned order read as under:

Section 197 (1) : - When any person who is or was a Judge or Magistrate or a public servant not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction-

(a) In the case of a person who is employed or, as the case may be, was at the time of commission of the alleged offence employed, in connection with the affairs of the Union, of the Central Government.

(b) in the case of a person who is employed or, as the case may be, was at the time of commission of the alleged offence employed, in connection with affairs of a State, of the State Government.

12. The effect, meaning, scope and interpretation of this provision has been the subject matter of several decisions announced by both the Privy Council as also the Supreme Court from time to time. The Privy Council as early as in 1948 in case H. H. B. Gill v. The King reported as MANU/PR/0013/1948 while explaining the circumstances under which the protection afforded by this section to a public servant is available observed that the test may well be whether the public servant, if challenged, can reasonably claim that, what he does, he does in virtue of his office. The matter again came up for consideration before the Supreme Court in the case of Matajog Dobey v. H. C. Bhari reported as MANU/SC/0071/1955 : [1955]28ITR941(SC) wherein it was observed that in order to attract the protection of this section it must be shown that 'the offence alleged to have been committed must have something to do, or must be related in some manner, with the discharge of official duty...There must be a reasonable connection between the act and the official duty...What the Court must find out is whether the act and the official duty are so interrelated that one can postulate reasonably that it was done by the accused in the performance of the official duty, though possibly in excess of the needs and requirements of the situation.' Again in the case Prabhakar V. Sinari v. Shanker Anant Verlekar reported as MANU/SC/0306/1968 : 1969CriLJ1057 the Supreme Court while explaining the scope of Section 197(1) and the circumstances under which this provision can be attracted observed as under:

What has to be found out is whether the act complained of and the official duty in the performance of which such act is alleged to have been committed are so interrelated that one could postulate reasonably that it was done by the accused in the performance of the official duty though possibly in excess of the needs and requirements of the situation. Of course it is not every offence committed by a public servant which required sanction for prosecution under Section 197 (1), Cr, P. C. nor even every act done by him while he was actually engaged in the performance of his official duties. But if the act complained of was directly concerned with his official duly so that, if questioned, it could be claimed to have been done by virtue of the office, then sanction would be necessary and that would be so, irrespective of whether it was in fact, a proper discharge of his duty or not.

In the case of Bhagwan Prasad Srivastava v. N.P. Mishra reported as MANU/SC/0093/1970 : 1970CriLJ1401 . Hon'ble Justice Dua who delivered the main judgment observed that 'S. 197 is neither to be too narrowly construed nor too widely....' There must be a reasonable connection between the act and the discharge of official duty. The act must fall within the scope and range of the official duties of the public servant concerned.

13. Thus the crux of the matter is that in order to determine whether in a particular case a public servant is entitled to the protection of Section 197, Cr. P. C. all that has to be considered is whether the act complained of against the public servant which is alleged to constitute the offence, was committed by him while discharging his official duty and that such act had a reasonable connection with his official duty. It is not material whether in discharging such official duty, the public servant acted somewhat in excess of his limits.

14. The pertinent question that next arises is as to what considerations should prevail and what tests need be applied for determining as to whether there was a reasonable connection between the act complained of and the official duty of the concerned public servant. Whereas it is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rules of universal application for the determination of this question, one safe and sure test in this regard would in my view be, to consider if the omission or neglect on the part of the public servant to commit the act complained of could have made him answerable for a charge of dereliction of his official duties. A negative answer to this question may not clinch the issue but if the answer to this question is in the affirmative, it may be said without the least hesitation and without any further probe that such act was committed by the public servant while acting in the discharge of his official duty and there was every connection with the act complained of and the official duty of the public servant.

15. If we apply the above test in the instant case, there would be no difficulty in upholding the view taken by the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate that he could not take cognizance against respondents Nos. 1, 3 and 4 without the prior sanction of the State Government under Section 197, Cr. P. C. As already stated, respondent No. 1 is the Executive Engineer who is entrusted with the work of construction of the Bridge at River Ravi at Chamba for the construction of which the contract had been given to the Company. It is apparent from Clause 16 of the agreement referred to above that this construction work was of urgent nature and accordingly time had been made the essence of the contract between the Government and the Company. It was to ensure that there was no delay in the construction of this work that certain powers had been vested by virtue of Clauses 16 to 18 of the agreement in the Executive Engineer who had been fixed with the responsibility of getting the bridge completed in time. It was towards the discharge of this duty of getting the construction work completed in time that the predecessors of respondent No. 1 had on two earlier occasions rescinded the contract and one of them had actually made an effort on 13th June, 1972 to take control of the work. Respondent No. 1 towards the discharge of the same duty and in exercise of the power vested in him under Clause 18 of the agreement issued telegraphic notice to the Company conveying his intention to take measurements as also the control of the work for its expeditious completion. Respondent No. 1 then actually proceeded to the spot on 15th September, 1972 in pursuance of his telegraphic notice but like a disciplined public servant he came back when resistance was offered to him on behalf of the Company. On the next day after taking police help, he again went to the spot and entered upon the site when no resistance was offered and immediately thereafter started the construction work for which purpose he had gone to take possession of the site. I have no doubt in my mind that all that was done by respondent No. 1 with the aid of his staff was done in the discharge of his duties. In case respondent No. 1 had not acted in such a manner and let the things lie as they were, he would certainly have been answerable to his superiors for the delay in the construction of the bridge which could be attributed to inaction on his part. The circumstances as brought on the record fully establish that it was the duty of respondent No. 1 to see that the progress of the construction work was in accordance with the time schedule and that in case of delay he could take immediate action and take over control of the work for completing the same through some other contractor or, through departmental aid. Respondent No. 1 in doing the act complained of did nothing beyond what he was required to do as a matter of his official duty. The case of respondents Nos. 3 and 4 is not different.

16. I thus find that the act complained of against respondents No. 1, 3 and 4 was committed by them in the discharge of their official duties and it was reasonably connected with their official duty so as to require prior sanction of the State Government for prosecuting them in respect of the offence, if any, made out from the commission of such acts.

17. In the result, I find no force in this Revision Petition which is hereby dismissed.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. ... of 2010 (Arising out of SLP (Crl.) No. 6374 of 2010)

Decided On: 20.09.2010

Sajjan Kumar Vs. Central Bureau of Investigation

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

P. Sathasivam and Anil R. Dave, JJ.

JUDGMENT

P. Sathasivam, J.

1. Application for intervention is allowed.

2. Leave granted.

3. This appeal is directed against the order of the High Court of Delhi at New Delhi dated 19.07.2010 whereby the learned single Judge confirmed the order dated 15.05.2010 passed by the District Judge- VII/NE- cum- Additional Sessions Judge, Karkardooma Courts, Delhi in S.C. No. 26/10, RC SII 2005 S0024. By the said order, the Additional Sessions Judge has ordered the framing of charges against the appellant for offences punishable under Section 120B read with Sections 153A, 295, 302, 395, 427, 436, 339 and 505 of the Indian Penal Code (hereinafter referred to as "IPC") and for the offence under Section 109 read with Sections 147, 148, 149, 153A, 295, 302, 395, 427, 435, 339 and 505 IPC, besides framing of a separate charge for offence punishable under Section 153A IPC and rejected the application for discharge filed by the appellant.

4. Brief Facts:

(a) The present case arises out of 1984 anti- Sikh Riot cases in which thousands of Sikhs were killed. Delhi Police has made this case a part of FIR No. 416 of 1984 registered at Police Station Delhi Cantt. In this FIR, 24 complaints were investigated pertaining to more than 60 deaths in the area. As many as 5 charge- sheets were filed by Delhi Police relating to 5 deaths which resulted in acquittals. One supplementary charge- sheet about robbery, rioting etc. was also filed which also ended in acquittal. The investigation pertaining to the death of family members of Smt.

Jagdish Kaur PW- 1, was reopened by the anti- Riot Cell of Delhi Police in the year 2002 and after investigation, a Closure Report was filed in the Court on 15/22.12.2005.

(b) After filing of the Closure Report in the present case, on 31.07.2008, a Status Report was filed by the Delhi Police before the Metropolitan Magistrate, Patiala House Court, New Delhi. Pursuant to the recommendation of Justice Nanavati Commission, the Government of India entrusted the investigation to the Central Bureau of Investigation (hereinafter referred to as "CBI") on 24.10.2005. On receipt of the said communication, the respondent- CBI registered a formal FIR on 22.11.2005. The Closure Report was filed by Delhi Police on 15.12.2005/22.12.2005, when a case had already been registered by the CBI on 22.11.2005 and the documents had already been transferred to the respondent- CBI.

(c) After fresh investigation, CBI filed charge- sheet bearing No. 1/2010 in the present case on 13.01.2010. After committal, charges were framed on 15.05.2010. At the same time, the appellant has also filed a petition for discharge raising various grounds in support of his claim. Since he was not successful before the Special Court, he filed a revision before the High Court and by the impugned order dated 19.07.2010, after finding no merit in the case of the appellant, the High Court dismissed his criminal revision and directed the Trial Court for early completion of the trial since the same is pending from 1984.

5. Heard Mr. U.U. Lalit, learned senior counsel for the appellant, Mr. H.P. Rawal, learned Additional Solicitor General for the respondent- CBI and Mr. Dushyant Dave, learned senior counsel for the intervenor.

6. Submissions:

(a) After taking us through the charge- sheet dated 13.01.2010, statements of PW- 1, PW- 2 and PW- 10, order dated 15.05.2010 framing charges by the District Judge, Karkardooma Courts, Delhi and the impugned order of the High Court dated 19.07.2010, Mr. Lalit, learned senior counsel for the appellant submitted that i) the statement of Jagdish Kaur is highly doubtful and later she made an improvement, hence the same cannot be relied upon to frame charge against the appellant; ii) reliance on the evidence of Jagsher Singh PW- 2, who gave a statement after a gap of 25 years cannot be accepted; iii) the statement of Nirprit Kaur PW- 10 is also not acceptable since the same was also made after a gap of 25 years of the occurrence; iv) other witnesses who were examined in support of the prosecution specifically admitted that they did not see the appellant at the time of alleged commission of offence; v) inasmuch as the charge has been framed after 25 years of occurrence, proceeding against the appellant, at this juncture, is violative of his constitutional right under Article 21; vi) after filing of the closure report by the Delhi Police, by following the procedure, the present action of the CBI conducting further re- investigation and filing charge- sheet based on fresh and improved materials is impermissible in law; vii) follow-up action based on the recommendation of Justice Nanavati Commission is also impermissible at this juncture; viii) many remarks/observations made by the High Court are uncalled for and based on conjectures and surmises and also without there being any material on record. If those observations are not deleted from the order of the High Court, it would amount to directing the trial Judge to convict the appellant without proper proof and evidence.

(b) On the other hand, Mr. H.P. Rawal, learned Additional Solicitor General appearing for the CBI submitted that in view of categorical statement by the victims before Justice Nanavati Commission and its recommendation which was deliberated in the Parliament, the Government of India took a decision to entrust further/re- investigation in respect of 1984 anti- Sikh riots through CBI. According to him, the present action by the CBI and framing of charges against the appellant and others is in consonance with Sections 227 and 228 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (hereinafter referred to as "Cr.P.C."). He also submitted that at the stage of framing of the charges, the material on record has not to be examined meticulously; a prima facie finding of sufficient material showing grave suspicion is enough to frame a charge. He pointed out that there is nothing illegal with the order framing charge which was rightly affirmed by the High Court. He further submitted that the High Court has not exceeded in making observations and, in any event, it would not affect the merits of the case.

(c) Mr. Dushyant Dave, learned senior counsel for the intervenor, while reiterating the stand taken by the learned Additional Solicitor General supported the order of the District Judge framing charges as well as the order of the High Court dismissing the criminal revision filed by the appellant. He pointed out that it is not a case for interference under Article 136 of the Constitution of India. No prejudice would be caused to the appellant and he has to face the trial. He further contended that the delay cannot be a ground for interference.

Relevant Provisions:

7. Before considering the claim of the parties, it is useful to refer Sections 227 and 228 of the Cr.P.C. which are reproduced below:

227. Discharge.- If, upon consideration of the record of the case and the documents submitted therewith, and after hearing the submissions of the accused and the prosecution in this behalf, the Judge considers that there is not sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused, he shall discharge the accused and record his reasons for so doing.

228. Framing of charge- (1) If, after such consideration and hearing as aforesaid, the Judge is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence which-

(a) is not exclusively triable by the Court of Session, he may, frame a charge against the accused and, by order, transfer the case for trial to the Chief Judicial Magistrate or any other Judicial Magistrate of the first class and direct the accused to appear before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, or, as the case may be, the Judicial Magistrate of the first class, on such date as he deems fit, and thereupon such Magistrate shall try the offence in accordance with the procedure for the trial of warrant- cases instituted on a police report;

(b) is exclusively triable by the Court, he shall frame in writing a charge against the accused.

(2) Where the Judge frames any charge under Clause (b) of Sub- section (1), the charge shall be read and explained to the accused and the accused shall be asked whether he pleads guilty of the offence charged or claims to be tried.

It is clear that the Judge concerned has to consider all the records of the case, the documents placed, hear the submission of the accused and the prosecution and if there is "not sufficient ground" (Emphasis supplied) for proceeding against the accused, he shall discharge the accused by recording reasons. If after such consideration and hearing, as mentioned in Section 227, if the Judge is of the opinion that "there is ground for presuming" (Emphasis supplied) that the accused has committed an offence, he is free to direct the accused to appear and try the offence in accordance with the procedure after framing charge in writing against the accused. Statements of PW- 1, PW- 2, PW- 8 and PW- 10

8. Mr. Lalit, learned senior counsel for the appellant pointed out that the prosecution, for framing the impugned charges, heavily relied on the statements of Jagdish Kaur, Jagsher Singh and Nirprit Kaur. He also took us through their statements made at various stages which are available in the paper- book. It is true that Jagdish Kaur PW- 1, in her statement under Section 161 Cr.P.C. dated 20.01.1985, did not mention the name of the appellant. Even in the affidavit dated 07.09.1985, filed before Justice Ranganath Misra Commission she has not whispered a word about the role of the appellant. According to him, for the first time i.e. in the year 2000, after a gap of 15 years an affidavit was filed before Justice Nanavati Commission, wherein she referred the name of the appellant and his role along with certain local Congress workers. According to Mr. Lalit, except the above statement in the form of an affidavit before Justice Nanavati Commission, she had not attributed anything against the appellant in the categorical statements made on 20.01.1985 as well as on 07.09.1985 before Justice Ranganath Misra Commission.

9. He also pointed out that even after submission of Justice Nanavati Commission's report and entrusting the investigation to CBI, she made a statement before the CBI officers at the initial stage by mentioning "that the mob was being led by Congress leaders". Only in later part of her statement, she mentioned that "she learnt that Sajjan Kumar, the Member of Parliament was conducting meeting in the area". She confirmed the statement in the form of an affidavit dated 07.09.1985 filed before Justice Ranganath Misra Commission as well as her deposition with regard to the appellant before Justice Nanavati Commission on 08.01.2002. No doubt, in the last part of her statement, it was stated that in the year 1984- 85, the atmosphere was totally against the Sikh community and under pressure she did not mention the name of Sajjan Kumar. She also informed that she could not mention his name for the safety of her children.

10. The other witness Jagsher Singh, first cousin of Jagdish Kaur, in his statement recorded by the CBI on 07.11.2007 i.e. after a gap of 23 years, mentioned the name of the appellant and his threat to Sikhs as well as to Hindus who had given shelter to Sikhs. According to Mr. Lalit, this witness mentioned the name of the appellant for the first time before the CBI nearly after 23 years of the incident which, according to him, cannot be relied upon.

11. The other witness relied on by the prosecution in support of framing of charges is Nirprit Kaur PW- 10. It is pointed out that she also made certain statements to the CBI after a gap of 23 years and she did not mention the name of the appellant except stating that one Balwan Khokhar who is alleged to be a nephew of Sajjan Kumar, came to her house for discussing employment for her nephew as driver.

12. The other statement relied on by the prosecution in support of framing of charges against the appellant is that of Om Prakash PW- 8. He narrated that during the relevant time he had given shelter to a number of women and children of Sikh community including Jagdish Kaur PW- 1. Mr. Lalit pointed out that in his statement, he did not even utter a word about the appellant but at the end of his statement on being asked, stated that he knew Shri Sajjan Kumar, Member of Parliament. However, he further stated that he did not see him in that mob or even in their area during the said period. In the last sentence, he expressed that he had heard from the people in general that Sajjan Kumar was also involved in the 1984 riots.

13. By pointing out the earlier statement of Jagdish Kaur PW- 1, recorded by the CBI, her affidavit before Justice Nanavati Commission and the statement of Jagsher Singh PW- 2, Nirpreet Kaur PW- 10 and Om Prakash PW- 8 before the CBI, Mr. Lalit submitted that there was no assertion by anyone about the specific role of the appellant except the bald statement and that too after 23 years. In such circumstances, according to him, the materials relied on by the prosecution are not sufficient to frame charges. According to him, mere suspicion is not sufficient for which he relied on the judgments of this Court in Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal and Anr. MANU/SC/0414/1978 : (1979) 3 SCC 4 and Dilawar Balu Kurane v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0005/2002 : (2002) 2 SCC 135.

14. In Prafulla Kumar Samal (supra), the scope of Section 227 of the Cr.P.C. was considered. After adverting to various decisions, this Court has enumerated the following principles:

(1) That the Judge while considering the question of framing the charges under Section 227 of the Code has the undoubted power to sift and weigh the evidence for the limited purpose of finding out whether or not a prima facie case against the accused has been made out.

(2) Where the materials placed before the Court disclose grave suspicion against the accused which has not been properly explained the Court will be fully justified in framing a charge and proceeding with the trial.

(3) The test to determine a prima facie case would naturally depend upon the facts of each case and it is difficult to lay down a rule of universal application. By and large however if two views are equally possible and the Judge is satisfied that the evidence produced before him while giving rise to some suspicion but not grave suspicion against the accused, he will be fully within his right to discharge the accused.

(4) That in exercising his jurisdiction under Section 227 of the Code the Judge which under the present Code is a senior and experienced court cannot act merely as a Post Office or a mouthpiece of the prosecution, but has to consider the broad probabilities of the case, the total effect of the evidence and the documents produced before the Court, any basic infirmities appearing in the case and so on. This however does not mean that the Judge should make a roving enquiry into the pros and cons of the matter and weigh the evidence as if he was conducting a trial.

15. In Dilawar Balu Kurane (supra), the principles enunciated in Prafulla Kumar Samal (supra) have been reiterated and it was held:

12. Now the next question is whether a prima facie case has been made out against the appellant. In exercising powers under Section 227 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the settled position of law is that the Judge while considering the question of framing the charges under the said section has the undoubted power to sift and weigh the evidence for the limited purpose of finding out whether or not a prima facie case against the accused has been made out; where the materials placed before the court disclose grave suspicion against the accused which has not been properly explained the court will be fully justified in framing a charge and proceeding with the trial; by and large if two views are equally possible and the Judge is satisfied that the evidence produced before him while giving rise to some suspicion but not grave suspicion against the accused, he will be fully justified to discharge the accused, and in exercising jurisdiction under Section 227 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Judge cannot act merely as a post office or a mouthpiece of the prosecution, but has to consider the broad probabilities of the case, the total effect of the evidence and the documents produced before the court but should not make a roving enquiry into the pros and cons of the matter and weigh the evidence as if he was conducting a trial (see Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal).

14. We have perused the records and we agree with the above views expressed by the High Court. We find that in the alleged trap no police agency was involved; the FIR was lodged after seven days; no incriminating articles were found in the possession of the accused and statements of witnesses were recorded by the police after ten months of the occurrence. We are, therefore, of the opinion that not to speak of grave suspicion against the accused, in fact the prosecution has not been able to throw any suspicion. We, therefore, hold that no prima facie case was made against the appellant.

16. It is clear that at the initial stage, if there is a strong suspicion which leads the Court to think that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence, then it is not open to the court to say that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. The presumption of the guilt of the accused which is to be drawn at the initial stage is only for the purpose of deciding prima facie whether the Court should proceed with the trial or not. If the evidence which the prosecution proposes to adduce prove the guilt of the accused even if fully accepted before it is challenged in cross- examination or rebutted by the defence evidence, if any, cannot show that the accused committed the offence, then there will be no sufficient ground for proceeding with the trial. A Magistrate enquiring into a case under Section 209 of the Cr.P.C. is not to act as a mere Post Office and has to come to a conclusion whether the case before him is fit for commitment of the accused to the Court of Session. He is entitled to sift and weigh the materials on record, but only for seeing whether there is sufficient evidence for commitment, and not whether there is sufficient evidence for conviction. If there is no prima facie evidence or the evidence is totally unworthy of credit, it is the duty of the Magistrate to discharge the accused, on the other hand, if there is some evidence on which the conviction may reasonably be based, he must commit the case. It is also clear that in exercising jurisdiction under Section 227 of Cr.P.C., the Magistrate should not make a roving enquiry into the pros and cons of the matter and weigh the evidence as if he was conducting a trial.

17. Exercise of jurisdiction under Sections 227 & 228 of Cr.P.C.

On consideration of the authorities about the scope of Section 227 and 228 of the Code, the following principles emerge:

(i) The Judge while considering the question of framing the charges under Section 227 of the Cr.P.C. has the undoubted power to sift and weigh the evidence for the limited purpose of finding out whether or not a prima facie case against the accused has been made out. The test to determine prima facie case would depend upon the facts of each case.

(ii) Where the materials placed before the Court disclose grave suspicion against the accused which has not been properly explained, the Court will be fully justified in framing a charge and proceeding with the trial.

(iii) The Court cannot act merely as a Post Office or a mouthpiece of the prosecution but has to consider the broad probabilities of the case, the total effect of the evidence and the documents produced before the Court, any basic infirmities etc. However, at this stage, there cannot be a roving enquiry into the pros and cons of the matter and weigh the evidence as if he was conducting a trial.

(iv) If on the basis of the material on record, the Court could form an opinion that the accused might have committed offence, it can frame the charge, though for conviction the conclusion is required to be proved beyond reasonable doubt that the accused has committed the offence.

(v) At the time of framing of the charges, the probative value of the material on record cannot be gone into but before framing a charge the Court must apply its judicial mind on the material placed on record and must be satisfied that the commission of offence by the accused was possible.

(vi) At the stage of Sections 227 and 228, the Court is required to evaluate the material and documents on record with a view to find out if the facts emerging therefrom taken at their face value discloses the existence of all the ingredients constituting the alleged offence. For this limited purpose, sift the evidence as it cannot be expected even at that initial stage to accept all that the prosecution states as gospel truth even if it is opposed to common sense or the broad probabilities of the case.

(vii) If two views are possible and one of them gives rise to suspicion only, as distinguished from grave suspicion, the trial Judge will be empowered to discharge the accused and at this stage, he is not to see whether the trial will end in conviction or acquittal.

18. With the above principles, if we discuss the statements of PW- 1, PW- 2, PW- 10 as well as of PW- 8, it cannot be presumed that there is no case at all to proceed. However, we are conscious of the fact that the very same witnesses did not whisper a word about the involvement of the appellant at the earliest point of time. It is the grievance of the appellant that the High Court did not take into account that the complainant Jagdish Kaur PW- 1 had not named him in her first statement filed by way of an affidavit dated 07.09.1985 before Justice Ranganath Misra Commission nor did she named him in her subsequent statements made before the Delhi Police (Riots Cell) and in her deposition dated 08.01.2002 before Justice Nanavati Commission except certain hearsay statement. It is the stand of Jagdish Kaur PW- 1, the prime prosecution witness, that apart from her statement dated 03.11.1984, she has not made any statement to Delhi Police at any stage. However, it is also the claim of the C.B.I. that the alleged statements of Jagdish Kaur PW- 1, dated 20.01.1985 and 31.12.1992 are doubtful. Likewise, Nirprit Kaur PW- 10, in her statement under Section 161 Cr.P.C., has denied having made any statement before the Delhi

Police. At the stage of framing of charge under Section 228 of the Cr.P.C. or while considering the discharge petition filed under Section 227, it is not for the Magistrate or a Judge concerned to analyse all the materials including pros and cons, reliability or acceptability etc. It is at the trial, the Judge concerned has to appreciate their evidentiary value, credibility or otherwise of the statement, veracity of various documents and free to take a decision one way or the other. Investigation by the C.B.I.

19. Learned Additional Solicitor General has brought to our notice the letter dated 24.10.2005 from Mr. K.P. Singh, Special Secretary (H) to Mr. U.S. Mishra, Director, Central Bureau of Investigation, North Block, New Delhi. A perusal of the said letter shows that in reply to the discussion held in the Lok Sabha on 10.08.2005 and the Rajya Sabha on 11.08.2005 on the report of Justice Nanavati Commission of Inquiry into 1984 anti- Sikh riots, the Prime Minister and the Home Minister had given an assurance that wherever the Commission has named any specific individuals as needing further examination or re- opening of case the Government will take all possible steps to do so within the ambit of law. The letter further shows that based on the assurance on the floor of the Parliament, the Government examined the report of Justice Nanavati Commission, its recommendations regarding investigation/re- investigation of the cases against (a) Shri Dharam Das Shastri, (b) Shri Jagdish Tytler, and (c) Shri Sajjan Kumar. The letter further shows that the Government had decided that the work of conducting further investigation/re-investigation against the abovementioned persons as per the recommendations of Justice Nanavati Commission should be entrusted to the CBI. Pursuant to the said decision, Home Department forwarded the relevant records connected with the cases against the abovementioned persons. It also shows those additional records/information required in connection with investigation are to be obtained from the Delhi Police. The materials placed by the CBI show that Justice Nanavati Commission submitted its report on 09.02.2005, its recommendations were discussed by the Lok Sabha on 10.08.2005 and the Rajya Sabha on 11.08.2005, Government of India asked CBI to inquire those recommendations on 24.10.2005 and the F.I.R. No. 416 of 1984 dated 04.11.1984 of Police Station, Delhi Cantt was re- registered by the CBI as case RC- 24(S)/2005- SCU.I/CBI/SCR.I/New Delhi. Pursuant to the same, on 22.11.2005, investigation was taken up and it revealed that the accused persons committed offences punishable under Section 109 read with Sections 147, 148, 149, 153A, 295, 302, 396, 427, 436, 449, 505 and 201 IPC and accordingly filed the charge- sheet. It is relevant to note that no one including the appellant has not challenged appointment of CBI to inquire into the recommendations made by Justice Nanavati Commission. Status Report by Delhi Police

20. Mr. Lalit heavily relied on the status report of the Delhi Police and consequential order of the Magistrate. By pointing out the same, he contended that the CBI is not justified in re- opening the case merely on the basis of observations made by Justice Nanavati Commission. The following conclusion in the status report dated 31.07.2008 filed by the Delhi Police was pressed into service.

From the investigation and verification made so far it was revealed that:

(a) There is no eye- witness to support the version of the complaint of Smt. Jagdish Kaur.

(b) The complaints and affidavits made by Smt. Jagdish Kaur are having huge contradictions.

(i) In her first statement recorded by local police during the investigation, she did not name any person specifically and also stated that she could not identify any one among the mob.

(ii) She even did not name Shri Sajjan Kumar in her statement recorded by the I.O. of the Spl. Riot Cell after a gap of seven years.

(iii) She suspected the involvement of one Congress Leader Balwan Khokhar in these riots but she had not seen him personally. She was told by one Om Prakash who was colleague of her husband, about the killing of her husband and son.

(iv) In the statement recorded on 22.01.1993 under Section 161 Cr.P.C. during the course of further investigation, the witness Om Prakash stated that he had seen nothing about the riots. Jagdish Kaur stayed at his house from 01.11.1984 to 03.11.1984 but she did not mention the name of any person who was indulged in the killing of her husband and son.

It is seen from the report that taking note of lot of contradictions in the statement of Jagdish Kaur PW- 1 before the Commissions and before different investigating officers and after getting legal opinion from the Public Prosecutor, closure report was prepared and filed before the Metropolitan Magistrate, Patiala House Courts, New Delhi on 31.07.2008. It is further seen that before accepting the closure report, the Magistrate issued summons to the complainant i.e., Smt. Jagdish Kaur number of times and the same were duly served upon her by the officers of the Special Riot Cell but she did not appear before the Court. In view of the same, the Magistrate, on going through the report and after hearing the submissions and after noting that the matter under consideration is being further investigated by the CBI and the investigation is still pending and after finding that no definite opinion can be given in respect of the closure report, without passing any order closed the matter giving liberty to the prosecution to move appropriate motion as and when required.

21. Mr. Lalit, learned senior counsel, by placing copy of the final report under Section 173 Cr.P.C. by Delhi Police as well as endorsement therein including the date on which the said report was filed before the Court, submitted that the action taken by Delhi Police cannot be faulted with. In other words, according to him, till the entrustment of further investigation by the CBI, Delhi Police was free to proceed further and there is no error in the action taken by the Delhi Police. In view of the order dated 31.07.2008 of the Magistrate, declining to give definite opinion on the closure report since the same was under further investigation by CBI, we are of the view that no further probe/enquiry on this aspect is required. Delay

22. Learned senior counsel appearing for the appellant further submitted that because of the long delay, the continuation of the prosecution and framing of charges merely on the basis of certain statements made after a gap of 23 years cannot be accepted and according to him, it would go against the protection provided under Article 21 of the Constitution. Mr. Lalit heavily relied on para 20 of the decision of this Court in Vakil Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar MANU/SC/0089/2009 : (2009) 3 SCC 355 which reads as under:

20. For the sake of brevity, we do not propose to reproduce all the said propositions and it would suffice to note the gist thereof. These are: (A.R. Antulay case, SCC pp. 270- 73, para 86)

(i) fair, just and reasonable procedure implicit in Article 21 of the Constitution creates a right in the accused to be tried speedily;

(ii) right to speedy trial flowing from Article 21 encompasses all the stages, namely, the stage of investigation, inquiry, trial, appeal, revision and retrial;

(iii) in every case, where the speedy trial is alleged to have been infringed, the first question to be put and answered is - - who is responsible for the delay?;

(iv) while determining whether undue delay has occurred (resulting in violation of right to speedy trial) one must have regard to all the attendant circumstances, including nature of offence, number of accused and witnesses, the workload of the court concerned, prevailing local conditions and so on- - what is called, the systemic delays;

(v) each and every delay does not necessarily prejudice the accused. Some delays may indeed work to his advantage. However, inordinately long delay may be taken as presumptive proof of prejudice. In this context, the fact of incarceration of the accused will also be a relevant fact. The prosecution should not be allowed to become a persecution. But when does the prosecution become persecution, again depends upon the facts of a given case;

(vi) ultimately, the court has to balance and weigh several relevant factors- - `balancing test' or `balancing process'- - and determine in each case whether the right to speedy trial has been denied;

(vii) ordinarily speaking, where the court comes to a conclusion that right to speedy trial of an accused has been infringed the charges or the conviction, as the case may be, shall be quashed. But this is not the only course open and having regard to the nature of offence and other circumstances when the court feels that quashing of proceedings cannot be in the interest of justice, it is open to the court to make appropriate orders, including fixing the period for completion of trial;

(viii) it is neither advisable nor feasible to prescribe any outer time- limit for conclusion of all criminal proceedings. In every case of complaint of denial of right to speedy trial, it is primarily for the prosecution to justify and explain the delay. At the same time, it is the duty of the court to weigh all the circumstances of a given case before pronouncing upon the complaint;

(ix) an objection based on denial of right to speedy trial and for relief on that account, should first be addressed to the High Court. Even if the High Court entertains such a plea, ordinarily it should not stay the proceedings, except in a case of grave and exceptional nature. Such proceedings in the High Court must, however, be disposed of on a priority basis.

After adverting to various decisions including Abdul Rehman Antulay and Ors. v. R.S. Nayak and Anr. this Court further held:

24. It is, therefore, well settled that the right to speedy trial in all criminal persecutions (sic prosecutions) is an inalienable right under Article 21 of the Constitution. This right is applicable not only to the actual proceedings in court but also includes within its sweep the preceding police investigations as well. The right to speedy trial extends equally to all criminal prosecutions and is not confined to any particular category of cases. In every case, where the right to speedy trial is alleged to have been infringed, the court has to perform the balancing act upon taking into consideration all the attendant circumstances, enumerated above, and determine in each case whether the right to speedy trial has been denied in a given case.

25. Where the court comes to the conclusion that the right to speedy trial of an accused has been infringed, the charges or the conviction, as the case may be, may be quashed unless the court feels that having regard to the nature of offence and other relevant circumstances, quashing of proceedings may not be in the interest of justice. In such a situation, it is open to the court to make an appropriate order as it may deem just and equitable including fixation of time- frame for conclusion of trial.

Considering the factual position therein, namely, alleged demand of a sum of Rs. 1,000/- as illegal gratification for release of payment for the civil work executed by a contractor, a charge was laid against Assistant Engineer in the Bihar State Electricity Board and taking note of considerable length of delay and insufficient materials, based on the above principles, ultimately the Court after finding that further continuance of criminal proceedings pending against the appellant therein is unwarranted and quashed the same. Though the principles enunciated in the said decision have to be adhered to, considering the factual position being an extraordinary one, the ultimate decision quashing the criminal proceedings cannot be applied straightaway.

23. In P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala and Anr. MANU/SC/0058/2010 : (2010) 2 SCC 398, this Court while considering scope of Section 227 of Crl.P.C. upheld the order dismissing the petition filed for discharge and permitted the prosecution to proceed further even after 28 years. In that case, from 1970 till 1998, there was no allegation that the encounter was a fake and only in the year 1998 reports appeared in various newspapers in Kerala that the killing of Varghese in the year 1970 was in a fake encounter and that senior police officers were involved in the said fake encounter. Pursuant to the said news reports, several writ petitions were filed by various individuals and organisations before the High Court of Kerala with a prayer that the investigation may be transferred to the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI). In the said writ petition, Constable Ramachandran Nair filed a counter affidavit dated 11.01.1999 in which he made a confession that he had shot Naxalite Varghese on the instruction of the then Deputy Superintendent of Police (DSP), Lakshmana. He also stated that the appellant was present when the incident occurred. By order dated 27.01.1999, learned Single Judge of the High Court of Kerala passed an order directing CBI to register an FIR on the facts disclosed in the counter affidavit filed by Constable Ramachandran Nair. Accordingly, CBI registered an FIR on 3- 3- 1999 in which Constable Ramachandran Nair was named as Accused 1, Mr. Lakshmana was named as Accused 2 and Mr. P. Vijayan, the appellant, was named as Accused 3 for an offence under Section 302 IPC read with Section 34 IPC. After investigation, CBI filed a charge- sheet before the Special Judge (CBI), Ernakulam on 11.12.2002 wherein all the abovementioned persons were named as A- 1 to A- 3 respectively for an offence under Sections 302 and 34 IPC. The appellant - P. Vijayan filed a petition under Section 227 of the Code on 17.05.2007 for discharge on various grounds including on the ground of delay. The trial Judge, by order dated 08.06.2007, dismissed the said petition and passed an order for framing charge for offences under Sections 302 and 34 IPC. Aggrieved by the aforesaid order, the appellant - Vijayan filed Criminal Revision Petition No. 2455 of 2007 before the High Court of Kerala. By an order dated 04.07.2007, learned Single Judge of the High Court dismissed his criminal revision petition. The said order was challenged by Mr. P. Vijayan before this Court. Taking note of all the ingredients in Section 227 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the materials placed by the prosecution and the reasons assigned by the trial Judge for dismissing the discharge petition filed under Section 227, this Court confirmed the order of the trial Judge as well as the order of the High Court. Though, there was a considerable lapse of time from the alleged occurrence and the further investigation by CBI inasmuch as adequate material was shown, the Court permitted the prosecution to proceed further.

24. Though delay is also a relevant factor and every accused is entitled to speedy justice in view of Article 21 of the Constitution, ultimately it depends upon various factors/reasons and materials placed by the prosecution. Though Mr. Lalit heavily relied on paragraph 20 of the decision of this Court in Vakil Prasad Singh's case (supra), the learned Additional Solicitor General, by drawing our attention to the subsequent paragraphs i.e., 21, 23, 24, 27 and 29 pointed out that the principles enunciated in A.R. Antulay's case (supra) are only illustrative and merely because of long delay the case of the prosecution cannot be closed.

25. Mr. Dave, learned senior counsel appearing for the intervenor has pointed out that in criminal justice "a crime never dies" for which he relied on the decision of this Court in Japani Sahoo v. Chandra Sekhar Mohanty MANU/SC/3080/2007 : (2007) 7 SCC 394. In para- 14, C.K. Thakker, J. speaking for the Bench has observed:

It is settled law that a criminal offence is considered as a wrong against the State and the society even though it has been committed against an individual. Normally, in serious offences, prosecution is launched by the State and a court of law has no power to throw away prosecution solely on the ground of delay.

In the case on hand, though delay may be a relevant ground, in the light of the materials which are available before the Court through CBI, without testing the same at the trial, the proceedings cannot be quashed merely on the ground of delay. As stated earlier, those materials have to be tested in the context of prejudice to the accused only at the trial.

Observations by the High Court

26. Coming to the last submission about the various observations made by the High Court, Mr. Lalit pointed out that the observations/reference/conclusion in paragraphs 64, 65, 69, 70, 72, 73 and 50 are not warranted. According to him, to arrive such conclusion the prosecution has not placed relevant material. Even otherwise, according to him, if the same are allowed to stand, the trial Judge has no other option but to convict the appellant which would be against all canons of justice. He further submitted that even if it is clarified that those observations are to be confined for the disposal of the appeal filed against framing of charges and dismissal of discharge petition and need not be relied on at the time of the trial, undoubtedly, it would affect the mind of the trial Judge to take independent conclusion for which he relied on a judgment of this Court in Common Cause, A Registered Society v. Union of India and Ors. MANU/SC/0437/1999 : (1999) 6 SCC 667. He pressed into service paragraph 177 which reads as under:

177. Mr. Gopal Subramaniam contended that the Court has itself taken care to say that CBI in the matter of investigation, would not be influenced by any observation made in the judgment and that it would independently hold the investigation into the offence of criminal breach of trust or any other offence. To this, there is a vehement reply from Mr. Parasaran and we think he is right. It is contended by him that this Court having recorded a finding that the petitioner on being appointed as a Minister in the Central Cabinet, held a trust on behalf of the people and further that he cannot be permitted to commit breach of the trust reposed in him by the people and still further that the petitioner had deliberately acted in a wholly arbitrary and unjust manner and that the allotments made by him were wholly mala fide and for extraneous consideration, the direction to CBI not to be influenced by any observations made by this Court in the judgment, is in the nature of palliative. CBI has been directed to register a case against the petitioner in respect of the allegations dealt with and findings reached by this Court in the judgment under review.

Once the findings are directed to be treated as part of the first information report, the further direction that CBI shall not be influenced by any observations made by this Court or the findings recorded by it, is a mere lullaby.

On the other hand, learned Additional Solicitor General highlighted that these observations by the High Court are based on the materials placed and, in any event, it would not affect the interest of the appellant in the ultimate trial. In view of the apprehension raised by the learned senior counsel for the appellant, we also verified the relevant paragraphs. In the light of the fact that it is for the trial Judge to evaluate all the materials including the evidentiary value of the witnesses of the prosecution such as Jagdish Kaur PW- 1, Jagsher Singh PW- 2, Nirpit Kaur PW- 10 and Om Prakash PW- 8, alleged contradictory statements, delay and the conduct of the Delhi Police in filing Status Report and on the basis of further investigation by the CBI, we clarify that all those observations of the High Court would not affect the ultimate analysis and final verdict of the trial Judge.

Conclusion:

27. In the light of the above discussion, we are of the view that it cannot be concluded that framing of charges against the appellant by the trial Judge is either bad in law or abuse of process of law or without any material. However, we clarify that de hors to those comments, observations and explanations emanating from the judgment of the learned single Judge, which we referred in para 26, the trial Judge is free to analyse, appreciate, evaluate and arrive at a proper conclusion based on the materials being placed by prosecution as well as the defence. Inasmuch as the trial relates to the incident of the year 1984, we direct the trial Judge to take sincere efforts for completion of the case as early as possible for which the prosecution and accused must render all assistance. Interim order granted on 13.08.2010 is vacated. With the above observation and direction, the appeal is disposed of.

MANU/SC/0167/1976

Back to Section 235 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 392 of 1975

Decided On: 17.08.1976

Santa Singh Vs. The State of Punjab

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

P.N. Bhagwati and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ.

JUDGMENT

P.N. Bhagwati, J.

1. This appeal, by special leave, raises an interesting question of law relating to the construction of Section 235(2) of the CrPC, 1973. The appellant was tried before the Sessions Judge, Ludhiana for committing a double murder, one of his mother and the other of her second husband. He was represented by a lawyer during the trial and after the evidence was concluded and the arguments were heard, the learned Sessions Judge adjourned the case to 13th February, 1975 for pronouncing the judgment. It appears that on 13th February, 1975, the judgment was not ready and hence the case was adjourned to 20th February, 1975 and again to 26th February, 1975. The Roznamcha of the proceedings shows that on 26th February, 1975 the appellant was present without his lawyer and the learned Sessions Judge pronounced the judgment convicting the appellant of the offence under Section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to death. It was common ground that after pronouncing the judgment convicting the appellant, the learned Sessions Judge did not give the appellant an opportunity to be heard in regard to the sentence to be imposed on him and by one single judgment, convicted the appellant and also sentenced him to death. The appellant preferred an appeal to the High Court and the case was also referred to the High Court for confirmation of the death sentence. The High Court agreed with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge and confirmed the conviction as also the sentence of death. The appellant thereupon preferred the present appeal with special leave obtained from this Court.

2. The appeal is limited to the question of sentence and the principal argument advanced on behalf of the appellant is that in not giving an opportunity to the appellant to be heard in regard to the sentence to be imposed on him after the judgment was pronounced convicting him, the learned Sessions Judge committed a breach of Section 235(2) of the CrPC, 1973 and that vitiated the sentence of death imposed on the appellant. This argument is a substantial one and it rests on the true interpretation of Section 235(2). This is a new provision and it occurs in Section 235 of the CrPC, 1973 which reads as follows :

235 (1) After hearing arguments and points of law (if any) the Judge shall give a judgment in the case.

(2) If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of Section 360, hear the accused on the question of sentence, and then pass sentence on him according to law.

3. This provision is clear and explicit and does not admit of any doubt. It requires that in every trial before a court of sessions, there must first be a decision as to the guilt of the accused. The court must in the first instance, deliver a judgment convicting or acquitting the accused. If the accused is acquitted, no further question arises. But if he is convicted, then the court has to "hear the accused on the question of sentence, and then pass sentence on him according to law". When a judgment is rendered convicting the accused, he is, at that stage, to be given an opportunity to be heard in regard to the sentence and it is only after hearing him that the court can proceed to pass the sentence.

4. This new provision in Section 235(2) is in consonance with the modern trends in penology and sentencing procedures. There was no such provision in the old Code. Under the old Code, whatever the accused wished to submit in regard to the sentence had to be stated by him before the arguments concluded and the judgment was delivered. There was no separate stage for being heard in regard to sentence. The accused had to produce material and make his submissions in regard to sentence on the assumption that he was ultimately going to be convicted. This was most unsatisfactory. The legislature, therefore, decided that it is only when the accused is convicted that the question of sentence should come up for consideration and at that stage, an opportunity should be given to the accused to be heard in regard to the sentence. Moreover, it was realised that sentencing is an important stage in the process of administration of criminal justice as important as the adjudication of guilt and it should not be consigned to a subsidiary position as if it were a matter of not much consequence. It should be a matter of some anxiety to the court to impose an appropriate punishment on the criminal and sentencing should, therefore, receive serious attention of the court.

In most of the countries of the world, the problem of sentencing the criminal offender is receiving increasing attention and that is largely because of the rapidly changing attitude towards crime and criminal. There is in many of the countries, intensive study of the sociology of crime and that has shifted the focus from the crime to the criminal, leading to a widening of the objectives of sentencing and, simultaneously, of the range of sentencing procedures. Today, more than ever before, sentencing is becoming a delicate task, requiring an inter- disciplinary approach and calling for skills and talents vary much different from those ordinarily expected of lawyers. This was pointed out in clear and emphatic words by Mr. Justice Frankfurter :

I myself think that the bench we lawyers who become judges- - are not very competent, are not qualified by experience, to impose sentences where any discretion is to be exercised. I did not think it is in the domain of the training of lawyers to know what to do with a fellow after you find out he is a thief. I do not think legal training gives you any special competence. I, myself, hope that one of these days, and before long, we will divide the functions, of criminal justice. I think the lawyers are people who are competent to ascertain whether or not a crime has been committed. The whole scheme of common law judicial machinery the rule of evidence, the ascertainment of what is relevant and what is irrelevant and what is fair, the whole question of whether you can introduce prior crimes in order to prove intent I think lawyers are peculiarly fitted for that task. But all the questions that follow upon ascertainment of guilt, I think require very different and much more diversified talents than the lawyers and judges are normally likely to possess.

5. The reason is that a proper sentence is the amalgam of many factors such as the nature of the offence the circumstances extenuating or aggravating of the offence, the prior criminal record, if any, of the offender, the age of the offender, the record of the offender as to employment, the background of the offender with reference to education, home life, society and social adjustment, the emotional and mental condition of the offender, the prospects for the rehabilitation of the offender, the possibility of return of the offender to a normal life in the community, the possibility of treatment or training of the offender, the possibility that the sentence may serve as a deterrent to crime by the offender or by others and the current community need, if any, for such a deterrent in respect to the particular type of offence. These are factors which have to be taken into account by the court in deciding upon the appropriate sentence, and therefore, the legislature felt that, for this purpose, a separate stage should be provided after conviction when the court can bear the accused in regard to these factors bearing on sentence and then pass proper sentence on the accused.

Hence the new provision in Section 235(2).

6. But, on the interpretation of Section 235(2) another question arises and that is, what is the meaning and content of the words "hear the accused". Does it mean merely that the accused has to be given an opportunity to make his submissions or he can also produce material bearing on sentence which has so far not come before the court ? Can he lead further evidence relating to the question of sentence or is the hearing to be confined only to oral submissions ? That depends on the interpretation to be placed on the word 'hear'. Now, the word 'hear' has no fixed rigid connotation. It can bear either of the two rival meanings depending on the context in which it occurs. It is a well settled rule of interpretation, hallowed by time and sanctified by authority, that the meaning of an ordinary word is to be found not so much in strict etymological propriety of language, nor even in popular use, as in the subject or occasion on which it is used and the object which is intended to be attained. It was Mr. Justice Holmes who pointed out in his inimitable style that "a word is not a crystal, transparent and unchanged : it is the skin of a living thought and may vary greatly in colour and content according to the circumstances and the time in which it is used". Here, in this provision, the word 'hear' has been used to give an opportunity to the accused to place before the court various circumstances bearing on the sentence to be passed against him. Modern penology, as pointed out by this Court in Ediga Annamma v. State of Andhra Pradesh MANU/SC/0128/1974 : 1974CriLJ683 "regards crime and criminal as equally material when the right sentence has to be picked out". It turns the focus not only on the crime, but also on the criminal and seeks to personalize the punishment so that the reformist component is as much operative as the deterrent element. It is necessary for this purpose that "facts of a social and personal nature, sometimes altogether irrelevant, if not injurious, at the stage of fixing the guilt may have to be brought to the notice of the court when the actual sentence is determined". We have set out a large number of factors which go into the alchemy which ultimately produces an appropriate sentence and full and adequate material relating to these factors would have to be brought before the court in order to enable the court to pass an appropriate sentence. This material may be placed before the court by means of affidavits, but if either party disputes the correctness or veracity of the material sought to be produced by the other, an opportunity would have to be given to the party concerned to lead evidence for the purpose of bringing such material on record. The hearing on the question of sentence, would be rendered devoid of all meaning and content and it would become an idle formality, if it were confined merely to hearing oral submissions without any opportunity being given to the parties and particularly to the accused, to produce material in regard to various factors bearing on the question of sentence, and if necessary, to lead evidence for the purpose of placing such material before the court. This was also the opinion expressed by the Law Commission in its Forty Eighth Report where it was stated that "the taking of evidence as to the circumstances relevant to sentencing should be encouraged and both the prosecution and the accused should be allowed to cooperate in the process." The Law Commission strongly recommended that if a request is made in that behalf by either the prosecution or the accused, an opportunity for leading "evidence on the question" of sentence "should be given". We are, therefore, of the view that the hearing contemplated by Section 235(2) is not confined merely to hearing oral submissions, but it is also intended to give an opportunity to the prosecution and the accused to place before the court facts and material relating to various factors bearing on the question of sentence and if they are contested by either side, then to produce evidence for the purpose of establishing the same. Of course, care would have to be taken by the court to see that this hearing on the question of sentence is not abused and turned into an instrument for unduly protracting the proceedings. The claim of due and proper hearing would have to be harmonised with the requirement of expeditious disposal of proceedings.

7. Now there can be no doubt that in the present case the requirement of Section 235(2) was not complied with, inasmuch as no opportunity was given to the appellant, after recording his conviction, to produce material and make submissions in regard to the sentence to be imposed on him. Since the appellant was convicted under Section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, only two options were available to the Sessions Court in the matter of sentencing the appellant either to sentence him to death or to impose on him sentence of imprisonment for life. It the Sessions Court had, instead of sentencing him to death, imposed on him sentence of life imprisonment, the appellant could have made no grievance of the breach of the provision of Section 235(2) because, even after hearing the appellant, the Sessions Court would not have passed a sentence more favourable to the appellant than the sentence of life imprisonment. In such a case, even if any complaint of violation of the requirement of Section 235(2) were made, it would not have been entertained by the appellate court as it would have been meaningless and futile. But, in the present case, the Sessions Court chose to inflict death sentence on the appellant and the possibility cannot be ruled out that if the accused had been given opportunity to produce material and make submissions on the question of sentence, as contemplated by Section 235(2), he might have been able to persuade the Sessions Court to impose the lesser penalty of life imprisonment. The breach of the mandatory requirement of Section 235(2) cannot, in the circumstances, be ignored as inconsequential and it must be held to vitiate the sentence of death imposed by the Sessions Court.

8. It was, however, contended on behalf of the State that non- compliance with the mandatory requirement of Section 235(2) was a mere irregularity curable under Section 465 of the CrPC, 1973 as no failure of justice was occasioned by it and the trial could not on that account be held to be bad. The State leaned heavily on the fact that the appellant did not insist on his right to be heard under Section 235(2) before the Sessions Court, nor did he make any complaint before the High Court that the Sessions Court had committed a breach of Section 235(2) and this omission on the part of the appellant, contended the State, showed that he had nothing to say in regard to the question of sentence and consequently, no prejudice was suffered by him as a result of non-compliance with Section 235(2). This contention is, in my opinion, without force and must be rejected. It must be remembered that Section 235(2) is a new provision introduced for the first time in the CrPC, and 1973 and it is quite possible that many lawyers and judges might be unaware of it. Before the Sessions Court, the appellant was not represented by a lawyer at the time when the judgment was pronounced and obviously he could not be aware of this new stage in the trial provided by Section 235(2). Even the Sessions Judge was not aware of it, for it is reasonable to assume that if he had been aware, he would have informed the appellant about his right to be heard in regard to the sentence and given him an opportunity to be heard. It is unfortunate that in our country there is no system of continuing education for judges so that judges can remain fully informed about the latest developments in the law and acquire familiarity with modern methods and techniques of judicial decision- making. The world is changing fast and in our own country, vast social and economic changes are taking place. There is a revolution of rising expectation amongst millions of human beings who have so far been consigned to a life of abject poverty, hunger and destitution. Law has, for the first time, adopted a positive approach and come out openly in the service of the weaker sections of the community. It has ceased to be merely an instrument providing a framework of freedom in which men may work out their destinies. It has acquired a new dimension, a dynamic activism and it is now directed towards achieving socio- economic justice which encompasses not merely a few privileged classes but the large masses of our people who have so far been denied freedom and equality social as well as economic and who have nothing to hope for and to live for. Law strives to give them social and economic justice and it has, therefore, necessarily to be weighted in favour of the weak and the exposed. This is the new law which judges are now called upon to administer and it is, therefore, essential that they should receive proper training which would bring about an orientation in their approach and outlook, stimulate sympathies in them for the vulnerable sections of the community and inject a new awareness and sense of public commitment in them. They should also be educated in the new trends in penology and sentencing procedures so that they may learn to use penal law as a tool for reforming and rehabilitating criminals and smoothening out the uneven texture of the social fabric and not as a weapon, fashioned by law, for protecting and perpetuating the hegemony of one class over the other. Be that as it may, it is clear that the learned Sessions Judge was not aware of the provision in Section 235(2) and so also was the lawyer of the appellant in the High Court unaware of it. No inference can, therefore, be drawn from the omission of the appellant to "raise this point, that he had nothing to say in regard to the sentence and that consequently no prejudice was caused to him.

9. So far as Section 465 of the CrPC, 1973 is concerned, I do not think it can avail the State in the present case. In the first place, non- compliance with the requirement of Section 235(2) cannot be described as mere irregularity in the course of the trial curable under Section 465. It is much more serious. It amounts to by- passing an important stage of the trial and omitting it altogether, so that the trial cannot be aid to be that contemplated in the Code. It is a different kind of trial conducted in a manner different from that prescribed by the Code. This deviation constitutes disobedience to an express provision of the Code as to the mode of trial, and as pointed out by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Subramania Jyer v. King Emperor (1901) 28 I.A. 257 such a deviation cannot be regarded as a mere irregularity. It goes to the root of the matters and the resulting illegality is of such a character that it vitiates the sentence. Vide Pulukurti Kotayya v. King Emperor (1947) 74 I.A. 65 and Magga and Anr. v. State of Rajasthan. MANU/SC/0029/1953 : 1953CriLJ892 Secondly, when no opportunity has been given to the appellant to produce material and make submissions in regard to the sentence to be imposed on him, failure of justice must be regarded as implicit. Section 465 cannot, in the circumstances, have any application in a case like the present.

10. I accordingly allow the appeal and whilst not interfering with the conviction of the appellant under Section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, set aside the sentence of death and remand the case to the Sessions Court with a direction to pass appropriate sentence after giving an opportunity to the appellant to be heard in regard to the question of sentence in accordance with the provision of Section 235(2) ;as interpreted by me.

Fazal Ali, J

11. I entirely agree with the judgment proposed by my learned brother Bhagwati, J. and I am at one with the views expressed by him in his judgment, but I would like to add a few lines of my own to highlight some important aspects of the question involved in this appeal.

12. In this appeal by special leave which is confined only to the question of sentence an interesting question of law arises as to the interpretation of the provisions of Section 235(2) of the CrPC, 1973 hereinafter after referred to as 'the 1973 Code'. In the light of the arguments advanced before us by the parties the question may be framed thus :

Does the non- compliance with the provisions of Section 235(2) of the 1973 Code vitiate the sentence passed by the Court?

13. In order to answer this question it may be necessary to trace the historical background and the social setting under which Section 235(2) was inserted for the first time in the 1973 Code. It would appear that the 1973 Code was based on a good deal of research done by several authorities including the Law Commission which made several recommendations for revolutionary changes in the provisions of the previous Code so as to make the 1973 Code hi consonance with the growing needs of the society and in order to solve the social problems of the people. Apart from introducing a number of changes in the procedure, new rights and powers were conferred on the Courts or sometimes even on the accused. For instance, a provision for anticipatory bail was introduced to enable the accused to be saved from unnecessary harassment. In its 48th Report the Law Commission while recommending the insertion of a provision which would enable the accused to make a representation against the sentence to be imposed after the judgment of conviction had been passed, observed as follows :

It is now being increasingly recognised that a rational and consistent sentencing policy requires the removal of several deficiencies in the present system. One such deficiency is the lack of comprehensive information as to characteristics and background of the offender.

We are of the view that the taking of evidence as to the circumstances relevant to sentencing should be encouraged, and both the prosecution and the accused should be allowed to co- operate in the process.

14. In the aims and objects of 1973 Code which have been given clause by clause a reference to this particular provision has been made thus .-

If the judgment is one of conviction, the accused will be given an opportunity to make his representation, if any, on the punishment proposed to be awarded and such representation shall be taken into consideration before imposing the sentence. This last provision has been made because it may happen that the accused may have some grounds to urge for giving him consideration in regard to the sentence such as that he is the bread- winner of the family of which the Court may not be made aware during the trial.

15. Para 6(d) of the statement of objects and reasons of the 1973 Code runs thus:

6. Some of the more important changes intended to provide relief to the poorer sections of the community are :-

(d) the accused will be given an opportunity to make representation against the punishment before it is imposed.

16. The statement of objects and reasons further indicates that the recommendations of the Law Commission were examined carefully keeping in view, among others, the principle that "an accused person should get a fair trial in accordance with the accepted principles of natural justice". In these circumstances, therefore, I feel that the provisions of Section 235(2) are very salutary and contain one of the cardinal features of natural justice, namely, that the accused must be given an opportunity to make a representation against the sentence proposed to be imposed on him.

17. Section 235 of the 1973 Code runs thus:

235(1) After hearing arguments and points of law (if any), the Judge shall give a judgment in the case.

(2) If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of Section 360, hear the accused on the question of sentence, and then pass sentence on him according to law.

18. A perusal of this Section clearly reveals that the object of the 1973 Code was to split up the sessions trial or the warrant trial, where also a similar provision exists, into two integral parts- - (i) the stage which culminates in the passing of the judgment of conviction or acquittal; and (ii) the stage which on conviction results in imposition of sentence on the accused. Both these parts are absolutely fundamental and non- compliance with any of the provisions would undoubtedly vitiate the final order passed by the Court. The two provisions do not amount merely to a ritual formula or an exercise in futility but have a very sound and definite purpose to achieve. Section 235(2) of the 1973 Code enjoins on the Court that after passing a judgment of conviction the Court should stay its hands and hear the accused on the question of sentence before passing the sentence in accordance with the law. This obviously postulates that the accused must be given an opportunity of making his representation only regarding the question of sentence and for this purpose he may be allowed to place such materials as he may think fit but which may have bearing only on the question of sentence. The statute, in my view, seeks to achieve a socio-economic purpose and is aimed at attaining the ideal principle of proper sentencing in a rational and progressive society. The modern concept of punishment and penology has undergone a vital transformation and the criminal is now not looked upon as a grave menace to the society which should be got rid of but is a diseased person suffering from mental malady or psychological frustration due to subconscious reactions and is, therefore, to be cured and corrected rather than to be killed or destroyed. There may be a number of circumstances of which the Court may not be aware and which may be taken into consideration by the Court while awarding the sentence, particularly a sentence of death, as in the instant case. It will be difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule, but the statement of objects and reasons of the 1973 Code itself gives a clear illustration. It refers to an instance where the accused is the sole bread- earner of the family. In such a case if the sentence of death is passed and executed it amounts not only to a physical effacement of the criminal but also a complete socio- economic destruction of the family which he leaves behind. Similarly there may be cases, where, after the offence and during the trial, the accused may have developed some virulent disease or some mental infirmity, which may be an important factor to be taken into consideration while passing the sentence of death. It was for these reasons that Section 235(2) of the 1973 Code was enshrined in the Code for the purpose of making the Court aware of these circumstances so that even if the highest penalty of death is passed on the accused he does not have a grievance that he was not heard on his personal, social and domestic circumstances before the sentence was given.

19. My learned brother has very rightly pointed out that our independence has led to the framing of numerous laws on various social concepts and a proper machinery must be evolved to educate not only the people regarding the laws which have been made for their benefit but also the Courts, most of whom are not aware of some of the recent and the new provisions. It is, therefore, the prime need of the hour to set up Training Institutes to impart the new judicial recruits or even to serving judges with the changing trends of judicial thoughts and the new ideas which the new judicial approach has imbibed over the years as a result of the influence of new circumstances that have come into existence.

20. The next question that arises for consideration is whether non- compliance with Section 235(2) is merely an irregularity which can be cured by Section 465 or it is an illegality which vitiates the sentence. Having regard to the object and the setting in which the new provision of Section 235(2) was inserted in the 1973 Code there can be no doubt that it is one of the most fundamental part of the criminal procedure and non- compliance thereof will ex facie vitiate the order. Even if it be regarded as an irregularity the prejudice caused to the accused would be inherent and implicit because of the infraction of the rules of natural justice which have been incorporated in this statutory provision, because the accused has been completely deprived of an opportunity to represent to the Court regarding the proposed sentence and which manifestly results in a serious failure of justice. There is abundant authority for this proposition to which reference has been made by my learned brother.

21. The last point to be considered is the extent and import of the word "hear" used in Section 235(2) of the 1973 Code. Does it indicate, that the accused should enter into a fresh trial by producing oral and documentary evidence on the question of the sentence which naturally will result in further delay of the trial? The Parliament does not appear to have intended that the accused should adopt dilatory tactics under the cover of this new provision but contemplated that a short and simple opportunity has to be given to the accused to place materials if necessary by leading evidence before the Court bearing on the question of sentence and a consequent opportunity to the prosecution to rebut those materials. The Law Commission, was fully aware of this anomaly and it accordingly suggested thus:

We are aware that a provision for an opportunity to give evidence in this respect may necessitate an adjournment; and to avoid delay adjournment, for the purpose should, ordinarily be for not more than 14 days. It may be so provided in the relevant clause.

22. It may not be practicable to keep up to the time- limit suggested by the Law Commission with mathematical accuracy but the Courts must be vigilant to exercise proper control over the proceedings so that the trial is not unavoidably or unnecessarily delayed.

23. I, therefore, agree with the order of my learned Bhagwati, J., that the appeal should be allowed on the question of the sentence and the matter should be sent back to the Trial Court for giving an opportunity to the accused to make a representation regarding the sentence proposed.

JUDGMENT

K. Dayal, J.

1. This is a reference under Section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the District Magistrate, Saharsa.

2. The material facts are these: One Bhagwat Tanti filed a complaint in the court of the Subdivisional Magistrate, Madhipura, against Rasik Tatma and three others, alleging that they had forcibly uprooted wheat crop from his lands. The: Subdivisional Magistrate summoned accused Rasik. and, thereafter, transferred the case to the file of the Honorary Magistrate, First Class, Madhipura. This trying Magistrate allowed bail to the accused and summoned prosecution witnesses for the next date. On the next date, that is, the 16th March 1954, trying Magistrate found the complainant absent on call and, therefore, he acquitted the accused under section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Subsequently the complainant appeared before the trying Magistrate and filed a petition for reviving the case. On the 2nd April 1954, the learned trying Magistrate passed an order reviving the case. Accused Rasik then moved the District Magistrate for referring the matter to the High Court for setting aside the order of the learned trying Magistrate dated 2nd April, 1954 reviving the case. Upon this application, the learned District Magistiate has referred this case to this Court for quashing the proceeding against petitioner Rasik Tatma.

3. The only important question for decision in this case is as to whether the case could have been revived or restored after the accused had been acquitted under Section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

4. In Ram Mahto v. Emperor 2 Pat LT 170: AIR 1921 Pat 311 (A), Kiran Sarkarv. Emperor : (MANU/BH/0133/1923 : AIR 1924 Pat 140) (B) : 5 Pat L T 15, and Jaikaran Jha v. Dukhan Paswan, Cri, Revn. No. 637 of 1953, D/- 8- 4- 1954 (Pat) (C) (unreported), this Court has held that an order under section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a final order of acquittal which operates as a bar under Section 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure(sic) the trial of the accused for the same offence. The principles of these cases are directly applicable to the facts of the present case. Similar is the view of the Calcutta High Court, see for instance. Kanai Hizra v. Golap Hizra MANU/WB/0065/1953 : AIR 1953 Cal 197 (D). Mr. A.K. Roy, appearing against the reference, referred us to a solitary case of the Madras High Court namely B. Kotevva v. K. Venkayya AIR 1918 Mad 212 (E) where a different view has been expressed. But it appears that, previous to 1918 and after 1918, the Madras High Court had taken the view as has been taken by the Calcutta and the Patna High Courts, see for instance, In re G. Peddaya ILR 34 Mad 253 (F), In re Sinnu Gounden ILR 36 Mad 1028: AIR 1914 Mad 628 (G), and (Devarakonda) Lakshminara- simham v. Nalluri Bapanna, MANU/TN/0058/1926 : AIR 1927 Mad 473 (H). Thus, on the authorities brought to our notice the consensus of opinion appears to be that an order of acquittal under Section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure operates as a bar under Section 403 of the Code to the trial of the accused for the same offence.

5. Besides, it has been laid down in a number of cases that, in a criminal case, the Magistrate, after once having signed and completed his order, has no jurisdiction to review or revise the same, see for instance, Gajo Chaudhary v. Debi Chaudhary MANU/BH/0381/1923 : AIR 1923 Pat 532 (I).

6. It is, thus, manifestly clear that the learned trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction to revive the complaint case.

7. In the result, the reference is accepted and the order of the learned trying Magistrate dated 2nd April 1954 is set aside and the fresh proceeding drawn up against Rasik Tatma is quashed.

Jamuar, J.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

J.N. Bhattand Dhirubhai Naranbhai Patel, JJ.

JUDGMENT

J.N. Bhatt, J.

Prelude (Focal Point)

Let us at the very outset, evidently record, remember, and recollect that ;

"A civilisation is judged by the way it treats its criminals."

1. In this group of criminal appeals, specially assigned to the Larger Bench by the Hon'ble Chief Justice, the central theme, the core issue and the main point, in focus, has been, as to whether the trial Court, on being satisfied or in presence of special and adequate reasons peculiar to the accused, to be mentioned in writing, in the judgment of the Court, in finding accused guilty, "for a first offence" either by evidence or "by raising the plea of guilty"; is competent to impose for such "first offence";

(i) a sentence of imprisonment for a term of less than three months and fine of less than Five Hundred Rupees for the offence punishable under the proviso to Sub- clause (i) of Sub- section (1) of Section 66 of the "Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949". (B. P. Act")?

And

(ii) a sentence of imprisonment for a term of less than seven days and fine of less than Rupees Twenty Five for the first offence punishable, in terms of proviso to Sub- clause (i) to Clause (1) and Clause (3) of Sub- section (1) of Section 85 of the B. P. Act, 1949?

(iii) Whether Innovative Judicial Directions and prescription of New Format, for recording plea of guilty of an accused, when statutory prescription of such a process or procedure has been prescribed in the Act, would be competent and legal?

Statutory Mechanism :

2. Chapter VII of the B. P. Act deals with the offences and penalties statutorily prescribed. This chapter consists of the provisions relating to the penalty for the offences committed under the B. P. Act. Section 66 provides for penalty in the case of person having committed offence in contravention of the provisions of the Act or of any Rule, Regulation or Order made or of any licence, pass, permit or authorisation issued thereunder, whereas, Section 85, B. P. Act, prescribes penalty for being drunk, for disorderly behaviour and drunk without permit or ineligible to hold permit under the B. P. Act. The relevant provisions of both the Sections, firstly, need to be evaluated and examined for the purpose of interpretation and applicability, and adjudication of the points in Focus. Therefore, let us at the outset, have the benefit of those relevant statutory provisions, which read hereasbelow :

Statutory provisions :

I. Section 66(1)(b) along with the proviso for the first offence, reads hereasunder :

"66. (1) Whoever in contravention of the provisions of this Act, or of any rule, regulation or order made, or any licence, permit, pass or authorisation issued, thereunder :

(b) consumes, uses, possesses or transports any intoxicant other than opium or hemp,

(c) to (e) * * * * * * * *

shall, on conviction, be punished, -

(i) For a first offence, with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months and with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees :

Provided that in the absence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, such imprisonment shall not be less than three months and fine shall not be less than five hundred rupees :

(ii) to (iii) * * * * * * * *"

II. Section 85(1) along with the proviso for the first offence reads hereasunder :

"85. (1) Whoever in any street, or thoroughfare or public place or in any place to which the public have or are permitted to have access -

(1) is drunk and incapable of taking care of himself, or

(2) behave in a disorderly manner under the influence of drink, or

(3) is found drunk but who is not the holder of permit granted under the provisions of this Act or is not eligible to hold a permit under Sections 40, 41, 46 or 46A shall, on conviction, be punished -

(i) for an offence under Clause (1) or Clause (3),

(a) for a first offence, with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month and with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees :

Provided that in the absence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, such imprisonment shall not be less than seven days and fine shall not be less than twenty five rupees; and

(ii) for an offence under Clause (2) -

(a) for a first offence with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months and with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees :

Provided that in the absence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, such imprisonment shall not be less than one month and fine shall not be less than one hundred rupees; and

(2) * * * * * *"

3. In view of the important interpretative exercise and jurisprudential exposition, so far as, proviso to the minimum sentence in those provisions of B. P. Act is concerned, which, obviously, would have wider legal implications and far- reaching ramifications, it was thought expedient to request the learned Senior Advocate, Mr. P.M. Thakkar, to assist and enlighten the Court, as an "amicus curiae" to which, he spontaneously and unhesitatingly, responded and agreed to assist, and he has rendered very good and valuable assistance in this group of matters, and therefore, we place on record our appreciation and grateful thanks to him for his useful assistance.

4. The learned A.P.P. Mr. L. R. Pujari has also rendered very useful and fruitful assistance in reaching the conclusion. We, also, place on record our appreciation for his assistance.

Penology and Minimum Sentence :

5. In the realm of penology, the Courts are empowered and invested with higher and wider discretion. Once, the conviction is established, the difficult and delicate issue of imposition of the penalty would arise requiring, the Court to consider, various aspects and variety of factors, particularly, "special to the accused", so as to reach a correct, appropriate, proportionate and just conclusion of imposition of sentence, which could be reasonable, adequate and proportionate to the category and nature of culpability and type of criminality established against the each accused persons. However, of late, the legislatures, State, as well as Central, have thought it fit and expedient in their wisdom, while exercising legislative prerogatives and powers, to provide 'minimum sentence', and thereby, in the result, restricting the discretionary role and exercise of the powers, by Courts, in imposition of sentences in certain cases or certain enactments. The prescription of 'minimum sentence' is an important issue in the sentencing policy and legislative measures for penalties for offences.

6. Of course, there is a purpose and policy behind providing 'minimum sentence'. There are variety of reasons which have led to legislative prescription of minimum sentences for certain offences and in certain enactments. Again, it will be interesting to note, at this juncture, that the legislatures, while enacting and providing for minimum sentence, have made further provisions in many enactments, with the help of proviso or 'explanation' or otherwise for discretion, so that in a given fit case, on being satisfied, in presence of special and adequate reasons to be recorded in the judgment of the Court, the Court can exercise discretion vested in imposing the punishment lesser than 'minimum sentence'.

7. Wherever and whenever a minimum sentence is prescribed by the legislature, it is incumbent upon the Court to impose minimum punishment, once the conviction is recorded. However, in certain provisions or in any certain enactments, by providing for either proviso or otherwise, the Courts are conferred powers, for special and adequate reasons to be recorded in writing, to impose less than minimum, as in case of Sections 66(1)(b) and 85(1)(1) and (3) of the B. P. Act, which have also, strong nexus, sound reason, and sufficient rationale, as the commission of the offence is the outcome of variety of socio- economic and psycho- legal reasons, and at times, there may be cases, wherein, sufficient and adequate reasons, "special and peculiar to the accused" in a given case, may be available or may be present, and on being satisfied, in this behalf, the legislatures, in its wisdom, have further invested the Courts with discretion to impose less than minimum sentence in such a given situation. Of course, 'Change' and 'Revision' may be necessary upon change in socio- economic etc., reasons, as nothing could be static except 'Change'. But, it will be for the appropriate jurisdictions to consider.

Doctrine of Statutory Elasticity : Discretion

8. The basis for this is that in a proper and fit case, the Court must have more discretion having nexus and relevance with the "Doctrine of Statutory Elasticity" for power of imposing punishment or sentence than the rigidity or orthodoxy in treating all the guilty, of all the cases; upon conviction, with the same yardstick or standard of minimum sentence, on account of there being or in presence of any special and adequate reasons, in a given case and peculiar to the each accused. Let us, also, remember and recall the provisions mandated in Sections 235(2), 248(2) and 255(2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, which were absent, hitherto, in 'Repealed Code' of 1898. They, indubitably, radiate an imprint of the said Doctrine, as there is purpose and philosophy behind it, as articulated in 14th Report of the Law Commission of India in 1958, on Law Reform of Civil and Criminal Law, and also, 41st Report of Law Commission, on comprehensive Revision of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in 1969.

9. The proviso of both the Sections, Section 66(1) and Section 85(1)(1) and (3) of the B. P. Act, evidently, make it, unambiguous, that the Court is ordinarily under an obligation to impose a minimum punishment, once the conviction is recorded either under Section 66(1) or 85(1)(1) or (3) of the B. P. Act. Undoubtedly, the proviso, clearly, empowers, the Court to award less than the minimum punishment, if the Court, after convicting and before sentencing the accused, is of the opinion that for any special and adequate reasons to be recorded in writing in the judgment, the sentence of imprisonment for a term lesser than minimum is called for, and then, in that case, the Court can award lesser than minimum. Once, the discretion is vested in the Court to award less than minimum for any special and adequate reasons, the Court is under an obligation to record same in writing, the sentence of imprisonment or of a fine for a term lesser than minimum, in terms, of the proviso statutorily prescribed.

10. The quantum of sentence, is thus, in the discretion of the trial Court. Where the legislature has stepped in and circumscribed and fettered, partially, the discretion by directing the imposition of minimum sentence, the Court can exercise its discretion within the minimum sphere left open by the legislature. It could very well be visualised from the proviso to Section 66(1) and proviso to Section 85(1)(1) or (3) of the B. P. Act, That the State Legislature has circumscribed the discretion, requiring the Court to impose minimum sentence and left it open to award less than the minimum sentence, statutorily prescribed, for special and adequate reasons to be recorded in writing in the judgment. It leaves no any manner of doubt in our minds that it is always open for the competent Court to impose lesser than minimum, for in (sic.) presence of special and adequate reasons, to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, which are attributable and relatable to the accused in a given factual profile of the case of each accused.

11. It cannot be interpreted that the minimum sentence, prescribed in the proviso to both the Sections, would not give any option, whatsoever, to the Court or leave open any discretion to impose lesser punishment than "minimum". Although, surprisingly, unusually, it is in negative phrase or term. But, while reading plainly, it is evident, that by providing in the proviso in both the Sections, even in presence of special and adequate reasons to be recorded by the Court in the judgment, such an interpretation, in our opinion, would be diametrically opposite to the legislative prescription of sentence of minimum period and fine of minimum amount, and will efface and defy further discretion by vesting and empowering the Court to impose minimum sentence leaving Court to be unmindful of the mandate of statutory proviso in the said Sections to award less than the statutorily prescribed for special and adequate reasons in terms of the proviso. Would it not violate the proviso and underlying legislative jurisdictional design and desideratum? Answer is positively 'yes'.

12. Two negative words, "in the absence of" and "shall not be" obviously, would mean and radiate an imprint of presence of special and adequate reasons, to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment, peculiar to the each accused, in a given case or trial. Therefore, in a given case, upon being satisfied by presence of special and adequate reasons, peculiar to the accused, the Court is empowered and invested with statutory discretion to impose lesser than minimum sentence as provided in proviso in both such Sections and similar such provisions in the B. P. Act. Even for that purpose in a given case, the Court is, obviously and completely, competent, upon satisfaction of Court, to impose, so far as, lesser sentence than minimum sentence is concerned, and in presence of special and adequate reasons, peculiar to the accused, even "Till Rising", and also, any amount of fine upon satisfaction of the Court less than minimum prescribed in proviso in both the Sections and other identical provisions.

13. This has been the consistent judicial adjudication policy and interpretations by host of pronouncements of single Bench of this Court to which references have been made in course of marathon submissions and resorted to. In our opinion, it is the correct and real interpretation. Any other view or interpretation would not only militate against the plain language, but also, would violate relevant statutory provisions, policy and purity of proviso laid down by the Legislature in its domain and prerogative legislative jurisdictional and statutory wisdom and prudence. Any pronouncement or judicial adjudication contrary to such forensic and jurisprudential interpretation and statutory mechanism cannot be upheld and sustained, as it would not lay down or expound the real and correct interpretation and proposition of relevant provisions of law. Thus, such an interpretation as suggested shall, diametrically, run opposite to the provisions of proviso laid down by the Legislature, in its domain and prerogative legislative-jurisdiction. Any pronouncement of" the judicial adjudication propounded in the judgments of single Bench, and relied on by the State contrary to such forensic and jurisprudential mechanism of provisions in proviso cannot he upheld and sustained, being contrary to the provisions of proviso of those Sections of B. P. Act.

The Minimum Sentence in the context of Criminology and Penology :

14. A person who is an accused who has been found guilty of a criminal offence is liable to be sentenced by the Court. The exercise of process of sentencing is of considerable significance for the contours of criminal liability; when legislatures create a crime, they authorise not only a stigma or affixing a labour of censor, on the offender or perpetrator , but also, the imposition of the certain deprivations by means of sentence. There are many forms of sentence. The most serious sentence is custodial one, and in number of cases, custodial sentence should be imposed, where the offence is so serious that only custodial sentence can be justified in terms of relevant law. The length of any custodial sentence should in most case be : "commensurate with the seriousness of the offence". In deciding on the sentence in particular cases, the Court should take note and cognizance of various factors, including aggravating and mitigating the offence, and also other extenuating circumstances relevant to, in the given case. It is in this context, intimate interactions between sentencing process and criminal law policy and the legislative mandates must be kept live on mental radar.

Doctrine of Proportionality :

15. In sentencing terms, one consequences of this is that there are more broad offences with high maximum sentences, giving more discretion to the Courts at the sentencing stage. No doubt, criminal law itself proclaims individual responsibility for actions, maintaining strict standards of contact and setting its phase publicly against idea that social or other circumstances can excuse incriminating behaviour or conduct. Whereas, at the sentencing stage, Courts do not recognize from time to time exculpatory by proceeding or surrounding circumstances. It is in these context, in criminal law in certain provisions and in certain criminal enactments statutory and judicial discretion is invested in the Courts, so that, upon exercising the sentencing process the Court can take into consideration, write upon circumstances, special and adequate reasons for each accused emanating from the record and peculiar to the each accused so that idea of 'proportionality' can be considered and maintained. Whilst the notion is cruel as an underlying justification for the punishment system, the idea of proportionality ought to have been of central importance to the choice and quantum of sanction in a particular case and keeping in mind the special and adequate reasons attributable and referable peculiar to the each accused. Therefore, 'proportionately' in this sense, also finds a place in and several other views and approaches to sentence.

16. The aims of sentence are not simply part background of the criminal law : they have implications for the sake of the criminal law itself. Thus, 'proportionately' should be a key factor in the structure of the criminal law. It is a major function of the criminal law not, only, to divide the criminal from the non- criminal, but also, to grade offence and to brand or label them 'proportionately'. There is a deep divergence between desert theories and deterrence on the question of culpability and excuses for causing harm or resultant injury. The answer to the question "Does this person deserve punishment?", sometimes differs from the answer to the question, "Would the punishment of this person deter others in similar situation?"

17. There are, also, frequent references to search and research that as material appearing of criminal justice, to give some interaction of social context in which the criminal law operates. Much more coverage given to this contextual issues, such as enforcement policy, police powers, the pre- trial concession of case, and sentencing but within the confines of this, where these issues have been treated, as less important than the constitution of doctrine. It is, therefore, an exercise to recognise the constitutional responsibility of the Courts in developing the law and interpreting legislations. There is, also an endeavour to remain alert to the implications for law enforcements of living areas of discretion when formulating laws.

Characteristics of sentencing doctrine :

18. The guilt once established, the sentencing dilemma commences. The statutory discretion is given to the Courts in sentencing the offenders. Needless to reiterate that the determination of appropriate sentence for the convicted persons is, as important as the adjudication of the guilt of the accused in the modern sentencing system. The importance of the modern sentencing system lies in the individualisation of the punishment, which itself lends to rehabilitation and reformation of the offenders in the modem sentencing system in the realm of Neo- Penology and Modern Criminology.

19. Indeed, in the process of sentencing or deciding the punishment, relevant circumstances, special and adequate reasons, peculiar to each of the accused, including aggravating or mitigating factors are important. There cannot be an exhaustive list of special and adequate circumstances and reasons, peculiar to the accused, as it would depend upon variety of circumstances. Really, there is impossibility of laying down standards for special and adequate reasons, mainly, due to the fact that it would be a domain of circumstances or reasons, special and adequate, peculiar in a given fact situation in a particular case of each accused.

Landmark Case- Law :

20. Upon the pronouncement of landmark decision in "Jagmohan Singh v. State of U. P., MANU/SC/0139/1972 : AIR 1973 SC 947" and considering the recommendation made by the Law Commission of India on Judicial Reform and Revision of Law and Procedure in Court in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, there came to be incorporated for the first time, Sections 235(2) and 248(2), to ensure a great awareness on the part of the Courts to examine the case of each accused on the facts of each case, more closely, so as to determine the most appropriate sentence. This read :

"Section 235(2) .....If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of Section 360, hear the accused on the question of sentence and then pass sentence on him according to law."

"Section 248(2) .....Where, in any case, under this Chapter, the Magistrate finds the accused guilty, but does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section 325 or Section 360, he shall, after hearing the accused on the question of sentence, pass sentence upon him according to law."

Section 360 of the Code provides for probation in certain cases, whereas, Section 325 of the Code refers to procedure when the Magistrate cannot sentence with sufficient severity or that the accused ought to receive punishment, different in time from them than which Magistrate is empowered to award, for submitting his proceedings and forward the accused to the Chief Judicial Magistrate to whom the Magistrate is subordinate.

Pre- sentencing Policy Desideratum :

21. The very benign design and object of hearing the accused before passing the sentence is to direct the Court's attention to such matters, as to emerging from factual spectrum, including the following :

(i) The nature of offence.

(ii) The circumstances :- extenuating or aggravating of the offence.

(iii) The prior criminal record, if any, of the offender.

(iv) The age of the accused and also his dependents.

(v) The record as to the employment.

(vi) The background of the offender with reference to education, home- life, sobriety and social adjustment, emotional and mental condition of the offender.

(vii) The prospects for rehabilitation.

(viii) The possibility of return to normal life in the community.

(ix) The possibility of treatment or training of the offender.

(x) The possibility that the sentence may serve as a deterrent to crime to the offender or to others and the community needs, if any, for such deterrence in respect to the particular types of offences in the larger social interest and public good.

(xi) Anthropological reasons :

(a) Influence of social environment on the conduct.

(b) Resultant impact of the crime so as to see whether there is harm to the individual like accused or others, for keeping in mind interest and good of larger section of society.

(xii) Any other special and adequate reasons not covered in (i) to (xi).

22. The cumulative legislative mechanism and its effects of the provisions of Sections 235(2), 248(2), 354(3), 354(4), 360 and 361 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, by and large, is that the Court is to ensure, greater seriousness and awareness in examining each case with a view to determining the most appropriate sentence or for passing other post- conviction orders. It will be interesting to refer to the observations made in the Report of the "Indian Delay Committee", as early as, in 1919- 1920, which are still vivid and valued even today. The Report observes :

"The Criminal Courts.....are to a great extent without reasons necessary to enable them to adjust the punishment to the offender."

"...In this country, if not in all countries, the information, which is available to the Judge at the time of trial as to the antecedents of a prinsoner, his character and environment and causes which conducted to the commission of the crime, is found very inadequate."

Other Important Contours of Minimum Sentence :

23. Indubitably, the Courts can exercise discretion while fixing the appropriate sentence where maximum punishments have been provided, but they are helpless in situations where minimum sentences are laid down. It is said that it creates danger to the individualisation of punishment when the law enjoins the Court to pass a fixed sentence. The danger has become all the more serious because of the increasing use of minimum punishment in recent legislations. Of course, one major reason advanced in support of minimum punishment is that such punishments are effective deterrents for curbing the crime. The Law Commission of India in its 11th Report of Judicial Administration, has clearly adverted to this problem and has observed :

"The theory that more severe the punishment the greater the deterrent effect is itself a matter of controversy. If has not been ascertained whether there has been a fall in commission of these offences where enhanced penalty has been assured by prescribing minimum sentence."

Another theory advanced in favour of minimum sentence does not receive more attention. Minimum sentences have become necessary, it is said, because of the tendency on the part of the Judges to impose inadequate and inappropriate sentences. Though, the Law Commission considered this argument, also, but doubted the correctness of its premise and its basis. Here, at this stage, we do not propose to divulge in meticulous analysis and evaluation of the imposition of statutory minimum sentence, whereby, denying the accused the benefit of any special equity of mitigating circumstances, which otherwise would result in a lighter sentence itself is marked of unusual severity.

Proportionality in Punishment and Justifiable Sentences :

24. The basic principle of Criminal Jurisprudence has been that the punishment that fits the crime is the appropriate punishment in proportion to the culpability of the criminal conduct and it is what the offender or the perpetrator deserves for his crime. Having once reached to the issue of culpability, the next question will follow will be of sentencing. It will be easy enough then to decide on greater or lesser punishment according to law, lesser criminality or culpability and to assign penalties on the scale that reflects relative culpability amongst the crimes, both different kinds of crime and for different instances of same kind of crime. But, yes, that is only step in keeping the crime and punishment in propotion. However, the scale must itself be pitched, at a level, neither too high nor too low for otherwise, even though punishments for different crimes might not be out of proportion to one another on the scale, the scale itself might be generally out of proportion as, uniformly, excessive or uniformly inadequate or deficient. Therefore, in theory, all criminal justice, it is evidently articulated by author, Mr. Hyman Gross that the Criminal law adheres in general to the principle of "proportionality" in prescribing law according to the culpability of each kind of criminal conduct.

25. It ordinarily allows some significant discretion to the Judge in arriving at a sentence in each case, presumably to permit sentences that reflect more subtle considerations of culpability that are raised by the special facts of each case. Judges, in essence, affirm that punishment ought always to fit that crime; yet in practice sentences are determined largely by other considerations. Sometimes, it is the correctional needs of the perpetrator that are offered to justify a sentence. Sometimes are, desirability of keeping him out of circulation, and sometimes even the tragic results of his crime. It is, therefore, said that, inevitably these consideration cause a departure from just desert, as the basis of punishment and create cases of apparent injustice that are serious and wide- spread.

26. In this context, it is rightly said that when there are certain reasons why a person who is punished more generously or liberally for his crime, such punishment less than what he deserves for what he has done justifiable, and punishment in excess of what is not. It be remembered that peculiar and special conditions favouring the accused or the offender are absent and he will get away with his crime to the extent that he is punished less than he deserves to be, punishment less then he deserves is fruitless and also impose and for that reason alone it may not be justifiable, though certainly there are certain important things to be said against it, as well.

27. It is, also required to be noted that disproportionately large sentences in excess of blameworthiness would be as unjustifiable as disproportionately small sentences. Disproportionately small accountability is useful because it may not maintain respect for the law amongst the law- abiding, whereas disproportionately large sentences would be also futile and useless infliction of suffering, it represents needless suffering. Therefore, with a view to keeping law efficient and effective, as a measure for the law- abiding, the Court need not give those who break law no more than they deserve for breaking it, and what they deserve is measured precisely by the criminality of the conduct that violated the law.

28. The principle of mitigation like principle of proportionality, has both, the legislative and judicial applications. Discretional dispassionate can be granted by the Court appropriately in order to make sentences right with regard these and other things, after the Court has fixed the culpability. Condemnation for the crime would be no less, though it would be accomplished in a given fact situation, in many cases by less severe measures of punishment.

Utility v. Disparity :

29. In this context, it will be useful to mention that because of mitigating considerations, standards are uncertain. Good reasons turn out to be problematic and considerations though not be admitted at all often influence the sentencing Judge towards a more lenient sentence. The two major aspects which are exclusionary conditions for mitigating circumstances provide a foundation for suitable sentencing standards :

(i) Whether a proposed mitigating consideration would impair the utility of the sentences.

(ii) Inequitable disparity results when there is a special treatment for some that cannot be justified by principle that apply to all, and since everyone is entitled to equal standing before the law, such treatment cannot be encouraged.

30. The legislature, in one sense, has disfavoured the sentence to plummet below the minimum limit prescribed in view of the expression "shall not be less than", which is peremptory in tone. It appears, therefore, that, normally, the Court has no discretion even to award a sentence less than the said minimum. Nonetheless, the legislature was not oblivious of certain very special and adequate situational realities obtainable in a given case and peculiar to the each accused in the given case and the profile of facts and circumstances of case in which the sentence is being awarded.

Speciality with or versus Adequacy of Reasons :

31. It will be really interesting to refer the expression special and adequate reasons. It, clearly, indicates and evidently manifests that it is not enough to have special reasons, nor adequate reasons disjunctively. There should be a set of conjunction, both for enabling the Court to invoke the discretion. The reasons which are general or common in many cases also cannot be regarded as "special and adequate reasons", but such reasons should be peculiar and attributable to the each accused in a case, as all the general or common reasons or grounds cannot be regarded as "special and adequate reasons". Therefore, the Court has to remain very altert and serious, and considering the overall factual profile and conspectus referable to each accused in such case, in view of the clear mandate of the proviso in a given case for admitting the case of the prescriptive periphery of the proviso and making departure from minimum sentence, by exercising discretion, the Court has an incumbency to record that there are special and adequate reasons for that and such reasons should be articulated clearly in the judgment of the Court, as statutorily prescribed.

Flagship Appeal and others :

32. In this group, in Flagship matter, Criminal Appeal No. 477 of 2002, and allied other matters, arising from various judgments and orders recorded by the learned trial Magistrates, relating to commission of various offences punishable under Sections 66(1)(b), and 85(1)(3) of the provisions of the B. P. Act read with Sections 110, 117 and 135, of the Bombay Police Act, the main grievance voiced, on behalf of the State, has been that, notwithstanding there being a minimum sentence requiring to be imposed for the first offence, the learned trial Magistrates, in this group of matters, have imposed sentences less than the minimum. Therefore, in short, the main contention, of the State is that the learned trial Magistrates could not have imposed sentences lesser than the minimum prescribed in view of three judgments of the single Bench. To reinforce this contention, serious reliance has been placed on the following three judgments of the same learned single Judge of this Court :

(i) "State of Gujarat v. Uttam Bhikabhai Prajapati MANU/GJ/0132/1990".

(ii) "State of Gujarat v. Thakore Somaji MANU/GJ/0172/1994".

(iii) "V.K. Bhatt, Provident Fund Inspector v. Aryodaya Ginning Mills, Ahmedabad MANU/GJ/0395/1995".

33. Placing strong reliance on the aforesaid three decisions of this Court, it has been, vehemently, submitted that it was not open for the learned trial Magistrates to accept the 'plea of guilty' offered by the accused- persons and award sentences lesser than the minimum prescribed. Thus, it is the submission, raised on behalf of the State, that in view of the aforesaid decisions and judgments of this Court, it was not open for the trial Magistrate to accept the 'plea of guilty' as being not in judicially prescribed format in the said judgments, but also not open to award sentences lesser than the minimum, even for the 'first offence', as it would be contrary to the said judgments until reconsidered or amendment in law is made. Such submission is devoid of any force of law and logic, even on a plain, if not, forensic, interpretative exposition of the proviso, which is common in both the Sections of the B. P. Act, and the reasons we propose to assign hereinafter.

34. The challenge in this group of Criminal Appeals and other allied matters is against the approach and the outcome in the impugned judgments rendered by the learned trial Magistrates in imposing sentences less than the minimum for the first offence while exercising the discretion vested in the Court by the proviso to Clause (i) of Section 66(1)(b) and Section 85(1)(3) and others of the B. P. Act, which may again be referred to, and it reads hereasunder :

"Section 66(1) * * * *

(b) to (e) * * * *

(i) for a first offence, with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months and with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees :

Provided that in the absence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, such imprisonment shall not be less than three months and fine shall not be less than five hundred rupees;

(ii) to (iii) * * * *"

Whereas, the proviso to Section 85(1)(i)(a) referable to Clauses (1) and (3) reads hereasunder :

"Section 85(1) * * * *

(1) to (3) * * * * *

(i) for an offence under Clause (1) or Clause (3),

(a) for a first offence, with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month and with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees :

Provided that in the absence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, such imprisonment shall not be less than seven days and fine shall not be less than twenty five rupees; and

(b) * * * *"

Whereas, the proviso to Section 85(1)(ii)(a) referable to Clauses (2) reads hereasunder ;

"Section 85(1) * * *

(1) to (3) * * *

(i) * * *

(ii) for an offence under Clause (2)-

(a) for a first offence with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months and with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees :

Provided that in the absence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, such imprisonment shall not be less than one month and fine shall not be less than one hundred rupees; and

(b) * * * *"

35. From the plain reading and interpretation of the aforesaid proviso contained in Section 66(1)(b) to (e) and Section 85(1)(1) or (3), for the first offence, it becomes, immensely evident, and totally, unambiguous that the said provisions permit the learned trial Magistrates to award and impose less than the minimum sentence of imprisonment, as well as, fine provided, the Court is satisfied about the presence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment and which are peculiar to the accused in a given case.

36. What should constitutes special and adequate reasons for the proper exercise of this discretion is obviously and indubitably by very nature of circumstances cannot be standardised. Such discretion, as employed, in the phraseology in the proviso, would depend upon the factual profile of special and adequate reasons available and present in each case. Naturally, there cannot be any die- hard recipe or fixity of circumstances or any straight- jacket formula for reaching subjective satisfaction, upon evaluation of the objective considerations of factual matrix of each accused in each case or the existence or presence of special and adequate reasons. The learned trial Magistrates are obviously, statutorily permitted to exercise the discretion and certain amount of latitude in such cases by legislative prescription, as articulated in the special provisions.

What Constitutes Adequate and Special Reasons :

37. In this context, it would be profitable to refer to the beautiful exposition and clear proposition in this behalf propounded by the Hon'ble Apex Court in a recent decision in "State of Karnataka v. Krishnappa AIR 2004 SC 1470". Para 11, of this judgment is very material and relevant. It has been observed by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in that Para as under :

".....Whether there exist any 'special and adequate reasons' would depend upon a variety of factors and the peculiar facts and circumstances of each case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down in that behalf of universal application."

38. Indeed, it would be impossible to conceive all the different factual situational realities, which may, in a given case, constitute special and adequate reasons for awarding less than minimum sentence with the help of proviso. Needless to mention, exercise of such discretion would depend upon the type and the category of objectives of legislation, the characteristic and resultant outcome of a nature of offence and such and other relevant circumstances. For example, special and adequate reasons for awarding lesser than the minimum sentence in a Prohibition Act may not even constitute special and adequate reasons for awarding lesser than the minimum sentence for offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act or Prevention of Food Adulteration Act and so on and so forth. What is important to be seriously considered in exercise of such discretion is the totality of circumstances, some of which may be individual factors peculiar and special to the each accused, whereas, some of others may be the resultant ramification and impact of the nature of offence committed by the accused on society at large and chances of repetition of such offences, etc., may all go into consideration. We are attracted to refer and quote the relevant observations lucidly articulated by the Hon'ble Apex Court in "State of Jammu & Kashmir v. Vinay Nanda. MANU/SC/0028/2001 : 2001 (2) SCC 504", wherein in Para 18, it has been observed :

"...None of the circumstances, stated in his affidavit, by itself constitute a "special reason." However, keeping in view the general conspectus of the case, we felt that under the totality of the circumstances narrated, the respondent has made out a case for invoking the proviso to Sub-section (2) of Section 5 of the Act."

39. The learned single Judge of this Court in "State of Gujarat v. Uttam Bhikhabhai Prajapati (supra)", arising form the commission of the offences punishable under Sections 65(a)(e), 66(1)(b) and 81 of the B. P. Act, has made certain observations, which are relied on by the State, to substantiate the contention that the aforesaid provisos do not admit any discretion to award the punishment less than the minimum. This submission cannot be upheld on various counts including being divorced from Text and Context, Colour and Content and misconceived perceptions of the observations made therein.

40. Upon true and correct evaluation and analysis of the said provisions engrafted in both the proviso, such observations cannot be taken and should not be taken to have laid down the appropriate and correct legal propositions as argued, when and upon the correct interpretative evaluation, forensic and jurisprudential exposition and interpretation of proviso has been appropriately projected into direct focus. Again, any interpretation of provision, which is contrary to the interpretation and exposition of law, expounded by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in the decisions referred to hereinabove and others, which are proposed to be referred to, hereinafter, would not be in accordance with law, and obviously therefore, cannot be sustained and approved,

41. In the light of the facts of the case, the learned single Judge of this Court in case of "State of Gujarat v. Uttam Bhikhabhai Prajapati (supra)" did not accept the "plea of guilty" and made certain observations, which at the best ought to be confined to the facts of that case. It cannot be contended that this Court in that judgment has laid down clear proposition of law and will have universal application in all such cases. At the best, it was the decision rendered in the light of the peculiar facts noticed by the learned single Judge, upon reaching to positive conclusion of illegal "plea bargaining". Therefore, the State cannot be permitted to contend that all offences under the B. P. Act, where minimum sentence is prescribed, the learned trial Magistrates must adhere to and invariably follow said three decisions of same learned single Judge of this Court, irrespective of peculiar and special fact situation and circumstantial and contextual profiles, Truly speaking, the words, "special and adequate reasons" in the context in which they are employed, would only mean "special and peculiar" to the accused, upon whom sentence is proposed or is being imposed. It is incumbent upon the Court to consider and evaluate objectively reasons advanced in support of each individual accused and in each case, wherein, sentence is to be awarded, so as to reach clear and correct subjective satisfaction based on objective assessment of facts whether or not, to award less than minimum sentence, in terms of proviso.

42. It is rightly said the word "special" has to be understood in contradiction to word "general" or "ordinary". It becomes apparent and unquestionable from the language employed in the proviso that the reasons to be recorded in writing in judgment for less than the minimum sentence, on the ground of presence of special and adequate reasons in the light of sentencing process must be special and adequate to the circumstances in a given case and peculiar to the accused in each case. It is, therefore, very clear that the discretionary jurisdiction empowered in the trial Magistrates must be based on and in presence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court for each case and each accused.

43. What is special and peculiar to the accused in one case may not be same or special and peculiar for the accused in other case. It is, therefore, true that reason should not be "general" or "ordinary", but it must be special and adequate peculiar to the each accused in a given case. The contention of the State that the trial- Magisterial Courts should have taken and treated the aforesaid three judgments of this Court as a clear proposition of law that in no case less than minimum punishment could be imposed is not sustainable, as, it would lead to a situation where there is no discretion left open for the trial Magistrates to impose less than the minimum, even in presence of special and adequate reasons referable and attributable to the fact situations of the case and peculiar and pertaining to the each accused and it is also; diametrically opposite to the legislative intendment of proviso in both the Section. Otherwise, provisions of proviso would be rendered otiose and nugatory.

44. Such discretion is always open for the Court, while passing through, the process of sentencing the accused for the offences under the aforesaid provisions of the B. P. Act. The trial Court for the first offence has to award minimum sentence in absence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court. For the first offence, the maximum punishment is, also, prescribed, whereas, minimum sentence statutorily prescribed is required to be awarded, provided there is absence of special and adequate reasons to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court. However, if special and adequate reasons, peculiar to the facts of each accused in a given case, are not absent, in other words, are present, then the Court is obliged to consider and evaluate those reasons, peculiar to the accused for the purpose of exercising the discretion engrafted in the proviso, while undergoing the process of awarding sentence for the 'first offence',

45. We are surprised to learn from the submissions that the Courts of trial Magistrates have many times taken or have been lead to, treat the aforesaid three decisions of the same learned single Judge, as if the trial Courts have no discretion to award less than minimum sentences, even, in absence of special and adequate reasons to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, more so, when, "plea of guilty" has been raised. In fact, minimum sentence has to be awarded, only, in absence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, and when two negatives are employed in both the proviso, it would mean that in absence of special and adequate reasons to the contrary to be mentioned in the judgment of the Court, the trial Court has real discretion to award less than the minimum sentence of imprisonment, as well as, fine. As such, this is the real and manifest statutory frame and purpose and object enshrined in the proviso by the legislature in its wisdom in B. P. Act.

46. We are, therefore, in full agreement with the contention, advanced on behalf of the accused persons and by learned amicus curiae in this group of matters, that the observations and the conclusions reached by the learned single Judge in that case of "State of Gujarat v. Uttam Bhikhabhai Prajapati (supra)", arising from the offences punishable under the B. P. Act, are not supportable and acceptable as submitted and desired by the State. We find substance in the plea that the real forensic perception and correct jurisprudential exposition was not brought to the notice of the Court in those cases as a result of which those observations and conclusions are contrary to the plain and proper propositions of the provisions of proviso and case law laid down by the Hon'ble Apex Court in the cases referred to, in this judgment by us and relied on by the amicus curiae, learned Senior Advocate Mr. P. M. Thakkar.

47. Where there are mitigating or extenuating circumstances present or available on the record, which are peculiar and special to the accused and which may justify imposition of any sentence including "Till Rising", less than the prescribed minimum to the accused, it is always open for the Court to exercise the discretion, in terms of the provisions incorporated in the proviso. What is special and adequate will have to be judged by the trial Court, objectively, depending upon the facts of each case. If the conditions specified in the proviso are present, the Court has power to award less than the minimum sentence. Of course, for that, there must be special and adequate reasons and such reasons should be recorded in the judgment.

48. The Hon'ble Apex Court in "State of Orissa v. Janmejoy Dinda MANU/SC/0149/1998 : 1998 (3) SCC 63", fully supports the view, which we propose to take in this group of matters. In that case, the question was interpretation of the proviso contained in Section 27(b)(ii) of the "Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940". It was held in that case that the proviso to Section 27(b)(ii) of the Act confers discretion and jurisdiction on the Court to reduce the sentence of imprisonment less than the minimum prescribed, if the conditions specified in the provisos are present.

49. In "Gurmukh Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/0109/1971 : AIR 1972 SC 824", while considering and interpreting the proviso to Section 16(1) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, it has been held that though offences for adulteration of food must be severely dealt with, no doubt, depending upon the facts of each case, which cannot be considered as precedents in other cases. In that instant case, having regard to the fact that the offence was only for non-renewal of the licence within a reasonable time and the appellants were only petty traders, a mitigation in this sentence under - the proviso is justified. This proposition, also, supports the view, which we propose to take in this judgment, that when discretionary powers exist special and adequate reasons of the case and peculiar to the accused out to be considered.

50. The second reliance by the State is on the decision in the case of "State of Gujarat v. Somaji Jamaji (supra)", wherein, the respondent came to be tried for the alleged offences, punishable under Section 66(1)(b) of the B. P. Act (For possession) on his raising plea of guilty was convicted for the same and sentenced "till the rising of the Court and to pay a fine of Rs. 20." While dealing with that Criminal Appeal, the learned single Judge observed that though the minimum sentence is provided in the Act, the learned trial Magistrate has awarded lesser sentence and such a "plea bargaining" is not legal and deprecated the practice adopted by the Magistrate.

51. The third decision relied on by the State is the case of "V.K. Bhatt, Provident Fund Inspector v. Aryodaya Ginning Mills, Ahmedabad MANU/GJ/0395/1995." The learned single Judge, in this case, while dealing with the Criminal Revision Application in the matter under Employees' Provident Fund Act, prescribed a pro- forma to "plead guilty". The observations made in this decision and the judicial prescription of the pro- forma for pleading guilty, is seriously criticised on behalf of the accused and also by the learned amicus curiae.

52. As regards judicial prescription of a format for recording the plea of guilty by the learned single Judge in "V.K. Bhatt case (supra)", the learned amicus curiae has rightly submitted that the specimen format for the purpose of pleading guilty and praying for mercy in sentence as condition precedent, is also not in consonance with the Criminal Jurisprudence and specific provisions provided in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. In Para 12 of the said decision, it has been observed :

"12. ....Accordingly, what occurs to this Court is laying down some conditions as conditions precedent for the accused to submit the purshis at the time of pleading guilty. If that is done and scrupulously followed, in all probability, neither the accused concerned dare even to pretend to plead guilty, nor the Court haunted by disposal mania would render wander away from its judicial path in accepting the same by imposing by flea- bite sentence, sometimes inadvertently, may be, sometimes advertently, even in not imposing the statutory minimum sentence prescribed under the Act. Accordingly, it is hereby ordered that - "No Court shall accept "plea of guilty" tendered by the accused person, more particularly, in cases where in the statute has prescribed minimum sentence, unless and until, he submits the purshis in the specified form prescribed hereunder for pleading guilty along with adequate and special reasons, if any, for taking a lenient view of the matter, in the matter of awarding sentence."

It is further observed in Para 12.1 as under :

"12.1 It shall be the duty of every Court before which the accused pleads guilty, to record the same in the specimen form of purshis prescribed hereinabove, and accordingly, not to record the plea of guilty as directed would not only render the said plea illegal, but would also render the concerned learned Magistrate liable to proceedings for judicial misconduct."

Arraignment and its Premise :

53. It is very well known that the plea of the accused is an event occurring at the general trial Court level that formally initiates the trial process. As such, it is the offence again on which the accused is given an opportunity to answer the accusation. Here, at this stage, the accused is required to enter a plea. Punishment is held in open and generally, it begins with a formal reading of the accusation or indictment or charge, by which the accused is again, formally, advised of the charges against him. The accused, is therefore, required to answer the charge by entering a plea, at this juncture. This is the right of the accused, and no doubt, the plea may take one of the two forms : One, he may deny the accusation or charge against him, or another, he may plead guilty to the crime, as charged. If the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate shall record the plea, as nearly as possible, in the words used by the accused, and may in his discretion, convict thereon.

54. In the criminal matters as in this group of Appeals, cases are tried by the Magistrates under Chapter XX of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, which deals with the trial of Summons Cases by the Magistrates, the statutory mechanism and the frame of Chapter XX, the procedures for Summary trial have been prescribed in Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the principles of" Criminal Jurisprudence would not permit the prescription of the format by Judicial fiat for the purpose of mode and manner for raising the "plea of guilty". The Court of law cannot add or subtract or ignore the statutory provisions incorporated in the enactment by the legislature in its wisdom. The making of a law or an enactment is a constitutional prerogative of the competent legislatures.

55. The function of the Court is to interpret the provisions of law. Law and statute making is exclusively within the jurisdictional domain of the legislatures. The Court cannot re- write any provision of any law by any judicial fiat or direction. Even the Constitutional Court, dealing with the constitutionality of the provision, cannot create or take away by adding or substracting from any of the provisions employed by the competent legislatures. Even the Constitutional Courts, while interpreting the correct meaning and real object of the law by its constitutional jurisdictional interpretation and adjudication, can propound and interpret correct law. Therefore, it is one of the fundamental principles, that no Court can re- write or reframe the provisions contained in the enactment made by the competent legislatures. The enthusiasm with which the direction to record the "plea of guilty" and prayer for mercy by prescribing specimen profoma for pleading guilty and praying for mercy in sentence and the manner and mode in which the specimen form is required to be filled up and signed by not only the accused, but also the complainant, as well as, the prosecutor concerned in the case before the trial Magistrate, in our opinion, is nothing, but re- writing and adding in the provisions of an enactment, and therefore, such a direction or judicial prescription of a form against the specific statutory provision, obviously, would be impermissible, unsustainable and not legal.

56. To an extent, it makes an inroad on the statutory rights and duties of the complainant, the accused and the Court. A general judicial fiat that no Court would accept the plea of guilty tendered by the accused person more particularly, in cases, wherein, the statute has prescribed a minimum sentence unless and until the accused submits the purshis in the "specimen form prescribed in the judgment for pleading guilty" along with adequate and special reasons, is not supportable, being contrary and not in consonance with the statutory provisions and outside the competence of the judicial adjudication. Such a direction and prescription of a form, contrary to the provisions specifically provided in the Code of Criminal Procedure would be incompetent and impermissible and illegal.

57. Though, we appreciate the enthusiasm anxiety and innovation to place in focus the said malpractice in raising "plea of guilty", we are unable to jurisprudentially and by settled proposition of law, uphold and maintain with utmost due respect, to the learned single Judge, such a judicial fiat by en block direction, to all trial Courts in all criminal cases, where minimum sentence is prescribed, and "plea of guilty" is raised. The fundamental canons of criminal jurisprudence much less against statutory provisions would not permit or allow such a view or perception and prescription of format. Therefore, in our opinion, the observations and directions contained in Paras 12 and 12.1 in "V.K. Bhatt's case (supra)", are also not compatible with the statutory provisions, and therefore, they cannot be sustained, being beyond the jurisdictional competence, and consequently, not legal and binding on trial Magistrates.

Statutory Prescription for Recording Plea of Guilty :

58. Let us at this stage have a close look into the statutory and mandatory provisions for trial and recording of plea in trial of cases before the Magistrate. Since, we are concerned with cases which are arising from the trial before the Magistrates the procedure is prescribed for trial of warrant cases by the Magistrate in Chapter IX of the Cr.P.C. which includes cases instituted on a police report, as well as, cases instituted otherwise then on police report.

59. It is interesting to note that Sub- section (2) of Section 240 provides that the charge shall then be read and explained to the accused and he shall be asked as to whether he pleads guilty of the offence charged or claims to be tried. Section 241 provides that if the accused pleads guilty Magistrates shall record the plea and may in his discretion convict him thereon. Now, it is not obligatory on the part of the Magistrate to convict him even if the accused pleads guilty, he may proceed with the trial.

60. In Chapter XX of the Cr.P.C., the procedure is prescribed for the trial of summons - cases by the Magistrates. Section 251 in this Chapter provides, that the substance of the accusation shall be stated to the accused and he shall be asked whether he pleads guilty or has any defence to make, but it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge. Whereas, Section 252 provides for conviction of plea of guilty. If the accused pleads guilty the Magistrate is obliged to record the plea, "as nearly as possible" in the words used by the accused and may in his discretion convict him thereon. Section 252 is corresponding Section to old Section 243 of the old Repealed Code of 1898. It becomes quite clear and unambiguous from the plain text and tenor of the Section 252, that the trial (Magisterial) Court is bound to record the plea, as nearly as, possible in the words used by the accused, but is not bound to convict him upon such a plea.

61. In our opinion, it is a mandatory provision. It will be material to highlight here that the requirement of Section 252 are mandatory in character, we are reinforced by the decision of the Hon'ble Apex Court in "Mahant Kaushalya Das v. State of Madras", reported in MANU/SC/0082/1965 : AIR 1966 SC 22. This Court, has also followed the principle enunciated in the said decision in a reported decision in "Chhotu Bhagirath v. State of Gujarat" MANU/GJ/0095/1971. The judicial prescription of recording a plea in a prescribed format as directed in V.K. Bhatt's case (supra) by the learned single Judge with utmost respect within our commands, if followed would run counter to the plain meaning and interpretation of Section 252, the provisions of which are mandatory in character.

62. Probably, the attention of the learned single Judge was not drawn to the said provision of Section 252 and the provisions of Section 262. The Section 262 of the Cr.P.C. provides a procedure in summary trial. In the summary trial, the procedure prescribed for the trial of summons case is required to be followed. The case on hand and the three decisions relied on by the State are the cases falling within the procedures of Chapter XX and XXI of the Code relating to trial of summons case by the Magistrate. It is in this respect and in this context the observations and directions of the learned single Judge in the case of V. K. Bhatt (supra) with respect are contrary to the provisions of law and the prescribed format cannot be maintained or sustained as legal and binding to the trial Magistrates.

63. It will be also material to refer the provisions contained in Para 103 of Criminal Manual provided in Chapter IV - for summary trials which reads, hereasunder :

"Though, it is not necessary to frame a formal charge in cases tried, summarily, it is always desirable that the ingredients of the offence, as also, the particulars thereof with which accused is charged are clearly stated to him. In case the accused pleads guilty the Magistrate should question the accused, in respect of each particular of the offence and record in full his answer to the same".

64. In Mahant Kaushalyadas case (supra), the accused was facing trial for the offence under Section 4(1)(a) of the Madras Prohibition Act. At the initiation of the trial, the particulars of the offence were explained to the accused by the interpreter, it was translated to the accused in Hindi by one Shri M. Sukumara Rao, Bench clerk of that Court, who had passed examination in Hindi. The "plea of guilty" by the accused was also interpreted to the Court by the same gentleman. The trial Court found accused guilty for the said offence, charged against him, and upon conviction, the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 was inflicted on the accused, which was confirmed by the Madras High Court in Appeal. On behalf of the accused, the plea was raised before the Hon'ble Supreme Court in an Appeal, which was brought by certificate granted under Article 134(1)(c) of the Constitution, from a judgment of the Madras High Court, that he was not afforded with fair and just trial of course, he had raised the "plea of guilty". It was contended that there was mis- carriage of justice.

65. It was held by the Hon'ble Supreme Court, considering the record, that the admission of the accused- appellant had not been recorded, "as nearly as possible in the words used by him" as required by Section 243 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, a corresponding provision in the Code of 1973 is Section 252. The conviction was set aside on the ground that material mandatory requirements of old Section 243 of the old Code were not observed, and therefore, there was a violation of the said provision, vitiating the trial, and rendered the conviction legally invalid. It is, therefore, very obvious that Section 252 (old Section 243) is mandatory and the requirements of Section is not a mere empty formality, but is a matter of substance intended to secure and serve proper administration of justice. It is, therefore, an incumbency upon the Court to follow the mandate of Section 252 while recording plea, "as nearly as possible in the words used by the accused" as required under this Section. How could such a statutory mandatory provision be substituted by a judicial direction or adjudication by prescribing special format in this behalf?

66. The case of Mahant Kaushalyadas (supra) was also followed by the learned single Bench Judge of this Court in Chhotu Bhagirath v. State of Gujarat MANU/GJ/0095/1971 (Coram : T.U. Mehta, J. as His Lordship then was). In that case, also there was a summary trial, as in the case of the criminal appeals in this group. The reference made by the Court of Sessions Judge, Rajkot, was allowed, holding that trial of the accused was vitiated and order of conviction and sentence passed by the trial Court was set aside, holding that old Section 243 (new Section 252) provided that if the accused "pleads guilty", the said plea should be recorded by the Magistrate, "as nearly as possible in the exact words used by the accused". It was further observed and held that if the Magistrate fails in doing so then obviously he does not provide any record to the appellate or revising authority to know any of the actual words, the accused had pleaded guilty and also to judge whether the said words really amounted to a plea of guilty or not.

67. It is therefore, evident that the reason behind the mandatory provisions of Section 252 (old Section 243) requires the Magistrate to record the plea of accused, "as nearly as possible" in his own words so that it could be evaluated and examined by the higher forum, as to whether there was actual plea of guilty or not and the procedure contemplated is very important and substantial because the plea of guilty raised by an accused would debar him from preferring an appeal against his conviction. Under these circumstances, it would not be open to any Court to disregard the specific provision contained in Section 252 of the new Code (old Section 243), and non-compliance of this provision, would, therefore, not be controlled even by the provisions contemplated by Section 465 or Sec, 537. It is therefore, incumbent upon the Court to record, whenever, an accused in a summary trial raises the plea of guilty, so as to place on record, what was the exact plea with a view to afford protection to the accused and proper administration of justice. It is in this context, how could a Court with a judicial adjudication or direction prescribe new format for recording the plea of guilty and to be also signed by the complainant contrary to constitutional safeguards for the offender and statutory mandate?

Contours and Contradiction of plea of guilty and "plea bargaining"

68. We make it clear that the grievance and voice raised by the learned single Judge against impermissible "plea bargaining" is not, hereby, sought to be belittled or in any way intended to be diluted. But the 'plea bargaining' and the raising of "plea of guilty", both things should not have been treated, as the same and common. There it appears to be mixed up. Nobody can dispute that "plea bargaining" is not permissible, but at the same time, it cannot be overlooked that raising of "plea of guilty", at the appropriate stage, provided in the statutory procedure for the accused and to show the special and adequate reasons for the discretionary exercise of powers by the trial Court in awarding sentences cannot be admixed or should not be treated the same and similar. Whether, "plea of guilty" really on facts is "plea bargaining" or not is a matter of proof. Every "plea of guilty", which is a part of statutory process in criminal trial, cannot be said to be a "plea bargaining" ipso facto. It is a matter requiring evaluation of factual profile of each accused in criminal trial before reaching a specific conclusion of it being only a "plea bargaining" and not a plea of guilty simpliciter. It must be based upon facts and proof not on fanciful or surmises without necessary factual supporting profile for that.

69. It is unquestionable that concept of "plea bargaining" is not recognised in any jurisdictions in our country. Therefore, it is illegal. The Hon'ble Apex Court has time and again raised clear and consistent voice, in host of the judicial pronouncements, and also has come down heavily, against the trick and play of the "plea bargaining". Therefore, so far so "plea bargaining" is held not only illegal and unconstitutional but also intending to encourage the complain, collusion and pollution of the poor punt of justice. Therefore, the observation by the learned single Judge in those cases against the "plea bargaining" and short circuiting the proceedings cannot be questioned.

70. However, as observed by us, hereinabove, that every "plea of guilty" during the course of observance of the mandatory procedure prescribed in Code and particularly in Sections 228(2), 240(2), 252 and also in Section 253 for the trial of case by the Magistrates, when plea of guilty is recorded as per the procedure prescribed cannot be said to be a "plea bargaining". In a criminal trial there must be justifiable material on record and any assumption, presumption or surmise having no nexus with the factual profile of a given case of an each accused cannot be sustained. It is matter of proof like any other proof of fact, as provided in the Evidence Act. It cannot be contended that, whenever, the "plea of guilty" is raised, then less than minimum sentence awarded though may be in the light of "special and adequate reasons" peculiar to the each accused and in the factual and contextual profile of a given cases, is only "plea bargaining". It has to be proved and shown to the satisfaction of the Court. It cannot be straightaway deduced. In the said case before the learned single Judge, there may be supporting and justifiable material to hold it as "plea- bargain". But each and every case cannot be termed or treated same way.

71. However, we are also tempted to state and suggest that in view of the inordinate delay in disposal of cases in general and criminal cases in particular, and huge backlog of cases in Courts, in the changed circumstances, introduction of concept of "plea bargaining" in our Criminal Jurisprudence and jurisdiction requires re- thinking and re- consideration. In some jurisdictions in other countries, "plea bargaining" in some of the cases, where larger interest is not involved and when the dispute revolves around the individuals, has been, successfully, introduced. It will be interesting to refer here the concept of "Nolo Contendere", practised in some of the jurisdictions like the United States.

72. Let it be reiterated that at present, there cannot be any question that "plea bargaining" is not recognised, so far and is not permissible. Whether "plea of guilty" is "plea bargaining" or not, will be a matter of fact to be examined in each case, from the factual matrix of the case and totality of the context and entire profile. It cannot be contended that every "plea of guilty" is always plea bargaining in case of each case and each accused. It cannot be also assumed without supporting facts and attending circumstances. It is a matter of proof and if on objective and independent evaluation of facts, it is found to the satisfaction of the Court, then it cannot be allowed and sustained, being not legal and permissible; in those cases based on facts and proof thereof. Thus, it is a matter of proof and evaluation of evidence in each case.

Doctrine of Nolo- Contendere : Practice and Prominence :

73. In United States, in some jurisdictions, the plea of "Nolo Contendere" is available "Nolo Contender" or "no contest" is not an 'admission of guilt', but rather a 'willingness to accept declaration of guilt', rather than to go to trial. It is treated as a guilty plea to serve one purpose not served by a guilty plea in a subsequent civil suit possibly arising out of same event. Guilty plea is admissible as evidence against the defendant (accused) but plea of "Nolo Contendere" is not. It may be stated that the expression, "defendant" is used in India in the civil dispute against whom civil action is taken whereas in United States, this expression is used in criminal trial also, and thus, the defendant is an accused. David Gorden has observed that the Latin word, 'nolo' means "I do not choose it'. This statement, variously, defined as 'plea of no contest' and 'not a plea of guilty' does not mean that defendant will not fight the same charges against him of the same as that of guilty plea. It admits the fact charged, but cannot be used as a confession of guilt in other proceedings. Acceptance of such a plea by a Court is discretionary.

74. The judgment of, conviction entered on a plea of "Nolo Contendere", may be used, by the accused as a basis of 'plea of double jeopardy', since conviction and punishment, after the "Nolo Contendere" plea operates for the protection of the accused against subsequent proceedings, is as full as a form of conviction or an acquittal after the plea of guilty or not guilty.

75. As held in "Fox v. Schedit and in State exrel Clark v. Adams 363 US 807", the plea of "Nolo Contendere" sometimes called also "Plea of Nolvut" or "Nolle Contendere" means, in its literal sense, "I do no wish to contend", and it does not origin in early English Common Law. This doctrine, is also, expressed as an implied confession, a quasi- confession of guilt, a plea of guilty, substantially though not technically a conditional plea of quality, a substitute for plea of guilty, a formal declaration that the accused will not contend, a query directed to the Court to decide on plea- guilt, a promise between the Government and the accused, and a Government agreement on the part of the accused that the charge of the accused must be considered as true for the purpose of a particular case only.

76. Be it noted, that raising of plea of "Nolo Contendere" is not ipso facto, a matter of right of the accused. It is within the particular discretion of the Court concerned to accept or reject such a plea. However, if the Court accepts such plea, it must do so unqualifiedly. It is, therefore, clear that if such plea is once accepted, by the Court, the accused may not be denied, his right to raise such plea. The Court cannot accept such plea having rights of the accused and determination of facts on any questions of law. Of course, the discretion of the Court, if plea is accepted, has to be exercised in light of special facts and circumstances of the given case. It is, also held at times that such discretion vested in the Court has to be used only when special considerations are present. It is, also important to mention, at this stage that in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, consent of a prosecutor is not required as a condition for refusing the plea of 'Nolo Contendere' by the Court. And the fact that the prosecutor's consent is not generally required would not tantamount to non- consideration of his version or attitude. The Court is required to consider the prosecutor's version as an important factor in influencing the Court in deciding whether such plea should be accepted or not.

77. Upon the acceptance of a plea of "Nolo Contendere" for the purpose of the case in which such a plea is made, it becomes an implied confession of the guilt equivalent to a plea of guilty; that is the incidence of plea. So far as a particular criminal action in which the plea is offered is concerned, rather than the same, as of a plea of guilty, of course, it is not necessary that there should be adjudication by the Court that the party whose plea is accepted as guilty, but the Court may immediately impose sentence. This proposition is very well elucidated in "United States v. Risfeld 340 US 914". However, it may be noted a new dimension was evolved in "Lott v. United States 367 US 421", where the Court, after stating that the plea is tantamount to an admission of a guilt for the purpose of the case, added that the plea itself, does not constitute a conviction, and hence, is not a determination of guilt. As found from some of the judicial pronouncements, it is beyond the purview of the Court once a plea of "Nolo Contendere" is needed to make in adjudication to the guilt of the accused.

78. The plea of "Nolo Contendere", barring a few percentages of cases, has been recognised in the administration of criminal justice in many countries, including the United States, and has resulted into substantial reduction in the workload of the criminal justice system. Such a plea, it has been stated, has a success of practical aspect over the technical one. In the criminal justice delivery system, should India not consider the introduction and employment of such a plea when Courts are flooded with astronomical arrears, the trial life- span is inordinately long and the expenditure is very heavy, as an effective Alternative Dispute Resolution in certain identified criminal cases? This issue, undoubtedly, requires serious consideration at this juncture, and a trial on experiment basis, also, when we are at the crossroads and Courts are obliged to engage and address itself in early, easy, less expensive and simple way of disposal of criminal cases in the criminal justice system. Of course, the introduction of such a system will have to be considered at the level of Government by appropriate legislative measures. However, our voice shall not be a cry in wilderness more so when innovative and dynamic strategies are evolved for "Excellence in Judiciary" in 2005, by My Lord Chief Justice of Supreme Court, Hon'ble Mr. Justice R.C. Lahoti. We, are concerned collectively, collaboratively and constructively, and therefore, we ought to take seriously and strive assiduously and honestly for such ingeniously and innovatively ordained by My Lord, Chief Justice of Supreme Court, Hon'ble Mr. Justice R. C. Lahoti, as a novel and noble, neo- dynamics in the armoury of Judicial Reforms and Legal Rehabilitation of the ideal Fold and System, which is undoubtedly Basic and Cornerstone in the philosophy of our Constitution. We all belong to such a Fold, wherein we owe a duty to contribute for restructuring and reshaping Administration of Law and Justice, so as to provide expeditious easy and less complex and less processual, for making it easily accessible and affordable for common and pauper litigant, which is as such a heart of Judicial Anatomical Atlas and a Consumer of Justice Dispensation in our country, for the recovery and rejuvenation the faith of such litigants and resultant enhancement of the Majesty of Justice.

79. The plea of "Nolo Contendere" in our country is not used in strict sense in absence of any statutory provision or necessary enactment. However, this plea plays a very important role in many jurisdictions in United States, Scotland and other European and non- European Courts.

80. When in India, the Courts are flooded with astronomical arrears of cases and reduction of backlog of cases is important and out of the pending cases, almost 70% - 80% of the cases are reportedly arising from criminal jurisdiction, and again, reportedly, the rate of conviction is below 5% to 7% out of 100 cases. Could it be not said that it is opportune time, to at least, consider such a plea which has been usefully and successfully employed as an effective A.D.R. in some parts of the world and that too, in petty cases and cases in which only individual interests are concerned and larger public interests are not at stake or involved, to begin with and that too on experimental basis for a short period as one of the means and methods to reduce the unbreakable heavy and huge backlog of cases with existing means and measures in India and particularly in Criminal Courts. We have suggested this jurisprudential "Doctrine of Nolo Contendere" as one of the alternatives to arrest menace of arrears with a view to find out whether in certain type of criminal cases and in certain type of (identified- earmarked) criminal trials, it needs to be tried and experimented for speedy and easy justice, as an effective A.D.R. more so, when in many jurisdictions in foreign countries, it has been gainfully and successfully used and employed as such a plea does not enter into the consideration in other litigation in clear terms of such a doctrine.

Propositions of Criminal Justice reforms :

81. It is true that the idea of "plea bargaining" in jurisdictions in India is not permissible, but in view of the changed circumstances and present state of affairs of the criminal justice delivery system in our country, a Bill has been introduced by the Government, known as "The Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill, 2003 (Bill No. LX of 2003)" in which Chapter XXIA, relating to "plea bargaining" is proposed to be introduced in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. In the said Bill, new Sections, i.e. Section 265A to Section 265K are proposed to be added in the Code of Criminal Procedure so as to provide for raising the "plea bargaining" in certain types of Criminal Cases.

82. One of the main aims and objects of introduction of certain provisions in general and for the introduction of "plea bargaining" by amendment in the Code of Criminal Procedure in particular, has been the speedy disposal of criminal cases. The disposal of criminal cases in Courts, unquestionably, takes considerable long time and in that, in many cases, trials do not commence for as long as period as 3 to 5 years after the accused has been remitted to the judicial custody. Large number of persons accused of criminal offences particularly, indigent, illiterate and rustic persons are unable to secure bail, for one or the other reason and have to languish in jail, as undertrial prisoners, for years. Though, not recognised so far by the Criminal Jurisprudence, it is seen as an alternative method to deal with the huge arrears of criminal cases. It is really a measure and redressal, if brought on statute and also operative, it shall also add a new dimension in the realm of Judicial Reforms.

83. To reduce the delay in the disposal of criminal trials and appeals as also to alleviate the suffering of undertrial prisoners, as well as, their dependents and keeping in mind the real purpose of Victimology, it has been rightly proposed to introduce the concept of "plea bargaining", as recommended by the Law Commission of India, in its 154th Report, on the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Committee of Criminal Justice Reforms under the Chairmanship of Dr. (Justice) V.S. Malimath (formerly, Chief Justice of the Kerala High Court), has also endorsed the Commission's recommendations, as well as, by Review Committee on Constitutional Reforms. The system of plea bargaining (as recommended by the Law Commission of India in its Report) should be introduced, as part of the process of decriminalization . It means pre- trial negotiations between the parties during which the accused agrees to plead guilty in exchange for certain concessions by the prosecutor. The benefit of "plea bargaining" would, however, not be admissible to habitual offenders.

84. We are tempted to mention here that law should be stable but not standstill. The very object of law is to provide easy, cheap and expeditious justice by resolution of disputes, including the trial of criminal cases, and considering the present realistic profile of the pendency and delay in disposal in the administration of law and justice, fundamental reforms are inevitable. There should not be anything static. As such, "Change is only constant thing in the world". If the individual, society or for that purpose, nation feels allergic to the change for the reforms and remaining oblivious to the realism and prevalent situations, the very existence may be in jeopardy. It is, therefore, rightly said that all must have an open mind, as mind is like a parachute; it starts working when it is open. Although, hitherto, as a part of colonial legacy, "plea bargaining" has not been recognised, so far in our system and Criminal Jurisprudence. However, keeping in mind the huge arrears and long time spent in trials and resultant hardships to parties, and particularly, the accused and the victims of the crimes, the benefit of "plea bargaining" as an alternative method to deal with the dispute or question of offence requires serious consideration, which would not be admissible and available to the habitual offenders. We should remember a saying that "every saint has past and every sinner has a future" and also that "taw and justice should not be distant neighbours."

Epilogue :

85. After having threadbare considered, evaluated and discussed the rival submissions and valued submissions of 'amicus curiae' learned Senior Advocate Mr. Thakkar and the relevant and material provisions of Bombay Prohibition Act and Code of the Criminal Procedure, as well as, important pronouncements of the Hon'ble Apex Court coupled with the principles of Criminal Jurisprudence in summing up, we hold and decide upon all the three points formulated by us in the very commencement of this judgment, hereasunder :

(i) in the affirmative

(ii) also in the affirmative

(iii) not competent and not legal and not binding to Courts. Observations in that judgment in Para 12.1 are not legal, and therefore, not approved.

86. In short, in our conclusions on objective assessment and evaluation of the factual and legal profile, in this group of criminal appeals, a sentence of imprisonment for a period of less than minimum with the help of proviso and in terms of the requirements and on proof of existence of special and adequate reasons for a first offence, the Court is empowered and entitled to award less than minimum sentence on finding accused guilty either by evidence or by raising "plea of guilty" and judicial directions and prescription of special format contrary to the statutory provisions as observed by us, hereinabove, are not binding and required to be followed for recording the plea of guilty of accused and the proposition provided in three decisions relied on by the State are not affirmed and approved by us to the extent as stated above for the elaborate reasons and factual matrix and legal profile given hereinabove and upon true and correct interpretation and legislative intendments, forensic and jurisprudential exposition of the relevant propositions of the said provisions of Bombay Prohibition Act in general and proviso to Sections 66 and 85, so far as first offence is concerned.

87. In the end- result, all the appeals, at the instance of the State are without any substance and quite meritless, and therefore, they shall stand dismissed for the foregoing discussions and reasons.

Back to Section 304 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Writ Petition No. 5670 of 1980

Decided On: 19.12.1980

Khatri and Ors. Vs. State of Bihar and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

P.N. Bhagwati and A.P. Sen, JJ.

ORDER

P.N. Bhagwati, J.

1. This case has now come before us after service of notice on the State of Bihar. When this case was taken up for appearing by us on 2nd December, 1980, we expressed our displeasure that the State of Bihar had not chosen to appear in answer to the notice, but this expression of displeasure was made by us on the assumption that the notice was served on the State of Bihar. We are however informed by Mr. K.G. Bhagat, learned advocate, appearing on behalf of the State of Bihar that the notice of the writ petition was served upon the State only on 6th December, 1980 and that is the reason why it was not possible for the State to appear before us on 2nd December, 1980. We accept this explanation offered by Mr. K. G. Bhagat and exonerate the State of Bihar from remissness in appearing before the Court on 2nd December, 1980.

2. The State has filed before us a counter affidavit sworn by Tarkeshwar Parshad, Under Secretary, Home (Police) Department of the State Government giving various particulars required by us by our order dated 2nd December, 1980. We have also before us the counter affidavit filed by Jitendra Narain Singh, Assistant Jailer, Bhagalpur Central Jail, on behalf of the State and this affidavit gives certain other particulars required by us. The State has also in addition to these particulars, filed statements giving various particulars in regard to the blinded prisoners drawn from the records of the judicial magistrates dealing with their cases. The District and Sessions Judge has also addressed a letter to the Registrar (Judicial) of this Court stating that for the reasons given in his letter, no inspection of the Bhagalpur Central Jail has been carried out by the District and Sessions Judge in the year 1980. The Registrar (Judicial) has also furnished to us copies of the statements of the blinded prisoners and B.L. Das, former Superintendent of the Bhagalpur Central Jail, recorded by him pursuant to the order of this Court dated 1st December, 1980. Full and detailed arguments have been advanced before" us on the basis of the particulars contained in these documents, but we do not, at this stage, propose to deal with the arguments in regard to each of the blinded prisoners and we shall examine only the broad contentions advanced before us, leaving the arguments in regard to each specific blinded prisoner to be dealt with at a later stage when the writ petition again comes up for hearing.

3. Before we deal with the main contentions urged before us on behalf of the parties, we must dispose of one serious question which raises a rather difficult problem and which has to be resolved with some immediacy. The problem is not so much a legal problem as a human one and it arises because the blinded prisoners who are undergoing treatment in the Rajendra Prashad Ophthalmic Institute, New Delhi are likely to be discharged from that Institute since their vision is so totally impaired that it is not possible to restore it by any medical or surgical treatment, and the question is wherever they can go. Mrs. Hingorani, on behalf of the blinded prisoners, expressed apprehension that it may not be safe for them to go back to Bhagalpur, particularly when investigation into the offences of blinding was still in progress and some arrangement should, therefore, be made for housing them in New Delhi at the cost of the State. We cannot definitely state that the apprehension expressed by Mrs. Hingorani is totally unfounded nor can we say at the present stage that it is justified, but we feel that at least until the next date of hearing, it would be desirable not to send the blinded prisoners back to Bhagalpur We would, therefore, suggest that the blinded prisoners who are discharged from the Rajendra Parshad Ophthalmic Institute, New should be kept in the Home which is being run by the Blind Relief Association of Delhi on the Lal Bahadur Shastri Marg, New Delhi and the State of Bihar should bear the cost of their boarding and lodging in that Home, We hope and trust and, in fact, we would strongly recommend that the Blind Relief Association of Delhi will accept these blinded prisoners in the Home run by them and look(sic) after them until the next hearing of the petition. The State of Bihar will pay by way of advance or otherwise as may be required the costs, charges and expenses of maintaining the blinded prisoners such Home.

4. The other question raised by Mrs. Hingorani on behalf of the blinded prisoners was whether the State was liable to pay compensation to the blinded prisoners for violation of their Fundamental Right under Article 21 of the Constitution. She contended that the blinded prisoners were deprived of their eye sight by the Police Officers who were Government servant acting on behalf of the State and since this constituted a violation of the constitutional right under Article 21, the state was liable to pay compensation to the blinded prisoners. The liability to compensate a person deprived of his life or personal liberty otherwise than in accordance with procedure established by law was, according to Mrs. Hingorani, implicit in Article 21. Mr. K.G. Bhagat on behalf of the State, however, contended that it was not yet established that the blinding of the prisoners was done by the Police and that the investigation was in progress and he further urged that even if blinding was done by the police and there was violation of the constitutional right enshrined in Article 21, the State could not be held liable to pay compensation to the persons wronged. These rival arguments raised a question of great constitutional importance as to what relief can a court give for violation of the constitutional right guaranteed in Article 21. The court can certainly injunct the State from depriving a person of his life or personal liberty except in accordance with procedure established by law, but if life or personal liberty is violated otherwise than in accordance with such procedure, is the court helpless to grant relief to the person who has suffered- such deprivation ? Why should the court not be prepared to forge new tools and devise new remedies for the purpose of vindicating the most precious of the precious Fundamental Right to life and personal liberty.

These were the issues raised before us on the contention of Mrs. Hingorani, and to our mind, they are issues of the gravest constitutional importance involving as they do, the exploration of a new dimension of the right to life and personal liberty. We, therefore, intimated to the counsel appearing on behalf of the parties that we would hear detailed arguments on these issues at the next hearing of the writ petition and proceed to lay down the correct implications of the constitutional right in Article 21 in the light of the dynamic constitutional jurisprudence which we are evolving in this Court.

5. That takes us to one other important issue which arises in this case. It is clear from the particulars supplied by the State from the records of the various judicial magistrates dealing with the blinded prisoners from time to time that, neither at the time when the blinded prisoners were produced for the first lime before the judicial magistrate nor at the tune when the remand orders were passed, was any legal representation available to most of the blinded prisoners. The records of the judicial magistrates show that no legal representation was provided to the blinded prisoners, because none of them asked for it nor did the judicial magistrates enquire from the blinded prisoners produced before them either initially or at the time of remand whether they wanted any legal representation at State cost. The only excuse for not providing legal representation to the blinded prisoners at the cost of the State was that none of the blinded prisoners asked for it. The result was that barring two or three blinded prisoners who managed to get a lawyer to represent them at the later stages of remand, most of the blinded prisoners were not represented by any lawyers and save a. few who were released on bail, and that too after being in jail for quite some time, the rest of them continued to languish in jail. It is difficult to understand how this state of affairs could be permitted to continue despite the decision of this Court in Hussainara Khatonn's case MANU/SC/0121/1979 : 1979CriLJ1045 . This Court has pointed out in Hussainara Khatoon's case (supra) which was decided as far back as 9th March, 1979 that the right to free legal services is clearly an essential ingredient of reasonable, fair and just procedure for a person accused of an offence and it must be held implicit in the guarantee of Article 21 and the State is under a constitutional mandate to provide a lawyer to an accused person if the circumstances of the case and the needs of justice so require, provided of course the accused person does not object to the provision of such lawyer.

It is unfortunate that though this Court declared the right to legal aid as a Fundamental Right of an accused person by a process of judicial construction of Article 21, most of the States in the country have not taken note of this decision and provided free legal services to a person accused of an offence. We regret this disregard of the decision of the highest court in the land by many of the States despite the constitutional declaration in Article 141 that the law declared by this Court shall be binding through- out the territory of India. Mr. K.G. Bhagat on behalf of the State agreed that in view of the decision of this Court the State was bound to provide free legal services to (sic) indigent accused but he suggested that the State might find it difficult to do so owing to financial constraints. We may point out to the State of Bihar that it cannot avoid its constitutional obligation to provide free legal services to a poor accused by pleading financial or administrative inability. The State is under a constitutional mandate to provide free legal aid to an accused person who is unable to secure legal services on account of indigenous and whatever is necessary for his purpose has to be done by the State. The State may have its financial constraints and its priorities in expenditure but, as pointed out by the court in Rhem v. Malcolm. 377 F. Supp. 995 the law does not per(sic) any Government to deprive its citizens of constitutional rights on a plea of poverty" and to quote the words of Justice Blackmum in Jackson v. Bishop 404. F. Supp. 2d 571: "humane considerations and constitutional requirements are not in this day to be measured by dollar considerations." Moreover, this constitutional obligation to provide free legal services to an indigent accused does not arise only when the trial commences but also attaches when the accused is for the first time produced before the magistrate. It is elementary that the jeopardy to his personal liberty arises as soon as a person is arrested and produced before a magistrate, for it is at that stage that he gets the first opportunity to apply for bail and obtain his release as also to resist remand to police or jail custody. That is the stage at which an accused person needs competent legal advice and representation and no procedure can be said to be reasonable, fair and just which denies legal advice and representation to him at this stage. We must, therefore, hold that the State is under a constitutional obligation to provide free legal services to an indigent accused not only at the stage of trial but also at the stage when he is first produced before the magistrate as also when he is remanded from time to time.

6. But even this right to free legal services would be illusory for an indigent accused unless the magistrate or the Sessions Judge before whom he is produced informs him of such right. It is common knowledge that about 70 per cent of the people in the rural areas are illiterate and even more than that percentage of people are not aware of the rights conferred upon them by law. There is; so much lack of legal awareness that it has always been recognised as one of the principal items of the programme of the legal aid movement in this country to promote legal literacy. It would make a mockery of legal aid if it were to be left to a poor ignorant and illiterate accused to ask for free legal services. Legal aid would become merely a paper promise and it would fail of its purpose. The magistrate or the sessions judge before whom the accused appears must be held to be under an obligation to inform the accused that if he is unable to engage the services of a lawyer on account of poverty or Indigence, he is entitled to obtain free legal services at the cost of the State. Unfortunately, the judicial magistrates failed to discharge this obligation in the case of the blinded prisoners and they merely stated that no legal representation was asked for by the blinded prisoners and hence none was provided. We would, therefore, direct the magistrates and Session Judges in the country to inform every accused who appears before them and who is not represented by a lawyer on account of his poverty or indigence that he is entitled to free legal services at the cost of the State. Unless he is not willing to take advantage every other State in the country to make provision for grant of free legal services to an accused who is unable to engage a lawyer on account of reasons such as poverty, indigence or incommunicado situation. The only qualification would be that the offence charged against the accused is such that, on conviction, it would result in a sentence of imprisonment and is of such a nature that the circumstances of the case and the needs of social justice require that he should be given free legal representation. There may be cases involving offences such as economic offences or offences against law prohibiting prostitution or child abuse and the like, where social justice may require that free legal services need not be provided by the State.

7. There are two other irregularities appearing from the record to which we think it is necessary to refer. In the first place in a few cases the accused persons do not appear to have been produced before the Judicial Magistrates within 24 hours of their arrest as required by Article 22 of the Constitution. We do not wish to express any definite opinion in regard to this irregularity which prima facie appears to have occurred in a few cases, but we would strongly urge upon the State and its police authorities to see that this constitutional and legal requirement to produce an arrested person before a Judicial Magistrate within 24 hours of the arrest must be scrupulously observed. It is also clear from the particulars furnished to us from the records of the Judicial Magistrates that in some cases particularly those relating to Patel Sahu, Raman Bind, Shaligram Singh and a few others the accused persons were not produced before the judicial Magistrates subsequent to their first production and they continued to remain in jail without any remand orders being passed by the judicial Magistrates. This was plainly contrary to law. It is difficult to understand how the State continued to detain these accused persons in jail without any remand orders. We hope and trust that the State Government will inquire as to why (sic) this irregularity was allowed to be perpetrated and will see to com that in future no such violations of the law are permitted to be committed by the administrators of the law. The provision inhibiting detention without remand is a very healthy provision which enables the Magistrates to keep check over the police investigation and it is necessary that the Magistrates should try to enforce this requirement and where it is found to be disobeyed, come down heavily upon the police.

8. We also cannot help expressing our unhappiness at the lack of concern shown by the judicial magistrates in not enquiring from the blinded prisoners, when they were first produced before the judicial magistrates and thereafter from time to time for the purpose of remand to how they had received injuries in the eyes. It is true that most of the blinded prisoners have said in their statements before the Registrar that they were not actually produced before the judicial magistrates at any time, but we cannot, without further inquiry in that behalf, accept the ex parte statement of the blinded prisoners. Their statements may be true or may not be true; it is a matter which may require investigation. But one thing is clear that in the case of almost all the blinded prisoners, the for- warding report sent by the Police Officer In Charge stated that the accused had sustained injuries and yet the judicial magistrates did not care to enquire as to how injuries had been caused. This can give rise only to two inferences; either the blinded prisoners were not physically produced before the judicial magistrates and the judicial magistrates mechanically signed the orders of remand or they did not bother to enquire even if they found that the prisoners before them had received injuries in the eyes. It is also regrettable that no inspection of the Central Jail, Bhagalpur was carried out by the District & Sessions Judge at any time during the year 1980. We would request the High Court to look into these matters closely and ensure that such remissness on the part of the judicial officers does not occur in the future.

9. We would also like to advert to one more matter before we close and that is rather a serious matter. It appears from the record that one blinded prisoner by the name of Umesh Yadav sent a petition to the District and Sessions Judge, Bhagalpur, on 30th July, 1980 complaining that he had been blinded by Shri B. K. Sharma, District Superintendent of Police and since he had no money to prosecute this police officer, he should be provided a lawyer at Government expense so that he might be able to bring the police atrocities before the court and seek justice. Ten other blinded prisoners also made a similar petition and all these petitions were forwarded to the District & Sessions Judge on 30th July, 1980. The District & Sessions Judge by this letter dated 5th August, 1980, addressed to the Superintendent of the Bhagalpur Central Jail stated that there was no provision in the CrPC under which legal assistance could be provided to the blinded prisoners who had made a petition to him and that the had forwarded their petitions to the chief judicial magistrate for necessary action. The Chief Judicial Magistrate also expressed this inability to do anything in the matter. It appears that the Superintendent of the Bhagalpur Central Jail also sent the petitions of these blinded prisoners to the Inspector General of Prisons, Patna on 30th July, 1980 with a request that this matter should be brought to the notice of the State Government. The Inspector General of Prisons forwarded these petitions to the Home Department. The Inspector General of Prisons was also informed by three blinded prisoners on 9th September 1980 when he visited the Banks Jail that they had been blinded by the police and the Inspector General of Prisons observed in his inspection note that it would be necessary to place the matter before the Government so that, the police atrocities may be stopped. The facts disclose a very disturbing state of affairs. In the first place we find it difficult to appreciate why the Chief Judicial Magistrate to whom the petitions of these blinded prisoners had been forwarded by the District & Sessions Judge did not act upon the complaint contained in these petitions and either take cognizance of the offence revealed in these petitions or order investigation by the higher police officers. ' The information appearing in these petitions disclosed very serious offences alleged to have been committed by the Police and the Chief Judicial Magistrate should not have nonchalantly ignored these petitions and expressed , his inability to do anything in the matter. But apart from that, one thing is certain that within a few days after 30th July 80 the Home Department did come to know from the Inspector General of Prisons that according to the blinded prisoners who had sent their petitions, they had been blinded by the Police, and from the inspection note of the Inspector General of Police it would seem reasonable to assume that he must have brought the matter to the notice of the Government. We should like to know from the Inspector General of Prisons as to who was the individual or which was the department of the State Government to whose notice he brought this matter and what steps did the State Government take on receipt of the petitions of the blinded prisoners forwarded by the Inspector General of Prisons as also on the matter being brought to their attention by the Inspector General of Prisons as observed by him in his inspection note. We should like the State Government to inform us clearly and precisely as to what steps they took after 30th July, 1980 to bring the guilty to book and to stop recurrence of such atrocities. We want to have this information because we should like to satisfy ourselves whether the Windings which took place in October 1980 could have been prevented by the State Government by taking appropriate steps on receipt of information in regard to the complaint of the blinded prisoners from the Inspector General of Prisons.

10. We would direct the State Government to furnish us full and detailed particulars in this behalf before the next hearing of the writ petition.

11. The writ petition will now be taken up for further hearing on 6th January, 1981.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 725 of 1985

Decided On: 10.03.1986

Suk Das Vs. Union Territory of Arunachal Pradesh

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

P.N. Bhagwati, C.J., D.P. Madon and G.L. Oza, JJ.

JUDGMENT

P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.

1. This appeal by special leave raises a question of considerable importance relating to the administration of criminal justice in the country. The question is whether an accused who on account of his poverty is unable to afford legal representation for himself in a trial involving possibility of imprisonment imperiling his personal liberty, is entitled to free legal aid at State cost and whether it is obligatory on him to make an application for free legal assistance or the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge trying him is bound to inform him that he is entitled to free legal aid and inquire from him whether he wishes to have a lawyer provided to him at State cost: if he is not so informed and in consequence he does not apply for free legal assistance and as a result he is not represented by any lawyer in the trial and is convicted, is the conviction vitiated and liable to be set aside? This question is extremely important because we have almost 50% population which is living below the poverty line and around 70% is illiterate and large sections of people just do not know that if they are unable to afford legal representation in a criminal trial, they are entitled to free legal assistance provided to them at State cost.

2. The facts giving rise to this appeal are not material because the question posed for our consideration is a pure question of law. But even so the broad facts may be briefly set out since they provide the back- drop against which the question of law arises for consideration.

3. The appellants and five other accused were charged in the court of the Additional Deputy Commissioner, Dibang Valley, Anini, Arunachal Pradesh for an offence under Section 506 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code on the allegation that the appellants and the other five accused threatened Shri H.S. Kohli, Assistant Engineer, Central Public Works Department, Anini with a view to compelling him to cancel the transfer orders of the accused which had been passed by him. The case was tried as a warrant case and at the trial 8 witnesses, on behalf of the prosecution, were examined. The appellant was not represented by any lawyer since he was admittedly unable to afford legal representation on account of his poverty and the result was that he could not cross- examine the witnesses of the prosecution. The appellants wished to examine 7 witnesses in defence but out of them two could not be examined since they were staying far away and moreover, in the opinion of the court, they were not material witnesses. The remaining 5 witnesses were examined by the appellants without any legal assistance. The result was that at the end of the trial four of the other accused were acquitted but the appellant and another accused were convicted of the offence under Section 506 of the Indian Penal Code and they were sentenced to undergo simple imprisonment for a period of two years.

4. The appellant thereupon preferred an appeal before the Gauhati High Court. There were several contentions urged in support of the appeal but it is not necessary to refer to them, since there is one contention which in our opinion goes to the root of the matter and has invalidating effect on the conviction and sentence recorded against the appellant. That contention is that the appellant were not provided free legal aid for his defence and the trial was therefore vitiated. This self- same contention was also advanced before the High Court in the appeal preferred by the appellant but the High Court took the view that, though it was undoubtedly the right of the appellant to be provided free legal assistance, the appellant did no make any request to the learned Additional Deputy Commissioner praying for legal aid and since no application for legal aid was made by him, "it could not be said in the facts and circumstances of the case that failure to provide legal assistance vitiated the trial". The High Court in the circumstances confirmed the conviction of the appellant but in view of the fact that he was already in jail for a period of nearly 8 months, the High Court held that the ends of justice would be met if the sentence on the appellant was reduced to that already undergone by him. The appellant was accordingly ordered to be, set at liberty forthwith but since the order of conviction passed against him was sustained by the High Court, he preferred the present appeal with special leave obtained from this Court.

5. It is now well established as a result of the decision of this Court in Hussainara Khatoon's case MANU/SC/0121/1979 : 1979CriLJ1045 that "the right to free legal service is ...clearly an essential ingredient of reasonable, fair and just procedure for a person accused of an offence and it must be held to be implicit in the guarantee of Article 21. This is a constitutional right of every accused person who is unable to engage a lawyer and secure legal services on account of reasons such as poverty, indigence or incommunicado situation and the State is under a mandate to provide a lawyer to an accused person if the circumstances of the case and the needs of justice so require, provided of course the accused person does not object to the provision of such lawyer". This Court pointed out that it is an essential ingredient of reasonable, fair and just procedure to prisoner who is to seek his liberation through the court's process that he should have legal service available to him. The same view was taken by a Bench of this Court earlier in M.H. Hoskot v. State of Maharashtra MANU/SC/0119/1978 : 1978CriLJ1678 . It may therefore now be taken as settled law that free legal assistance at State cost is a fundamental right of a person accused of an offence which may involved jeopardy to his life or personal liberty and this fundamental right is implicit in the requirement of reasonable, fair and just procedure prescribed by Article 21. Of course, it must be recognised that there may be cases involving offences, such as, economic offences or offences against law prohibiting prostitution or child abuse and the like, where social justice may require that free legal service may not be provided by the State. There can in the circumstances be no doubt that the appellant was entitled to a free legal assistance at State cost when he was placed in peril of their personal liberty by reason of being accused of an offence which is proved would clearly entail imprisonment for a terra of two years.

6. But the question is whether this fundamental right could lawfully be denied to the appellant if he did not apply for free legal aid. Is the exercise of this fundamental right conditioned upon the accused applying for free legal assistance so that if he does not make an application for free legal assistance the trial may lawfully proceed without adequate legal representation being afforded to him? Now it is common knowledge that about 70% of the people living in rural areas are illiterate and even more than that percentage of the people are not aware of the rights conferred upon them by law. Even literate people do not know what are their rights and entitlements under the law. It is this absence of legal awareness which is responsible for the deception, exploitation and deprivation of rights and benefits from which the poor suffer in this land. Their legal needs always stand to become crisis oriented because their ignorance prevents them from anticipating legal troubles and approaching a lawyer for consultation and advise in time and their poverty magnifies the impact of the legal troubles and difficulties when they come. Moreover, because of their ignorance and illiteracy, they cannot become self- reliant: they cannot even help themselves. The law ceases to be their protector because they do not know that they are entitled to the protection of the law and they can avail of the legal service programme for putting an end to their exploitation and winning their rights. The result is that poverty becomes with them a condition of total helplessness. This miserable condition in which the poor finds themselves can be alleviating to some extent by creating legal awareness amongst the poor. That is why it has always been recognised as one of the principal items of the programme of the legal aid movement in the country to promote legal literacy. It would in these circumstances make a mockery of legal aid if it were to be left to a poor ignorant and illiterate accused to ask for free legal services. Legal aid would become merely a paper promise and it would fail of its purpose. This is the reason why in Khatri and Ors. v. State of Bihar and Ors. MANU/SC/0518/1981 : 1981CriLJ597 , we ruled that the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge before whom an accused appears must be held to be under an obligation to inform the accused that if he is unable to engage the services of a lawyer on account of poverty or indigence, he is entitled to obtain free legal services at the cost of the State. We deplored that in that case where the accused were blinded prisoners the Judicial Magistrate failed to discharge obligation and contented themselves by merely observing that no legal representation had been asked for by the blinded prisoners and hence none was provided. We accordingly directed "the Magistrates and Sessions Judges in the country to inform every accused who appear before them and who is not represented by a lawyer on account of his poverty or indigence that he is entitled to free legal services at the cost of the State" unless he is not willing to take advantage of the free legal services provided by the State. We also gave a general direction to every State in the country "...to make provision for grant of free legal service to an accused who is unable to engage a lawyer on account of reasons such as poverty, indigence or incommunicado situations," the only qualification being that the offence charged against an accused is such that, on conviction, it would result in a sentence of imprisonment and is of such a nature that the circumstances of the case and that the needs of social justice require that he should be given free legal representations. It is quite possible that since the trial was held before the learned Additional Deputy Commissioner prior to the declaration of the law by this Court in Khatri and Ors. v. State of Bihar (supra), the learned Additional Deputy Commissioner did not inform the appellant that if he was not in a position to engage a lawyer on account of lack of material resources he was entitled to free legal assistance at State cost nor asked him whether he would like to have free legal aid. But it is surprising that despite this declaration of the law in Khatri and Ors. v. State of Bihar and Ors. (supra) on 19th December 1980 when the decision was rendered in that case, the High Court persisted in taking the view that since the appellant did not make an application for free legal assistance, no unconstitutionality was involved in not providing him legal representation at State cost. It is obvious that in the present case the learned Additional Deputy Commissioner did not inform the appellant that he was entitled to free legal assistance nor did he inquire from the appellant whether he wanted a lawyer to be provided to them at State cost. The result was that the appellant remained unrepresented by a lawyer and the trial ultimately resulted in his conviction. This was clearly a violation of the fundamental right of the appellant under Article 21 and the trial must accordingly be held to be vitiated on account of a fatal constitutional infirmity, and the conviction and sentence recorded against the appellant must be set aside.

7. The appellant contended that if the conviction and sentence recorded against him is set aside, the order dismissing the appellant from service passed on the basis of his conviction by the learned Additional Deputy Commissioner must also be quashed and he must be reinstated in service with back wages. Now it is true that the appellant was dismissed from service without holding an inquiry on account of his being convicted for a criminal offence and since the conviction of the appellant is being set aside by us, the order of dismissal must also fall and the appellant must be reinstated in service with back wages. But the result of our quashing the conviction of the appellants would be that the appellant would have to be tried again in accordance with law after providing free legal assistance to him at State cost and that would mean that the appellant would continue to be exposed to the risk of conviction and imprisonment and the possibility cannot be ruled out that the offence charged may ultimately be proved against him and he might land- up in jail and also lose their service. We therefore felt that it would not only meet the ends of justice but also be in the interest of the appellant that no fresh trial should be held against him and he should be reinstated in service but without back wages. We accordingly direct that the appellant shall be reinstated in service but he shall not be entitled to claim any back wages and no fresh trial shall be held against him. The appeal will stand disposed of in these terms.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 195 of 1960

Decided On: 24.11.1961

K.M. Nanavati Vs. State of Maharashtra

Back to Section 307 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Back to Section 431 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

K. Subba Rao, Raghubar Dayal and S.K. Das, JJ.

JUDGMENT

K. Subba Rao, J.

1. This appeal by special leave arises out of the judgment of the Bombay High Court sentencing Nanavati, the appellant, to life imprisonment for the murder of Prem Bhagwandas Ahuja, a businessman of Bombay.

2. This appeal presents the commonplace problem of an alleged murder by an enraged husband of a paramour of his wife : but it aroused considerable interest in the public mind by reason of the publication it received and the important constitutional point it had given rise to at the time of its admission.

3. The appellant was charged under s. 302 as well as under s. 304, Part I, of the Indian Penal Code and was tried by the Sessions Judge, Greater Bombay, with the aid of special jury. The jury brought in a verdict of "not guilty" by 8 : 1 under both the sections; but the Sessions Judge did not agree with the verdict of the jury, as in his view the majority verdict of the jury was such that no reasonable body of men could, having regard to the evidence, bring in such a verdict. The learned Sessions Judge submitted the case under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to the Bombay High Court after recording the grounds for his opinion. The said reference was heard by a division bench of the said High Court consisting of Shelat and Naik, JJ. The two learned Judges gave separate judgments, but agreed in holding that the accused was guilty of the offence of murder under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for life. Shelat, J., having held that there were misdirections to the jury, reviewed the entire evidence and came to the conclusion that the accused was clearly guilty of the offence of murder, alternatively, he expressed the view that the verdict of the jury was perverse, unreasonable and, in any event, contrary to the weight of evidence. Naik, J., preferred to base his conclusion on the alternative ground, namely, that no reasonable body of persons could have come to the conclusion arrived at by the jury. Both the learned Judges agreed that no case had been made out to reduce the offence from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The present appeal has been preferred against the said conviction and sentence.

4. The case of the prosecution may be stated thus : This accused, at the time of the alleged murder, was second in command of the Indian Naval Ship "Mysore". He married Sylvia in 1949 in the registry office at Portsmouth, England. They have three children by the marriage, a boy aged 9 1/2 years a girl aged 5 1/2 years and another boy aged 3 years. Since the time of marriage, the couple were living at different places having regard to the exigencies of service of Nanavati. Finally, they shifted to Bombay. In the same city the deceased Ahuja was doing business in automobiles and was residing, along with his sister, in a building called "Shreyas" till 1957 and thereafter in another building called "Jivan Jyot" in Setalvad Road. In the year 1956, Agniks, who were common friends of Nanavatis and Ahujas, introduced Ahuja and his sister to Nanavatis. Ahuja was unmarried and was about 34 years of age at the time of his death, Nanavati, as a Naval Officer, was frequently going away from Bombay in his ship, leaving his wife and children in Bombay. Gradually, friendship developed between Ahuja and Sylvia, which culminated in illicit intimacy between them. On April 27, 1959, Sylvia confessed to Nanavati of her illicit intimacy with Ahuja. Enraged at the conduct of Ahuja, Nanavati went to his ship, took from the stores of the ship a semi- automatic revolver and six cartridges on a false pretext, loaded the same, went to the flat of Ahuja entered his bed- room and shot him dead. Thereafter, the accused surrendered himself to the police. He was put under arrest and in due course he was committed to the Sessions for facing a charge under s. 302 of the Indian Penal code.

5. The defence version, as disclosed in the statement made by the accused before the Sessions Court under s. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and his deposition in the said Court, may be briefly stated : The accused was away with his ship from April 6, 1959, to April 18, 1959. Immediately after returning to Bombay, he and his wife went to Ahmednagar for about three days in the company of his younger brother and his wife. Thereafter, they returned to Bombay and after a few days his brother and his wife left them. After they had left, the accused noticed that his wife was behaving strangely and was not responsive or affectionate to him. When questioned, she used to evade the issue. At noon on April 27, 1959, when they were sitting in the sitting- room for the lunch to be served, the accused put his arm round his wife affectionately, when she seemed to go tense and unresponsive. After lunch, when he questioned her about her fidelity, she shook her head to indicate that she was unfaithful to him. He guessed that her paramour was Ahuja. As she did not even indicate clearly whether Ahuja would marry her and look after the children, he decided to settle the matter with him. Sylvia pleaded with him not go to Ahuja's house, as he might shoot him. Thereafter, he drove his wife, two of his children and a neighbour's child in his car to a cinema, dropped them there and promised to come and pick them up at 6 P.M. when the show ended. He then drove his car to his ship, as he wanted to get medicine for his sick dog, he represented to the authorities in the ship, that he wanted to draw a revolver and six rounds from the stores of the ship as he was going to drive alone to Ahmednagar by night, though the real purpose was to shoot himself. On receiving the revolver and six cartridges, and put it inside a brown envelope. Then he drove his car to Ahuja's office, and not finding him there, he drove to Ahuja's flat, range the door bell, and, when it was opened by a servant, walked to Ahuja's bed- room, went into the bed- room and shut the door behind him. He also carried with him the envelope containing the revolver. The accused saw the deceased inside the bed- room, called him a filthy swine and asked him whether he would marry Sylvia and look after the children. The deceased retorted, "Am I to marry every woman I sleep with ?" The accused became enraged, put the envelope containing the revolver on a cabnit nearby, and threatened to thrash the deceased. The deceased made a sudden move to grasp at the envelope, when the accused whipped out his revolver and told him to get back. A struggle ensued between the two and during that struggle two shots went off accidentally and hit Ahuja resulting in his death. After the shooting the accused went back to his car and drove it to the police station where he surrendered himself. This is broadly, omitting the details, the case of the defence.

6. It would be convenient to dispose of at the outset the questions of law raised in this case.

7. Mr. G. S. Pathak, learned counsel for the accused, raised before us the following points : (1) Under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the High Court should decide whether a reference made by a Sessions Judge was competent only on a perusal of the order of reference made to it and it had no jurisdiction to consider the evidence and come to a conclusion whether the reference was competent or not. (2) Under s. 307(3) of the said Code, the High Court had no power to set aside the verdict of a jury on the ground that there were misdirections in the charge made by the Sessions Judge. (3) There were no misdirections at all in the charge made by the Sessions Judge; and indeed his charge was fair to the prosecution as well to the accused. (4) The verdict of the jury was not perverse and it was such that a reasonable body of persons could arrive at it on the evidence placed before them. (5) In any view, the accused shot at the deceased under grave and sudden provocation, and therefore even if he had committed an offence, it would not be murder but only culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

8. Mr. Pathak elaborates his point under the first heading thus : Under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the High Court deals with the reference in two stages. In the first stage, the High Court has to consider, on the basis of the referring order, whether a reasonable body of persons could not have reached the conclusion arrived at by the jury; and, if it is of the view that such a body could have come to that opinion the reference shall be rejected as incompetent. At this stage, the High Court cannot travel beyond the order of reference, but shall confine itself only to the reasons given by the Sessions Judge. If, on a consideration of the said reasons, it is of the view that no reasonable body of persons could have come to that conclusion, it will then have to consider the entire evidence to ascertain whether the verdict of the jury is unreasonable. If the High Court holds that the verdict of the jury is not unreasonable, in the case of a verdict of "not guilty", the High Court acquits the accused, and in the case where the verdict is one of "guilty" it convicts the accused. In case the High Court holds that the verdict of "not guilty", is unreasonable, it refers back the case to the Sessions Judge, who convicts the accused; thereafter the accused will have a right of appeal wherein he can attack the validity of his conviction on the ground that there were misdirections in the charge of the jury. So too, in the case of a verdict of "guilty" by the jury, the High Court, if it holds that the verdict is unreasonable, remits the matter to the Sessions Judge, who acquits the accused, and the State, in an appeal against that acquittal, may question the correctness of the said acquittal on the ground that the charge to the jury was vitiated by misdirections. In short, the argument may be put in three propositions, namely, (i) the High Court rejects the reference as incompetent, if on the face of the reference the verdict of the jury does not appear to be unreasonable, (ii) if the reference is competent, the High Court can consider the evidence to come to a definite conclusion whether the verdict is unreasonable or not, and (iii) the High Court has no power under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to set aside the verdict of the jury on the ground that it is vitiated by misdirections in the charge to the jury.

9. The question raised turns upon the construction of the relevant provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The said Code contains two fascicule of sections dealing with two different situations. Under s. 268 of the Code, "All trials before a Court of Session shall be either by jury, or by the Judge himself." Under s. 297 thereof :

"In cases tried by jury, when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply, if any, are concluded, the Court shall proceed to charge the jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided....."

10. Section 298 among other imposes a duty on a judge to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, and especially all questions as to the relevancy of facts which it is proposed to be proved, and the admissibility of evidence or the propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties, and to decide upon all matters of fact which it is necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matter to be given. It is the duty of the jury "to decide which view of the facts is true and then to return the verdict which under such view ought, according to the directions of the Judges, to be returned." After charge to the jury, the jury retire to consider their verdict and, after due consideration, the foreman of the jury informs the Judge what is their verdict or what is the verdict of the majority of the jurors.

11. Where the Judge does not think it necessary to disagree with the verdict of the jurors or of the majority of them, he gives judgment accordingly. If the accused is acquitted, the Judge shall record a verdict of acquittal; if the accused is convicted, the Judge shall pass sentence on him according to law. In the case of conviction, there is a right of appeal under s. 410 of the Code, and in a case of acquittal, under s. 417 of the Code, to the High Court. But s. 418 of the Code provides :

"(1) An appeal may lie on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law except where the trial was by jury, in which case the appeal shall lie on a matter of law only."

12. Sub- section (2) thereof provides for a case of a person sentenced to death, with which we are not now concerned. Section 423 confers certain powers on an appellate Court in the matter of disposing of an appeal, such as calling for the record, hearing of the pleaders, and passing appropriate orders therein. But sub- s. (2) of s. 423 says :

"Nothing herein contained shall authorise the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of the jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owning to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him."

13. It may be noticed at this stage, as it will be relevant in considering one of the arguments raised in this case, that sub- s. (2) does not confer any power on an appellate court, but only saves the limitation on the jurisdiction of an appellate court imposed under s. 418 of the Code. It is, therefore, clear that in an appeal against conviction or acquittal in a jury trial, the said appeal is confined only to a matter of law.

14. The Code of Criminal Procedure also provides for a different situation. The Sessions Judge may not agree with the verdict of the jurors or the majority of them; and in that event s. 307 provides for a machinery to meet that situation. As the argument mainly turns upon the interpretation of the provisions of this section, it will be convenient to read the relevant clauses thereof.

15. Section 307 : (1) If in any such case the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jurors, or of a majority of the jurors, on all or any of the charges on which any accused person has been tried, and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case in respect of such accused person to the High Court, he shall submit the case accordingly, recording the grounds of his opinion, and, when the verdict is one of acquittal, stating the offence which he considers to have been committed, and in such case, if the accused is further charged under the provisions of section 310, shall proceed to try him on such charge as if such verdict had been one of conviction.

16. (3) In dealing with the case so submitted the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict such accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it; and, if it convicts him, may pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Session.

17. This section is a clear departure from the English law. There are good reasons for its enactment. Trial by jury outside the Presidency Towns was first introduced in the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1861, and the verdict of the jury was, subject to re- trial on certain events, final and conclusive. This led to miscarriage of justice through jurors returning erroneous verdicts due to ignorance and inexperience. The working of the system was reviewed in 1872, by a Committee appointed for that purpose and on the basis of the report of the said Committee, s. 262 was introduced in the Code of 1872. Under that section, where there was difference of view between the jurors and the judge, the Judge was empowered to refer the case to the High Court in the ends of justice, and the High Court dealt with the matter as an appeal. But in 1882 the section was amended and under the amended section the condition for reference was that the High Court should differ from the jury completely; but in the Code of 1893 the section was amended practically in terms as it now appears in the Code. The history of the legislation shows that the section was intended as a safeguard against erroneous verdicts of inexperienced jurors and also indicates the clear intention of the Legislature to confer on a High Court a separate jurisdiction, which for convenience may be described as "reference jurisdiction". Section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, while continuing the benefits of the jury system to persons tride by a Court of Session, also guards against any possible injustice, having regard to the conditions obtaining in India. It is, therefore clear that there is an essential difference between the scope of the jurisdiction of the High Court in disposing of an appeal against a conviction or acquittal, as the case may be, in a jury trial, and that in a case submitted by the Sessions Judge when he differs from the verdict of the jury : in the former the acceptance of the verdict of the jury by the Sessions Judge is considered to be sufficient guarantee against its perversity and therefore an appeal is provided only on questions of law, whereas in the latter the absence of such agreement necessitated the conferment of a larger power on the High Court in the matter of interfering with the verdict of the jury.

18. Under s. 307(1) of the Code, the obligation cast upon the Sessions Judge to submit the case to the High Court is made subject to two conditions, namely, (1) the Judge shall disagree with the verdict of the jurors, and (2) he is clearly of the opinion that it is necessary in the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court. If the two conditions are complied with, he shall submit the case, recording the grounds of his opinion. The words "for the ends of justice" are comprehensive, and coupled with the words "is clearly of opinion", they give the Judge a discretion to enable him to exercise his power under different situations, the only criterion being his clear opinion that the reference is in the ends of justice. But the Judicial Committee, in Ramanugrah Singh v. King Emperor (1946) L.R. 173, IndAp 174, construed the words "necessary for the ends of justice" and laid down that the words mean that the Judge shall be of the opinion that the verdict of the jury is one which no reasonable body of men could have reached on the evidence. Having regard to that interpretation, it may be held that the second condition for reference is that the Judge shall be clearly of the opinion that the verdict is one which no reasonable body of men could have reached on the evidence. It follows that if a Judge differs from the jury and is clearly of such an opinion, he shall submit the case to the High Court recording the grounds of his opinion. In that event, the said reference is clearly competent. If on the other hand, the case submitted to the High Court does not ex facie show that the said two conditions have been complied with by the Judge, it is incompetent. The question of competency of the reference does not depend upon the question whether the Judge is justified in differing from the jury or forming such an opinion on the verdict of the jury. The argument that though the Sessions Judge has complied with the conditions necessary for making a reference, the High Court shall reject the reference as incompetent without going into the evidence if the reasons given do not sustain the view expressed by the Sessions Judge, is not supported by the provisions of sub- s. (1) of s. 307 of the Code. But it is said that it is borne out of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ramanugrah Singh's case [(1946) L.R. 73, I.A. 174, 182, 186]. In that case the Judicial Committee relied upon the words "ends of justice" and held that the verdict was one which no reasonable body of men could have reached on the evidence and further laid down that the requirements of the ends of justice must be the determining factor both for the Sessions Judge in making the reference and for the High Court in disposing of it. The Judicial Committee observed :

"In general, if the evidence is such that it can properly support a verdict either of guilty or not guilty, according to the view taken of it by the trial court, and if the jury take one view of the evidence and the judge thinks that they should have taken the other, the view of the jury must prevail, since they are the judges of fact. In such a case a reference is not justified, and it is only by accepting their view that the High Court can give due weight to the opinion of the jury. If, however, the High Court considers that on the evidence no reasonable body of men could have reached the conclusion arrived at by the jury, then the reference was justified and the ends of justice require that the verdict be disregarded."

19. The Judicial Committee proceeded to state :

"In their Lordships' opinion had the High Court approached the reference on the right lines and given due weight to the opinion of the jury they would have been bound to hold that the reference was not justified and that the ends of justice did not require any interference with the verdict of the jury."

20. Emphasis is laid on the word "justified", and it is argued that the High Court should reject the reference as incompetent if the reasons given by the Sessions Judge in the statement of case do not support his view that it is necessary in the ends of the justice to refer the case to the High Court. The Judicial Committee does not lay down any such proposition. There, the jury brought in a verdict of not "guilty" under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge differed from the jury and made a reference to the High Court. The High Court accepted the reference and convicted the accused and sentenced him to transportation for life. The Judicial Committee held, on the facts of that case, that the High Court was not justified in the ends of justice to interfere with the verdict of the jury. They were not dealing with the question of competency of a reference but only with that of the justification of the Sessions Judge in making the reference, and the High Court in accepting it. It was also not considering a case of any disposal of the reference by the High Court on the basis of the reasons given in the reference, but were dealing with a case where the High Court on a consideration of the entire evidence accepted the reference and the Judicial Committee held on the evidence that there was no justification for the ends of justice to accept it. This decision, therefore, has no bearing on the competency of a reference under s. 307(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

21. Now, coming to sub- s. (3) of s. 307 of the Code, it is in two parts. The first part says that the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise in an appeal. Under the second part, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, the High Court shall acquit or convict the accused. These parts are combined by the expression "and subject thereto". The words "subject thereto" were added to the section by an amendment in 1896. This expression gave rise to conflict of opinion and it is conceded that it lacks clarity. That may be due to the fact that piecemeal amendments have been made to the section from time to time to meet certain difficulties. But we cannot ignore the expression, but we must give it a reasonable construction consistent with the intention of the Legislature in enacting the said section. Under the second part of the section, special jurisdiction to decide a case referred to it is conferred on the High Court. It also defines the scope of its jurisdiction and its limitations. The High Court can acquit or convict an accused of an offence of which the jury could have convicted him, and also pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Session. But before doing so, it shall consider the entire evidence and give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury. The second part does not confer on the High Court any incidental procedural powers necessary to exercise the said jurisdiction in a case submitted to it, for it is neither an appeal nor a revision. The procedural powers are conferred on the High Court under the first part. The first part enables the High Court to exercise any of the powers which it may exercise in appeal, for without such powers it cannot exercise its jurisdiction effectively. But the expression "subject to" indicates that in exercise of its jurisdiction in the manner indicated by the second part, it can call in aid only any of the powers of an appellate court, but cannot invoke a power other than that conferred on an appellate court. The limitation on the second part implied in the expression "subject thereto" must be confined to the area of the procedural powers conferred on a appellate court. If that be the construction, the question arises, how to reconcile the provisions of s. 423(2) with those of s. 307 of the Code ? Under sub- s. (2) of s. 423 :

"Nothing herein contained shall authorise the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him."

22. It may be argued that, as an appellate court cannot alter or reverse the verdict of a jury unless such a verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him, the High Court, in exercise of its jurisdiction under s. 307 of the Code, likewise could not do so except for the said reasons. Sub- section (2) of s. 423 of the Code does not confer any power of the High Court; it only restates the scope of the limited jurisdiction conferred on the court under s. 418 of the Code, and that could not have any application to the special jurisdiction conferred on the High Court under s. 307. That apart, a perusal of the provisions of s. 423(1) indicates that there are powers conferred on an appellate court which cannot possibly be exercised by courts disposing of a reference under s. 307 of the Code, namely, the power to order commitment etc. Further s. 423(1)(a) and (b) speak of conviction, acquittal, finding and sentence, which are wholly inappropriate to verdict of a jury. Therefore, a reasonable construction will be that the High Court can exercise any of the powers conferred on an appellate court under s. 423 or under other sections of the Code which are appropriate to the disposal of a reference under s. 307. The object is to prevent miscarriage of the justice by the jurors returning erroneous or perverse verdict. The opposite construction defeats this purpose, for it equates the jurisdiction conferred under s. 307 with that of an appellate court in a jury trial. That construction would enable the High Court to correct an erroneous verdict of a jury only in a case of misdirection by the Judge but not in a case of fair and good charge. This result effaces the distinction between the two types of jurisdiction. Indeed, learned counsel for the appellant has taken a contrary position. He would say that the High Court under s. 307(3) could not interfere with the verdict of the jury on the ground that there were misdirections in the charge to the jury. This argument is built upon the hypothesis that under the Code of Criminal Procedure there is a clear demarcation of the functions of the jury and the Judge, the jury dealing with facts and the Judge with law, and therefore the High Court could set aside a verdict on the ground of misdirection only when an appeal comes to it under s. 418 and could only interfere with the verdict of the jury for the ends of justice, as interpreted by the Privy Council, when the matter comes to it under s. 307(3). If this interpretation be accepted, we would be attributing to the Legislature an intention to introduce a circuitous method and confusion in the disposal of criminal cases. The following illustration will demonstrate the illogical result of the argument. The jury brings in a verdict of "guilty" on the basis of a charge replete with misdirections; the Judge disagrees with that verdict and states the case to the High Court; the High Court holds that the said verdict is not erroneous on the basis of the charge, but is of the opinion that the verdict is erroneous because of the misdirections in the charge; even so, it shall hold that the verdict of the jury is good and reject the reference thereafter, the Judge has to accept the verdict and acquit the accused; the prosecution then will have to prefer an appeal under s. 417 of the Code on the ground that the verdict was induced by the misdirections in the charge. This could not have been the intention of the Legislature. Take the converse case. On similar facts, the jury brings in a verdict of "guilty"; the Judge disagrees with the jury and makes a reference to the High Court; even though it finds misdirections in the charge to the jury, the High Court cannot set aside the conviction but must reject the reference; and after the conviction, the accused may prefer an appeal to the High Court. This procedure will introduce confusion in jury trials, introduce multiplicity of proceedings, and attribute ineptitude to the Legislature. What is more, this construction is not supported by the express provisions of s. 307(3) of the Code. The said sub-section enables the High Court to consider the entire evidence, to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, and to acquit or convict the accused. The key words in the sub-section are "giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury". The High Court shall give weight to the verdict of the jury; but the weight to be given to a verdict depends upon many circumstances - it may be one that no reasonable body of persons could come to; it may be a perverse verdict; it may be a divided verdict and may not carry the same weight as the united one does; it may be vitiated by misdirections or non- directions. How can a Judge give any weight to a verdict if it is induced and vitiated by grave misdirections in the charge ? That apart, the High Court has to give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge. The reasons for the opinion of the Sessions Judge are disclosed in the case submitted by him to the High Court. If the case stated by the Sessions Judge discloses that there must have been misdirections in the charge, how can the High Court ignore them in giving due weight to his opinion ? What is more, the jurisdiction of the High Court is couched in very wide terms in sub- s. (3) of s. 307 of the Code : it can acquit or convict an accused. It shall take into consideration the entire evidence in the case; it shall give due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury; it combines in itself the functions of the Judge and jury; and it is entitled to come to its independent opinion. Tee phraseology used does not admit of an expressed or implied limitation on the jurisdiction of the High Court.

23. It appears to us that the Legislature designedly conferred a larger power on the High Court under s. 307(3) of the Code than that conferred under s. 418 thereof, as in the former case the Sessions Judge differs from the jury while in the latter he agrees with the jury.

24. The decisions cited at the Bar do not in any way sustain in narrow construction sought to be placed by learned counsel on s. 307 of the Code. In Ramanugrah Singh's case [(1945- 46) L.R. 73 I.A. 174, 182], which has been referred to earlier, the Judicial Committee described the wide amplitude of the power of the High Court in the following terms :

"The Court must consider the whole case and give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and jury, and then acquit or convict the accused."

25. The Judicial Committee took care to observe :

".....the test of reasonableness on the part of the jury may not be conclusive in every case. It is possible to suppose a case in which the verdict was justified on the evidence placed before the jury, but in the light of further evidence placed before the High Court the verdict is shown to be wrong. In such a case the ends of justice would require the verdict to be set aside though the jury had not acted unreasonably."

26. This passage indicates that the Judicial Committee did not purport to lay down exhaustively the circumstances under which the High Court could interfere under the said sub- section with the verdict of the jury. This Court in Akhlakali Hayatalli v. The State of Bombay MANU/SC/0137/1953 : 1954CriLJ451 accepted the view of the Judicial Committee on the construction of s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and applied it to the facts of that case. But the following passage of this Court indicates that it also does not consider the test of reasonableness as the only guide in interfering with the verdict of the jury :

"The charge was not attacked before the High Court nor before us as containing any misdirections or non- directions to the jury such as to vitiate the verdict."

27. This passage recognizes the possibility of interference by the High Court with the verdict of the jury under the said sub- section if the verdict is vitiated by misdirections or non- directions. So too, the decision of this Court in Ratan Rai v. State of Bihar [1957] S.C.R. 273 assumes that such an interference is permissible if the verdict of the jury was vitiated by misdirections. In that case, the appellants were charged under Sections 435 and 436 of the Indian Penal Code and were tried by a jury, who returned a majority verdict of "guilty". The Assistant Sessions Judge disagreed with the said verdict and made a reference to the High Court. At the hearing of the reference the counsel for the appellants contended that the charge to the jury was defective, and did not place the entire evidence before the Judges. The learned Judges of the High Court considered the objections as such and nothing more, and found the appellants guilty and convicted them. This Court, observing that it was incumbent on the High Court to consider the entire evidence and the charge as framed and placed before the jury and to come to its own conclusion whether the evidence was such that could properly support the verdict of guilty against the appellants, allowed the appeal and remanded the matter to the High Court for disposal in accordance with the provisions of s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This decision also assumes that a High Court could under s. 307(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure interfere with the verdict of the jury, if there are misdirections in the charge and holds that in such a case it is incumbent on the court to consider the entire evidence and to come to its own conclusion, after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge, and the verdict of the jury. This Court again in Sashi Mohan Debnath v. The State of West Bengal [1958] S.C.R. 960, held that where the Sessions Judge disagreed with the verdict of the jury and was of the opinion that the case should be submitted to the High Court, he should submit the whole case and not a part of it. There, the jury returned a verdict of "guilty" in respect of some charges and "not guilty" in respect of others. But the Sessions Judge recorded his judgment of acquittal in respect of the latter charges in agreement with the jury and referred the case to the High Court only in respect of the former. This Court held that the said procedure violated sub- s. (2) of s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and also had the effect of preventing the High Court from considering the entire evidence against the accused and exercising its jurisdiction under sub- s. (3) of s. 307 of the said Code. Imam, J., observed that the reference in that case was incompetent and that the High Court could not proceed to exercise any of the powers conferred upon it under sub- s. (3) of s. 307 of the Code, because the very foundation of the exercise of that power was lacking, the reference being incompetent. This Court held that the reference was incompetent because the Sessions Judge contravened the express provisions of sub- s. (2) of s. 307 of the Code, for under that sub- section whenever a Judge submits a case under that section, he shall not record judgment of acquittal or of conviction on any of the charges on which such accused has been tried, but he may either remand such accused to custody or admit him to bail. As in that case the reference was made in contravention of the express provisions of sub- s. (2) of s. 307 of the Code and therefore the use of the word 'incompetent' may not be inappropriate. The decision of a division bench of the Patna High Court in Emperor v. Ramadhar Kurmi A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 79 may usefully be referred to as it throws some light on the question whether the High Court can interfere with the verdict of the jury when it is vitiated by serious misdirections and non- directions. Das, J., observed :

"Where, however, there is misdirection, the principle embodied in s. 537 would apply and if the verdict is erroneous owing to the misdirection, it can have no weight on a reference under s. 307 as on an appeal."

28. It is not necessary to multiply decisions. The foregoing discussion may be summarized in the form of the following propositions : (1) The competency of a reference made by a Sessions Judge depends upon the existence of two conditions, namely, (i) that he disagrees with the verdict of the jurors, and (ii) that he is clearly of the opinion that the verdict is one which no reasonable body of men could have reached on the evidence, after reaching that opinion, in the case submitted by him he shall record the grounds of his opinion. (2) If the case submitted shows that the conditions have not been complied with or that the reasons for the opinion are not recorded, the High Court may reject the reference as incompetent : the High Court can also reject it if the Sessions Judge has contravened sub- s. (2) of s. 307. (3) If the case submitted shows that the Sessions Judge has disagreed with the verdict of the jury and that he is clearly of the opinion that no reasonable body of men could have reached the conclusion arrived at by the jury, and he discloses his reasons for the opinion, sub- s. (3) of s. 307 of the Code comes into play, and thereafter the High Court has an obligation to discharge its duty imposed thereunder. (4) Under sub- s. (3) of s. 307 of the Code, the High Court has to consider the entire evidence and, after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict the accused. (5) The High Court may deal with the reference in two ways, namely, (i) if there are misdirections vitiating the verdict, it may, after going into the entire evidence, disregard the verdict of the jury and come to its own conclusion, and (ii) even if there are no misdirections, the High Court can interfere with the verdict of the jury if it finds the verdict "perverse in the sense of being unreasonable", "manifestly wrong", or "against the weight of evidence", or, in other words, if the verdict is such that no reasonable body of men could have reached on the evidence. (6) In the disposal of the said reference, the High Court can exercise any of the procedural powers appropriate to the occasion, such as, issuing of notice, calling for records, remanding the case, ordering a retrial, etc. We therefore, reject the first contention of learned counsel for the appellant.

29. The next question is whether the High Court was right in holding that there were misdirections in the charge to the jury. Misdirection is something which a judge in his charge tells the jury and is wrong or in a wrong manner tending to mislead them. Even an omission to mention matters which are essential to the prosecution or the defence case in order to help the jury to come to a correct verdict may also in certain circumstances amount to a misdirection. But, in either case, every misdirection or non- direction is not in itself sufficient to set aside a verdict, but it must be such that it has occasioned a failure of justice.

30. In Mushtak Hussein v. The State of Bombay MANU/SC/0026/1953 : [1953]4SCR809 , this Court laid down :

"Unless therefore it is established in a case that there has been a serious misdirection by the judge in charging the jury which has occasioned a failure of justice and has misled the jury in giving its verdict, the verdict of the jury cannot be set aside."

31. This view has been restated by this Court in a recent decision, viz., Smt. Nagindra Bala Mitra v. Sunil Chandra Roy MANU/SC/0074/1960 : 1960CriLJ1020 .

32. The High Court in its judgment referred to as many as six misdirections in the charge to the jury which in its view vitiated the verdict, and it also stated that there were many others. Learned counsel for the appellant had taken each of the said alleged misdirections and attempted to demonstrate that they were either no misdirections at all, or even if they were, they did not in any way affect the correctness of the verdict.

33. We shall now take the first and the third misdirections pointed out by Shelat, J., as they are intimately connected with each other. They are really omissions. The first omission is that throughout the entire charge there is no reference to s. 105 of the Evidence Act or to the statutory presumption laid down in that section. The second omission is that the Sessions Judge failed to explain to the jury the legal ingredients of s. 80 of the Indian Penal code, and also failed to direct them that in law the said section was not applicable to the facts of the case. To appreciate the scope of the alleged omissions, it is necessary to read the relevant provisions.

34. Section 80 of the Indian Penal Code.

"Nothing is an offence which is done by accident or misfortune, and without any criminal intention or knowledge in the doing of a lawful act in a lawful manner by lawful means and with proper care and caution. "

35. Evidence Act.

36. Section 103 : "The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on that person who wishes the Court to believe in its existence, unless it is provided by any law that the proof of that fact shall lie on any particular person. "

37. Section 105 : "When a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the General Exceptions in the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860) or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law defining the offence, is upon him, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. "

38. Section 3 : "In this Act the following words and expressions are used in the following senses, unless a contrary intention appears from the context :-

39. A fact is said to be disproved when, after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes that it does not exist, or considers its non- existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it does not exist.

40. Section 4 : ..... "Whenever it is directed by this Act that the court shall presume a fact, it shall regard such fact as proved unless and until it is disproved."

41. The legal impact of the said provisions on the question of burden of proof may be stated thus : In India, as it is in England, there is a presumption of innocence in favour of the accused as a general rule, and it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused; to put it in other words, the accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by the prosecution. But when an accused relies upon the General Exceptions in the Indian Penal Code or on any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the Penal Code, or in any law defining an offence, s. 105 of the Evidence Act raises a presumption against the accused and also throws a burden on him to rebut the said presumption. Under that section the Court shall presume the absence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the exceptions, that is, the Court shall regard the non- existence of such circumstances as proved till they are disproved.

An illustration based on the facts of the present case may bring out the meaning of the said provision. The prosecution alleges that the accused intentionally shot the deceased; but the accused pleads that, though the shots emanated from his revolver and hit the deceased, it was by accident, that is, the shots went off the revolver in the course of a struggle in the circumstances mentioned in s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code and hit the deceased resulting in his death. The Court then shall presume the absence of circumstances bringing the case within the provisions of s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code, that is, it shall presume that the shooting was not by accident, and that the other circumstances bringing the case within the exception did not exist; but this presumption may be rebutted by the accused by adducing evidence to support his plea of accident in the circumstances mentioned therein. This presumption may also be rebutted by admissions made or circumstances elicited by the evidence led by the prosecution or by the combined effect of such circumstances and the evidence adduced by the accused. But the section does not in any way affect the burden that lies on the prosecution to prove all the ingredients of the offence with which the accused is charged : that burden never shifts. The alleged conflict between the general burden which lies on the prosecution and the special burden imposed on the accused under s. 105 of the Evidence Act is more imaginary than real. Indeed, there is no conflict at all. There may arise three different situations : (1) A statute may throw the burden of proof of all or some of the ingredients of an offence on the accused : (see Sections 4 and 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act). (2) The special burden may not touch the ingredients of the offence, but only the protection given on the assumption of the proof of the said ingredients : (see Sections 77, 78, 79, 81 and 88 of the Indian Penal Code). (3) It may relate to an exception, some of the many circumstances required to attract the exception if proved affecting the proof of all or some of the ingredients of the offence : (see s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code). In the first case the burden of proving the ingredients or some of the ingredients of the offence, as the case may be, lies on the accused. In the second case, the burden of bringing the case under the exception lies on the accused. In the third case, though the burden lies on the accused to bring his case within the exception, the facts proved may not discharge the said burden, but may affect the proof of the ingredients of the offence. An illustration may bring out the meaning. The prosecution has to prove that the accused shot dead the deceased intentionally and thereby committed the offence of murder within the meaning of s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code; the prosecution has to prove the ingredients of murder, and one of the ingredients of that offence is that the accused intentionally shot the deceased; the accused pleads that he shot at the deceased by accident without any intention or knowledge in the doing of a lawful act in a lawful manner by lawful means with proper care and caution; the accused against whom a presumption is drawn under s. 105 of the Evidence Act that the shooting was not by accident in the circumstances mentioned in s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code, may adduce evidence to rebut that presumption. That evidence may not be sufficient to prove all the ingredients of s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code, but may prove that the shooting was by accident or inadvertence, i.e., it was done without any intention or requisite state of mind, which is the essence of the offence, within the meaning of s. 300, Indian Penal Code, or at any rate may throw a reasonable doubt on the essential ingredients of the offence of murder. In that event though the accused failed to bring his case within the terms of s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code, the Court may hold that the ingredients of the offence have not been established or that the prosecution has not made out the case against the accused. In this view it might be said that the general burden to prove the ingredients of the offence, unless there is a specific statute to the contrary, is always on the prosecution, but the burden to prove the circumstances coming under the exceptions lies upon the accused. The failure on the part of the accused to establish all the circumstances bringing his case under the exception does not absolve the prosecution to prove the ingredients of the offence; indeed, the evidence, though insufficient to establish the exception, may be sufficient to negative one or more of the ingredients of the offence.

42. The English decisions relied upon by Mr. Pathak, learned counsel for the accused, may not be of much help in construing the provisions of s. 105 of the Indian Evidence Act. We would, therefore, prefer not to refer to them, except to one of the leading decisions on the subject, namely,

Woolmington v. The Director of Public Prosecutions L.R. (1935) A.C. 462. The headnote in that decision gives its gist, and it read :

"In a trial for murder the Crown must prove death as the result of a voluntary act of the prisoner and malice of the prisoner. When evidence of death and malice has been given, the prisoner is entitled to show by evidence or by examination of the circumstances adduced by the Crown that the act on his part which caused death was either unintentional or provoked. If the jury are either satisfied with his explanation or, upon a review of all the evidence, are left in reasonable doubt whether, even if his explanation be not accepted, the act was unintentional or provoked, the prisoner is entitled to be acquitted. "

43. In the course of the judgment Viscount Sankey, L.C., speaking for the House, made the following observations:

"But while the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner, there is no such burden laid on the prisoner to prove his innocence and it is sufficient for him to raise a doubt as to his guilt; he is not bound to satisfy the jury of his innocence..... Throughout the web of the English Criminal Law one golden thread is always to be seen that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the prisoner's guilt subject to what I have already said as to the defence of insanity and subject also to any statutory exception. If, at the end of and on the whole of the case, there is a reasonable doubt, created by the evidence given by either the prosecution or the prisoner, as to whether the prisoner killed the deceased with a malicious intention, the prosecution has not made out the case and the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal."

44. These passages are not in conflict with the opinion expressed by us earlier. As in England so in India, the prosecution must prove the guilt of the accused, i.e., it must establish all the ingredients of the offence with which he is charged. As in England so also in India, the general burden of proof is upon the prosecution; and if, on the basis of the evidence adduced by the prosecution or by the accused, there is a reasonable doubt whether the accused committed the offence, he is entitled to the benefit of doubt. In India if an accused pleads an exception within the meaning of s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code, there is a presumption against him and the burden to rebut that presumption lies on him. In England there is no provision similar to s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code, but Viscount Sankey, L.C., makes it clear that such a burden lies upon the accused if his defence is one of insanity and in a case where there is a statutory exception to the general rule of burden of proof. Such an exception we find in s. 105 of the Indian Evidence Act. Reliance is placed by learned counsel for the accused on the decision of the Privy Council in Attygalle v. Emperor A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 169 in support of the contention that notwithstanding s. 105 of the Evidence Act, the burden of establishing the absence of accident within the meaning of s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code is on the prosecution. In that case, two persons were prosecuted, one for performing an illegal operation and the other for abetting him in that crime. Under s. 106 of the Ordinance 14 of 1895 in the Ceylon Code, which corresponds to s. 106 of the Indian Evidence Act, it was enacted that when any fact was especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact was upon him. Relying upon that section, the Judge in his charge to the jury said :

"Miss Maye - that is the person upon whom the operation was alleged to have been performed - was unconscious and what took place in that room that three- quarters of an hour that she was under chloroform is a fact specially within the knowledge of these two accused who were there. The burden of proving that fact, the law says, is upon him, namely that no criminal operation took place but what took place was this and this speculum examination."

45. The Judicial Committee pointed out:

"It is not the law of Ceylon that the burden is cast upon an accused person of proving that no crime has been committed. The jury might well have thought from the passage just quoted that that was in fact a burden which the accused person had to discharge. The summing- up goes on to explain the presumption of innocence in favour of accused persons, but it again reiterates that the burden of proving that no criminal operation took place is on the two accused who were there."

46. The said observations do not support the contention of learned counsel. Section 106 of Ordinance 14 of 1895 of the Ceylon Code did not cast upon the accused a burden to prove that he had not committed any crime; nor did it deal with any exception similar to that provided under s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code. It has no bearing on the construction of s. 105 of the Indian Evidence Act. The decisions of this Court in The State of Madras v. A. Vaidyanatha Iyer MANU/SC/0108/1957 : 1958CriLJ232 , which deals with s. 4 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, and C.S.D. Swami v. The State MANU/SC/0025/1959 : 1960CriLJ131 , which considers the scope of s. 5(3) of the said Act, are examples of a statute throwing the burden of proving and even of establishing the absence of some of the ingredients of the offence on the accused; and this Court held that notwithstanding the general burden on the prosecution to prove the offence, the burden of proving the absence of the ingredients of the offence under certain circumstances was on the accused. Further citations are unnecessary as, in our view, the terms of s. 105 of the Evidence Act are clear and unambiguous.

47. Mr. Pathak contends that the accused did not rely upon any exception within the meaning of s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code and that his plea all through has been only that the prosecution has failed to establish intentional killing on his part. Alternatively, he argues that as the entire evidence has been adduced both by the prosecution and by the accused, the burden of proof became only academic and the jury was in a position to come to one conclusion or other on the evidence irrespective of the burden of proof. Before the Sessions Judge the accused certainly relied upon s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code, and the Sessions Judge dealt with the defence case in his charge to the jury. In paragraph 6 of the charge, the learned Sessions Judge stated:

"Before I proceed further I have to point out another section which is section 80. You know by now that the defence of the accused is that the firing of the revolver was a matter of accident during a struggle for possession of the revolver. A struggle or a fight by itself does not exempt a person. It is the accident which exempts a person from criminal liability because there may be a fight, there may be a struggle and in the fight and in the struggle the assailant may over- power the victim and kill the deceased so that a struggle or a fight by itself does not exempt an assailant. It is only an accident, whether it is in struggle or a fight or otherwise which can exempt an assailant. It is only an accident, whether it is in a struggle or a fight of otherwise which can exempt a prisoner from criminal liability. I shall draw your attention to section 80 which says : .....

(section 80 read). You know that there are several provisions which are to be satisfied before the benefit of this exception can be claimed by an accused person and it should be that the act itself must be an accident or misfortune, there should be no criminal intention or knowledge in the doing of that act, that act itself must be done in a lawful manner and it must be done by lawful means and further in the doing of it, you must do it with proper care and caution. In this connection, therefore, even while considering the case of accident, you will have to consider all the factors, which might emerge from the evidence before you, whether it was proper care and caution to take a loaded revolver without a safety catch to the residence of the person with whom you were going to talk and if you do not get an honourable answer you were prepared to thrash him. You have also to consider this further circumstance whether it is an act with proper care and caution to keep that loaded revolver in the hand and thereafter put it aside, whether that is taking proper care and caution. This is again a question of fact and you have to determine as Judges of fact, whether the act of the accused in this case can be said to be an act which was lawfully done in a lawful manner and with proper care and caution. If it is so, then and only then can you call it accident or misfortune. This is a section which you will bear in mind when you consider the evidence in this case."

48. In this paragraph the learned Sessions Judge mixed up the ingredients of the offence with those of the exception. He did not place before the jury the distinction in the matter of burden of proof between the ingredients of the offence and those of the exception. He did not tell the jury that where the accused relied upon the exception embodied in s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code, there was a statutory presumption against him and the burden of proof was on him to rebut that presumption. What is more, he told the jury that it was for them to decide whether the act of the accused in the case could be said to be an act which was lawfully done in a lawful manner with proper care and caution. This was in effect abdicating his functions in favour of the jury. He should have explained to them the implications of the terms "lawful act", "lawful manner", "lawful means" and "with proper care and caution" and pointed out to them the application of the said legal terminology to the facts of the case. On such a charge as in the present case, it was not possible for the jury, who were laymen, to know the exact scope of the defence and also the circumstances under which the plea under s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code was made out. They would not have also known that if s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code applied, there was a presumption against the accused and the burden of proof to rebut the presumption was on him. In such circumstances, we cannot predicate that the jury understood the legal implications of s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code and the scope of the burden of proof under s. 105 of the Evidence Act, and gave their verdict correctly. Nor can we say that the jury understood the distinction between the ingredients of the offence and the circumstances that attract s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code and the impact of the proof of some of the said circumstances on the proof of the ingredients of the offence. The said omissions therefore are very grave omissions which certainly vitiated the verdict of the jury.

49. The next misdirection relates to the question of grave and sudden provocation. On this question, Shelat, J., made the following remarks:

"Thus the question whether a confession of adultery by the wife of accused to him amounts to grave and sudden provocation or not was a question of law. In my view, the learned Session Judge was in error in telling the jury that the entire question was one of fact for them to decide. It was for the learned Judge to decide as a question of law whether the sudden confession by the wife of the accused amounted to grave and sudden provocation as against the deceased Ahuja which on the authorities referred to hereinabove it was not. He was therefore in error in placing this alternative case to the jury for their determination instead of deciding it himself."

50. The misdirection according to the learned Judge was that the Sessions Judge in his charge did not tell the jury that the sudden confession of the wife to the accused did not in law amount to sudden and grave provocation by the deceased, and instead he left the entire question to be decided by the jury. The learned judge relied upon certain English decisions and textbooks in support of his conclusion that the said question was one of law and that it was for the Judge to express his view thereon. Mr. Pathak contends that there is an essential difference between the law of England and that of India in the matter of the charge to the jury in respect of grave and sudden provocation. The House of Lords in Holmes v. Director of Public Prosecution L.R. (1946) A.C. 588 laid down the law in England thus:

"If there is no sufficient material, even on a view of the evidence most favourable to the accused, for a jury (which means a reasonable jury) to form the view that a reasonable person so provoked could be driven, through transport of passion and loss of self- control, to the degree and method and continuance of violence which produces the death it is the duty of the judge as matter of law to direct the jury that the evidence does not support a verdict of manslaughter. If, on the other hand, the case is one in which the view might fairly be taken (a) that a reasonable person, in consequence of the provocation received, might be so rendered subject to passion or loss of control as to be led to use the violence with fatal results, and (b) that the accused was in fact acting under the stress of such provocation, then it is for the jury to determine whether on its view of the facts manslaughter or murder is the appropriate verdict."

51. Viscount Simon brought out the distinction between the respective duties of the judge and the jury succinctly by formulating the following questions:

"The distinction, therefore, is between asking 'Could the evidence support the view that the provocation was sufficient to lead a reasonable person to do what the accused did?' (which is for the judge to rule), and, assuming that the judge's ruling is in affirmative, asking the jury: 'Do you consider that, on the facts as you find them from the evidence, the provocation was in fact enough to lead a reasonable person to do what the accused did ?' and, if so, 'Did the accused act under the stress of such provocation' ?"

52. So far as England is concerned the judgment of the House of Lords is the last word on the subject till it is statutorily changed or modified by the House of Lords. It is not, therefore, necessary to consider the opinions of learned authors on the subject cited before us to show that the said observations did not receive their approval.

53. But Mr. Pathak contends that whatever might be the law in England, in India we are governed by the statutory provisions, and that under the explanation to Exception I to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code, the question "whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder is one of fact", and therefore, unlike in England, in India both the aforesaid questions fall entirely within the scope of the jury and they are for them to decide. To put it in other words, whether a reasonable person in the circumstances of a particular case committed the offence under provocation which was grave and sudden is a question of fact for the jury to decide. There is force in this argument, but it is not necessary to express our final opinion thereon, as the learned Attorney- General has conceded that there was no misdirection in regard to this matter.

54. The fourth misdirection found by the High Court is that the learned Sessions Judge told the jury that the prosecution relied on the circumstantial evidence and asked them to apply the stringent rule of burden of proof applicable to such cases, whereas in fact there was direct evidence of Puransingh in the shape of extra- judicial confession. In paragraph 8 of the charge the Sessions Judge said:

"In this case the prosecution relies on what is called circumstantial evidence that is to say there is no witness who can say that he saw the accused actually shooting and killing deceased. There are no direct witnesses, direct witnesses as they are called, of the event in question. Prosecution relies on certain circumstances from which they ask you to deduce an inference that it must be the accused and only the accused who must have committed this crime. That is called circumstantial evidence. It is not that prosecution cannot rely on circumstantial evidence because it is not always the case or generally the case that people who go out to commit crime will also take witnesses with them. So that it may be that in some cases the prosecution may have to rely on circumstantial evidence. Now when you are dealing with circumstantial evidence you will bear in mind certain principles, namely, that the facts on which the prosecution relies must be fully established. They must be fully and firmly established. These facts must lead to one conclusion and one only namely the guilt of the accused and lastly it must exclude all reasonable hypothesis consistent with the innocence of the accused, all reasonable hypothesis consistent with the innocence of the accused should be excluded. In other words you must come to the conclusion by all the human probability, it must be the accused and the accused only who must have committed this crime. That is the standard of proof in a case resting on circumstantial evidence."

55. Again in paragraph 11 the learned Sessions Judge observed that the jury were dealing with circumstantial evidence and graphically stated:

"It is like this, take a word, split it up into letters, the letters, may individually mean nothing but when they are combined they will form a word pregnant with meaning. That is the way how you have to consider the circumstantial evidence. You have to take all the circumstances together and judge for yourself whether the prosecution have established their case."

56. In paragraph 18 of the charge, the learned Sessions Judge dealt with the evidence of Puransingh separately and told the jury that if his evidence was believed, it was one of the best forms of evidence against the man who made the admission and that if thy accepted that evidence, then the story of the defence that it was an accident would become untenable. Finally he summarized all the circumstances on which the prosecution relied in paragraph 34 and one of the circumstances mentioned was the extra- judicial confession made to Puransingh. In that paragraph the learned Sessions Judge observed as follows:

"I will now summarize the circumstances on which the prosecution relies in this case. Consider whether the circumstances are established beyond all reasonable doubt. In this case you are dealing with circumstantial evidence and therefore consider whether they are fully and firmly established and consider whether they lead to one conclusion and only one conclusion that it is the accused alone who must have shot the deceased and further consider that it leaves no room for any reasonable hypothesis consistent with the innocence of the accused regard being had to all the circumstances in the case and the conclusion that you have to come to should be of this nature and by all human probability it must be the accused and the accused alone who must have committed this crime."

57. Finally the learned Sessions Judge told them:

"If on the other hand you think that the circumstances on which the prosecution relies are fully and firmly established, that they lead to one and the only conclusion and one only, of the guilt of the accused and that they exclude all reasonable hypothesis of the innocence of the accused then and in that case it will be your duty which you are bound by the oath to bring verdict accordingly without any fear or any favour and without regard being had to any consequence that this verdict might lead to."

58. Mr. Pathak contends that the learned Sessions Judge dealt with the evidence in two parts, in one part he explained to the jury the well settled rule of approach to circumstantial evidence, whereas in another part he clearly and definitely pointed to the jury the great evidentiary value of the extra- judicial confession of guilt by the accused made to Puransingh, if that was believed by them. He therefore, argues that there was no scope for any confusion in the minds of the jurors in regard to their approach to the evidence or in regard to the evidentiary value of the extra-judicial confession. The argument proceeds that even if there was a misdirection, it was not such as to vitiate the verdict of the jury. It is not possible to accept this argument. We have got to look at the question from the standpoint of the possible effect of the said misdirection in the charge on the jury, who are laymen. In more than one place the learned Sessions Judge pointed out that the case depended upon circumstantial evidence and that the jury should apply the rule of circumstantial evidence settled by decisions. Though at one place he emphasized upon evidentiary value of a confession he later on included that confession also as one of the circumstances and again directed the jury to apply the rule of circumstantial evidence. It is not disputed that the extra- judicial confession made to Puransingh is direct piece of evidence and that the stringent rule of approach to circumstantial evidence does not apply to it. If that confession was true, it cannot be disputed that the approach of the jury to the evidence would be different from that if that was excluded. It is not possible to predicate that the jury did not accept that confession and therefore applied the rule of circumstantial evidence. It may well have been that the jury accepted it and still were guided by the rule of circumstantial evidence as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge. In these circumstances we must hold, agreeing with the High Court, that this is a grave misdirection affecting the correctness of the verdict.

59. The next misdirection relied upon by the High Court is the circumstance that the three letters written by Sylvia were not read to the jury by the learned Sessions Judge in his charge and that the jury were not told of their effect on the credibility of the evidence of Sylvia and Nanavati. Shelat, J., observed in regard to this circumstance thus :

"It cannot be gainsaid that these letters were important documents disclosing the state of mind of Mrs. Nanavati and the deceased to a certain extent. If these letters had been read in juxtaposition of Mrs. Nanavati's evidence they would have shown that her statement that she felt that Ahuja had asked her not to see him for a month for the purpose of backing out of the intended marriage was not correct and that they had agreed not to see each other for the purpose of giving her and also to him an opportunity to coolly think out the implications of such a marriage and then to make up her own mind on her own. The letters would also show that when the accused asked her, as he said in his evidence, whether Ahuja would marry her, it was not probable that she would fence that question. On the other hand, she would, in all probability, have told him that they had already decided to marry. In my view, the omission to refer even once to these letters in the charge especially in view of Mrs. Nanavati's evidence was a non- direction amounting to misdirection."

60. Mr. Pathak contends that these letters were read to the jury by counsel on both sides and a reference was also made to them in the evidence of Sylvia and, therefore the jury clearly knew the contents of the letters, and that in the circumstances the non- mention of the contents of the letters by the Sessions Judge was not a misdirection and even if it was it did not affect the verdict of the jury. In this context reliance is placed upon two English decisions, namely, R. v. Roberts [1942] 1 All. E.R. 187 and R. v. Attfield [1961] 3 All. E.R. 243. In the former case the appellant was prosecuted for the murder of a girl by shooting her with a service rifle and he pleaded accident as his defence. The Judge in his summing- up, among other defects, omitted to refer to the evidence of certain witnesses; the jury returned a verdict of "guilty" not the charge of murder and it was accepted by the judge, it was contended that the omission to refer to the evidence of certain witnesses was a misdirection. Rejecting that plea, Humphreys, J., observed :

"The jury had the Dagduas before them. They had the whole of the evidence before them, and they had, just before the summing up, comments upon those matters from counsel for the defence, and from counsel for the prosecution. It is incredible that they could have forgotten them or that they could have misunderstood the matter in any way, or thought, by reason of the fact that the judge did not think it necessary to refer to them, that they were not to pay attention to them. We do not think there is anything in that point at all. A judge, in summing- up, is not obliged to refer to every witness in the case, unless he thinks it necessary to do so. In saying this, the court is by no means saying that it might not have been more satisfactory if the judge had referred to the evidence of the two witnesses, seeing that he did not think it necessary to refer to some of the Dagduas made by the accused after the occurrence. No doubt it would have been more satisfactory from the point of view of the accused. All we are saying is that we are satisfied that there was no misdirection in law on the part of judge in omitting those statements, and it was within his discretion."

61. This passage does not lay down as a proposition of law that however important certain documents or pieces of evidence may be from the standpoint of the accused or the prosecution, the judge need not refer to or explain them in his summing- up to the jury, and, if he did not, it would not amount to misdirection under any circumstances. In that case some Dagduas made by witnesses were not specifically brought to the notice of the jury and the Court held in the circumstances of that case that there was no misdirection. In the latter case the facts were simple and the evidence was short; the judge summed up the case directing the jury as to the law but did not deal with evidence except in regard to the appellant's character. The jury convicted the appellant. The court held that, "although in a complicated and lengthy case it was incumbent on the court to deal with the evidence in summing- up, yet where, as in the present case, the issues could be simply and clearly stated, it was not fatal defect for the evidence not to be reviewed in the summing- up." This is also a decision on the facts of that case. That apart, we are not concerned with a simple case here but with a complicated one. This decision does not help us in deciding the point raised. Whether a particular omission by a judge to place before the jury certain evidence amounts to a misdirection or not falls to be decided on the facts of each case.

62. These letters show the exact position of Sylvia in the context of her intended marriage with Ahuja, and help to test the truthfulness or otherwise of some of the assertions made by her to Nanavati. A perusal of these letters indicates that Sylvia and Ahuja were on intimate terms, that Ahuja was willing to marry her, that they had made up their minds to marry, but agreed to keep apart for a month to consider coolly whether they really wanted to marry in view of the serious consequences involved in taking such a step. Both Nanavati and Sylvia gave evidence giving an impression that Ahuja was backing out of his promise to marry Sylvia and that was the main reason for Nanavati going to Ahuja's flat for an explanation. If the Judge had read these letters in his charge and explained the implication of the contents thereof in relation to the evidence given by Nanavati and Sylvia, it would not have been possible to predicate whether the jury would have believed the evidence of Nanavati and Sylvia. If the marriage between them was a settled affair and if the only obstruction in the way was Nanavati, and if Nanavati had expressed his willingness to be out of the way and even to help them to marry, their evidence that Sylvia did not answer the direct question about the intentions of Ahuja to marry her, and the evidence of Nanavati that it became necessary for him to go to Ahuja's flat to ascertain the latter's intentions might not have been believed by the jury. It is no answer to say that the letters were read to the jury at different stages of the trial or that they might have read the letters themselves for in a jury trial, especially where innumerable documents are filed, it is difficult for a lay jury, unless properly directed, to realise the relative importance of specified documents in the context of different aspects of a case. That is why the Code of Criminal Procedure, under s. 297 thereof, imposes a duty on the Sessions Judge to charge the jury after the entire evidence is given, and after counsel appearing for the accused and counsel appearing for the prosecution have addressed them. The object of the charge to the jury by the Judge is clearly to enable him to explain the law and also to place before them the facts and circumstances of the case both for and against the prosecution in order to help them in arriving at a right decision. The fact that the letters were read to the jury by prosecution or by the counsel for the defence is not of much relevance, for they would place the evidence before the jury from different angles to induce them to accept their respective versions. That fact in itself cannot absolve the Judge from his clear duty to put the contents of the letters before the jury from the correct perspective. We are in agreement with the High Court that this was a clear misdirection which might have affected the verdict of the jury.

63. The next defect pointed out by the High Court is that the Sessions Judge allowed the counsel for the accused to elicit from the police officer, Phansalkar, what Puransingh is alleged to have stated to him orally, in order to contradict the evidence of Puransingh in the court, and the Judge also dealt with the evidence so elicited in paragraph 18 of his charge to the jury. This contention cannot be fully appreciated unless some relevant facts are stated. Puransingh was examined for the prosecution as P.W. 12. He was a watchman of "Jivan Jyot". He deposed that when the accused was leaving the compound of the said building, he asked him why he had killed Ahuja, and the accused told him that he had a quarrel with Ahuja as the latter had "connections" with his wife and therefore he killed him. At about 5- 5 P.M. on April 27, 1959, this witness reported this incident to Gamdevi Police Station. On that day Phansalkar (P.W. 13) was the Station House Duty Officer at that station from 2 to 8 P.M. On the basis of the statement of Puransingh, Phansalkar went in a jeep with Puransingh to the place of the alleged offence. Puransingh said in his evidence that he told Phansalkar in the jeep what the accused had told him when he was leaving the compound of "Jivan Jyot". After reaching the place of the alleged offence, Phansalkar learnt from a doctor that Ahuja was dead and he also made enquiries from Miss Mammie, the sister of the deceased. He did not record the statement made by Puransingh. But latter on between 10 and 10-30 P.M. on the same day, Phansalkar made a statement to Inspector Mokashi what Puransingh had told him and that statement was recorded by Mokashi. In the statement taken by Mokashi it was not recorded that Puransingh told Phansalkar that the accused told him why he had killed Ahuja. When Phansalkar was in the witness- box to a question put to him in cross- examination he answered that Puransingh did not tell him that he had asked Nanavati whey he killed Ahuja and that the accused replied that he had a quarrel with the deceased as the latter had "connections" with his wife and that he had killed him. The learned Sessions Judge not only allowed the evidence to go in but also, in paragraph 18 of his charge to the jury, referred to that statement. After giving the summary of the evidence given by Puransingh, the learned Sessions Judge proceeded to state in his charge to the jury :

"Now the conversation between him and Phansalkar (Sub- Inspector) was brought on record in which what the chowkidar told Sub- Inspector Phansalkar was, the servants of the flat of Miss Ahuja had informed him that a Naval Officer was going away in the car. He and the servants had tried to stop him but the said officer drove away in the car saying that he was going to the Police Station and to Sub- Inspector Phansalkar he did not state about the admission made by Mr. Nanavati to him that he killed the deceased as the deceased had connections with his wife. The chowkidar said that he had told this also to sub- Inspector Phansalkar. Sub- Inspector Phansalkar said the Puransingh had not made this statement to him. You will remember that this chowkidar went to the police station at Gamdevi to give information about this crime and while coming back he was with Sub- Inspector Phansalkar and Sub- Inspector Phansalkar in his own statement to Mr. Mokashi has referred to the conversation which he had between him and this witness Puransingh and that had been brought on record as a contradiction."

64. The learned Sessions Judge then proceeded to state other circumstances and observed, "Consider whether you will accept the evidence of Puransingh or not." It is manifest from the summing- up that the learned Sessions Judge not only read to the jury the evidence of Phansalkar wherein he stated that Puransingh did not tell him that the accused told him why he killed Ahuja but also did not tell the jury that the evidence of Phansalkar was not admissible to contradict the evidence of Puransingh. It is not possible to predicate what was the effect of the alleged contradiction on the mind of the jury and whether they had not rejected the evidence of Puransingh because of that contradiction. If the said evidence was not admissible, the placing of that evidence before the jury was certainly a grave misdirection which must have affected their verdict. The question is whether such evidence is legally admissible. The alleged omission was brought on record in the cross- examination of Phansalkar, and, after having brought it in, it was sought to be used to contradict the evidence of Puransingh. Learned Attorney- General contends that the statement made by Phansalkar to Inspector Mokashi could be used only to contradict the evidence of Phansalkar and not that of Puransingh under s. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and the statement made by Puransingh to Phansalkar, it not having been recorded, could not be used at all to contradict the evidence of Puransingh under the said section. He further argues that the alleged omission not being a contradiction, it could in no event be used to contradict Puransingh. Learned counsel for the accused, on the other hand, contends that the alleged statement was made to a police officer before the investigation commenced and, therefore, it was not hit by s. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it could be used to contradict the evidence of Puransingh. Section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure reads :

(1) No statement made by any person to a Police officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall, if reduced into writing be signed by the person making it; nor shall any such statement or any record thereof, whether in a police diary or otherwise, or any part of such statement or record, be used for any purpose, save as hereinafter provided, at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made :

Provided that when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid, any part of his statement, if duly proved, may be used by the accused, and with the permission of the Court, by the prosecution, to contradict such witness in the manner provided by section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 (1 of 1872), and when any part of such statement is so used, any part thereof may also be used in the re- examination of such witness, but for the purpose only of explaining any matter referred to in his cross- examination.

65. The preliminary condition for the application of s. 162 of the Code is that the statement should have been made to a police- officer in the course of an investigation under Chapter XIV of the Code. If it was not made in the course of such investigation, the admissibility of such statement would not be governed by s. 162 of the Code. The question, therefore, is whether Puransingh made the statement to Phansalkar in the course of investigation. Section 154 of the Code says that every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence if given orally to an officer in charge of a police- station shall be reduced to writing by him or under his direction; and section 156(1) is to the effect that any officer in charge of a police- station may, without the order of a Magistrate, investigate any cognizable case which a court having jurisdiction over the local area within the limits of such station would have power to inquire into or try under the provisions of Chapter XIV relating to the place of inquiry or trial. The evidence in the case clearly establishes that Phansalkar, being the Station House Duty Officer at Gamdevi Police- station on April 27, 1959, from 2 to 8 P.M., was an officer in charge of the Police- station within the meaning of the said sections. Puransingh in his evidence says that he went to Gamdevi Police- station and gave the information of the shooting incident to the Gamdevi Police. Phansalkar in his evidence says that on the basis of the information he went along with Puransingh to the place of the alleged offence. His evidence also discloses that he had questioned Puransingh, the doctor and also Miss Mammie in regard to the said incident. On this uncontradicted evidence there cannot be any doubt that the investigation of the offence had commenced and Puransingh made the statement to the police officer in the course of the said investigation. But it is said that, as the information given by Puransingh was not recorded by Police Officer Phansalkar as he should do under s. 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no investigation in law could have commenced with the meaning of s. 156 of the Code. The question whether investigation had commenced or not is a question of fact and it does not depend upon any irregularity committed in the matter of recording the first information report by the concerned police officer. If so, s. 162 of the Code is immediately attracted. Under s. 162(1) of the Code, no statement made by any person to a Police-officer in the course of an investigation can be used for any purpose at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made. But the proviso lifts the ban and says that when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing, any part of his statement, if duly proved, may be used by the accused to contradict such witness. The proviso cannot be invoked to bring in the statement made by Phansalkar to Inspector Mokashi in the cross- examination of Phansalkar, for the statement made by him was not used to contradict the evidence of Phansalkar. The proviso cannot obviously apply to the oral statement made by Puransingh to Phansalkar, for the said statement of Puransingh has not been reduced into writing. The faint argument of learned counsel for the accused that the statement of Phansalkar recorded by Inspector Mokashi can be treated as a recorded statement of Puransingh himself is to be stated only to be rejected, for it is impossible to treat the recorded statement of Phansalkar as the recorded statement of Puransingh by a police- officer. If so, the question whether the alleged omission of what the accused told Puransingh in Puransingh's oral statement to Phansalkar could be used to contradict Puransingh, in view of the decision of this Court in Tahsildar Singh's case MANU/SC/0053/1959 : [[1959] Supp. (2) S.C.R. 875], does not arise for consideration. We are, therefore, clearly of the opinion that not only the learned Sessions Judge acted illegally in admitting the alleged omission in evidence to contradict the evidence of Puransingh, but also clearly misdirected himself in placing the said evidence before the jury for their consideration.

66. In addition to the misdirections pointed out by the High Court, the learned Attorney- General relied upon another alleged misdirection by the learned Sessions Judge in his charge. In paragraph 28 of the charge, the learned Sessions Judge stated thus :

"No one challenges the marksmanship of the accused but Commodore Nanda had come to tell you that he is a good shot and Mr. Kandalawala said that here was a man and good marksman, would have shot him, riddled him with bullets perpendicularly and not that way and he further said that as it is not done in this case it shows that the accused is a good marksman and a good shot and he would not have done this thing, this is the argument."

67. The learned Attorney- General points out that the learned Sessions Judge was wrong in saying that no one challenged the marksmanship of the accused, for Commodore Nanda was examined at length on the competency of the accused as a marksman. Though this is a misdirection, we do not think that the said passage, having regard to the other circumstances of the case, could have in any way affected the verdict of the jury. It is, therefore, clear that there were grave misdirections in this case, affecting the verdict of the jury, and the High Court was certainly within its rights to consider the evidence and come to its own conclusion thereon.

68. The learned Attorney- General contends that if he was right in his contention that the High Court could consider the evidence afresh and come to its own conclusion, in view of the said misdirection, this Court should not, in exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction under Art. 136 of the Constitutions interfere with the findings of the High Court. There is force in this argument. But, as we have heard counsel at great length, we propose to discuss the evidence.

69. We shall now proceed to consider the evidence in the case. The evidence can be divided into three parts, namely, (i) evidence relating to the conduct of the accused before the shooting incident, (ii) evidence in regard to the conduct of the accused after the incident, and (iii) evidence in regard to the actual shooting in the bed- room of Ahuja.

70. We may start with the evidence of the accused wherein he gives the circumstances under which he came to know of the illicit intimacy of his wife Sylvia with the deceased Ahuja, and the reasons for which he went to the flat of Ahuja in the evening of April 27, 1959. After his brother and his brother's wife, who stayed with him for a few days, had left, he found his wife behaving strangely and without affection towards him. Though on that ground he was unhappy and worried, he did not suspect of her unfaithfulness to him. On the morning of April 27, 1959, he and his wife took out their sick dog to the Parel Animal Hospital. On their way back, they stopped at the Metro Cinema and his wife bought some tickets for the 3- 30 show. After coming home, they were sitting in the room for the lunch to be served when he put his arm around his wife affectionately and she seemed to go tense and was very unresponsive. After lunch, when his wife was reading in the sitting room, he told her "Look, we must get these things straight" or something like that, and "Do you still love me ?" As she did not answer, he asked her "Are you in love with some one else ?", but she gave no answer. At that time he remembered that she had not been to a party given by his brother when he was away on the sea and when asked why she did not go, she told him that she had a previous dinner engagement with Miss Ahuja. On the basis of this incident, he asked her "Is it Ahuja ?" and she said "Yes." When he asked her "Have you been faithful to me ?", she shook her head to indicate "No." Sylvia in her evidence, as D.W. 10, broadly supported this version. It appears to us that this is clearly a made- up conversation and an unnatural one too. Is it likely that Nanavati, who says in his evidence that prior to April 27, 1959, he did not think that his wife was unfaithful to him, would have suddenly thought that she had a lover on the basis of a trivial circumstance of her being unresponsive when he put his arm around her affectionately ? Her coldness towards him might have been due to many reasons. Unless he had a suspicion earlier or was informed by somebody that she was unfaithful to him, this conduct of Nanavati in suspecting his wife on the basis of the said circumstance does not appear to be the natural reaction of a husband. The recollection of her preference to attend the dinner given by Miss Mammie to that of his brother, in the absence of an earlier suspicion or information, could not have flashed on his mind the image of Ahuja as a possible lover of his wife. There was nothing extraordinary in his wife keeping a previous engagement with Mis Mammie and particularly when she could rely upon her close relations not to misunderstand her. The circumstances under which the confession of unfaithfulness is alleged to have been made do not appear to be natural. This inference is also reinforced by the fact that soon after the confession, which is alleged to have upset him so much, he is said to have driven his wife and children to the cinema. If the confession of illicit intimacy between Sylvia and Ahuja was made so suddenly at lunch time, even if she had purchased the tickets, it is not likely that he would have taken her and the children to the cinema. Nanavati then proceeds to say in his evidence : on his wife admitting her illicit intimacy with Ahuja, he was absolutely stunned; he then got up and said that he must go and settle the matter with the swine; he asked her what were the intentions of Ahuja and whether Ahuja was prepared to marry her and look after the children; he wanted an explanation from Ahuja for his caddish conduct. In the cross- examination he further elaborated on his intentions thus : He thought of having the matters settled with Ahuja; he would find out from him whether he would take an honourable way out of the situation; and he would thrash him if he refused to do so. The honourable course which he expected of the deceased was to marry his wife and look after the children. He made it clear further that when he went to see Ahuja the main thing in his mind was to find out what Ahuja's intentions were towards his wife and children and to find out the explanation for his conduct. Sylvia in her evidence says that when she confessed her unfaithfulness to Nanavati, the latter suddenly got up rather excitedly and said that he wanted to go to Ahuja's flat and square up the things. Briefly stated, Nanavati, according to him, went to Ahuja's flat to ask for an explanation for seducing his wife and to find out whether he would marry Sylvia and take care of the children. Is it likely that a person, situated as Nanavati was, would have reacted in the manner stated by him ? It is true that different persons react, under similar circumstances, differently. A husband to whom his wife confessed of infidelity may kill his wife, another may kill his wife as well as her paramour, the third, who is more sentimental, may commit suicide, and the more sophisticated one may give divorce to her and marry another. But it is most improbable, even impossible, that a husband who has been deceived by his wife would voluntarily go to the house of his wife's paramour to ascertain his intentions, and, what is more, to ask him to take charge of his children. What was the explanation Nanavati wanted to get from Ahuja ? His wife confessed that she had illicit intimacy with Ahuja. She is not a young girl, but a woman with three children. There was no question of Ahuja seducing an innocent girl, but both Ahuja and Sylvia must have been willing parties to the illicit intimacy between them. That apart, it is clear from the evidence that Ahuja and Sylvia had decided to marry and, therefore, no further elucidation of the intention of Ahuja by Nanavati was necessary at all. It is true that Nanavati says in his evidence that when he asked her whether Ahuja was prepared to marry her and look after the children, she did not give any proper rely; and Sylvia also in her evidence says that when her husband asked her whether Ahuja was willing to marry her and look after the children she avoided answering that question as she was too ashamed to admit that Ahuja was trying to back out from the promise to marry her. That this version is not true is amply borne out by the letters written by Sylvia to Ahuja. The first letter written by Sylvia is dated May 24, 1958, but that was sent to him only on March 19, 1959, along with another letter. In that letter dated May 24, 1958, she stated :

"Last night when you spoke about your need to marry and about the various girls you may marry, something inside me snapped and I know that I could not bear the thought of your loving or being close to someone else."

71. Reliance is placed upon these words by learned counsel for the accused in support of his contention that Ahuja intended to marry another girl. But this letter is of May 1958 and by that time it does not appear that there was any arrangement between Sylvia and Ahuja to marry. It may well have been that Ahuja was telling Sylvia about his intentions to marry another girl to make her jealous and to fall in for him. But as days passed by, the relationship between them had became very intimate and they began to love each other. In the letter dated March 19, 1959, she said : "Take a chance on our happiness, my love. I will do my best to make you happy; I love you, I want you so much that everything is bound to work out well." The last sentence indicates that they had planned to marry. Whatever ambiguity there may be in these words, the letter dated April 17, 1959, written ten days prior to the shooting incident, dispels it; therein she writes.

"In any case nothing is going to stop my coming to you. My decision is made and I do not change my mind. I am taking this month so that we may afterwards say we gave ourselves every chance and we know what we are doing. I am torturing myself in every possible way as you asked, so that, there will be no surprise afterwards."

72. This letter clearly demonstrates that she agreed not to see Ahuja for a month, not because that Ahuja refused to marry her, but because it was settled that they should marry, and that in view of the far- reaching effects of the separation from her husband on her future life and that of her children, the lovers wanted to live separately to judge for themselves whether they really loved each other so much as to marry. In the cross- examination she tried to wriggle out of these letters and sought to explain them away; but the clear phraseology of the last letter speaks for itself, and her oral evidence, contrary to the contents of the letters, must be rejected. We have no doubt that her evidence, not only in regard to the question of marriage but also in regard to other matters, indicates that having lost her lover, out of necessity or out of deep penitence for her past misbehavior, she is out to help her husband in his defence. This correspondence belies the entire story that Sylvia did not reply to Nanavati when the latter asked her whether Ahuja was willing to marry her and that that was the reason why Nanavati wanted to visit Ahuja to ask him about his intentions. We cannot visualize Nanavati as a romantic lover determined to immolate himself to give opportunity to his unfaithful wife to start a new life of happiness and love with her paramour after convincing him that the only honourable course open to him was to marry her and take over his children. Nanavati was not ignorant of the ways of life or so gullible as to expect any chivalry or honour in a man like Ahuja. He is an experienced Naval Officer and not a sentimental hero of a novel. The reason therefore for Nanavati going to Ahuja's flat must be something other than asking him for an explanation and to ascertain his intention about marrying his wife and looking after the children.

73. Then, according to Nanavati, he drove his wife and children to cinema, and promising them to come and pick them up at the end of the show at about 6 P.M., he drove straight to his ship. He would say that he went to his ship to get medicine for his sick dog. Though ordinarily this statement would be insignificant, in the context of the conduct of Nanavati, it acquires significance. In the beginning of his evidence, he says that on the morning of the day of the incident he and his wife took out their sick dog to the Parel Animal Hospital. It is not his evidence that after going to the hospital he went to his ship before returning home. It is not even suggested that in the ship there was a dispensary catering medicine for animals. This statement, therefore, is not true and he did not go to the ship for getting medicine for his dog but for some other purpose, and that purpose is clear from his subsequent evidence. He met Captain Kolhi and asked for his permission to draw a revolver and six rounds because he was going to drive to Ahmednagar by night. Captain Kolhi gave him the revolver and six rounds, he immediately loaded the revolver with all the six rounds and put the revolver inside an envelope which was lying in his cabin. It is not the case of the accused that he really wanted to go to Ahmednagar and he wanted the revolver for his safety. Then why did he take the revolver ? According to him, he wanted to shoot himself after driving far away from his children. But he did not shoot himself either before or after Ahuja was shot dead. The taking of the revolver on a false pretext and loading it with six cartridges indicate the intention on his part to shoot somebody with it.

74. Then the accused proceeded to state that he put the envelope containing the revolver in his car and found himself driving to Ahuja's office. At Ahuja's office he went in keeping the revolver in the car, and asked Talaja, the Sales Manager of Universal Motors of which Ahuja was the proprietor whether Ahuja was inside. He was told that Ahuja was not there. Before leaving Ahuja's office, the accused looked for Ahuja in the Show Room, but Ahuja was not there. In the cross- examination no question was put to Nanavati in regard to his statement that he kept the revolver in the car when he entered Ahuja's office. On the basis of this statement, it is contended that if Nanavati had intended to shoot Ahuja he would have taken the revolver inside Ahuja's office. From this circumstance it is not possible to say that Nanavati's intention was not to shoot Ahuja. Even if his statement were true, it might well have been that he would have gone to Ahuja's office not to shoot him there but to ascertain whether he had left the office for his flat. Whatever it may be, from Ahuja's office he straightway drove to the flat of Ahuja. His conduct at the flat is particularly significant. His version is that he parked his car in the house compound near the steps, went up the steps, but remembered that his wife had told him that Ahuja might shoot him and so he went back to his car, took the envelope containing the revolver, and went up to the flat. He rang the doorbell; when a servant opened the door, he asked him whether Ahuja was in. Having ascertained that Ahuja was in the house, he walked to his bedroom, opened the door and went in shutting the door behind him. This conduct is only consistent with his intention to shoot Ahuja. A person, who wants to seek an interview with another in order to get an explanation for his conduct or to ascertain his intentions in regard to his wife and children, would go and sit in the drawing- room and ask the servant to inform his master that he had come to see him. He would not have gone straight into the bed- room of another with a loaded revolver in hand and closed the door behind. This was the conduct of an enraged man who had gone to wreak vengeance on a person who did him a grievous wrong. But it is said that he had taken the loaded revolver with him as his wife had told him that Ahuja might shoot him. Earlier in his cross- examination he said that when he told her that he must go and settle the matter with the "swine" she put her hand upon his arm and said, "No, No, you must not go there, don't go there, he may shoot you." Sylvia in her evidence corroborates his evidence in this respect : But Sylvia has been cross- examined and she said that she knew that Ahuja had a gun and she had seen it in Ashoka Hotel in New Delhi and that she had not seen any revolver at the residence of Ahuja at any time. It is also in evidence that Ahuja had not licence for a revolver and no revolver of his was found in his bed- room. In the circumstances, we must say that Sylvia was only attempting to help Nanavati in his defence. We think that the evidence of Nanavati supported by that of Sylvia was a collusive attempt on their part to explain away the otherwise serious implication of Nanavati carrying the loaded revolver into the bed- room of Ahuja. That part of the version of the accused in regard to the manner of his entry into the bed- room of Ahuja, was also supported by the evidence of Anjani (P.W. 8), the bearer, and Deepak, the Cook. Anjani opened the door of the flat to Nanavati at about 4- 20 P.M. He served tea to his master at about 4- 15 P.M. Ahuja then telephoned to ascertain the correct time and then went to his bed- room. About five minutes thereafter this witness went to the bed- room of his master to bring back the tea- tray from there, and at that time his master went into the bathroom for his bath. Thereafter, Anjani went to the kitchen and was preparing tea when he heard the door- bell. He then opened the door to Nanavati. This evidence shows that at about 4- 20 P.M. Ahuja was taking his bath in the bathroom and immediately thereafter Nanavati entered the bed- room. Deepak, the cook of Ahuja, also heard the ringing of the door- bell. He saw the accused opening the door of the bed- room with a brown envelope in his hand and calling the accused by his name "Prem"; he also saw his master having a towel wrapped around his waist and combing his hair standing before the dressing-table, when the accused entered the room and closed the door behind him. These two witnesses are natural witnesses and they have been examined by the police on the same day and nothing has been elicited against them to discredit their evidence. The small discrepancies in their evidence do not in any way affect their credibility. A few seconds thereafter, Mammie, the sister of the deceased, heard the crack of the window pane. The time that elapsed between Nanavati entering the bed- room of Ahuja and her hearing the noise was about 15 to 20 seconds. She describes the time that elapsed between the two events as the time taken by her to take up her saree from the door of her dressing- room and her coming to the bed- room door. Nanavati in his evidence says that he was in the bed- room of Ahuja for about 30 to 60 seconds. Whether it was 20 seconds, as Miss Mammie says, or 30 to 60 seconds, as Nanavati deposes, the entire incident of shooting took place in a few seconds.

75. Immediately after the sounds were heard, Anjani and Miss Mammie entered the bed- room and saw the accused.

76. The evidence discussed so far discloses clearly that Sylvia confessed to Nanavati of her illicit intimacy with Ahuja; that Nanavati went to his ship at about 3.30 P.M. and took a revolver and six rounds on a false pretext and loaded the revolver with six rounds; that thereafter he went to the office of Ahuja to ascertain his whereabouts, but was told that Ahuja had left for his house; that the accused then went to the flat of the deceased at about 4- 20 P.M.; that he entered the flat and then the bed- room unceremoniously with the loaded revolver, closed the door behind him and a few seconds thereafter sounds were heard by Miss Mammie, the sister of the deceased, and Anjani, a servant; that when Miss Mammie and Anjani entered the bed- room, they saw the accused with the revolver in his hand, and found Ahuja lying on the floor of the bathroom. This conduct of the accused to say the least, is very damaging for the defence and indeed in itself ordinarily sufficient to implicate him in the murder of Ahuja.

77. Now we shall scrutinize the evidence to ascertain the conduct of the accused from the time he was found in the bed- room of Ahuja till he surrendered himself to the police. Immediately after the shooting, Anjani and Miss Mammie went into the bed- room of the deceased. Anjani says in his evidence that he saw the accused facing the direction of his master who was lying in the bathroom.; that at that time the accused was having a "pistol" in his hand; that when he opened the door, the accused turned his face towards this witness and saying that nobody should come in his way or else he would shoot at them, he brought his "pistol" near the chest of the witness; and that in the meantime Miss Mammie came there, and said that the accused had killed her brother.

78. Miss Mammie in her evidence says that on hearing the sounds, she went into the bed- room of her brother, and there she saw the accused nearer to the radiogram than to the door with a gun in his hand; that she asked the accused "what is this ?" but she did not hear the accused saying anything.

79. It is pointed out that there are material contradictions between what was stated by Miss Mammie and what was stated by Anjani. We do not see any material contradictions. Miss Mammie might not have heard what the accused said either because she came there after the aforesaid words were uttered or because in her anxiety and worry she did not hear the words. The different versions given by the two witnesses in regard to what Miss Mammie said to the accused is not of any importance as the import of what both of them said is practically the same. Anjani opened the door to admit Nanavati into the flat and when he heard the noise he must have entered the room. Nanavati himself admitted that he saw a servant in the room, though he did not know him by name; he also saw Miss Mammie in the room. These small discrepancies, therefore, do not really affect their credibility. In effect and substance both saw Nanavati with a fire- arm in his hand - though one said pistol and the other gun - going away from the room without explaining to Miss Mammie his conduct and even threatening Anjani. This could only be the conduct of a person who had committed a deliberate murder and not of one who had shot the deceased by accident. If the accused had shot the diseased by accident, he would have been in a depressed and apologetic mood and would have tried to explain his conduct to Miss Mammie or would have phoned for a doctor or asked her to send for one or at any rate he would not have been in a belligerent mood and threatened Anjani with his revolver. Learned counsel for the accused argues that in the circumstances in which the accused was placed soon after the accidental shooting he could not have convinced Miss Mammie with any amount of explanation and therefore there was no point in seeking to explain his conduct to her. But whether Miss Mammie would have been convinced by his explanation or not, if Nanavati had shot the deceased by accident, he would certainly have told her particularly when he knew her before and when she happened to be the sister of the man shot at. Assuming that the suddenness of the accidental shooting had so benumbed his senses that he failed to explain the circumstances of the shooting to her, the same cannot be said when he met others at the gate. After the accused had come out of the flat of Ahuja, he got into his car and took a turn in the compound. He was stopped near the gate by Puransingh, P.W. 12, the watchman of the building. As Anjani had told him that the accused had killed Ahuja the watchman asked him why he had killed his master. The accused told him that he had a quarrel with Ahuja as the latter had "connections" with his wife and therefore he killed him. The watchman told the accused that he should not go away from the place before the police arrived, but the accused told him that he was going to the police and that if he wanted he could also come with him in the car. At that time Anjani was standing in front of the car and Deepak was a few feet away. Nanavati says in his evidence that it was not true that he told Puransingh that he had killed the deceased as the latter had "connection" with his wife and that the whole idea was quite absurd. Puransingh is not shaken in his cross- examination. He is an independent witness; though he is a watchman of Jivan Jyot, he was not an employee of the deceased. After the accused left the place, this witness, at the instance of Miss Mammie, went to Gamdevi Police Station and reported the incident to the police officer Phansalkar, who was in charge of the police- station at that time, at about 5- 5 P.M. and came along with the said police-officer in the jeep to Jivan Jyot at about 7 P.M. he went along with the police- officer to the police station where his statement was recorded by Inspector Mokashi late in the night. It is suggested that this witness had conspired with Deepak and Anjani and that he was giving false evidence. We do not see any force in this contention. His statement was regarded on the night of the incident itself. It is impossible to conceive that Miss Mammie, who must have had a shock, would have been in a position to coach him up to give a false statement. Indeed, her evidence discloses that she was drugged to sleep that night. Can it be said that these two illiterate witnesses, Anjani and Deepak, would have persuaded him to make false statement that night. Though both of them were present when Puransingh questioned the accused, they deposed that they were at a distance and therefore they did not hear what the accused told Puransingh. If they had all colluded together and were prepared to speak to a false case, they could have easily supported Puransingh by stating that they also heard what the accused told Puransingh. We also do not think that these two witnesses are so intelligent as to visualize the possible defence and beforehand coached Puransingh to make a false statement on the very night of the incident. Nor do we find any inherent improbability in his evidence if really Nanavati had committed the murder. Having shot Ahuja he was going to surrender himself to the police; he knew that he had committed a crime; he was not a hardened criminal and must have had a moral conviction that he was justified in doing what he did. It was quite natural, therefore, for him to confess his guilt and justify his act to the watchman who stopped him and asked him to wait there till the police came. In the mood in which Nanavati was soon after the shooting, artificial standards of status or position would not have weighed in his mind if he was going to confess and surrender to the police. We have gone through the evidence of Puransingh and we do not see any justification to reject his evidence.

80. Leaving Jivan Jyot the accused drove his car and came to Raj Bhavan Gate. There he met a police constable and asked him for the location of the nearest police station. The direction given by the police constable were not clear and, therefore, the accused requested him to go along with him to the police station, but the constable told him that as he was on duty, he could not follow him. This is a small incident in itself, but it only shows that the accused was anxious to surrender himself to the police. This would not have been the conduct of the accused, if he had shot another by accident, for in that event he would have approached a lawyer or a friend for advice before reporting the incident to the police. As the police constable was not able to give him clear directions in regard to the location of the nearest police station, the accused went to the house of Commander Samuel, the Naval Provost Marshal. What happened between the accused and Samuel is stated by Samuel in his evidence as P.W. 10. According to his evidence, on April 27, 1959, at about 4.45 P.M., he was standing at the window of his study in his flat on the ground floor at New Queen's Road. His window opens out on the road near the band stand. The accused came up to the window and he was in a dazed condition. The witness asked him what had happened, and the accused told him, "I do not quite know what happened, but I think I have shot a man." The witness asked him how it happened, and the accused told him that the man had seduced his wife and he would not stand it. When the witness asked him to come inside and explain everything calmly, the accused said "No, thank you, I must go", "please tell me where I should go and report." Though he asked him again to come in, the accused did not go inside and, therefore, this witness instructed him to go to the C.I.D. Office and report to the Deputy Commissioner Lobo. The accused asked him to phone to Lobo and he telephoned to Lobo and told him that an officer by name Commander Nanavati was involved in an affair and that he was on the way to report to him. Nanavati in his evidence practically corroborates the evidence of Samuel. Nanavati's version in regard to this incident is as follows :

"I told him that something terrible had happened, that I did not know quite what had happened but I thought I had shot a man. He asked me where this had happened. I told him at Nepean Sea Road. He asked me why I had been there. I told him I went there because a fellow there had seduced my wife and I would not stand for it. He asked me many times to go inside his room. But I was not willing to do so. I was anxious to go to the police station. I told Commander Samuel that there had been a fight over a revolver. Commander Samuel asked to report to Deputy Commissioner Lobo."

81. The difference between the two versions lies in the fact that while Nanavati said that he told Samuel that something terrible had happened, Samuel did not say that; while Nanavati said that he told Samuel that there had been a fight over a revolver, Samuel did not say that. But substantially both of them say that though Samuel asked Nanavati more than once to get inside the house and explain to him everything calmly, Nanavati did not do so; both of them also deposed that the accused told Samuel, "I do not quite know what happened but I think I have shot a man." It may be mentioned that Samuel is a Provost Marshal of the Indian navy, and he and the accused are of the same rank though the accused is senior to Samuel as Commander. As Provost Marshal, Samuel discharges police duties in the navy. It is probable that if the deceased was shot by accident, the accused would not have stated that fact to this witness ? Is it likely that he would not have stepped into his house, particularly when he requested him more than once to come in and explain to him how the accident had taken place ? Would he not have taken his advice as a colleague before he proceeded to the police station to surrender himself ? The only explanation for this unusual conduct on the part of the accused is that, having committed the murder, he wanted to surrender himself to the police and to make a clean breast of everything. What is more, when he was asked directly what had happened he told him "I do not quite know what happened but I think I have shot a man". When he was further asked how it happened, that is, how he shot the man he said that the man had seduced his wife and that he would not stand for it. In the context his two answers read along with the questions put to him by Samuel only mean that, as the deceased had seduced his wife, the accused shot him as he would not stand for it. If really the accused shot the deceased by accident, why did he not say that fact to his colleague, particularly when it would not only be his defence, if prosecuted, but it would put a different complexion to his act in the eyes of his colleague. But strong reliance is placed on what this witness stated in the cross- examination viz., "I heard the word fight from the accused", "I heard some other words from the accused but I could not make out a sense out of these words". Learned counsel for the accused contends that this statement shows that the accused mentioned to Samuel that the shooting of the deceased was in a fight. It is not possible to build upon such slender foundation that the accused explained to Samuel that he shot the deceased by accident in a struggle. The statement in the cross- examination appears to us to be an attempt on the part of this witness to help his colleague by saying something which may fit in the scheme of his defence, though at the same time he is not willing to lie deliberately in the witness- box, for he clearly says that he could not make out the sense of the words spoken along with the word "fight". This vague statement of this witness, without particulars, cannot detract from the clear evidence given by him in the examination- in- chief.

82. What Nanavati said to the question put by the Sessions Judge under s. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure supports Samuel's version. The following question was put to him by the learned Sessions Judge :

Q. - It is alleged against you that thereafter as aforesaid you went to Commander Samuel at about 4.45 P.M. and told him that something terrible had happened and that you did not quite know but you thought that you shot a man as he had seduced your wife which you could not stand and that on the advice of Commander Samuel you then went to Deputy Commissioner Lobo at the Head Crime Investigation Department Office. Do you wish to say anything about this ?

83. A. - This is correct.

84. Here Nanavati admits that he told Commander Samuel that he shot the man as he had seduced his wife. Learned counsel for the accused contends that the question framed was rather involved and, therefore, Nanavati might not have understood its implication. But it appears from the statement that, after the questions were answered, Nanavati read his answers and admitted that they were correctly recorded. The answer is also consistent with what Samuel said in his evidence as to what Nanavati told him. This corroborates the evidence of Samuel that Nanavati told him that, as the man had seduced his wife, he thought that he had shot him. Anyhow, the accused did not tell the Court that he told Samuel that he shot the deceased in a fight.

85. Then the accused, leaving Samuel, went to the office of the Deputy Commissioner Lobo. There, he made a statement to Lobo. At that time, Superintendent Korde and Inspector Mokashi were also present. On the information given by him, Lobo directed Inspector Mokashi to take the accused into custody and to take charge of the articles and to investigate the case.

86. Lobo says in his evidence that he received a telephone call from Commander Samuel to the effect that he had directed Commander Nanavati to surrender himself to him as he had stated that he had shot a man. This evidence obviously cannot be used to corroborate what Nanavati told Samuel, but it would only be a corroboration of the evidence of Samuel that he telephoned to Lobo to that effect. It is not denied that the accused set up the defence of accident for the first time in the Sessions Court. This conduct of the accused from the time of the shooting of Ahuja to the moment he surrendered himself to the police is inconsistent with the defence that the deceased was shot by accident. Though the accused had many opportunities to explain himself, he did not do so; and he exhibited the attitude of a man who wreaked out his vengeance in the manner planned by him and was only anxious to make a clean breast of everything to the police.

87. Now we will consider what had happened in the bed- room and bathroom of the deceased. But before considering the evidence on this question, we shall try to describe the scene of the incident and other relevant particulars regarding the things found therein.

88. The building "Jivan Jyot" is situate in Setalvad Road, Bombay. Ahuja was staying on the first floor of that building. As one goes up the stairs, there is a door leading into the hall; as one enters the hall and walks a few feet towards the north he reaches a door leading into the bed- room of Ahuja. In the bed- room, abutting the southern wall there is a radiogram; just after the radiogram there is a door on the southern wall leading to the bathroom, on the eastern side of the door abutting the wall there is a cupboard with a mirror thereon; in the bathroom, which is of the dimensions 9 feet x 6 feet, there is a commode in the front along the wall, above the commode there is a window with glass panes overlooking the chowk, on the east of the commode there is a bath- tub, on the western side of the bathroom there is a door leading into the hall; on the southern side of the said door there is a wash- basin adjacent to the wall.

89. After the incident the corpse of Ahuja was found in the bathroom; the head of the deceased was towards the bed- room and his legs were towards the commode. He was lying with his head on his right hand. This is the evidence of Miss Mammie, and she has not been cross- examined on it. It is also not contradicted by any witness. The top glass pane of the window in the bathroom was broken. Pieces of glass were found on the floor of the bathroom between the commode and the wash- basin. Between the bath- tub and the commode a pair of spectacles was lying on the floor and there were also two spent bullets. One chappal was found between the commode and the wash basin, and the other was found in the bedroom. A towel was found wrapped around the waist of the deceased. The floor of the bathroom was bloodstained. There was white handkerchief and bath- towel, which was bloodstained lying on the floor. The western wall was found to be bloodstained and drops of blood were trickling down. The handle of the door leading to the bathroom from the bed- room and a portion of the door adjacent to the handle were bloodstained from the inner side. The blood on the wall was little over three feet from the floor. On the floor of the bed- room there was an empty brown envelope with the words "Lt. Commander K.M. Nanavati" written on it. There was no mark showing that the bullets had hit any surface. (See the evidence of Rashmikant, P.W. 16)

90. On the dead- body the following injuries were found :

(1) A punctured would 1/4" x 1/4" x chest cavity deep just below and inside the inner end of the right collar bone with an abrasion collar on the right side of the wound.

(2) A lacerated punctured wound in the web between the ring finger and the little finger of the left hand 1/4" x 1/4" communicating with a punctured would 1/4" x 1/4" on the palmar aspect of the left hand at knuckle level between the left little and the ring finger. Both the wounds were communicating.

(3) A lacerated ellipsoid would oblique in the left parietal region with dimensions 1 1/8" x 1/4" x skull deep.

(4) A lacerated abrasion with carbonaceous tattooing 1/4" x 1/6" at the distal end of the proximal interphalangeal joint of the left index finger dorsal aspect. That means at the first joint of the crease of the index finger on its dorsal aspect, i.e., back aspect.

(5) A lacerated abrasion with carbonaceous tattooing 1/4" x 1/6" at the joint level of the left middle finger dorsal aspect.

(6) Vertical abrasion inside the right shoulder blade 3" x 1" just outside the spine.

91. On internal examination the following wounds were found by Dr. Jhala, who performed the autopsy on the dead- body. Under the first injury there was :

"A small ellipsoid wound oblique in the front of the piece of the breast bone (Sternum) upper portion right side center with dimensions 1/4" x 1/3" and at the back of the bone there was a lacerated wound accompanied by irregular chip fracture corresponding to external injury No. 1, i.e., the punctured wound chest cavity deep. Same wound continued in the contusion in area 3" x 1 1/4" in the right lung upper lobe front border middle portion front and back. Extensive clots were seen in the middle compartment upper and front part surrounding the laceration impregnated pieces of fractured bone. There was extensive echymosis and contusion around the root of the right lung in the diameter of 2 1/2" involving also the inner surface of the upper lobe. There were extensive clots of blood around the aorta. The left lung was markedly pale and showed a through and through wound in the lower lobe beginning at the inner surface just above the root opening out in the lacerated wound in the back region outer aspect at the level between 6th and 7th ribs left side not injuring the rib and injuring the space between the 6th and 7th rib left side 2" outside the junction of the spine obliquely downward and outward. Bullet was recovered from tissues behind the left shoulder blade. The wound was lacerated in the whole tract and was surrounded by contusion of softer tissues."

92. The doctor says that the bullet, after entering "the inner end, went backward, downward and then to the left" and therefore he describes the wound as "ellipsoid and oblique". He also points out that the abrasion collar was missing on the left side. Corresponding to the external injury No. 3, the doctor found on internal examination that the skull showed a haematoma under the scalp, i.e., on the left parietal region; the dimension was 2" x 2". The skull cap showed a gutter fracture of the outer table and a fracture of the inner table. The brain showed sub- arachnoid haemorrhage over the left parieto- occipital region accompanying the fracture of the vault of the skull.

93. A description of the revolver with which Ahuja was shot and the manner of its working would be necessary to appreciate the relevant evidence in that regard. Bhanagay, the Government Criminologist, who was examined as P.W. 4, describes the revolver and the manner of its working. The revolver is a semi- automatic one and it is six- chambered. To load the revolver one has to release the chamber; when the chamber is released, it comes out on the left side. Six cartridges can be inserted in the holes of the chamber and then the chamber is pressed to the revolver. After the revolver is thus loaded, for the purpose of firing one has to pull the trigger of the revolver; when the trigger is pulled the cartridge gets cocked and the revolver being semi-automatic the hammer strikes the percussion cap of the cartridge and the cartridge explodes and the bullet goes off. For firing the second shot, the trigger has to be pulled again and the same process will have to be repeated each time it is fired. As it is not an automatic revolver, each time it is fired, the trigger has to be pulled and released. If the trigger is pulled but not released, the second round will not come in its position of firing. Pulling of the trigger has a double action - one is the rotating of the chamber and cocking, and the other, releasing of the hammer. Because of this double action, the pull must be fairly strong. A pressure of about 20 pounds is required for pulling the trigger. There is controversy on the question of pressure, and we shall deal with this at the appropriate place.

94. Of the three bullets fired from the said revolver, two bullets were found in the bathroom, and the third was extracted from the back of the left shoulder blade. Exs. F- 2 and F- 2a are the bullets found in the bathroom. These two bullets are flattened and the copper jacket of one of the bullets, Ex. F- 2a, has been turn off. The third bullet is marked as Ex. F- 3.

95. With this background let us now consider the evidence to ascertain whether the shooting was intentional, as the prosecution avers, or only accidental, as the defence suggests. Excepting Nanavati, the accused, and Ahuja, the deceased, no other person was present in the latter's bed-room when the shooting took place. Hence the only person who can speak to the said incident is the accused Nanavati. The version of Nanavati, as given in his evidence may be stated thus : He walked into Ahuja's bed- room, shutting the door behind him. Ahuja was standing in front of the dressing- table. The accused walked towards Ahuja and said, "You are a filthy swine", and asked him, "Are you going to marry Sylvia and look after the kids ?" Ahuja became enraged and said in a nasty manner, "Do I have to marry every woman that I sleep with ?" Then the deceased said, "Get the hell out of here, otherwise, I will have you thrown out." The accused became angry, put the packet containing the revolver down on a cabinet which was near him and told him, "By God I am going to thrash you for this." The accused had his hands up to fight the deceased, but the latter made a sudden grab towards the packet containing the revolver. The accused grappled the revolver himself and prevented the deceased from getting it. He then whipped out the revolver and told the deceased to get back. The deceased was very close to him and suddenly caught with his right hand the right hand of the accused at the wrist and tried to twist it and take the revolver off it. The accused "banged" the deceased towards the door of the bathroom, but Ahuja would not let go of his grip and tried to kick the accused with his knee in the groin. The accused pushed Ahuja again into the bathroom, trying at the same time desperately to free his hand from the grip of the accused by jerking it around. The deceased had a very strong grip and he did not let go the grip. During the struggle, the accused thought that two shots went off : one went first and within a few seconds another. At the first shot the deceased just kept hanging on to the hand of the accused, but suddenly he let go his hand and slumped down. When the deceased slumped down, the accused immediately came out of the bathroom and walked down to report to the police.

96. By this description the accused seeks to raise the image that he and the deceased were face to face struggling for the possession of the revolver, the accused trying to keep it and the deceased trying to snatch it, the deceased catching hold of the wrist of the right hand of the accused and twisting it, and the accused desperately trying to free his hand from his grip; and in the struggle two shots went off accidentally - he does not know about the third shot - and hit the deceased and caused his death. But in the cross- examination he gave negative answers to most of the relevant questions put to him to test the truthfulness of his version. The following answers illustrate his unhelpful attitude in the court :

(1) I do not remember whether the deceased had the towel on him till I left the place.

(2) I had no idea where the shots went because we were shuffling during the struggle in the tiny bathroom.

(3) I have no impression from where and how the shots were fired.

(4) I do not know anything about the rebound of shots or how the shots went off.

(5) I do not even know whether the spectacles of the deceased fell off.

(6) I do not know whether I heard the third shot. My impression is that I heard two shots.

(7) I do not remember the details of the struggle.

(8) I do not give any thought whether the shooting was an accident or not, because I wished to go to the police and report to the police.

(9) I gave no thought to this matter. I thought that something serious had happened.

(10) I cannot say how close we were to each other, we might be very close and we might be at arm's length during the struggle.

(11) I cannot say how the deceased had his grip on my wrist.

(12) I do not remember feeling any blows from the deceased by his free hand during the struggle; but he may have hit me.

97. He gives only a vague outline of the alleged struggle between him and the deceased. Broadly looked at, the version given by the accused appears to be highly improbable. Admittedly he had entered the bed- room of the deceased unceremoniously with a fully loaded revolver; within half a minute he cannot out of the room leaving Ahuja dead with bullet wounds. The story of his keeping the revolver on the cabinet is very unnatural. Even if he had kept it there, how did Ahuja come to know that it was a revolver for admittedly it was put in an envelope. Assuming that Ahuja had suspected that it might be a revolver, how could he have caught the wrist of Nanavati who had by that time the revolver in his hand with his finger on the trigger ? Even if he was able to do so, how did Nanavati accidentally pull the trigger three times and release it three times when already Ahuja was holding his wrist and when he was jerking his hand to release it from the grip of Ahuja ? It also appears to be rather curious that both the combatants did not use their left hands in the struggle. If, as he has said, there was a struggle between them and he pushed Ahuja into the bathroom, how was it that the towel wrapped around the waist of Ahuja was intact ? So too, if there was a struggle, why there was no bruise on the body of the accused ? Though Nanavati says that there were some "roughings" on his wrist, he had not mentioned that fact till he gave his evidence in the court, nor is there any evidence to indicate such "roughings". It is not suggested that the clothes worn by the accused were torn or even soiled. Though there was blood up to three feet on the wall of the bathroom, there was not a drop of blood on the clothes of the accused. Another improbability in the version of the accused is, while he say that in the struggle two shots went off, we find three spent bullets - two of them were found in the bathroom and the other in the body of the deceased. What is more, how could Ahuja have continued to struggle after he had received either the chest injury or the head injury, for both of them were serious ones. After the deceased received either the first or the third injury there was no possibility of further struggling or pulling of the trigger by reflex action. Dr. Jhala says that the injury on the head of the victim was such that the victim could not have been able to keep standing and would have dropped unconscious immediately and that injury No. 1 was also so serious that he could not stand for more than one or two minutes. Even Dr. Baliga admits that the deceased would have slumped down after the infliction of injury No. 1 or injury No. 3 and that either of them individually would be sufficient to cause the victim to slump down. It is, therefore, impossible that after either of the said two injuries was inflicted, the deceased could have still kept on struggling with the accused. Indeed, Nanavati says in his evidence that at the first shot the deceased just kept on hanging to his hand, but suddenly he let go his grip and slumped down.

98. The only circumstance that could be relied upon to indicate a struggle is that one of the chappals of the deceased was found in the bed- room while the other was in the bathroom. But that is consistent with both intentional and accidental shooting, for in his anxiety to escape from the line of firing the deceased might have in hurry left his one chappal in the bed- room and fled with the other to the bathroom. The situation of the spectacles near the commode is more consistent with intentional shooting than with accidental shooting, for if there had been a struggle it was more likely that the spectacles would have fallen off and broken instead of their being intact by the side of the dead- body. The condition of the bed- room as well as of the bathroom, as described by Rashmikant, the police- officer who made the inquiry, does not show any indication of struggle or fight in that place. The version of the accused, therefore, is brimming with improbabilities and is not such that any court can reasonably accept it.

99. It is said that if the accused went to the bed- room of Ahuja to shoot him he would not have addressed him by his first name "Prem" as deposed by Deepak. But Nanavati says in his evidence that he would be the last person to address the deceased as Prem. This must have been as embellishment on the part of Deepak. Assuming he said it, it does not indicate any sentiment of affection or goodwill towards the deceased - admittedly he had none towards him - but only an involuntary and habitual expression.

100. It is argued that Nanavati is a good shot - Nanda, D.W. 6, a Commodore in the Indian Navy, certifies that he is a good shot in regard to both moving and stationary targets - and therefore if he had intended to shoot Ahuja, he would have shot him perpendicularly hitting the chest and not in a haphazard way as the injuries indicate. Assuming that accused is a good shot, this argument ignores that he was not shooting at an inanimate target for practice but was shooting to commit murder; and it also ignores the desperate attempts the deceased must have made to escape. The first shot might have been fired and aimed at the chest as soon as the accused entered the room, and the other two presumably when the deceased was trying to escape to or through the bathroom.

101. Now on the question whether three shots would have gone off the revolver accidentally, there is the evidence of Bhanagay, P.W. 4, who is a Government Criminologist. The Deputy Commissioner of Police, Bombay, through Inspector Rangnekar sent to him the revolver, three empty cartridge cases, three bullets and three live rounds for his inspection. He has examined the revolver and the bullets which are marked as Exs. F- 2, F- 2a and F- 3. He is of the opinion that the said three empties were fired from the said revolver. He speaks to the fact that for pulling the trigger a pressure of 28 pounds is required and that for each shot the trigger has to be pulled and for another shot to be fired it must be released and pulled again. He also says that the charring around the wound could occur with the weapon of the type we are now concerned within about 2 to 3 inches of the muzzle of the weapon and the blackening around the would described as carbonaceous tattooing could be caused from such a revolver up to about 6 to 8 inches from the muzzle. In the cross examination he says that the flattening of the two damaged bullets, Exs. F- 2 and F- 2a, could have been caused by their hitting a flat hard surface, and that the tearing of the copper jacket of one of the bullets could have been caused by a heavy impact, such as hitting against a hard surface; it may have also been caused, according to him, by a human bone of sufficient strength provided the bullet hits the bone tangently and passes of without obstruction. These answers, if accepted - we do not see any reason why we should not accept them - prove that the bullets, Exs. F- 2 and F- 2a, could have been damaged by their coming into contact with some hard substance such as a bone. He says in the cross- examination that one 'struggling' will not cause three automatic firings and that even if the struggle continues he would not expect three rounds to go off, but he qualifies his statement by adding that this may happen if the person holding the revolver "co- operates so far as the reflex of his finger is concerned", to pull the trigger. He further elaborates the same idea by saying that a certain kind of reflex co- operation is required for pulling the trigger and that this reflex pull could be either conscious or unconscious. This answer is strongly relied upon by learned counsel for the accused in support of his contention of accidental firing. He argues that by unconscious reflex pull of the trigger three times by the accused three shots could have gone off the revolver. But the possibility of three rounds going off by three separate reflexes of the finger of the person holding the trigger is only a theoretical possibility, and that too only on the assumption of a fairly long struggle. Such unconscious reflex pull of the finger by the accused three times within a space of a few seconds during the struggle as described by the accused is highly improbable, if not impossible. We shall consider the evidence of this witness on the question of ricocheting of bullets when we deal with individual injuries found on the body of the deceased.

102. This witness is not a doctor but has received training in Forensic Ballistics (Identification of Fire Arms) amongst other things in London and possesses certificates of competency from his tutors in London duly endorsed by the covering letter from the Education Department, High Commissioner's Office, and he is a Government Criminologist and has been doing this work for the last 22 years; he says that he has also gained experience by conducting experiments by firing on mutton legs. He stood the test of cross- examination exceedingly well and there is no reason to reject his evidence. He makes the following points : (1) Three used bullets, Exs. F- 2, F- 2a, and F- 3, were shot from the revolver Ex. B. (2) The revolver can be fired only by pulling the trigger; and for shooting thrice, a person shooting will have to give a deep pull to the trigger thrice and release it thrice. (3) A pressure of 28 pounds is required to pull the trigger. (4) One "struggling" will not cause three automatic firings. (5) If the struggle continues and if the person who pulls the trigger co- operates by pulling the trigger three times, three shots may go off. (6) The bullet may be damaged by hitting a hard surface or a bone. As we have pointed out the fifth point is only a theoretical possibility based upon two hypothesis, namely, (i) the struggle continues for a considerable time, and (ii) the person holding the trigger co- operates by pulling it thrice by reflex action. This evidence, therefore, establishes that the bullets went off the revolver brought by the accused - indeed this is not disputed - and that in the course of the struggle of a few seconds as described by the accused, it is not possible that the trigger could have been accidentally pulled three times in quick succession so as to discharge three bullets.

103. As regards the pressure required to pull the trigger of Ex. B, Triloksing, who is the Master Armourer in the Army, deposing as D.W. 11, does not accept the figure given by the Bhanagay and he would put it at 11 to 14 pounds. He does not know the science of ballistics and he is only a mechanic who repairs the arms. He had not examined the revolver in question. He admits that a double- action revolver requires more pressure on the trigger than single- action one. While Major Burrard in his book on Identification of Fire- arms and Forensic Ballistics says that the normal trigger pull in double- action revolvers is about 20 pounds, this witness reduces it to 11 to 14 pounds; while Major Burrard says in his book that in all competitions no test other than a dead weight is accepted, this witness does not agree with him. His opinion is based on the experiments performed with spring balance. We would prefer to accept the opinion of Bhanagay to that of this witness. But, on the basis of the opinion of Major Burrard, we shall assume for the purpose of this case that about 20 pounds of pressure would be required to pull the trigger of the revolver Ex. B.

104. Before considering the injuries in detail, it may be convenient to ascertain from the relevant text- books some of the indications that will be found in the case of injuries caused by shooting. The following passage from authoritative text- books may be consulted :

105. Snyder's Homicide Investigation, P. 117 :

Beyond the distance of about 18 inches or 24 at the most evidence of smudging and tattooing are seldom present.

106. Merkeley on Investigation of Death, P. 82 :

"At a distance of approximately over 18" the powder grains are no longer carried forward and therefore the only effect produced on the skin surface is that of the bullet."

107. Legal Medicine Pathology and Toxicology by Gonzales, 2nd Edn., 1956 :

The powder grains may travel 18 to 24 inches or more depending on the length of barrel, calibre and type of weapon and the type of ammunition.

108. Smith and Glaister, 1939 Edn., P. 17

"In general with all types of smokeless powder some traces of blackening are to be seen but it is not always possible to recognize unburnt grains of powder even at ranges of one and a half feet."

109. Glaister in his book on Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology, 1957 Edn., makes a statement that at a range of about 12 inches and over as a rule there will not be marks of carbonaceous tattooing or powder marks. But the same author in an earlier book from which we have already quoted puts it at 18 inches. In the book "Recent Advances in Forensic Medicine" 2nd Edn., p. 11, it is stated :

At ranges beyond 2 to 3 feet little or no trace of the powder can be observed.

110. Dr. Taylor's book, Vol. 1, 11th edn., p. 373, contains the following statement :

In revolver and automatic pistol wounds nothing but the grace ring is likely to be found beyond about two feet.

111. Bhanagay, P.W. 4, says that charring around the would could occur with the weapon of the type Ex. B within about 2 to 3 inches from the muzzle of the weapon, and the blackening round about the wound could be caused from such a weapon up to about 6 to 8 inches from the muzzle. Dr. Jhala, P.W. 18, says that carbonaceous tattooing would not appear if the body was beyond 18 inches from the mouth of the muzzle.

112. Dr. Baliga, D.W. 2, accepts the correctness of the statement found in Glaister's book, namely, "when the range reaches about 6 inches there is usually an absence of burning although there will probably be some evidence of bruising and of powder mark, at a range of about 12 inches and over the skin around the wound does not as a rule show evidence of powder marks." In the cross-examination this witness says that he does not see any conflict in the authorities cited, and tries to reconcile the various authorities by stating that all the authorities show that there would not be powder marks beyond the range of 12 to 18 inches. He also says that in the matter of tattooing, there is no difference between that caused by smokeless powder used in the cartridge in question, and black powder used in other bullets, though in the case of the former there may be greater difficulty to find out whether the marks are present or not in a wound.

113. Having regard to the aforesaid impressive array of authorities on Medical Jurisprudence, we hold, agreeing with Dr. Jhala, that carbonaceous tattooing would not be found beyond range of 18 inches from the mouth of the muzzle of the weapon. We also hold that charring around the wound would occur when it is caused by a revolver like Ex. B within about 2 or 3 inches from the muzzle of the revolver.

114. The presence and nature of the abrasion collar around the injury indicates the direction and also the velocity of the bullet. Abrasion collar is formed by the gyration of the bullet caused by the rifling of the barrel. If a bullet hits the body perpendicularly, the wound would be circular and the abrasion collar would be all around. But if the hit is not perpendicular, the abrasion collar will not be around the entire wound (See the evidence of Dr. Jhala and Dr. Baliga).

115. As regards the injuries found on the dead- body, two doctors were examined, Dr. Jhala, P.W. 18, on the side of the prosecution, and Dr. Baliga, D.W. 2, on the side of the defence. Dr. Jhala is the Police Surgeon, Bombay, for the last three years. Prior to that he was a Police Surgeon in Ahmedabad for six years. He is M.R.C.P. (Edin.), D.T.M. and H. (Lond.). He conducted the postmortem on the dead- body of Ahuja and examined both external and internal injuries on the body. He is, therefore, competent to speak with authority on the wounds found on the dead- body not only by his qualifications and experience but also by reason of having performed the autopsy on the dead- body. Dr. Baliga is an F.R.C.S. (England) and has been practising as a medical surgeon since 1933. His qualifications and antecedents show that he is not only an experienced surgeon but also has been taking interest in extra- surgical activities, social, political and educational. He says that he has studied medical literature regarding bullet injuries and that he is familiar with medico- legal aspect of wounds including bullet wounds. He was a Causality Medical Officer in the K.E.M. Hospital in 1928. He had seen bullet injuries both as Causality Medical Officer and later on as a surgeon. In the cross- examination he says :

I have never fired a revolver, nor any other fire- arm. I have not given evidence in a single case of bullet injuries prior to this occasion though I have treated and I am familiar with bullet injuries. The last that I gave evidence in Medico- legal case in a murder case was in 1949 or 1950 or thereabout. Prior to that I must have given evidence in a medico- legal case in about 1939. I cannot off hand tell how many cases of bullet injuries I have treated till now, must have been over a dozen. I have not treated any bullet injuries case for the last 7 or 8 years. It was over 8 or 9 years ago that I have treated bullet injuries on the chest and the head. Out of all these 12 bullet injuries cases which I have treated up to now there might be 4 or 5 which were bullet injuries on the head. Out of these 4 or 5 cases probably there were three cases in which there were injuries both on the chest as well as on the head..... I must have performed about half a dozen post- mortems in all my career.

116. He further says that he was consulted about a week before he gave evidence by Mr. Khandalawala and Mr. Rajani Patel on behalf of the accused and was shows the post- mortem report of the injuries; that he did not have before him either the bullets or the skull; that he gave his opinion in about 20 minutes on the basis of the post- mortem report of the injuries that the said injuries could have been caused in a struggle between the accused and the deceased. This witness has come to the Court to support his opinion based on scanty material. We are not required in this case to decide upon the comparative qualifications or merits of these two doctors of their relative competency as surgeons, but we must say that so far as the wounds on the dead-body of the deceased are concerned, Dr. Jhala, who has made the post- mortem examination, is in a better position to help us to ascertain whether shooting was by accident or by intention than Dr. Baliga, who gave his opinion on the basis of the post- mortem report.

117. Now we shall take injury No. 1. This injury is a punctured one of dimensions 1/4" x 1/4" x chest cavity deep just below and inside the inner end of the right collar bone with an abrasion collar on the right side of the wound. The internal examination showed that the bullet, after causing the punctured wound in the chest just below the inner end of the right collor bone, struck the sternum and after striking it, it slightly deflected in its course and came behind the shoulder bone. In the course of its journey the bullet entered the chest, impacted the soft tissues of the lung, the aorta and the left lung, and ultimately damaged the left lung and got lodged behind the scapula. Dr. Jhala describes the wound as ellipsoid and oblique and says that the abrasion collar is missing on the left side. On the injury there is neither charring nor carbonaceous tattooing. The prosecution version is that this wound was caused by intentional shooting, while the defence suggestion is that it was caused when the accused and the deceased were struggling for the possession of the revolver. Dr. Jhala, after describing injury No. 1, says that it could not have been received by the victim during a struggle in which both the victim and the assailant were in each other's grip. He gives reasons for his opinion, namely, as there was no carbonaceous tattooing on the injury, it must have been caused by the revolver being fired from a distance of over 18 inches from the tip of the mouth of the muzzle. We have earlier noticed that, on the basis of the authoritative text- books and the evidence, there would not be carbonaceous tattooing if the target was beyond 18 inches from the mouth of the muzzle. It is suggested to him in the cross-examination that the absence of tattooing may be due to the fact that the bullet might have first hit the fingers of the left palm causing all or any of injuries Nos. 2, 4 and 5, presumably when the deceased placed his left palm against the line of the bullet causing carbonaceous tattooing on the said fingers and thereafter hitting the chest. Dr. Jhala does not admit the possibility of the suggestion. He rules out this possibility because if the bullet first had an impact on the fingers, it would get deflected, lose its direction and would not be able to cause later injury No. 1 with abrasion collar. He further explains that an impact with a solid substance like bones of fingers will make the bullet lose its gyratory movement and thereafter it could not cause any abrasion collar to the wound. He adds, "assuming that the bullet first hit and caused the injury to the web between the little finger and the ring finger, and further assuming that it had not lost its gyrating action, it would not have caused the injury No. 1, i.e., on the chest which is accompanied by internal damage and the depth to which it had gone."

118. Now let us see what Dr. Baliga, D.W. 2 says about injury No. 1. The opinion expressed by Dr. Jhala is put to this witness, namely, that injury No. 1 on the chest could not have been caused during the course of a struggle when the victim and the assailant were in each other's grip, and this witness does not agree with that opinion. He further says that it is possible that even if the bullet first caused injury in the web, that is, injury No. 2, and thereafter caused injury No. 1 in the chest, there would be an abrasion collar such as seen in injury No. 1. Excepting this of the suggestion possibility, he has not controverted the reasons given by Dr. Jhala why such an abrasion collar could not be caused if the bullet had hit the fingers before hitting the chest. We will presently show in considering injuries Nos. 2, 4 and 5 that the said injuries were due to the hit by one bullet. If that be so, a bullet, which had caused the said three injuries and then took a turn through the little and the ring finger, could not have retained sufficient velocity to cause the abrasion collar in the chest. Nor has Dr. Baliga controverted the reasons given by Dr. Jhala that even if after causing the injury in the web the bullet could cause injury No. 1, it could not have caused the internal damage discovered in the post- mortem examination. We have no hesitation, therefore, to accept the well reasoned view of Dr. Jhala in preference to the possibility envisaged by Dr. Baliga and hold that injury No. 1 could not have been caused when the accused and the deceased were in close grip, but only by a shot fired from a distance beyond 18 inches from the mouth of the muzzle.

119. The third injury is a lacerated ellipsoid wound oblique in the left parietal region with dimensions 1 1/8" x 1/4" and skull deep. Dr. Jhala in his evidence says that the skull had a gutter fracture of the outer table and a fracture of the inner table and the brain showed subarachnoid haemorrhage over the left parieto- occipital region accompanying the fracture of the vault of the skull. The injury was effected in a "glancing way", that is, at a tangent, and the injury went upward and to the front. He is of the opinion that the said injury to the head must have been caused by firing of a bullet from a distance of over 18 inches from the mouth of the muzzle and must have been caused with the back of the head of the victim towards the assailant. When it was suggested to him that the said wound could have been caused by a ricocheted bullet, he answered that though a ricocheted bullet coming from the same line of direction could have caused the said injury, it could not have caused the intracranial haemorrhage and also could not have caused the fracture of the inner table of the skull. He is definite that injury No. 3 could not have been inflicted from "front to back" as the slope of the gutter fracture was from the back to the front in the direction of the "grazing" of the bullet. He gives a further reason that as a rule the fracture would be broader in the skull where the bullet has the first impact and narrower where it emerges out, which is the case in respect of injury No. 3. He also relies upon the depth of the fracture at the two points and its slope to indicate the direction in which the bullet grazed. He further says that it is common knowledge that the fracture of both the tables accompanied by haemorrhage in the skull requires great force and a ricocheted bullet cannot cause such an injury. He opines that, though a ricocheted bullet emanating from a powerful fire- arm from a close range can cause injury to a heavy bone, it cannot be caused by a revolver of the type Ex. B.

120. Another suggestion made to him is that the bullet might have hit the glass pane of the window in the bathroom first and then ricocheted causing the injury on the head. Dr. Jhala, in his evidence, says that if the bullet had hit the glass pane first, it would have caused a hole and fallen on the other side of the window, for ricocheting is not possible in the case of a bullet directly hitting the glass. But on the other hand, if the bullet first hit a hard substance and then the glass pane, it would act like a pebble and crack the glass and would not go to the other side. In the present case, the bullet must have hit the skull first and then the glass pane after having lost its velocity, and fallen down like a pebble inside the bathroom itself. If, as the defence suggests, the bullet had directly hit the glass pane, it would have passed through it to the other side, in which case four bullets must have been fired from the revolver Ex. B, which is nobody's case.

121. The evidence, of Dr. Jhala is corroborated by the evidence of the ballistics expert Bhanagay, P.W. 4, when he says that if a bullet hits a hard substance and gets flattened and damaged like the bullets Exs. F- 2 and F- 2a, it may not enter the body and that even if it enters the body, the penetration will be shallow and the injury caused thereby will be much less as compared to the injury caused by a direct hit of the bullet. Dr. Baliga, on the other hand, says that injury No. 3 could be caused both ways, that is, from "front backward" as well as from "back forward". He also contradicts Dr. Jhala and says "back that in the type of the gutter fracture caused in the present case the wound is likely to be narrower at the entry than at the exit. He further says that assuming that the gutter fracture wound was caused by a ricocheted bullet and assuming further that there was enough force left after rebound, a ricocheted bullet could cause a fracture of even the inner table and give rise to intra- cranial haemorrhage. He asserts that a bullet that can cause a gutter fracture of the outer table is capable of fracturing the inner table also. In short, he contradicts every statement of Dr. Jhala; to quote his own words, "I do not agree that injury No. 3, i.e., the gutter fracture, cannot be inflicted from front to back for the reason that the slope of the gutter fracture was behind forward direction of the grazing of the bullet; I also do not agree with the proposition that if it would have been from the front then the slope of the gutter wound would have been from the front backward; I have not heard of such a rule and that at the near end of the impact of a bullet the gutter fracture is deeper than where it files off; I do not agree that the depth of the fracture at two points is more important factor in arriving at the conclusion of the point of impact of the bullet." He also contradicts the opinion of Dr. Jhala that injury No. 3 could not be caused in a struggle between the victim and the assailant. Dr. Baliga has been cross- examined at great length. It is elicited from him that he is not a ballistics expert and that his experience in the matter of direction of bullet injuries is comparatively less than his experience in other fields. His opinion that the gutter fracture injury could be and was more likely to be caused from an injury glancing front backwards is based upon a comparison of the photograph of the skull shown to him with the figure 15 in the book "Recent Advances in Forensic Medicine" by Smith and Glaister, p. 21. The said figure is marked as Ex. Z in the case. The witness says that the figure shows that the narrower part of the gutter is on the rear and the wider part is in front. In the cross-examination he further says that the widest part of the gutter in figure Ex. Z is neither at the front and nor at the rear end, but the rear end is pointed and tailed. It is put to this witness that figure Ex. Z does not support his evidence and that he deliberately refused to see at it correctly, but he denies it. The learned Judges of the High Court, after seeing the photograph Ex. Z with a magnifying glass, expressed the view that what Dr. Baliga called the pointed and tailed part of the gutter was a crack in the skull and not a part of the gutter. This observation has not been shown to us to be wrong. When asked on what scientific principle he would support his opinion, Dr. Baliga could not give any such principle, but only said that it was likely - he puts emphasis on the word "likely" - that the striking end was likely to be narrower and little broader at the far end. He agrees that when a conical bullet hits a hard bone it means that the hard bone is protruding in the path of the projectile and also agrees that after the initial impact the bullet adjusts itself in the new direction of flight and that the damage caused at the initial point of the impact would be more than at any subsequent point. Having agreed so far, he would not agree on the admitted hypothesis that at the initial point of contract the wound should be wider than at the exist. But he admits that he has no authority to support his submission. Finally, he admits that generally the breadth and the depth of the gutter wound would indicate the extensive nature of the damage. On this aspect of the case, therefore, the witness has broken down and his assertion is not based on any principle or on sufficient data.

122. The next statement he makes is that he does not agree that the fracture of the inner table shows that the initial impact was from behind; but he admits that the fracture of the inner table is exactly below the backside of the gutter, though he adds that there is a more extensive crack in front of the anterior end of the gutter. He admits that in the case of a gutter on the skull the bone material which dissociates from the rest of the skull is carried in the direction in which the bullet flies but says that he was not furnished with any information in that regard when he gave his opinion.

123. Coming to the question of the ricocheting, he says that a ricocheting bullet can produce depressed fracture of the skull. But when asked whether in his experience he has come across any bullet hitting a hard object like a wall and rebounding and causing a fracture of a hard bone or whether he has any text- book to support his statement, he says that he cannot quote any instance nor an authority. But he says that it is so mentioned in several books. Then he gives curious definitions of the expressions "likely to cause death", "necessarily fatal" etc. He would go to the extent of saying that in the case of injury No. 3, the chance of recovery is up to 80 per cent.; but finally he modifies that statement by saying that he made the statement on the assumption that the haemorrhage in the subarachnoid region is localised, but if the haemorrhage is extensive his answer does not hold good. Though he asserts that at a range of about 12 inches the wound does not show as a rule evidence of powder mark, he admits that he has no practical experience that beyond a distance of 12 inches no powder mark can be discovered as a rule. Though text- books and authorities are cited to the contrary, he still sticks to his opinion; but finally he admits that he is not a ballistics expert and has no experience in that line. When he is asked if after injury No. 3, the victim could have continued the struggle, he says that he could have, though he adds that it was unlikely after the victim had received both injuries Nos. 1 and 3. He admits that the said injury can be caused both ways, that is, by a bullet hitting either on the front of the head or at the back of the head. But his reasons for saying that the bullet might have hit the victim on the front of the head are neither supported by principle nor by the nature of the gutter wound found in the skull. Ex. Z relied upon by him does not support him. His theory of a ricocheted bullet hitting the skull is highly imaginary and cannot be sustained on the material available to us : firstly, there is no mark found in the bathroom wall or elsewhere indicating that the bullet struck a hard substance before ricocheting and hitting the skull, and secondly, it does not appear to be likely that such a ricocheted bullet ejected from Ex. B could have caused such an extensive injury to the head of the deceased as found in this case.

124. Mr. Pathak finally argues that the bullet Ex. F- 2a has a "process", i.e., a projection which exactly fits in the denture found in the skull and, therefore, the projection could have been caused only by the bullet coming into contract with some hard substance before it hit the head of the deceased. This suggestion was not made to any of the experts. It is not possible for us to speculate as to the manner in which the said projection was caused.

125. We, therefore, accept, the evidence of the ballistics expert, P.W. 4, and that of Dr. Jhala, P.W. 18, in preference to that of Dr. Baliga.

126. Now coming to injuries Nos. 2, 4 and 5, injury No. 4 is found on the first joint of the crease of the index finger on the back side of the left palm and injury No. 5 at the joint level of the left middle finger dorsal aspect, and injury No. 2 is a punctured wound in the web between the ring finger and the little finger of the left hand communicating with a punctured wound on the palmer aspect of the left knukle level between the left little and the ring finger. Dr. Jhala says that all the said injuries are on the back of the left palm and all have corbonaceous tattooing and that the injuries should have been caused when his left hand was between 6 and 18 inches from the muzzle of the revolver. He further says that all the three injuries could have been caused by one bullet, for, as the postmortem discloses, the three injuries are in a straight line and therefore it can clearly be inferred that they were caused by one bullet which passed through the wound on the palmer aspect. His theory is that one bullet, after causing injuries Nos. 4 and 5 passed between the little and ring finger and caused the punctured wound on the palmar aspect of the left hand. He is also definitely of the view that these wounds could not have been received by the victim during a struggle in which both of them were in each other's grip. It is not disputed that injury No. 1 and injury No. 3 should have been caused by different bullets. If injuries Nos. 2, 4 and 5 were caused by different bullets, there should have been more than three bullets fired, which is not the case of either the prosecution or the defence. In the circumstances, the said wounds must have been caused only by one bullet, and there is nothing improbable in a bullet touching three fingers on the back of the palm and taking a turn and passing through the web between the little and ring finger. Dr. Baliga contradicts Dr. Jhala even in regard to these wounds. He says that these injuries, along with the others, indicate the probability of a struggle between the victim and the assailant over the weapon; but he does not give any reasons for his opinion. He asserts that one single bullet cannot cause injuries Nos. 2, 4 and 5 on the left hand fingers, as it is a circuitous course for a bullet to take and it cannot do so without meeting with some severe resistance. He suggests that a bullet which had grazed and caused injuries Nos. 4 and 5 could then have inflicted injury No. 3 without causing carbonaceous tattooing on the head injury. We have already pointed out that the head injury was caused from the back, and we do not see any scope for one bullet hitting the fingers and thereafter causing the head injury. If the two theories, namely, that either injury No. 1 or injury No. 3 could have been caused by the same bullets that might have caused injury No. 2 and injuries Nos. 4 and 5 were to be rejected, for the aforesaid reasons, Dr. Baliga's view that injuries Nos. 2, 4 and 5 must have been caused by different bullets should also be rejected, for to accept it, we would require more than three bullets emanating from the revolver, whereas it is the common case that more than three bullets were not fired from the revolver. That apart in the cross- examination this witness accepts that the injury on the first phalangeal joint of the index finger and the injury in the knuckle of the middle finger and the injury in the web between the little and the ring finger, but not taking into account the injury on the palmar aspect would be in a straight line. The witness admits that there can be a deflection even against a soft tissue, but adds that the soft tissue being not of much thickness between the said two fingers, the amount of deflection is negligible. But he concludes by saying that he is not saying this as an expert in ballistics. If so, the bullet could have deflected after striking the web between the little and the ring finger. We, therefore, accept the evidence of Dr. Jhala that one bullet must have caused these three injuries.

127. Strong reliance is placed upon the nature of injury No. 6 found on the back of the deceased viz, a vertical abrasion in the right shoulder blade of dimensions 3" x 1" just outside the spine, and it is said that the injury must have been caused when the accused pushed the deceased towards the door of the bath room. Nanavati in his evidence says that he "banged" him towards the door of the bathroom, and after some struggle he again pushed the deceased into the bathroom. It is suggested that when the accused "banged" the deceased towards the door of the bathroom or when he pushed him again into the bathroom, this injury might have been caused by his back having come into contract with the frame of the door. It is suggested to Dr. Jhala that injury No. 6 could be caused by the man's back brushing against a hard substance like the edge of the door, and he admits that it could be so. But the suggestion of the prosecution case is that the injury must have been caused when Ahuja fell down in the bathroom in front of the commode and, when falling, his back may have caught the edge of the commode or the bath- tub or the edge of the door of the bathroom which opens inside the bathroom to the left of the bath- tub. Shelat, J., says in his judgment :

If the abrasion was caused when the deceased was said to have been banged against the bathroom door or its frame, it would seem that the injury would be more likely to be caused, as the deceased would be in a standing position, on the shoulder blade and not inside the right shoulder. It is thus more probable that the injury was caused when the deceased's back came into contact either with the edge of the door or the edge of the bath- tub or the commode when he slumped.

128. It is not possible to say definitely how this injury was caused, but it could have been caused when the deceased fell down in the bathroom.

129. The injuries found on the dead- body of Ahuja are certainly consistent with the accused intentionally shooting him after entering the bed- room of the deceased; but injuries Nos. 1 and 3 are wholly inconsistent with the accused accidentally shooting him in the course of their struggle for the revolver.

130. From the consideration of the entire evidence the following facts emerge : The deceased seduced the wife of the accused. She had confessed to him of her illicit intimacy with the deceased. It was natural that the accused was enraged at the conduct of the deceased and had, therefore, sufficient motive to do away with the deceased. He deliberately secured the revolver on a false pretext from the ship, drove to the flat of Ahuja, entered his bed- room unceremoniously with a loaded revolver in hand and in about a few seconds thereafter came out with the revolver in his hand. The deceased was found dead in his bathroom with bullet injuries on his body. It is not disputed that the bullets that caused injuries to Ahuja emanated from the revolver that was in the hand of the accused. After the shooting, till his trial in the Sessions Court, he did not tell anybody that he shot the deceased by accident. Indeed, he confessed his guilt to the Chowkidar Puransingh and practically admitted the same to his colleague Samuel. His description of the struggle in the bathroom is highly artificial and is devoid of all necessary particulars. The injuries found on the body of the deceased are consistent with the intentional shooting and the main injuries are wholly inconsistent with accidental shooting when the victim and the assailant were in close grips. The other circumstances brought out in the evidence also establish that there could not have been any fight or struggle between the accused and the deceased.

131. We, therefore, unhesitatingly hold, agreeing with the High Court, that the prosecution has proved beyond any reasonable doubt that the accused has intentionally shot the deceased and killed him.

132. In this view it is not necessary to consider the question whether the accused had discharged the burden laid on him under s. 80 of the Indian Penal Code, especially as learned counsel appearing for the accused here and in the High Court did not rely upon the defence based upon that section.

133. That apart, we agree with the High Court that, on the evidence adduced in this case, no reasonable body of persons could have come to the conclusion which the jury reached in this case. For that reason also the verdict of the jury cannot stand.

134. Even so, it is contended by Mr. Pathak that the accused shot the deceased while deprived of the power of self- control by sudden and grave provocation and, therefore, the offence would fall under Exception 1 to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code. The said Exception reads :

Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, whilst deprived of the power of self- control by grave and sudden provocation, causes the death of the person who gave the provocation or causes the death of any other person by mistake or accident.

135. Homicide is the killing of a human being by another. Under this exception, culpable homicide is not murder if the following conditions are complied with : (1) The deceased must have given provocation to the accused. (2) The provocation must be grave. (3) The provocation must be sudden. (4) The offender, by reason of the said provocation, shall have been deprived of his power of self- control. (5) He should have killed the deceased during the continuance of the deprivation of the power of self- control. (6) The offender must have caused the death of the person who gave the provocation or that of any other person by mistake or accident.

136. The first question raised is whether Ahuja gave provocation to Nanawati within the meaning of the exception and whether the provocation, if given by him, was grave and sudden.

137. Learned Attorney- General argues, that though a confession of adultery by a wife may in certain circumstances be provocation by the paramour himself, under different circumstances it has to be considered from the standpoint of the person who conveys it rather than from the standpoint of the person who gives it. He further contends that even if the provocation was deemed to have been given by Ahuja, and though the said provocation might have been grave, it could not be sudden, for the provocation given by Ahuja was only in the past.

138. On the other hand, Mr. Pathak contends that the act of Ahuja, namely, the seduction of Sylvia, gave provocation though the fact of seduction was communicated to the accused by Sylvia and that for the ascertainment of the suddenness of the provocation it is not the mind of the person who provokes that matters but that of the person provoked that is decisive. It is not necessary to express our opinion on the said question, for we are satisfied that, for other reasons, the case is not covered by Exception 1 to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code.

139. The question that the Court has to consider is whether a reasonable person placed in the same position as the accused was, would have reacted to the confession of adultery by his wife in the manner in which the accused did. In Mancini v. Director of Public Prosecutions L.R. (1942) A.C. 1, Viscount Simon, L.C., states the scope of the doctrine of provocation thus :

It is not all provocation that will reduce the crime of murder to manslaughter. Provocation, to have that result, must be such as temporarily deprives the person provoked of the power of self-control, as the result of which he commits the unlawful act which causes death..... The test to be applied is that of the effect of the provocation on a reasonable man, as was laid down by the Court of Criminal Appeal in Rex v. Lesbini [1914] 3 K.B. 1116, so that an unusually excitable or pugnacious individual is not entitled to rely on provocation which would not have led an ordinary person to act as he did. In applying the test, it is of particular importance to (a) consider whether a sufficient interval has elapsed since the provocation to allow a reasonable man time to cool, and (b) to take into account the instrument with which the homicide was effected, for to retort, in the heat of passion induced by provocation, by a simple blow, is a very different thing from making use of a deadly instrument like a concealed dagger. In short, the mode of resentment must bear a reasonable relationship to the provocation if the offence is to be reduced to manslaughter.

140. Viscount Simon again in Holmes v. Director of Public Prosecutions L.R. (1946) A.C. 588 elaborates further on this theme. There, the appellant had entertained some suspicious of his wife's conduct with regard to other men in the village. On a Saturday night there was a quarrel between them when she said, "Well, if it will ease your mind, I have been untrue to you", and she went on, "I know I have done wrong, but I have no proof that you haven't - at Mrs. X.'s". With this appellant lost his temper and picked up the hammerhead and struck her with the same on the side of the head. As he did not like to see her lie there and suffer, he just put both hands round her neck until she stopped breathing. The question arose in that case whether there was such provocation as to reduce the offence of murder to manslaughter. Viscount Simon, after referring to Mancini's case L.R. (1942) A.C. 1, proceeded to state thus :

The whole doctrine relating to provocation depends on the fact that it causes, or may cause, a sudden and temporary loss of self- control, whereby malice, which is the formation of an intention to kill or to inflict grievous bodily harm, is negatived. Consequently, where the provocation inspires an actual intention to kill (such as Holmes admitted in the present case), or to inflict grievous bodily harm, the doctrine that provocation may reduce murder to manslaughter seldom applies.

141. Goddard, C.J., Duffy's case [[1949] 1 All. E.R. 932] defines provocation thus :

Provocation is some act, or series of acts, done by the dead man to the accused which would cause in any reasonable person, and actually causes in the accused, a sudden and temporary loss of self-control, rendering the accused so subject to passion as to make him or her for the moment not master of his mind..... What matters is whether this girl (the accused) had the time to say : 'Whatever I have suffered, whatever I have endured, I know that Thou shall not kill.' That is what matters. Similarly,.....circumstances which induce a desire for revenge, or a sudden passion of anger, are not enough. Indeed, circumstances which induce a desire for revenge are inconsistent with provocation, since the conscious formulation of a desire for revenge means that the person has had time to think, to reflect, and that would negative a sudden temporary loss of self- control which is of the essence of provocation. Provocation being,.....as I have defined it, there are two things, in considering it, to which the law attaches great importance. The first of them is, whether there was what is sometimes called time for cooling, that is, for passing to cool and for reason to regain dominion over the mind..... Secondly in considering whether provocation has or has not been made out, you must consider the retaliation in provocation - that is to say, whether the mode of resentment bears some proper and reasonable relationship to the sort of provocation that has been given.

142. A passage from the address of Baron Parke to the jury in R. v. Thomas (1837) 7 C. & P. 817 extracted in Russell on Crime, 11th ed., Vol. I at p. 593, may usefully be quoted :

But the law requires two things : first that there should be that provocation; and secondly, that the fatal blow should be clearly traced to the influence of passion arising from that provocation.

143. The passages extracted above lay down the following principles : (1) Except in circumstances of most extreme and exceptional character, a mere confession of adultery is not enough to reduce the offence of murder to manslaughter. (2) The act of provocation which reduced the offence of murder to manslaughter must be such as to cause a sudden and temporary loss of self- control; and it must be distinguished from a provocation which inspires an actual intention to kill. (3) The act should have been done during the continuance of that state of mind, that is, before there was time for passion to cool and for reason to regain dominion over the mind. (4) The fatal blow should be clearly traced to the influence of passion arising from the provocation.

144. On the other hand, in India, the first principle has never been followed. That principle has had its origin in the English doctrine that mere words and gestures would not be in point of law sufficient to reduce murder to manslaughter. But the authors of the Indian Penal Code did not accept the distinction. They observed :

It is an indisputable fact, that gross insults by word or gesture have as great tendency to move many persons to violem passion as dangerous or painful bodily in juries; nor does it appear to us that passio- excited by insult is entitled to less indulgence than passion excited by pain. On the contrary, the circumstance that a man resents an insult more than a wound is anything but a proof that he is a man of peculiarly bad heart.

145. Indian courts have not maintained the distinction between words and acts in the application of the doctrine of provocation in a given case. The Indian law on the subject may be considered from two aspects, namely, (1) whether words or gestures unaccompanied by acts can amount to provocation and (2) what is the effect of the time lag between the act of provocation and the commission of the offence. In Empress v. Khogayi I.L.R (1879) . 2 Mad. 122, a division bench of the Madras High Court held, in the circumstances of that case, that abusive language used would be a provocation sufficient to deprive the accused of self- control. The learned Judges observed :

What is required is that it should be of a character to deprive the offender of his self-control. In determining whether it was so, it is admissible to take into account the condition of mind in which the offender was at the time of the provocation. In the present case the abusive language used was of the foulest kind and was addressed to man already enraged by the conduct of deceased's son.

146. It will be seen in this case that abusive language of the foulest kind was held to be sufficient in the case of man who was already enraged by the conduct of deceased's son. The same learned Judge in a later decision in Boya Munigadu v. The Queen I.L.R(1881) . 3 Mad. 33 upheld plea of grave and sudden provocation in the following circumstances : The accused saw the deceased when she had cohabitation with his bitter enemy; that night he had no meals; next morning he went to the ryots to get his wages from them, and at that time he saw his wife eating food along with her paramour; he killed the paramour with a bill- hook. The learned Judges held that the accused had sufficient provocation to bring the case within the first exception to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Judges observed :

..... If having witnessed the act of adultery, he connected this subsequent conduct as he could not fail to connect it, with that act, it would be conduct of a character highly exasperating to him, implying as it must, that all concealment of their criminal relations and all regard for his feelings were abandoned and that they purposed continuing their course of misconduct in his house. This, we think, amounted to provocation, grave enough and sudden enough to deprive him of his self- control, and reduced the offence from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

147. The case illustrates that the state of mind of the accused, having regard to the earlier conduct of the deceased, may be taken into consideration in considering whether the subsequent act would be a sufficient provocation to bring the case within the exception. Another division bench of the Madras High Court in In re Murugian [I.L.R. [1957] Mad. 805] held that, where the deceased not only committed adultery but later on swore openly in the face of the husband that she would persist in such adultery and also abused the husband for remonstrating against such conduct, the case was covered by the first exception to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code. The judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in In re C. Narayan [A.I.R. 1958 A.P. 235] adopted the same reasoning in a case where the accused, a young man, who had a lurking suspicion of the conduct of his wife, who newly joined him, was confronted with the confession of illicit intimacy with, and consequent pregnancy by another, strangled his wife to death, and held that the case was covered by Exception 1 to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code. These two decisions indicate that the mental state created by an earlier act may be taken into consideration in ascertaining whether a subsequent act was sufficient to make the assailant to lose his self- control.

148. Where the deceased led an immoral life and her husband, the accused, upbraided her and the deceased instead of being repentant said that she would again do such acts, and the accused, being enraged struck her and, when she struggled and beat him, killed her, the Court held the immediate provocation coming on top of all that had gone before was sufficient to bring the case within the first exception to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code. So too, where a woman was leading a notoriously immoral life, and on the previous night mysteriously disappeared from the bedside of her husband and the husband protested against her conduct, she vulgarly abused him, whereupon the husband lost his self- control, picked up a rough stick, which happened to be close by and struck her resulting in her death, the Labour High Court, in Jan Muhammad v. Emperor I.L.R. [1929] Lah 861, held that the case was governed by the said exception. The following observations of the court were relied upon in the present case :

In the present case my view is that, in judgment the conduct of the accused, one must not confine himself to the actual moment when the blow, which ultimately proved to be fatal was struck, that is to say, one must not take into consideration only the event which took place immediately before the fatal blow was struck. We must take into consideration the previous conduct of the woman..... As stated above, the whole unfortunate affair should be looked at as one prolonged agony on the part of the husband which must have been preying upon his mind and led to the assault upon the woman, resulting in her death.

149. A division bench of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Balku I.L.R. [1938] All. 789 invoked the exception in a case where the accused and the deceased, who was his wife's sister's husband, were sleeping on the same cot, and in the night the accused saw the deceased getting up from the cot and going to another room and having sexual intercourse with his (accused's) wife, and the accused allowed the deceased to return to the cot, but after the deceased fell asleep, he stabbed him to death. The learned Judges held :

When Budhu (the deceased) came into intimate contact with the accused by lying beside him on the charpai this must have worked further on the mind of the accused and he must have reflected that 'this man now lying beside me had been dishonouring me a few minutes ago'. Under these circumstances we think that the provocation would be both grave and sudden.

150. The Allahabad High Court in a recent decision, viz., Babu Lal v. State MANU/UP/0047/1960 : AIR1960All223 applied the exception to a case where the husband who saw his wife in a compromising position with the deceased killed the latter subsequently when the deceased came, in his absence, to his house in another village to which he had moved. The learned Judges observed :

The appellant when he came to reside in the Government House Orchard felt that he had removed his wife from the influence of the deceased and there was no more any contact between them. He had lulled himself into a false security. This belief was shattered when he found the deceased at his hut when he was absent. This could certainly give him a mental jolt and as this knowledge will come all of a sudden it should be deemed to have given him a grave and sudden provocation. The fact that he had suspected this illicit intimacy on an earlier occasion also will not alter the nature of the provocation and make it any the less sudden.

151. All the said four decisions dealt with a case of a husband killing his wife when his peace of mind had already been disturbed by an earlier discovery of the wife's infidelity and the subsequent act of her operated as a grave and sudden provocation on his disturbed mind.

152. Is there any standard of a reasonable man for the application of the doctrine of "grave and sudden" provocation ? No abstract standard of reasonableness can be laid down. What a reasonable man will do in certain circumstances depends upon the customs, manners, way of life, traditional values etc.; in short, the cultural, social and emotional background of the society to which an accused belongs. In our vast country there are social groups ranging from the lowest to the highest state of civilization. It is neither possible nor desirable to lay down any standard with precision : it is for the court to decide in each case, having regard to the relevant circumstances. It is not necessary in this case to ascertain whether a reasonable man placed in the position of the accused would have lost his self- control momentarily or even temporarily when his wife confessed to him of her illicit intimacy with another, for we are satisfied on the evidence that the accused regained his self- control and killed Ahuja deliberately.

153. The Indian law, relevant to the present enquiry, may be stated thus : (1) The test of "grave and sudden" provocation is whether a reasonable man, belonging to the same class of society as the accused, placed in the situation in which the accused was placed would be so provoked as to lose his self- control. (2) In India, words and gestures may also, under certain circumstances, cause grave and sudden provocation to an accused so as to bring his act within the first Exception to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code. (3) The mental background created by the previous act of the victim may be taken into consideration in ascertaining whether the subsequent act caused grave and sudden provocation for committing the offence. (4) The fatal blow should be clearly traced to the influence of passion arising from that provocation and not after the passion had cooled down by lapse of time, or otherwise giving room and scope for premeditation and calculation.

154. Bearing these principles in mind, let us look at the facts of this case. When Sylvia confessed to her husband that she had illicit intimacy with Ahuja, the latter was not present. We will assume that he had momentarily lost his self- control. But if his version is true - for the purpose of this argument we shall accept that what he has said is true - it shows that he was only thinking of the future of his wife and children and also of asking for an explanation from Ahuja for his conduct. This attitude of the accused clearly indicates that he had not only regained his self- control, but on the other hand, was planning for the future. Then he drove his wife and children to a cinema, left them there, went to his ship, took a revolver on a false pretext, loaded it with six rounds, did some official business there, and drove his car to the office of Ahuja and then to his flat, went straight to the bed- room of Ahuja and shot him dead. Between 1- 30 P.M., when he left his house, and 4- 20 P.M., when the murder took place, three hours had elapsed, and therefore there was sufficient time for him to regain his self- control, even if he had not regained it earlier. On the other hand, his conduct clearly shows that the murder was a deliberate and calculated one. Even if any conversation took place between the accused and the deceased in the manner described by the accused - though we do not believe that - it does not affect the question, for the accused entered the bed- room of the deceased to shoot him. The mere fact that before the shooting the accused abused the deceased and the abuse provoked an equally abusive reply could not conceivably be a provocation for the murder. We, therefore, hold that the facts of the case do not attract the provisions of Exception 1 to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code.

155. In the result, conviction of the accused under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentence of imprisonment for life passed on him by the High Court are correct, and there are absolutely no grounds for interference. The appeal stands dismissed.

156. Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 266 of 1985

Decided On: 01.03.1995

Balwant Singh and Ors. Vs. State of Punjab

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizanuddin, JJ.

JUDGMENT

1. Balwant Singh, who was working as an Assistant in the office of D.P.I. Punjab in Chandigarh and Bhupinder Singh serving as a Senior Clerk in the Punjab School Education Board, Chandigarh, at the relevant time, were on 31st October, 1984 at about 5.45 p.m. arrested from near Neelam Cinema, Chandigarh and after completion of the investigation, tried for offences under Section 124A and 153A IPC. They were each sentenced to suffer one year rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 on each of the two counts. In default of payment of fine, they had to undergo three months further R.I. on each count. The substantive sentences were to run concurrently. Through this appeal under Section 14 of the Terrorist Affected Areas (Special Courts) Act, 1984 both of them have challenged their conviction and sentence as recorded by the learned Judge of the Special Court, Chandigarh on 2.3.1985.

2. The prosecution case against the appellants is that in a crowded in front of the Neelam Cinema, on 31st October 1984, the day Smt. Indira Gandhi, the then Prime Minister of India was assassinated, after coming out from their respective offices after the duty hours, raised the following slogans:

1. Khalistan Zindabad

2. Raj Karega Khalsa, and

3. Hinduan Nun Punjab Chon Kadh Ke Chhadange, Hun Mauka Aya Hai Raj Kayam Karan Da.

The prosecution examined Constable Som Nath, PW2 and ASI Labh Singh PW3, in support of its case besides PW1, who proved the order of sanction for prosecution.

3. According to the testimony of Som Nath PW2 and Labh Singh PW3, they had left the police station at about 5 p.m. or 5.15 p.m. and while they were patrolling in the area of the main market of Sector 17, Chandigarh, they noticed both the appellants raising slogans, as noticed above. Both the witnesses conceded that when slogans were being raised, the people in general were going bout doing their jobs and they did not gather on hearing the slogans but stated that some people went away out of 'fear'. In cross- examination, Som Nath PW2 admitted that he could not name anyone or even suggest whether any one out of the passer- by got afraid on hearing the slogans and fled away from the place. According to the witnesses, both the appellants had raised the slogans together. Though PW2 could not state as to how many times each of the three slogans was raised by the appellants, PW3 ASI Labh Singh admitted in the cross examination that the slogans "Khalistan Zindabad" was raised about five or six times while the second slogan "Raj Karega Khalsa" was raised two or four times and that the third slogan was raised only once or twice. ASI Labh Singh PW also admitted that the slogans had been raised by the appellants before they were arrested and that they did not raise any slogans afterwards. ASI Labh Singh PW, however, added that the appellants raised slogans while they were being apprehended once or twice and to the same effect is the statement made by PW2 Som Nath, who, however, was confronted with his police statement recorded under Section 161 Cr.P.C., wherein he had not mentioned that the appellants raised any slogan while being apprehended. The appellants in their statement recorded under Section 313 Cr.P.C., denied the prosecution allegations against them. According to Balwant Singh, Bhupinder Singh, appellant came to his office at about 4.30 p.m. and they left together after he finished his day's duty at about 5 p.m. That while they were proceedings towards the bus stand, in order to take a bus to go to Mohali where they reside, they met Mewa Singh DW2 and Surender Pal Singh DW3 near the fountain with whom they exchanged 'Sat Siri Akal'. Being an Amritdhari Sikh, he was wearing a kirpan. That near Neelam Cinema Dy. S.P. Sudhir Mohan and Inspector Baldev Singh caught hold of them, presumably because he was wearing a kirpan and both of them had not tied their beards. That the police officials took them to the police station in Sector 17 in their jeep. ASI Labh Singh was present at the police station attending to the telephone. On their enquiry, as to why they had been brought to the police station and why they were being detained, ASI Labh Singh told him that only the senior officers who had brought them to the police station could give them an answer to their question. Bhupinder Singh, appellant made a substantially similar statement.

4. Both Mewa Singh DW2, a Draftsman working in the Punjab Housing Board and Surender Pal Singh DW3, a Junior Accountant working with the Punjab Housing Board, corroborated the statement made by the appellants and stated that they had met the appellants after the office hours near the Neelam Cinema and had exchanged 'Sat Sri Akal' with them. They stated that in their presence, the Dy. S.P. and Inspector Baldev Singh arrested the appellants and took them to the police station in their jeep. That later on they followed them to the police station but when they could not get any information as to why the appellants had been taken to the police station, they informed the family members of the appellants. Both the defence witnesses stated that the appellants were not raising any slogans either before or at the time of their arrest and this part of their testimony was not challenged in the cross examination at all.

5. At the time of arrest of the appellants, the personal search of the appellants was taken and the personal search memos were prepared. In the personal search memo of Balwant Singh, the only two articles which are shown to have been recovered are: one watch HMT and one gold ring. There is no mention of any kirpan having been seized. After the arrest of the appellants, the police produced them before the Ilaqa Magistrate when they were remanded to judicial custody. DW1 Shitla Prashad, Munshi, District Jail, Burail deposed that on November 1, 1984, Balwant Singh appellant was admitted to the District Jail and that;

At that time he was wearing a kirpan on his person which was taken off and kept in safe custody at the time of his admission into jail and that kirpan is still lying deposited with us. I have brought that kirpan.

Both PW2 and PW3, had however, stated in their statements that they did not see Balwant Singh wearing any kirpan and that no kirpan was taken into possession from him.

6. Mr. V.M. Tarkunde, the learned senior counsel appearing for the appellants submitted that the prosecution has not been able to establish the case against the appellants beyond a reasonable doubt. learned Counsel argued that though admittedly the occurrence had taken place in a busy place, where number of independent persons were available, prosecution had not associated any independent person at the time of arrest of the appellants and that was a serious infirmity in the case. Mr. Tarkunde then submitted that the very fact that both the police witnesses, Constable Som Nath and ASI Labh Singh made unsuccessful effort to conceals that Balwant Singh was carrying a kirpan, which fact stands established from the evidence of DW1 Munshi of the District Jail at Burail, it could be safely inferred that the entire case against the appellants, was a made up affair and not based on facts. The prosecution witnesses were guilty of giving false statements. learned Counsel then, in the alternative, went on the submit that even if the prosecution case to the effect that the appellants had raised the three slogans was accepted, no offence under Section 124A IPC or 153A IPC could be said to have been made out.

7. learned Counsel for the State, on the other hand, submitted that keeping in view the tension which had been generated on the date of the assassination of the former Prime Minister - Smt. Indira Gandhi, the raising of the three slogans by the appellants attracted the provisions of Section 124A IPC and 153A IPC and the mere fact that no independent witness was associated, could not detract from the reliability of the evidence of ASI Labh Singh and Constable Som Nath. In this context, learned Counsel referred to the statement of PW3 Labh Singh who deposed that he was unable to associate any of the independent persons from the public inspite of his making efforts because none was willing to associate himself. learned Counsel urged that nothing has been brought out on the record to show that either PW2 and PW3 had any animosity or reason to falsely implicate the appellants and that their testimony inspired confidence.

Section 124A IPC reads thus:

124A. Sedition - whoever by words, either spoken or written, or by signs, or by visible representation, or otherwise, brings or attempts to bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or attempts to excite disaffection towards, the Government established by law in India, shall be punished with imprisonment for life, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment which may extend to three years, to which fine may be added, or with fine.

Explanation 1 - The expression "disaffection" includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity.

Explanation 2 - Comments expressing disapprobation of the measures of the Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection, do not constitute an offence under this section.

Explanation 3 - Comments expressing disapprobation of the administrative or other action of the Government without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection, do not constitute an offence under this Section.

A plain reading of the above Section would show that its application would be attracted only when the accused brings or attempts to bring into hatred or contempt or excites or attempts to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in India, by words either written or spoken or visible signs or representations etc. Keeping in view the prosecution evidence that the slogans as noticed above were raised a couple of times only by the appellant and that neither the slogans evoked a response from any other person of the Sikh community or reaction from people of other communities, we find it difficult to hold that upon the raising of such casual slogans, a couple of times without any other act whatsoever the charge of sedition can be founded. It is not the prosecution case that the appellants were either leading a procession or were otherwise raising the slogans with the intention to incite people to create disorder or that the slogans in fact created any law and order problem. It does not appear to us that the police should have attached much significance to the casual slogans raised by two appellants, a couple of times and read to much into them. The prosecution has admitted that no disturbance, whatsoever, was caused by the raising of the slogans by the appellants and that inspite of the fact that the appellants raised the slogans a couple of tunes, the people, in general, were un- affected and carried on with their normal activities. The casual raising of the slogans, once or twice by two individuals alone cannot be said to be aimed at exciting or attempt to excite hatred or disaffection towards the Government as established by law in India. Section 124A IPC, would in the facts and circumstances of the case have no application whatsoever and would not be attracted to the facts and circumstances of the case.

8. In so far as the offence under Section 153A IPC is concerned, it provides for punishment for promoting enmity between different groups on grounds of religion, race, place of birth, residence, language, caste or community or any other ground whatsoever or brings about disharmony or feeling of hatred or ill- will between different religious, racial, language or regional groups or castes or communities. In our opinion only where the written or spoken words have the tendency or intention of creating public disorder or disturbance of law and order or effect public tranquility, that the law needs to step in to prevent such an activity. The facts and circumstances of this case unmistakably show that there was no disturbance or semblance of disturbance of law and order or of public order or peace and tranquillity in the area from where the appellants were apprehended while raising slogans on account of the activities of the appellants. The intention to cause disorder or incite people to violence is the sine qua non of the offence under Section 153A IPC and the prosecution has to prove the existence of mens rea in order to succeed. In this case, the prosecution has not been able to establish any mens rea on the part of the appellants, as envisaged by the provisions of Section 153A IPC, by their raising causally the three slogans a couple of times. The offence under Section 153A IPC is, therefore, not made out.

9. On facts, we find that the prosecution witnesses PW2 and PW3 have not spoken the whole truth. Both the prosecution witnesses PW2 and PW3 made a deliberate attempt to conceal the existence of kirpan on the person of Balwant Singh at the time of his arrest, which fact stands amply proved from the evidence of DW1. The trial court while dealing with this aspect of the case observed :

On 1.11.1984 the accused were produced before the Magistrate. No order of the Magistrate has been produced to show that Balwant Singh accused was wearing a kirpan when he appeared before him. It was only thereafter that the accused were sent to jail. It, therefore, appears that the kirpan was supplied to Balwant Singh after he had been remanded by the Magistrate and was on his way to the jail.

(Emphasis ours)

10. We are unable to appreciate this reasoning. The trial court appears to have made out a case which was neither spoken to nor relied upon either by the prosecution or the defence. It is nobody's case that Balwant Singh and been supplied with the kirpan when he was on his way to the jail. It defies logic to think that some one from the public would have such as easy access to a person in custody of the police so as to be able to arm him with as kirpan, without the police escort knowing about it. It is not permissible for the trial court to make such an inference on assumptions without any evidence on the record. The Court must confine itself to the evidence to decide the case and not base its opinion on surmises and conjectures. We also regret to note that the trial court while recording the conviction observed:

To conclude, therefore, the accused shouted slogans 'khalistan zindabad', Hindustan Murdabad', Hinduan Nun Punjab Chon Kadh Ke Chhadange Hun Mauka Aya Hai Raj Kayam Karan Da', in the piazza of Sector 17 market which is frequented by people of both the principle communities i.e. Hindus and Sikhs at about 5.45 p.m. on the day when the beloved Prime Minister of India Smt. Indira Gandhi was riddled with bullets.

11. It is not the prosecution case that either of the appellants had shouted the slogan 'Hindustan Murdabad'. On what material did the learned Judge find that the appellants had shouted that particular slogan belies our comprehensions. Obviously, for convicting the appellants, the trial Judge also pressed into aid the allegation that the appellants had shouted 'Hindustan Murdabad', which is nobody's case. The learned trial Judge, to say the least, seems to have drawn upon his imagination a course not permissible for a Court of Law.

12. It appears to us that the raising some slogan only a couple of times by the two lonesome appellants, which neither evoked any response nor any reaction from any one in the public can neither attract the provisions of Section 124A or Section 153A IPC. Some more overt act was required to bring home the charge to the two appellants, who are Government servants. The police officials exhibited lack of maturity and more of sensitivity in arresting the appellants for raising the slogans - which arrest - and not the casual raising of one or two slogans - could have created a law and order situation, keeping in view the tense situation prevailing on the date of the assassination of Smt. Indira Gandhi. In situations like that, over sensitiveness some times is counter productive and can result in inviting trouble. Raising of some lonesome slogans, a couple of times by two individuals, without anything more, did not constitute any threat to the Government of India as by law established nor could the same give rise to feelings of enmity or hatred among different communities or religious or other groups.

13. In our opinion, for what we have stated above, the prosecution has not succeeded in establishing the case against the appellants beyond a reasonable doubt. Their conviction and sentence for the offences under Section 124A and 153A IPC, cannot be sustained. This appeal accordingly succeeds and is allowed. The conviction and sentence of the appellants is set aside. The appellants are on bail. Their bail bonds shall stand discharged.

Criminal Appeal No. 231 of 2015 (Arising out of SLP (Crl.) No. 5273 of 2012)

Decided On: 01.07.2015

State of M.P. Vs. Madanlal

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

Dipak Misra and Prafulla C. Pant, JJ.

JUDGMENT

Dipak Misra, J.

1. In this appeal, by special leave, the State of M.P. calls in question the legal acceptability of the judgment and order passed by the learned Single Judge of the High Court of M.P. in Criminal Appeal No. 808 of 2009 whereby he has set aside the conviction Under Section 376(2)(f) read with Section 511 of the Indian Penal Code (Indian Penal Code) and the sentence imposed on that score, that is, rigorous imprisonment of five years by the learned Sessions Judge, Guna in ST No. 134/2009 and convicted the Respondent- accused herein Under Section 354 of the Indian Penal Code and restricted the sentence to the period already undergone which is slightly more than one year.

2. The factual narration for disposal of the present appeal lies in a narrow compass. The Respondent as accused was sent up for trial for the offence punishable Under Section 376(2)(f) Indian Penal Code before the learned Sessions Judge. The case of the prosecution before the Court below was that on 27.12.2008, the victim, aged about 7 years, PW1, was proceeding towards Haar from her home and on the way the accused, Madan Lal, met her and came to know that she was going in search of her mother who had gone to graze the goats. The accused told her that her mother had gone towards the river and accordingly took her near the river Parvati, removed her undergarment and made her sit on his lap, and at that time the prosecutrix shouted. As the prosecution story proceeds, he discharged on her private parts as well as on the stomach and washed the same. Upon hearing the cry of the prosecutrix, her mother, Ramnali Bai, PW2, reached the spot, and then accused took to his heels. The prosecutrix narrated the entire incident to her mother which led to lodging of an FIR by the mother of the prosecutrix. On the basis of the FIR lodged, criminal law was set in motion, and thereafter the investigating agency examined number of witnesses, seized the clothes of the Respondent- accused, sent certain articles for examination to the forensic laboratory and eventually after completing the examination, laid the chargesheet before the concerned court, which in turn, committed the matter to the Court of Session.

3. The accused abjured his guilt and pleaded false implication. The learned trial Judge, regard being had to the material brought on record, framed the charge Under Section 376(2)(f) read with Section 511 of Indian Penal Code. The prosecution, in order to bring home the charge leveled against the accused examined the prosecutrix, PW1, Ramnali Bai, PW2, Dr. Smt. Sharda Bhola, PW3, Head Constable Babu Singh, PW4, ASI B.R.S. Raghuwanshi, PW5, and Dr. Milind Bhagat, PW6, and also got marked nine documents as exhibits. The defence chose not to adduce any evidence.

4. The learned trial Judge on the basis of the material brought on record came to hold that the prosecution had been able to establish the charge against the accused and accordingly found him guilty and sentenced him as has been stated hereinbefore.

5. The said judgment of conviction and order of sentence was in assail before the High Court; and it was contended by the learned Counsel for the Appellant therein that the trial court had failed to appreciate the evidence in proper perspective and had not considered the material contradictions in the testimony of prosecution witnesses and, therefore, the judgment of conviction and sentence, being vulnerable, deserved to be annulled. The learned Judge also noted the alternative submission which was to the effect that the parties had entered into a compromise and a petition seeking leave to compromise though was filed before the learned trial Judge, it did not find favour with him on the ground that the offence in question was non- compoundable and, therefore, regard being had to the said factum the sentence should be reduced to the period already undergone, which was slightly more than one year.

6. The High Court, as is manifest, has converted the offence to one under 354 Indian Penal Code and confined the sentence to the period of custody already undergone.

7. We have heard Mr. C.D. Singh, learned Counsel for the Appellant- State and Ms. Asha Jain Madan, learned Counsel who was engaged by the Court to represent the Respondent. Be it stated, this Court had appointed a counsel to argue on behalf of the Respondent, as despite service of notice, the Respondent chose not to appear.

8. It is contended by the learned Counsel for the State that the High Court has not kept in mind the jurisdiction of the appellate court and dislodged the conviction and converted the conviction to one Under Section 354 Indian Penal Code in an extremely laconic manner and, therefore, the judgment deserves to be dislodged. It is urged by him that it is the bounden duty of the appellate court to reappreciate the evidence in proper perspective and thereafter arrive at appropriate conclusion and that exercise having not been done, the impugned judgment does not commend acceptation. He has also seriously criticized the quantum of sentence imposed by the High Court.

9. Ms. Asha Jain Madan, learned Counsel appearing for the Respondent, per contra, would contend that the learned Single Judge, regard being had to the evidence on record, has come to hold that the prosecution had failed to prove the offence Under Section 376(2)(f) read with Section 511 Indian Penal Code, and hence, the impugned judgment is absolutely impeccable. She would contend with immense vehemence that when the prosecutrix was a seven year old girl and the ingredients of the offence had not been established the conversion of the offence to one Under Section 354 Indian Penal Code by the High Court cannot be found fault with. It is urged by her that once the view of the High Court is found defensible, the imposition of sentence Under Section 354 Indian Penal Code cannot be regarded as perverse.

10. To appreciate the rivalised submissions advanced at the Bar, we have anxiously perused the judgment of the learned trial Judge as well as that of the High Court. As we notice, the trial court has scanned the evidence and arrived at the conclusion that the prosecution had been able to bring home the charge on the base of credible evidence. The High Court, as is demonstrable, has noted the submissions of the learned Counsel for the Appellant therein to the effect that the trial court had failed to appreciate the evidence in proper perspective, and had totally ignored the material contradictions in the testimony of the prosecution witnesses, and thereafter abruptly referred to the decisions in Ashok @ Pappu v. State of M.P. 2005 Cr.L.J. (M.P.) 471., Phulki @ Santosh @ Makhan v. State of M.P. 2006 Cr.L.J. (M.P.) 157 and Jeevan v. State of M.P. 2008 Cr.L.J. (M.P.) 1498 and the factual matrix in the said cases, and concluded thus:

Keeping in view the aforesaid position of law and the statement of prosecutrix who was aged 7 years only at the time of incident and the medical evidence on record, this Court is of the opinion that the learned Court below committed error in convicting the Appellant Under Section 376 of Indian Penal Code. After going through the evidence, it can be said that at the most Appellant can be held guilty of the offence punishable Under Section 354 of Indian Penal Code. In view of this, the appeal filed by the Appellant is allowed in part and the conviction of Appellant Under Section 376 is set aside and Appellant is convicted Under Section 354 of Indian Penal Code. So far as sentence is concerned, keeping in view the aforesaid position of law and also the fact that Appellant is in jail since last more than one year the purpose would be served in case the jail sentence is reduced to the period already undergone. Thus, the same is reduced to the period already undergone. Respondent/State is directed to release the Appellant forthwith, if not required in any other case.

11. In the instant appeal, as a reminder, though repetitive, first we shall dwell upon, in a painful manner, how some of the appellate Judges, contrary to the precedents and against the normative mandate of law, assuming a presumptuous role have paved the path of unbelievable laconicity to deal with criminal appeals which, if we permit ourselves to say, ruptures the sense of justice and punctures the criminal justice dispensation system.

12. In this regard, reference to certain authorities of this Court would be apposite. In Amar Singh v. Balwinder Singh and Ors. MANU/SC/0065/2003 : (2003) 2 SCC 518 while dealing with the role of the appellate Court, a two- Judge Bench has observed thus:

The learned Sessions Judge after placing reliance on the testimony of the eyewitnesses and the medical evidence on record was of the opinion that the case of the prosecution was fully established. Surprisingly, the High Court did not at all consider the testimony of the eyewitnesses and completely ignored the same. Section 384 Code of Criminal Procedure empowers the appellate court to dismiss the appeal summarily if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interference. Section 385 Code of Criminal Procedure lays down the procedure for hearing appeal not dismissed summarily and Sub- section (2) thereof casts an obligation to send for the records of the case and to hear the parties. Section 386 Code of Criminal Procedure lays down that after perusing such record and hearing the Appellant or his pleader and the Public Prosecutor, the appellate court may, in an appeal from conviction, reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused or order him to be retried by a court of competent jurisdiction. It is, therefore, mandatory for the appellate court to peruse the record which will necessarily mean the statement of the witnesses. In a case based upon direct eyewitness account, the testimony of the eyewitnesses is of paramount importance and if the appellate court reverses the finding recorded by the trial court and acquits the accused without considering or examining the testimony of the eyewitnesses, it will be a clear infraction of Section 386 Code of Criminal Procedure. In Biswanath Ghosh v. State of W.B. MANU/SC/0208/1987 : (1987) 2 SCC 55 it was held that where the High Court acquitted the accused in appeal against conviction without waiting for arrival of records from the Sessions Court and without perusing evidence adduced by the prosecution, there was a flagrant miscarriage of justice and the order of acquittal was liable to be set aside. It was further held that the fact that the Public Prosecutor conceded that there was no evidence, was not enough and the High Court had to satisfy itself upon perusal of the records that there was no reliable and credible evidence to warrant the conviction of the accused. In State of U.P. v. Sahai MANU/SC/0258/1981 : (1982) 1 SCC 352 it was observed that where the High Court has not cared to examine the details of the intrinsic merits of the evidence of the eyewitnesses and has rejected their evidence on general grounds, the order of acquittal passed by the High Court resulted in a gross and substantial miscarriage of justice so as to invoke extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Court Under Article 136 of the Constitution.

The said view was reiterated by a three- Judge Bench in the State of Madhya Pradesh v. Bhura Kunjda MANU/SC/1332/2005 : (2009) 17 SCC 346.

13. Recently, in K. Anbazhagan v. State of Karnataka and Ors. 1, a three- Judge Bench addressing the manner of exercise of jurisdiction by the appellate court while deciding an appeal has ruled that:

The appellate court has a duty to make a complete and comprehensive appreciation of all vital features of the case. The evidence brought on record in entirety has to be scrutinized with care and caution. It is the duty of the Judge to see that justice is appropriately administered, for that is the paramount consideration of a Judge. The said responsibility cannot be abdicated or abandoned or ostracized, even remotely, solely because there might not have been proper assistance by the counsel appearing for the parties. The appellate court is required to weigh the materials, ascribe concrete reasons and the filament of reasoning must logically flow from the requisite analysis of the material on record. The approach cannot be cryptic. It cannot be perverse. The duty of the Judge is to consider the evidence objectively and dispassionately. The reasonings in appeal are to be well deliberated. They are to be resolutely expressed. An objective judgment of the evidence reflects the greatness of mind - sans passion and sans prejudice. The reflective attitude of the Judge must be demonstrable from the judgment itself. A judge must avoid all kind of weakness and vacillation. That is the sole test. That is the litmus test.

14. In the case at hand, the learned Single Judge has not at all referred to the evidence that has been adduced during the trial. We have, in fact, reproduced the entire analysis made by the learned Single Judge. Prior to that, as is manifest, he has referred to some authorities which are based on their own facts. The said pronouncements, in fact, lay down no proposition of law. As is noticeable, the learned Single Judge in his judgment has only stated that the prosecution has examined so many witnesses and filed nine documents. The said approach, we are afraid to say, does not satisfy the requirement of exercise of the appellate jurisdiction. That being the obtaining situation, we are inclined to set aside the judgment of the High Court and remit the matter to it for appropriate adjudication.

15. Having stated the aforesaid, ordinarily we would have proceeded to record our formal conclusion, but, an extremely pertinent and pregnant one, another aspect in the context of this case warrants to be addressed. As it seems to us the learned Single Judge has been influenced by the compromise that has been entered into between the accused and the parents of the victim as the victim was a minor. The learned trial Judge had rejected the said application on the ground that the offence was not compoundable. In this context, it is profitable to reproduce a passage from Shimbhu and Anr. v. State of Haryana (2014) 13 SCC 318 wherein, a three- Judge Bench has ruled thus:

Further, a compromise entered into between the parties cannot be construed as a leading factor based on which lesser punishment can be awarded. Rape is a non- compoundable offence and it is an offence against the society and is not a matter to be left for the parties to compromise and settle. Since the Court cannot always be assured that the consent given by the victim in compromising the case is a genuine consent, there is every chance that she might have been pressurised by the convicts or the trauma undergone by her all the years might have compelled her to opt for a compromise. In fact, accepting this proposition will put an additional burden on the victim. The accused may use all his influence to pressurise her for a compromise. So, in the interest of justice and to avoid unnecessary pressure/harassment to the victim, it would not be safe in considering the compromise arrived at between the parties in rape cases to be a ground for the Court to exercise the discretionary power under the proviso of Section 376(2) Indian Penal Code.

16. The aforesaid view was expressed while dealing with the imposition of sentence. We would like to clearly state that in a case of rape or attempt of rape, the conception of compromise under no circumstances can really be thought of. These are crimes against the body of a woman which is her own temple. These are offences which suffocate the breath of life and sully the reputation. And reputation, needless to emphasise, is the richest jewel one can conceive of in life. No one would allow it to be extinguished. When a human frame is defiled, the "purest treasure", is lost. Dignity of a woman is a part of her non- perishable and immortal self and no one should ever think of painting it in clay. There cannot be a compromise or settlement as it would be against her honour which matters the most. It is sacrosanct. Sometimes solace is given that the perpetrator of the crime has acceded to enter into wedlock with her which is nothing but putting pressure in an adroit manner; and we say with emphasis that the Courts are to remain absolutely away from this subterfuge to adopt a soft approach to the case, for any kind of liberal approach has to be put in the compartment of spectacular error.

Or to put it differently, it would be in the realm of a sanctuary of error. We are compelled to say so as such an attitude reflects lack of sensibility towards the dignity, the elan vital, of a woman. Any kind of liberal approach or thought of mediation in this regard is thoroughly and completely sans legal permissibility. It has to be kept in mind, as has been held in Shyam Narain v. State (NCT of Delhi) MANU/SC/0543/2013 : (2013) 7 SCC 77 that:

Respect for reputation of women in the society shows the basic civility of a civilised society. No member of society can afford to conceive the idea that he can create a hollow in the honour of a woman. Such thinking is not only lamentable but also deplorable. It would not be an exaggeration to say that the thought of sullying the physical frame of a woman is the demolition of the accepted civilised norm i.e. "physical morality". In such a sphere, impetuosity has no room. The youthful excitement has no place. It should be paramount in everyone's mind that, on the one hand, society as a whole cannot preach from the pulpit about social, economic and political equality of the sexes and, on the other, some perverted members of the same society dehumanise the woman by attacking her body and ruining her chastity. It is an assault on the individuality and inherent dignity of a woman with the mindset that she should be elegantly servile to men.

17. At this juncture, we are obliged to refer to two authorities, namely, Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab MANU/SC/1445/2011 : (2011) 13 SCC 705 and Ravindra v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0198/2015 : (2015) 4 SCC 491. Baldev Singh (supra) was considered by the three-Judge Bench in Shimbhu (supra) and in that case it has been stated that:

18.1. In Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, though the courts below awarded a sentence of ten years, taking note of the facts that the occurrence was 14 years old, the Appellants therein had undergone about 3 1/2 years of imprisonment, the prosecutrix and the Appellants married (not to each other) and entered into a compromise, this Court, while considering peculiar circumstances, reduced the sentence to the period already undergone, but enhanced the fine from Rs. 1000 to Rs. 50,000. In the light of series of decisions, taking contrary view, we hold that the said decision in Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab cannot be cited as a precedent and it should be confined to that case.

18. Recently, in Ravindra (supra), a two- Judge Bench taking note of the fact that there was a compromise has opined thus:

17. This Court has in Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, invoked the proviso to Section 376(2) Indian Penal Code on the consideration that the case was an old one. The facts of the above case also state that there was compromise entered into between the parties.

18. In the light of the discussion in the foregoing paragraphs, we are of the opinion that the case of the Appellant is a fit case for invoking the proviso to Section 376(2) Indian Penal Code for awarding lesser sentence, as the incident is 20 years old and the fact that the parties are married and have entered into a compromise, are the adequate and special reasons. Therefore, although we uphold the conviction of the Appellant but reduce the sentence to the period already undergone by the Appellant. The appeal is disposed of accordingly.

19. Placing reliance on Shimbhu (supra), we also say that the judgments in Baldev Singh (supra) and Ravindra (supra) have to be confined to the facts of the said cases and are not to be regarded as binding precedents.

20. We have already opined that matter has to be remitted to the High Court for a reappraisal of the evidence and for a fresh decision and, therefore, we have not referred to the evidence of any of the witnesses. The consequence of such remand is that the order of the High Court stands lancinated and as the Respondent was in custody at the time of the pronouncement of the judgment by the trial Court, he shall be taken into custody forthwith by the concerned Superintendent of Police and thereafter the appeal before the High Court be heard afresh. A copy of judgment be sent to the High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Bench at Gwalior.

21. The appeal stands allowed to the extent indicated hereinabove.

MANU/SC/0089/1975

Back to Section 321 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 272 of 1975

Decided On: 05.12.1975

Bansi Lal Vs. Chandan Lal And Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.C. Gupta and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ.

JUDGMENT

A.C. Gupta, J.

1. By his order dated November 19, 1974 the First Additional Sessions Judge, Etawah, allowed the application of the Public Prosecutor, Etawah, to withdraw the prosecution against respondents Chandan Lal and Baldeo Prasad. A revisional application directed against the order was dismissed in limine by the Allahabad High Court. In this appeal by special leave the propriety of the order allowing withdrawal of the prosecution is in question.

2. The facts of the case, relevant for the present purpose, are as follows. On the morning of May 27, 1970 two reports concerning the same incident were lodged in quick succession by two persons, the first report was made by one Ram Narayan at 6.15 A.M., and the next at 6.30 A.M. by the appellant Bansilal at Etawah police station. The reports said that respondent Chandan Lal and several others had forcibly caught hold of Bansi Lal's sister's husband Mawa Ram and dragged him inside Chandan Lal's house and when attracted by his screams several persons attempted to rescue him, Mawa Ram, the other respondent Baldeo Prasad and one Sukh Lal closed the door from inside. Bansi Lal's report added that one of the inmates of the house standing on the roof was threatening the crowd outside with a gun. On receipt of this information, sub-Inspector, K.K. Sharma accompanied by some constables hastened to Chandan Lal's house which they found closed from inside and surrounded by a crowd. Some one from the roof of the house started firing at the crowd and the police party. This man who was latter identified as one Rameshwar was killed when the police returned fire. Entering Chandan Lal's house the police party found Mawa Ram lying seriously injured in a room where Chandan Lal, Baldeo Prasad and Sukh Lal were present. Chandan Lal, Baldeo and three other persons found inside the house, Sukh Lal, Gay a Prasad Damodar and Sitaram were all arrested and Mewa Ram was sent to the District Hospital for treatment. Mewa Ram died the same evening without gaining consciousness.

3. On the report of Sub- Inspector K.K. Sharma, a case under Sections 147, 148, 302, 342 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code was registered against the said five persons. Deputy Superintendent of Police, R.B. Malik who was deputed to investigate the case submitted charge- sheet against the accused in the court of Additional District Magistrate (Judicial) on July 7, 1970. On May 22, 1974 the Additional District Magistrate (Judicial) Committed the case to the Court of Sessions. On July 7, 1974 the Additional Sessions Judge Etawah, on the application of the Public Prosecutor, allowed the case against Sukh Lal to be withdrawn. On the next day. July 8, charges were framed against the remaining accused persons including the respondent under Sections 147, 342 and 302/149 of the Indian Penal Code on November 18, 1974 the Public Prosecutor made an application "before the Additional Sessions Judge, Etawah, praying for permission to withdraw the case against respondents Chandan Lal and Baldeo Prasad. The material part of the application reads:

The prosecution does not want to produce evidence and continue the criminal matter against these accused (Chandan Lal and Baldeo Prasad).

On the next, day, November 19, the Additional Sessions Judge allowed this application and acquitted Chandan Lal and Baldeo Prasad of the Charges framed against them. Referring to certain facts which the described as the 'define case', the Additional Sessions Judge held that the case against Chandan Lal and Baldeo Prasad should be allowed to be withdrawn "because the prosecution is reluctant to prove its case against the said two accused persons" and it appeared "futile to refuse permission to the State to withdraw the prosecution." The correctness of this order is the only question for determination in this appeal.

4. Section 321 of the CrPC, 1973 which corresponds to Section 494 of the earlier Code of 1898 and is in identical terms empowers the Public Prosecutor to withdraw with the consent of the Court from the prosecution of any person either generally or in respect of any one or more of the offences for which he is being tried.... Section 494 of the Code of 1898 has been construed by tine different High Courts in a number of cases. this Court in M.N. Sankarayaryanan Nair v. P.V. Balakrishnan and Ors. (1), explaining the well- established legal position as to the scope and ambit of the powers granted by Section 494 has observed that though the section "does not circumscribe the powers of the Public Prosecutor to seek permission to withdraw from the prosecution, the essential consideration which is implicit in the grant of the power is that it should be in the interest of administration of justice...." Though it is not possible to catalogue all the circumstances in which this power can be exercised, by way of illustration MNS. Nair's case (supra) mentions a few instances where the Public Prosecutor would be apparently justified in seeking such permission, as in a case where the prosecution "will not be able to produce sufficient evidence to sustain the charge of that subsequent information before prosecuting agency would falsify the prosecution evidence or any other similar circumstances." It is added that the request to grant permission under Section 494 should not be accepted '- as a necessary formality", "for the mere asking", but the court must be satisfied "on the materials placed before it" that the grant of permission would serve the administration of justice and that "permission was not being sought covertly with an ulterior purpose unconnected with the vindication of the law which the executive organs are in duty bound to further and maintain.

5. In the case before us the prosecution has only reached the stage of framing charges against the accused and no occasion for the defence to make out a case has yet arisen. It is not clear where the Additional Sessions Judge found the case made which he calls the defence case it is not to be found in the material that was before him. Counsel for the respondent, State of U.P. drew our attention to an order dated October 18, 1973 passed by the Allahabad High Court on a revision petition filed by the State seeking to stay further proceedings of this case when it was pending before the Additional District Magistrate (Judicial), Etawah., It appears from this judgment that an application for stay of the proceedings was made before the Additional District Magistrate (Judicial) on the ground that the case required to be investigated further. The Additional District Magistrate rejected the application and the Sessions Judge, Etawah, confirmed that order. The High Court on October 18, 1973 dismissed the revision petition made against the order refusing the prayer for stay and directed the Additional District Magistrate to dispose of the proceedings before him expeditiously and in accordance with law. As stated already, the case was committed to the Court of Sessions on May 22, 1974. Therefore when the Addl. Sessions Judge made the impugned order, there was no material before him to warrant the conclusion that sufficient evidence would not be forthcoming to sustain the charges or that there was any reliable subsequent information falsifying the prosecution case or any other circumstance justifying withdrawal of the cast against the respondents. Consenting to the withdrawal of the case on the view that the attitude displayed by the Prosecution made it "futile" to refuse permission does not certainly serve the administration of justice. If the material before the Additional Sessions Judge was considered sufficient to enable him to frame the charges against the respondents, it is not possible to say that there was no evidence in support of the Prosecution case. The application for stay of the proceeding made before the committing magistrate cannot also be said to falsify the prosecution case. If the prosecuting agency brings before the court sufficient material to indicate that the prosecution was based on false evidence, the court would be justified in consenting to the withdrawal of the prosecution, but on the record of the case, as it is, we do not find any such justification. In our opinion the High Court was in error in dismissing in limine the revisional application made against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge.

6. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the order of the Additional Sessions Judge permitting the withdrawal of the case against the respondents is set aside. The Additional Sessions Judge will proceed with the trial in accordance with law.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 95 of 1977

Decided On: 28.09.1978

Ratilal Bhanji Mithani Vs. State of Maharashtra and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.P. Sen, O. Chinnappa Reddy and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ.

JUDGMENT

R.S. Sarkaria, J.

1. This appeal by special leave is directed against a judgment, dated January 21, 1976, of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay in Criminal Revision Application No. 565 of 1969, whereby it set aside an order, dated February 26, 1969, of the Chief Presidency Magistrate and directed the latter to restore Case No. 244/C.W. of 1968 against the accused persons, excepting accused No. 7 (who is since dead) for being dealt with in the light of the observations made therein.

2. The case was originally instituted on April 1, 1961 on the basis of a criminal complaint filed by the Assistant Collector (Customs) in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Esplanade, Bombay. It is alleged in the complaint that between August 1957 and March 1960, offences under Section 120B, I.P.S., read with Section 167(81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1978, and Section 5 of the Imports and Exports Act, 1947, were committed by one Ramlal Laxmidutta Nanda and seven others, including the appellant, who is accused No. 2 in the Trial Court. Ramlal Laxmidutta Nanda was alleged to be the principal culprit. He died on September 15, 1960. As a result of a conspiracy, twenty- for consignments of goods came from abroad and were received in Bombay. The conspiracy was carried out in this manner. By steamer, two consignments bearing similar marks would arrive such as M.T.S. M.I.S. marked in triangle. The first consignment would contain the genuine goods and the second consignment would contain less number of cases than the first consignment. The documents would arrive for the first consignment. With the help of the documents for the genuine goods, the Customs examination would be carried out, and then at the time of removing the real consignment, contraband consignment plus one case of the genuine consignment would be removed. Remaining goods of the genuine consignments with their marks tampered, would be left unattended in the docks. Out of the 24 consignments brought into India, the last four were seized by the Customs. The appellant Mithani was not linked with any of those four. But with regard to the remaining 8 out of the twenty consignments, the prosecution alleges that it has in its possession 10 Verladescheins (called as 'mate sheets or receipts') which give the description of the contraband goods. Out of these 10 Verladescheins. 2 relate to consignments in the name of Suresh Trading Co. and Dee Deepak & Co. From the proprietors of these two firms, the appellant Mithani held Powers of Attorney.

3. Mithani was arrested and bailed out on May 11, 1960. Between March 1962 and December 1962, the prosecution examined about 200 witnesses before the Magistrate, but had not yet examined any witness in regard to any of the 10 Verladescheins.

4. The complainant made an application to the trial magistrate, requesting him to get on record a number of documents falling into these categories, viz. (1) Verladescheins (Mate's receipts), (2) the correspondence that passed between Shaw Wallace & Co. and their principals and agents abroad and also the correspondence that passed between the other shipping agents in Bombay with their principals, and (3) the documents concerning the Company known as C.C.E.I. at Zurich.

5. By an order, dated August 24, 1962, the Magistrate held that 10 out of the 20 Verladescheins were inadmissible either under the Evidence Act or under the Commercial Documents Evidence Act. 1939. By another order, dated December 6, 1962, the Magistrate held that 9 out of the 10 Verladescheins were admissible under Section 10 of the Evidence Act. Some other letters and correspondence were also excluded on the ground that they could not be said to have been written in furtherance of the conspiracy.

6. On December 12, 1962, the Magistrate found that no other witness for the prosecution was present. He, therefore, passed this order:

None of the witnesses are present. The case is very old. There is enough evidence for the purpose of charge and about 200 witnesses are examined. Prosecution may examine all witnesses as they deem proper after the charge. Prosecution closes its case. Accused statement recorded. Adjourned for arguments for charge to 13.12.1962.

7. The Magistrate then heard the arguments and thereafter on December 21, 1962, on the basis of the evidence already recorded, framed charges against Mithani and his 6 co- accused. Under the first charge, Mithani (accused No. 2) was jointly charged with Accused 1, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 with criminal conspiracy between September 1957 and February 1, 1960 or thereabout, with intent to defraud the Government of India of the duty payable on various contraband goods and to evade the prohibition and restrictions imposed relating thereto for acquiring possession of large quantity of contraband goods etc. It was specifically recited in the charge that accused No. 2 was, at the relevant time, partner of Shanti Lal and Chagan Lal & Co., Bombay, and also constituted Attorney of Suresh Trading Co., Dee Deepak & Co., New Delhi, and also of Eastern Trading Corporation, Bombay and had an interest in all these three concerns.

8. On February 19, 1963, the State filed Criminal Revisions Application No. 107 of 1963 in the High Court against the orders dated August 24, 1962 and December 6, 1962 of the Magistrate, whereby the latter had refused to admit 11 Verladescheins out of 20 in evidence. The State, also, made a grievance against the failure of the Magistrate to frame charges in respect of certain alleged acts of the accused. It was contended that the Magistrate had unduly curtailed the period of conspiracy, while the evidence brought on the record by the Prosecution showed that this period was longer than what the Magistrate had taken into account.

9. On July 17, 1964, Mithani, also, filed Criminal Revision No. 574 of 1964 in the High Court, challenging the Magistrate's Order, dated December 6, 1962, whereby he had admitted 9 Verladescheins, Bills of Lading, Invoices etc., into evidence. It was further alleged in the Revision Petition : "It ought to have been appreciated that all the Verladescheins, Invoices and Bills of Lading being inadmissible, there is no evidence left on record to make even a prima facie case against the petitioner." The Revision petitioner, inter alia, prayed "that the order of the learned Magistrate dated December 6, 1962, in so far as it is against the petitioner, and the charges framed by the learned Magistrate against the petitioner, be set aside and he be discharged from the case."

10. Revision Application No. 107 by the State was heard by Mr. Justice H.R. Gokhale (as he then was) on August 19, 1964. It was contended there, on behalf of the prosecution that all the Verladescheins were straightway admissible under Sub- section (2) of Section 32, Evidence Act. Gokhale, J. Held that since the preliminary condition set out in the prefatory part of Section 32, (Viz., that the persons whose statements are sought to be admitted under Section 32 are such that their attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay or expense, which under the circumstances of the case, may appear to the Court to be unreasonable, had not been satisfied these Verladescheins (Mates receipts) would not be admissible under Section 32. In view of this, finding the learned Judge felt that "it really does not be come necessary to consider that these Verladescheins were not prepared in the ordinary course of business". The learned Judge was careful enough to caution: "I am not suggesting that for the reasons all these documents are false." Indeed, he conceded that they may be relevant to the facts in issue, and added: "If the prosecution desires to rely upon the evidence of these documents the prosecution certainly will be entitled to prove them or to prove the correctness of the description of the document in the ordinary way without having resort to the exception contained in Section 32."

11. As regards the question whether these Verladescheins were admissible under Section 10, the learned Judge held that "before considering this question, it would be wrong to look at these very documents the admissibility of which is in dispute", and that "such a conclusion can be reached from evidence, documentary, oral or circumstantial, but apart from the disputed document itself. It does not appear from the order of the learned Magistrate that there was any independent material from which he had formed the opinion that two or more persons had conspired together to commit an offence." The learned Judge significantly added : "If there is any such material or if the prosecution leads further evidence and if such material is brought on record, the learned Magistrate will, at the appropriate stage, be entitled to take this material into consideration and decide whether these documents can be admitted under Section 10 of the Evidence Act." The learned Judge pointed out that this could include an attempt to take out the goods. In this connection he observed: "If apart from the question of the period during which the conspiracy extended they are not admissible in evidence, because other conditions required to be satisfied under Section 10 are not satisfied, then it is another matter. But I cannot accept his conclusion that they would not be so admissible, because they do not fall within the period of conspiracy." The learned Judge concluded : "I have no doubt that the learned Magistrate will have to consider afresh whether the documents, which he has admitted under Section 32 or Section 10 are admissible or not. In any case, the order which he has made admitting certain documents under Section 10 or Section 32 was an interlocutory order and the learned Magistrate will be entitled to reconsider the position in the light of the observations in this judgment.... The learned Magistrate in the light of the view which I have taken, will also consider whether it is necessary to frame additional charges and to pass an appropriate order."

12. The Revision Application No. 574 of 1964, filed by Mithani, was rejected by a separate order, dated August 21, 1964 on the ground that in the view which the learned Judge had taken in Criminal Revision No. 107 of 1963, it was not necessary to admit this Revision Application. It was, however, observed that the Magistrate will take the observations in that judgment into consideration and consider "whether the interlocutory order, against which the present Revision Application is filed, needs to be reviewed."

13. The prosecution filed Special Leave Petitions (965 and 966 of 1965) in this Court against the judgment, dated August 19/20, 1964 of Mr. Justice Gokhale, and against the High Court's order refusing to grant certificate of fitness. this Court on January 27, 1966, summarily dismissed both these petitions. The prosecution then made an application to the Magistrate to take some photostat copies of certain documents. The Magistrate granted this application. Accused 1 challenged this order of the Magistrate in the High Court. By its order, dated October 4, 1966, the High Court restricted the time to prosecution by three months for calling the Foreign Witnesses. After expiration of this period, the prosecution on January 11, 1967 filed an application in the High Court for cancellation of Mithani's bail on the ground that he was tampering with the witnesses and abusing the liberty granted to him. The High Court cancelled Mithani's bail and Mithani surrendered and was committed to jail custody on January 13, 1967. Mithani came by special leave against the order cancelling his bail, to this Court. By order dated May 4, 1967, this Court dismissed Mithani's appeal, but restricted the time for examining the German Witnesses cited by the prosecution upto June 26, 1967. Since there was delay in procuring the attendance of German Witnesses within the time granted, Mithani was released on bail by an order dated July 26, 1967 of this Court. Thereafter, the prosecution applied to the Magistrate to proceed with the case without the Foreign Witnesses.

14. On July 10, 1967, the prosecution applied to the Magistrate for issue of commission for examination of the German Witnesses at Hamburg or Berlin or London. The Magistrate rejected this application by his order dated August 8, 1967. Against the Magistrate's order, the prosecution, again, went in revision to the High Court, which rejected the same by an order in September, 1967. Another revision petition filed in the High Court by the prosecution was dismissed by the High Court (V.S. Desai & Wagle JJ) by an order dated August 9, 1968.

15. On December 2, 1968, the prosecution made an application for examining a number of witnesses to establish the preliminary facts for admission of the Verladasheins and other documents under Sections 32(2)(3) and 10 of the Evidence Act and under the Commercial Documents Act. The Magistrate rejected that application by his order dated January 9, 1969.

16. By an order dated February 26, 1969, the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, deleted charges 2 to 9 against Accused 2 (Mithani), 3 and 7, and 'discharged' them. The following extract from the Magistrate's order will be useful to appreciate its true nature:

I therefore hold that with regard to overt acts in charges Nos. 2 to 9 no charges can be framed against any of the accused and therefore charges Nos. 2 to 9 will stand deleted.

Accused Nos. 2, 3 and 7 are concerned only in some of the charges Nos. 2 to 9. They are not concerned in charges Nos. 10, 11, 12 and 13.

Therefore as no overt act is held proved against them no conspiracy can be inferred as against them and therefore charge No. 1 of conspiracy as against them must go.

Therefore with regard to accused Nos. 2, 3 and 7 I hold that no case is made out against them and I therefore hold them not guilty Under Section 167 read with 81 of the Customs Act for contravention of Import & Export Control Act 1947 and 1955 and for conspiracy and order them to be discharged.

17. Against the Magistrate's order, dated February 26, 1969, the prosecution filed Criminal Revision Application No. 565 of 1969 in the High Court.

18. By its judgment dated December 16/17, 1969, a Bench of the High Court (consisting of Vaidya and Rege JJ.) allowed Criminal Revision 565 of 1969 mainly on the ground that the Magistrate after framing the charge, had no legal power to discharge the accused persons. It was observed that "the entire complexion of the cases changed on account of the retirement of the Magistrate. The new Magistrate who will hear the matter, will have to find out whether he must alter or vary the charge and for that purpose to issue a fresh process to the two living deleted accused, after taking into consideration the evidence already recorded by the former Magistrate...and such other evidence he may have to record hereafter." The High Court concluded: "We are setting aside the order of discharge on the ground that it is open to the new Magistrate to frame a charge against the deleted accused on considering the material; and also on the ground that the former Magistrate had no power to discharge the accused after framing the charge." The High Court further observed that, "whatever submissions the accused want to make with regard to not framing the charge are also open to them." At that stage, they did not want and could not consider the evidence before the Magistrate. In the result, the order dated February 26, 1969 of the Magistrate was set aside and the case was restored to the file of the Magistrate, except with regard to the deceased accused No. 7 for being dealt with as early as possible, in accordance with law and in the light of the observations made by the High Court.

19. Against this order, dated January 21, 1976, of the High Court setting aside the order dated February 26, 1969 of the Magistrate discharging the accused, the accused 2 (Mithani) has come in appeal before us.

20. The points canvassed by Shri I.N. Shroff, learned Counsel for the appellant, may be summarised as under :

(i) In passing the then impugned order, the Magistrate was simply acting in consonance with the observation and implied directions contained in the judgment, dated August 19/20, 1964, of Mr. Justice H.R. Gokhale in Cr. R.A. No. 107 of 1964. On the contrary, the Bench of the High Court (consisting of Vaidya and Rege JJ) has failed in its duty to uphold the aforesaid judgment of Mr. Justice Gokhale- which judgment had been upheld by this Court while dismissing prosecution's Special Leave Petitions 965 and 966 of 1975. Mr. Justice. Gokhale- so proceeds the argument- had held "that 10 Verladasheins were inadmissible under Section 32 and/or Section 10 of the Evidence Act." The legal consequence of this finding was that the charges framed by the Magistrate on December 21, 1962, on the basis of the said Verladescheins, were unsustainable in law and the Magistrate had to examine the matter de novo by ignoring the said charges or by amending, altering the same- as may be justified on the remaining admissible evidence on record.

(ii) In reviewing and deleting the charges and discharging the appellant (Mithani) and two other accused, the Magistrate was acting in accordance with the observation of Gokhale J. in Cr. R.A. 574 of 1974, which was to the effect, that it would be open to the Magistrate to consider whether the interlocutory order against which that revision application was filed, needs to be reviewed.

(iii) Since the Magistrate had under the CrPC, no power to delete the charges framed against the appellant and two others, it will be deemed that in the eye of law those charges still existed when the Magistrate by his order dated February 26, 1969, discharged the accused Mithani and two others. This being the case, this order of "discharge" ought to have been treated as an order of 'acquittal'.

(iv) (a) In revision, the High Court was not competent to set aside this order of 'acquittal' and direct, as it were, a retrial of the accused.

(b) Since the appellant had, in reality, been acquitted by the Magistrate, he could not be retried on the same charges because of the double jeopardy or autrefois acquit.

(v) There has been gross laxity and delay on the part of the prosecution in prosecuting their case and in producing all their evidence, which is nothing short of abuse of the process of the Court. The complaint was filed on April 1, 1961. The order of "discharge" was passed by the Magistrate on February 26, 1969, and the aforesaid order came up for consideration in revision before the High Court in January 1976. The High Court's order dated January 21, 1976, directing de novo proceedings against the appellant after a lapse of several years would be unjust and unfair, particularly when this delay was attributable to the prosecution which had, indeed, closed its evidence before the framing of the charge and its request to examine the German Witnesses on commission stands declined.

21. As against this, Shri Soli Sorabji, learned Additional Solicitor- General submits that the appellant (Mithani), in fact, had never filed any revision against the order of the Magistrate, framing charges against him and others. It is pointed out that in Cr.R.A. No. 574 of 1964 filed by Mithani on July 17, 1964 in the High Court, the challenge was, in terms, confined to the Magistrate's order, dated December 6, 1962, whereby he had admitted 9 Verladescheins, Bills of Lading, invoices etc. into evidence; and that the order dated December 21, 1962, framing the charges was not specifically challenged. In any case, Gokhale J. had summarily rejected Mithani's Criminal Revision by an order, dated August 21, 1964. According to Shri Sorabji, the further observation in that order of Gokhale J. to the effect that it was open to the Magistrate to consider, "whether the interlocutory order against which the present revision application is filed, needs to be reviewed", was made only in respect of the Magistrate's order dated December 6, 1962 and not the order whereby the charges were framed. It is further submitted that Gokhale J.'s observations and directions in his judgment dated August 19/20, 1964 in Cr.R.A. No. 107 of 1964, could not, by any stretch of imagination, be construed as authorising the Magistrate to reconsider and delete the charges, and discharge the accused. On the contrary, the learned Judge had directed amendment of the charge so that the period of the conspiracy was not restricted to the period mentioned in the charges. It is further submitted that the Magistrate's order arbitrarily deleting the charges and "discharging" the accused, was patently illegal and the High Court was fully competent and justified to set it aside in the exercise of its revisional powers under Section 439 of the Code.

22. As regards delay in the proceedings, Shri Sorabji submits, it was mostly due to circumstances beyond the control of the prosecution; that the charge against the appellant was a grave one and the direction given by the High Court to take further proceedings, inter alia, against the appellant was not unjust and unfair.

23. We are unable to accept any of the contentions advanced by Shri Shroff.

24. At the outset, let us have a look at the relevant provisions of the CrPC, 1898, which admittedly governed the pending proceedings in this case. The procedure for trial of warrant cases by Magistrates is given in Chapter XXI of that Code. The present case was instituted on a criminal complaint. Section 252 provides that in such a case, the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take all such evidence, as may be produced, in support of the prosecution. Sub- section (2) of that Section casts a duty on the Magistrate to ascertain the names of persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution, and to summon all such persons for evidence. Section 253 indicates when and in what circumstances ah accused may be discharged: It says:

253(1) If, upon taking all the evidence referred to in Section 252, and making such examination (if any) of the accused as the Magistrate thinks necessary, he finds that no case against the accused has been made out which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction, the Magistrate shall discharge him.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case if, for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless.

Section 254 indicates when and in what circumstances a charge should be framed. It reads:

254. If when such evidence and examination have been taken and made, or at any previous stage of the case, the Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under this Chapter, which such Magistrate is competent to try, and which in his opinion could be adequately punished by him, he shall frame in writing a charge against the accused.

Section 255 enjoins that the charge shall then be read over and explained to the accused, and he shall be asked whether he is guilty or has any defence to make. If the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate shall record that plea, and may convict him thereon.

25. Section 256 provides that if the accused refuses to plead or does not plead, or claims to be tried, he shall be required to state at the next hearing whether he wishes to cross- examine any of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken, and if he says he so wants to cross- examine, the witnesses named by him shall be recalled and he will be allowed to further cross- examine them. "The evidence of any remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken" and thereafter the accused shall be called upon to enter upon and produce his defence.

26. Section 257 is not material. Section 258(1) provides that if in any case "in which a charge has been framed the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal. Sub- section (2) requires, where in any case under this chapter the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section 349 or Section 562, he shall, if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence on him in accordance with law.

27. From the scheme of the provisions noticed above, it is clear that in a warrant case instituted otherwise on a police report, 'discharge' or 'acquittal' of accused are distinct concepts applicable to different stages of the proceedings in Court. The legal effect and incidents of 'discharge' and 'acquittal' are also different. An order of discharge in a warrant case instituted on complaint, can be made only after the process has been issued and before the charge is framed. Section 253(1) shows that as a general rule there an be no order of discharge unless the evidence of all the prosecution witnesses has been taken and he considers for reasons to be recorded, in the light of the evidence that no case has been made out. Sub- section (2) which authorises the Magistrate to discharge the accused at any previous stage of the case if he considers the charge to be groundless, is an exception to that rule. A discharge without considering the evidence taken is illegal. If a prima facie case is made out the Magistrate must proceed under Section 254 and frame charge against the accused. Section 254 shows that a charge can be framed if after taking evidence or at any previous stage, the Magistrate, thinks that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable as a warrant case. Once a charge is framed, the Magistrate has no power under Section 227 or any other provision of the Code to cancel the charge, and reverse the proceedings to the stage of Section 353 and discharge the accused. The trial in a warrant case starts with the framing of charge; prior to it, the proceedings are only an inquiry. After the framing of charges if the accused pleads not guilty, the Magistrate is required to proceed with the trial in the manner provided in Section 254 to 258, to a logical end.

Once a charge is framed in a warrant case, instituted either on complaint or a police report, the Magistrate has no power under the Code to discharge the accused, and thereafter, he can either acquit or convict the accused unless he decides to proceed under Section 349 and 562 of the Code of 1892 (which correspond to Sections 325 and 360 of the Code of 1973).

28. Excepting where the prosecution must fail for want of a fundamental defect, such as want of sanction, an order of acquittal must be based upon a 'finding of not guilty' turning on the merits of the case and the appreciation of evidence at the conclusion of the trial.

29. If after framing charges the Magistrate whimsically, without appraising the evidence and without permitting the prosecution to produce all its evidence, 'discharges' the accused, such an acquittal, without trial, even if clothed as 'discharge', will be illegal. This is precisely what has happened in the instant case. Here, the Magistrate, by his order dated December 12, 1962 framed charges against Mithani and two others. Subsequently, when on the disposal of the Revision applications by Gokhale, J. the records were received back, he arbitrarily deleted those charges and discharged the accused, without examining the "remaining witnesses" of the prosecution which he had in the order of framing charges, said, "will be examined after the charge".

30. It is not correct as has been contended on behalf of Mithani, that in adopting this course the Magistrate was only acting in accordance with the observations/directions of Gokhale J. in the judgments disposing of Criminal Revisions 107/63 and 514 of 1964. A perusal of Gokhale J's orders in these two Revision Applications- material portions of which have been quoted earlier- will show that there is nothing in those orders which expressly or by implication required the Magistrate to delete the charges and 'discharge' or acquit the accused. On the contrary, the learned High Court Judge (Gokhale J.) had accepted the Revision filed by the prosecution and directed the Magistrate to amend the charges in so far as they appear to restrict the period of conspiracy to the one between the dates mentioned in the charges. Gokhale J. had further directed the Magistrate to consider the circumstantial and other evidence of the prosecution with a view to frame additional charges as claimed by the prosecution.

31. Gokhale J's judgment in Cr.R.A. 107 shows that the learned Judge did not hold that the verladesheins or the other documents in question tendered by the prosecution, were not relevant at all, under any provision of the Evidence Act. All that was held by him was that before these documents could be admitted under Section 32(2) or Section 10 of the Evidence Act, some preliminary facts had to be established by the prosecution. For instance, one of the conditions precedent for the admissibility of a previous statement of a party under Section 32(2) is that the attendance of the witness who made that statement, could not be procured without an amount of delay and expense which in the circumstances of the case, appeared to the Court to be unreasonable. Similarly, with regard to the invocation of Section 10, Evidence Act, it was observed that before the documents concerned could be admitted under Section 10, Evidence Act, prima facie proof, aliunde should be given about the existence of the conspiracy. On the contrary, Gokhale J. clearly held that the documents, in question, were relevant to the facts in issue, but they had to be proved in any of the ways recognised by the Evidence Act, Gokhale J. never quashed the charges already framed by the Magistrate. It is true that the prosecution in its Special Leave Petitions 965 and 966 contended that the observations made by Gokhale J. with regard to the admissibility of Verladasheins and other documents are of "far reaching importance and are likely to prejudice the prosecution" and will affect the future course of the proceedings adversely to the prosecution. However, apart from these Verladasheins there was other circumstantial and oral evidence on the record and more evidence was yet to be produced by the prosecution after the charge. The prosecution were doing their best to secure the evidence of German witnesses in Europe. They want to produce other evidence also, apart from the Verladasheins, to show a prima facie case of conspiracy so that in accordance with the guidelines laid down in Gokhale J's judgment, they could make out a case for the admissibility of the Verladasheins under Section 10, Evidence Act.

32. A perusal of the copy of the Revision Application No 574/64 filed by Mithani in the High Court, will show that the only order specifically challenged therein was one dated December 6, 1962 whereby the Magistrate had held that 9 Verladasheins were admissible under Section 10, Evidence Act, although, incidentally, it was mentioned that the charges framed as a consequence of the impugned order dated December 6, 1962, should also be quashed. Even so, Mithani's Revision Application (No. 574/64) was summarily rejected by the learned Judge with the observation that the Magistrate could, in the light of the observations in the Judgment in Cr.Rev. A. 107 of 1963, "consider, whether the interlocutory order against which the present Revision Application is filed needs to be reviewed." The crucial part of the observation is that which has been underlined. It shows that this observation has reference only to the order dated December 6, 1962 whereby the Magistrate had held 9 Verladasheins admissible under Section 10. In this observation, the word "order" is used in singular. It shows that the learned Judge, also, construed the Revision- petition of Mithani as one directed against the Magistrate's order dated December 6, 1962, only. Only that order of the Magistrate has been exhaustively considered in the Revision Application 107 of 1964.

33. It is thus manifest that in abruptly deleting the charges and 'discharging' the accused, the Magistrate was acting neither in accordance with the observation or directions of Gokhale J., nor in accordance with law.

34. Equally meritless, albeit ingenious is the argument that since the Magistrate had no legal power to delete the charge the order of 'discharge' must be construed as an order of "acquittal" so that the High Court could not interfere with it in revision and direct a retrial. Assuming arguendo, the Magistrate's order of discharge was an order of 'acquittal', then also, it does not alter the fact that this 'acquittal' was manifestly illegal. It was not passed on merits, but without any trial, with consequent failure of justice. The High Court has undoubtedly the power to interfere with such a patently illegal order of acquittal in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under Section 439, and direct a retrial. The High Court's order under appeal, directing the Magistrate to take de novo proceedings against the accused was not barred by the provisions of Section 403, (of the Code of 1898), the earlier proceedings taken by the Magistrate being no trial at all and the order passed therein being neither a valid "discharge" of the accused nor their acquittal as contemplated by Section 405(1). The Magistrate's order (to use the words of Mudholkar J. in Mohd. Safi v. State of West Bengal MANU/SC/0076/1965:1966CriLJ75 was merely "an order putting a stop to these proceedings" since the proceedings, ended with that order. The other contentions of the appellant, have been stated only to be rejected.

35. For all the reasons aforesaid, we have no hesitation in upholding the High Court's order under appeal, and in dismissing the appeal.

36. Since the case is very old, the Magistrate shall proceed with the case with utmost despatch, if feasible, by holding day to day hearings within six months from today.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF BOMBAY

Criminal Appeal No. 649 of 1980

Decided On: 28.04.1983

Balu Ganpat Koshire Vs. State of Maharashtra

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

H.H. Kantharia and S.C. Pratap, JJ.

JUDGMENT

S.C. Pratap, J.

1. This appeal by the original accused questions the legality and validity of the order of conviction and sentence recorded against him by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Nasik, in sessions Case No. 150 of 1979, the conviction being for an offence of murder punishable under S. 302. Penal Code, with a sentence of imprisonment for life imposed in that behalf.

2. The accused Balu Ganpat Koshire was married to Mira some time in 1973. Of the said marriage, the couple had a son Sandip who was four years' old at the time of the incident. The incident constituting of subject matter of the present prosecution occurred in the evening at about 7 O'clock on 26- 9- 1979 in the house of the accused. In the early part of the very day, the accused, his wife Mira and their son Sandip had returned from about a month's residence at Vani at the house of Hirabai, the sister of the accused. Just prior to the occurrence in question, wife Mira and son Sandip were sitting in their field near their house in the company of one Devki Dalvi and others, when the accused went there, took his wife Mira to their house with Sandip following them. Within a short time devki heard cries of Mira. She went to the house of the accused knocked at the door but there was no response. In the meanwhile, some young boys, who were going by the way, climbed the roof of the house at the request of devki and effected on entry and opened the door from inside. The accused went out with only a bloodstained pyjama. In the meanwhile, Nanyabai, mother of the accused, also came there. Devki and Nanyabai were shocked to find Mira and Sandip lying inside the house in a pool of blood with injuries on their persons. Dr. Pawar, a relation of the family, also came there. He conveyed the information telephonically to the police station. An offence of murder was registered against the accused. He was arrested and, after completion of investigation, charge- sheeted and committed to stand his trial before the Sessions Court, Nasik, for the offence of murder.

3. The accused admitted the incident but pleaded insanity and claimed protection of Section 84, Penal Code. The learned trial ledge held that the deaths of Mira and Sandip were homicidal. This fact and finding is not disputed in this appeal. It was further held that the accused had committed the murders. His plea of insanity was negatived and he was convicted under S. 302, Penal Code, and sentenced to suffer imprisonment for life. Hence this appeal.

4. In support of the appeal, we have heard Mr. C. A. Phadkar, learned counsel for the appellant-accused. The State is represented by the learned Public Prosecutor Mr. M. D. Gangakhedkar.

5. Learned counsel Mr. Phadkar took us through the record of the case including the evidence of the prosecution witnesses as also defence witnesses who in this case are as many as seven and contended that the impugned conviction cannot, for more than one reason, be sustained. The trial itself was, according to the learned counsel, not legal and valid. assuming the same to be valid, the accused even so was entitled to the protection of Section 84, Penal Code. His submission in this context was that more than sufficient reliable and cogent evidence had been placed before the Court on the basis whereof fair and reasonable inference would be that the accused had discharged the burden that lay on him thus creating a dent in the prosecution case which consequently cannot be said to have been established and proved beyond reasonable doubt. The learned Public Prosecutor Mr. M. D. Gangakhedkar sought to repel these contentions.

6. Now, on 18- 1- 1980 when the charge was framed against the accused, he was not represented by any advocate, not even a State advocate. Only subsequently, an advocate was appointed at State expense. Some days thereafter the accused engaged his own advocate who filed an application (Exhibit 5) under Section 325, Cr.P.C. inter alia to the effect that the accused was unable to give proper instructions in order to enable the advocate to defend him; that the accused appears to be of unsound mind; that he was not capable of making his defence; and that he was previously treated in a mental hospital and was being treated till his arrest; and it is necessary, therefore, that he should be examined and treated medically and mentally and further proceedings in the case should be postponed till he became capable of making his defence. The State had no objection to this examination. The trial Court directed that the accused be sent for medical examination. Pursuant thereto, he was admitted to the Mental Hospital at Thane and was kept under observation for more than three weeks. Certificate was then sent to the trial Court that the accused was "un- certifiable" indicating that he cannot be said to be of unsound mind. On receipt of this certificate, the trial Court straightway resumed and concluded the trial.

7. Under Section 329, Cr.P.C., if at the trial of any person, it appears to the Court that such person is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, the Court shall, in the first instance, "..... try the fact of such 'unsoundness and incapacity'. Record here does not indicate compliance with this mandatory provision. All that happened was that the trial Court did take a prima facie view in favour of the accused and did postpone the trial pending his medical examination. But after medical examination, the trial Court did not try the fact of the purported unsoundness and incapacity of the accused, did not record finding as to his mental condition and defending capacity and without fulfilling this initial obligation forthwith resumed and concluded the trial on the main charge itself. The resulting lacuna was not innocuous but vital. Under sub- section 92) of S. 329, Criminal P.C., the trial of the fact of unsoundness of mind and incapacity of the accused "..... shall be deemed to be a part of his trial before the Court". Sequitur follows that the requisite trial under S. 329, Cr.P.C. was in this case not held at all. All that happened, if one may say so, was mere collection or receipt of evidence or material. But pursuant thereto no trial took place on the basic fact of unsoundness and incapacity of the accused. This vital lacuna would vitiate the trial. The doubt regarding the unsoundness and incapacity of the accused to defend himself at the main trial must per force continue to linger on, in the process rendering the validity of the further proceeding in the trial also doubtful. Taking this to its logical conclusion, the instant trial would be no trial in the eyes of law or, putting it differently, a void trial. It is, however, not necessary to go to that extent in the instant appeal because even on the assumption that the trial was valid, the accused here, on merits, established his claim to protection under Section 84, Penal Code, and consequently to an order of acquittal.

8. Coming then to the second aspect viz., the claim of the accused for protection under Section 84 Penal Code, we may in the first instance go through the relevant testimony not only of the prosecution witnesses but also witnesses examined by the defence and who were as many as seven in number. We may in this behalf take a chronological route regarding the condition of the accused from time to time so as to find out whether in terms of S. 84, Penal Code, it could or could not be said .... not beyond reasonable doubt but in all probability ..... that at the time of the offence in question the accused, by reason of unsoundness of mind, was incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. Before proceeding further, it may be safely accepted as an undisputed fact emerging from the totality of evidence both on the side of the prosecution as also defence that the accused was a normal person and that his mental condition cannot be said to be that of a normal man. Indeed, even Dr. Vasant Pawar, a close relation of the accused and examined by the prosecution as one of its own witnesses, testifies to the fact of the accused not being a normal man and to the further circumstances that he was in fact being medically treated in that behalf. One has, therefore, to proceed on the undisputed aforesaid basis in this behalf. The evidence of Yeshwant Kale (D.W. 1), Murlidhar Shinde (D. W. 2) and Keshav Bhadane (D.W. 3), shows that the accused had once jumped from the Victoria Bridge (at Nasik) into the river below. A mere jump into a river may not be abnormal but the evidence of the aforesaid witnesses shows that the accused jumped from the Victoria Bridge into the river at about 11 O'clock in the night. This surely would be rather unusual if not abnormal. Their evidence further shows that members of the public collected, Ramesh, brother of the accused, was contacted, he came near the bridge, the accused was rescued from the river and taken by Ramesh to his house. This was an incident seen not only by the three witnesses examined by the defence but by many other members of the public. Indeed, evidence shows that police had also arrived.

9. Soon after this incident, the accused was taken to Bombay for medical consultation and treatment relating to his mental condition. At that time, Dr. Vasant Pawar, relation of the accused and prosecution witness in this case, was in Bombay. He testifies that the accused was brought to him at Bombay because there was mental disorder with him. He took the accused to an expert psychiatrist viz., Dr. Wahiya, who is yet another defence witness in this case. Dr. Wahiya examined the accused. The accused was admitted to a hospital and kept there as an indoor patient. He remained there for several weeks. He was also given shocks. This being soon after the virtual midnight occurrence at the Victoria Bridge, Nasik, it would be reasonable to infer that the behaviour of the accused was not normal and that his mental condition was also not normal. Indeed, as Dr. Vasant Pawar himself admits, he was brought to Bombay because of his mental disorder.

10. In this context one may now turn to the evidence of Dr. N. S. Wahiya (D.W. 6). There can be no dispute that he is an acknowledged expert in the field of psychiatry. He has been an M.D. of the Bombay University and a Fellow of the Royal College of Psychiatry, England. At the time of his evidence he had completed 32 years of practice in psychiatry. After his M. D. He had also gone to the United states for training and had stayed there for a period of one and a half years. For several years he was the Held of the Department of Psychiatry at the K.E.M. Hospital, Bombay. Indeed, even at the time of his evidence he was Professor Emiritus in G.S. Medical College, Bombay, and held an Honorary Post for postgraduate students. The credentials of this expert are thus beyond doubt. He testifies that the accused had been brought to him, that he had examined the accused, that the accused had been admitted to a hospital, that he was being treated for his mental disorder, that he was given electric shocks and that he was also administered anti-psychotic drugs. This was in the year 1974. He further testifies that the accused was a psychiatric patient, that electric shocks are given in the treatment of schizophrenia and other mental sickness and when drugs do not react. This treatment has to control psychotic .He further states that exact causes of Schizophrenia are not yet known but here are very many causes in that behalf. He also states that there is no fixed time for this disease in the life of a man. It can come in early stages of life or even later. He also states that by mere appearance one cannot say if any individual is schizophrenic or not. There are various symptoms and nothing is rigid about it. Suicidal or homicidal tendency or attempts may be present in schizophrenic patients. One may recall the midnight jump of the accused from the Victoria Bridge. The patient appears normal but may become aggressive at any moment. He expressed his approval of the observation of Keith Simpson in his book 'Forensic Medicines' to the effect that, "Schizophrenia (dementia praecox) is the commonest of all psychoses to be associated with homicidal assaults". Dr. Wahiya also expressed his agreement with the view of Robert A. Woodroff and two others to the effect that "A common fear about deluded schizophrenic patients is that they are likely to act on their delusions and commit crime". Dr. Wahiya then testifies that the patient may improve and may also relapse and that it is difficult to say if the subsequent attacks are more acute. According to him, as the causes are not known, there is no final drug or remedy. Significantly enough, we do not find any cross- examination worth the name of this expert in the filed. He states that discharge of the accused from the hospital may indicate improvement. This, however, does not help the prosecution firstly because improvement does not mean cure and secondly because Dr. Wahiya categorically states more than once that a patient may improve and may also relapse. In this context further evidence in this case establishes that the patient here viz., the accused had in fact relapsed into the same mental condition and mental disorder as before and perhaps, indeed, in a mere acute form. This possibility also, according to Dr. Wahiya, cannot be ruled out.

11. We then have the testimony of yet another expert in the field viz., Dr. S. M. Sule (D.W. 7). He is an M.D. (Psychiatrist) of the University of Bombay. He is a member of the Indian Psychiatric Society. He also holds a Fellowship in Psychological Medicines. He has been practising as a psychiatrist at Nasik. He examined the accused in June, 1977. He was referred to him by Dr.

Vasant Pawar himself (P.W. 2) in this case. History of the patient viz., the accused was to the effect that he behaved suspiciously; that he was psychiatric and rowdy; that he had paranoid delusions; that he had attacks that he had jumped into the river; and that he was previously treated at Bombay both in drugs as also electric convulsive treatment. He then states that the patient was better for some time but relapsed after some months. He gave drugs and electric convulsive treatment to the patient but there was no follow up afterwards and the treatment was stopped abruptly. His own diagnosis was that the patient was suffering from paranoid schizophrenia. His testimony shows that the patient had not recovered when he abruptly stopped treatment. His evidence further shows that there was possibility of relapse. Even here, we do not find any serious cross- examination of Dr. Sule. Merely that the symptoms were not noted in the history paper and that after 1977 he did not have occasion to see the accused. Thus, as at this stage, one finds that the accused was a mental patient for the last several years till at least the year 1977 when he was under treatment of Dr. Sule and that he was treated for that purpose not only by an expert Dr. Wahiya in Bombay but also subsequently by another expert Dr. Sule in Nasik.

12. Apart from medical testimony, we have in this case the testimony of yet another important defence witness viz., Hirabai Gulabrao Khune, the sister of the accused. Here evidence assumes important because it relates to a period of one month immediately before the date of the occurrence and during which period the accused was sent to her residence at Vani presumably for a change and with a hope of a turn for the better in his mental condition. Hirabai herself is a school teacher at Vani. She categorically states that the accused was sent to her because he was a lunatic. She then relates several instances showing the mental disorder of the accused and his inability to know what was right and what was wrong or to distinguish the proper from the improper. The accused was required to be sent to answer call of nature; he was not brushing his teeth; Hirabai herself had to at times clean his teeth; even while going for bath, the accused used to remain in the bathroom without doing anything; while wearing clothes, he put his pyjama far below his under- pant; he was urinating in the house and sometimes in the presence of women; his speech was irrelevant; he used to pick up and eat anything found on the ground; he was unable to read anything; and there was hardly anything that remained to be done to improve him. She then states that medicines also did not improve him. She then states that his wife Mira alone could undergo such hardships but the devoted Mira nevertheless hoped that one day he will improve and that she did not like others talking about her husband. Hirabai then states that after a stay of one month or so, she personally brought back the accused along with his wife and child to his residence at Nasik, for she was not sure whether he could go on his own because he was a lunatic. It is significant that most of the important incidents as also the evidence in the main of this witness relating to the behaviour and conduct of the accused has gone virtually unchallenged in her cross- examination. Indeed, as in the case of other defence witnesses so also in the case of Hirabai (D.W. 5), there is no cross- examination worth the name. Inference, therefore, is irresistible that during the period immediately prior to the occurrence in question, which is the subject matter of the instance prosecution, the accused was found behaving in the most abnormal manner and in a manner strongly indicating an abnormal mental state and condition. It is obvious from the testimony of Hirabai that the accused was unable to distinguish the proper from the improper or unable to know what is right and what is wrong. Urinating in front of women, picking up anything from the ground and eating the same, not even able to brush his own teeth and laving that task to his sister, going to the bathroom apparently for a bath but without taking both remaining there for a long time, wearing clothes in a most peculiar manner viz., pyjama below underpant, are all indications, particularly in the case of a married man like the accused over thirty years at the relevant time, of an unusual mental set up and inability to behave like a normal man with a normal mind.

13. Though it is true that Hirabai is a sister and thus a close relation of the accused, in a case such as this that can be no ground for discrediting her testimony. Indeed, in a matter such as this, it is the testimony of relations that is of considerable assistance in reaching a fair and just finding one way or the other, because it is relations who, by virtue of their close and frequent contact with the accused, are in a much better position to give evidence relating to the mental condition of the accused. See in this context Ratanlal v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0180/1970 : 1971CriLJ654 , wherein it is observed (at page 657 of Cri LJ) :-

"..... We hold that the appellant has discharged the burden. There is no reason why the evidence of Shyam Lal, D.W. 1, and than Singh, D.W. 2, should not be believed. It is true that they are relation of the appellant, but it is the relations who are likely to remain in intimate contact. The behaviour of the appellant on the day of occurrence, failure of the police to lead evidence as to his condition when the appellant was in custody, and the medical evidence indicate that the appellant was insane within the meaning of S. 84, I.P.C."

Thus, considering the evidence of Hirabai along with the testimony of experts Dr. Wahiya and Dr. Sule, it would be reasonable to hold that the accused was a case of a mental patient and one with an unsound mind, incapable of any improvement, undergoing one relapse after another and of whom hopes had virtually been given up. Even the prosecution witness Devki admitted that the accused was sent to his sister Hirabai's place because he was mentally deranged and with a hope that he may improve. The behaviour of the accused at the time of the occurrence and soon thereafter further corroborates his mental condition. Evidence shows that while his wife and son were in the company of Devki and others in the field located near their house, the accused went there, brought back his wife with son following to his house and entering the home brutally killed both of them. Thereafter when the door was opened he just walked out with only a pyjama on his person, when to a field and sat there in a pensive mood. Yet another indication of his mental condition emerges from the admitted fact (vide evidence of the police officer P.W. 12) that soon after his arrest, which was soon after the occurrence, he was sent for medical examination. Unfortunately, the prosecution has not led evidence of the doctor who then examined the accused. However, the very fact that the accused was immediately sent for medical examination is yet one more indication that even at that stage, which was soon after the occurrence, he was suspected to be of an unsound mind.

14. Mr. Phadkar, learned counsel for the accused, emphasised one more circumstance in favour of the accused. He took us through the evidence of Narayan Laxman Telge (P.W. 8), the learned Judicial Magistrate, who recorded the confession of the accused. The accused was produced before the learned Magistrate on 27- 9- 1979 the very next day of the occurrence. The testimony of the learned Magistrate, however, shows that he adjourned the recording of confession for as many as seven times. On 27- 9- 1979 the matter was adjourned to 7- 10- 1979, then to 11- 10- 1079, then to 15- 10- 1979, then to 22- 10- 1979, then to 29- 10- 1979 and then again to 3- 11- 1979. Reason given by the learned Magistrate for this extensive delay viz., he was busy with administrative work, hardly justifies the gross delay. Recording of confession is an important matter and can in a given case constitute a very important circumstance in a trial, nay, the very foundation of a conviction. The learned Magistrate does not appear to have realised the seriousness and importance. Besides, we are not satisfied that he could be so extremely busy or pre- occupied with administrative work that he had to postpone this important function from time to time and for as nearly as seven times. Submission of the learned counsel Mr. Phadkar that these several postponements were not because of the purported administrative work but because the learned Magistrate was not satisfied that the accused was in a fit state of mind to make confession, cannot be said to be unfounded. In the entire context, the considerable lapse and delay in the aforesaid behalf becomes significant and constitutes yet one more circumstances corroborating the other evidence in this case on the mental condition of the accused.

15. Cumulative effect of all this evidence of experts and laymen and both direct and circumstantial together with the facts and circumstances - which are not slender or insignificant but substantial - emerging therefrom takes the case and defence of the accused nearer home under Section 84, Penal Code. Though in terms of this section, it is for the accused to show that by reason of unsoundness of mind he was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or incapable of knowing the nature of the act or incapable of knowing that what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law, the Court, while considering this defence, would have to look at and consider the totality of the emerging situation and position in the light of facts and circumstances relating to the mental condition of the accused preceding the occurrence, at about the time of the occurrence as also after the occurrence. As observed by the Supreme Court in Dahyabhai Chhaganbhai Thakkar v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0068/1964 : 1964CriLJ472 :

"When a plea of legal insanity is set up, the Court has to consider whether at the time of commission of the offence the accused, by reason of unsoundness of mind, was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law. The crucial point of time for ascertaining the state of mind of the accused is the time when the offence was committed. Whether the accused was in such a state of mind as to be entitled to the benefit of Section 84, Penal Code, can only be established from the circumstances which preceded, attended and followed the crime".

In yet another ruling of the Supreme Court in Jai Lal v. Delhi Administration, MANU/SC/0353/1968 : 1969CriLJ259 , it is observed :

"To establish that the acts done are not offences under S. 84, it must be proved clearly that at the time of the commission of the act the appellant by reason of unsoundness of mind was incapable of knowing that the acts were either morally wrong or contrary to law. The question is whether the appellant was suffering from such incapacity at the time of the commission of the acts. On this question, the state of his mind before and after the crucial time is relevant".

And further still :

"If a person by reason of unsoundness of mind is incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law he cannot be guilty of any criminal intent. Such a person lacks the requisite mens rea and is entitled to an acquittal".

16. Though the learned Public Prosecutor Mr. Gangakhedkar is right in contending that there is a presumption that the accused was not insane, it is well to remember that it is a rebuttable presumption. And it is, therefore, open to the accused to rebut it by placing before the Court all the relevant evidence, oral, documentary and/or circumstantial. The accused here has done that in a very good measure in this case. Relevant evidence is led not only of his relations but also of disinterested persons in the city as also medical evidence including evidence of experts in the field. That apart, the testimony of the prosecution witnesses also points in the same direction. Even Dr. Vasant Pawar, who is the complainant in the instant case, testifies to the mental disorder of the accused. Indeed, the mental condition of the accused is writ large on the record of this case. It is, of course, true that it is for the accused to discharge the burden that lies on him for rebutting the presumption of sanity and bringing his case within the ambit of Section 84, Penal Code. Equally settled, however, is the legal position that this burden or onus on the accused is not as heavy as that on the prosecution but equivalent to that which lies on a party in a civil proceeding. As authoritatively laid down by the Supreme Court in 's case MANU/SC/0068/1964 : 1964CriLJ472 supra) :

"The doctrine of burden of proof in the context of the plea of insanity may be stated in the following propositions : (1) The prosecution must prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused had committed the offence with the requisite mens rea; and the burden of proving that always rests on the prosecution from the beginning to the end of the trial. (2) There is a rebuttable presumption that the accused was not insane, when he committed the crime, in the sense laid down by Section 84, I.P.C.; the accused may rebut it by placing before the Court all the relevant evidence, oral, documentary or circumstantial, but the burden of proof upon him is no higher than that rests upon a party to civil proceedings. (3) Even if the accused was not able to establish conclusively that he was insane at the time he committed the offence, the evidence placed before the Court by the accused or by the prosecution may raise a reasonable doubt in the mind of the Court as regards one or more of the ingredients of the offence, including mens rea of the accused and in that case the Court would be entitled to acquit the accused on the ground that the general burden of proof resting on the prosecution was not discharged".

17. All in all, therefore, and all things considered, the accused here must be held to have more than satisfactorily rebutted the initial presumption against his insanity and to have discharged the onus to the extent it lay on him. The facts and circumstances, the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, the testimony of the defence witnesses, the testimony of the experts in the field, the failure of the prosecution to examine the doctor to whom the accused was sent immediately after the occurrence in question and the uninspiring nature of the judicial confession which ultimately came into existence after as many as seven adjournments in the matter thereof, considered together and cumulatively, brings the instant case within the four- corners of Section 84, Penal Code. In any event, the totality of evidence before the Court and the cogent facts and circumstances emerging therefrom raise, qua the charge against the accused, more than reasonable doubt in the mind of the Court. The prosecution must hence be held to have failed to bring home to the accused the impugned charge beyond reasonable doubt. The general burden of proof that "always rests on the prosecution from the beginning to the end of the trial" has not stood discharged. The inevitable end result would, therefore, be an order of acquittal. The impugned conviction is, therefore, liable to be set aside and replaced by an order of acquittal in favour of the accused. However, in the context of section 334, Cr.P.C., a finding is here recorded to the effect that the accused had, in fact, committed the act of resulting in the death of his wife Mira and his son Sandip. That this is so is admitted by the accused in his examination under S. 313 of Cr.P.C. His only defence was based on Sec. 84, Penal Code and, as seen, he has succeeded in getting protection thereof.

18. In the result, this appeal succeeds and is allowed. The impugned order of conviction and sentence recorded against the accused by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Nasik, in Sessions Case No. 150 of 1979 is set aside. And the accused is acquitted of the charge levelled against him.

19. This, however, is not a case where the accused can be set free but one wherein an order under Section 335, Cr.P.C. requires to be made. Mr. Phadkar, learned counsel for the accused, has filed in this Court an affidavit of one Rambhau Ganpat Koshire (who is present in Court today), the eldest brother of the accused. In the said affidavit, this Court is requested to pass an order directing the accused to be delivered into his i.e. Rambhau's custody under the provisions of Section 335(1)(a) of Cr.P.C. The said affidavit contains an undertaking to this Court - and which undertaking this Court accepts - that the accused, if so delivered, shall be properly taken care of and prevented from doing injury to himself or to any other person and that the accused shall be produced for inspection of such officer and at such times and places as the State Government may direct. In his affidavit Rambhau has also expressed his willingness to give, if so necessary, security to the satisfaction of this Court for the aforesaid purpose. In our view, this is a fit case where instead of otherwise detaining the accused in safe custody as per Section 335(1)(a), Cr.P.C. he should be delivered to his eldest brother Rambhau Ganpat Koshire who has filed an affidavit complying with the terms and conditions of Section 335(3) of the said Code. Hence order :

The accused be delivered over to Rambhau Ganpat Koshire of Koshire House, Malaviya Chowk, Panchavati, Nasik, on his (the said Rambhau Ganpat Koshire) giving in favour of the Sessions Court, Nasik, his personal bond in the sum of Rs. 5,000/- to the effect that the accused will be properly taken care of and will be prevented from doing injury to himself or to any other person and that the accused will be produced for the inspection of such officer and at such times and places as the State Government may direct.

20. The office shall make a report to the State Government in terms of S. 335(1), Cr.P.C. It shall also forward to the State Government a copy of this judgment.

21. Order accordingly.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 272 of 1977

Decided On: 16.11.1977

K. Karunakaran Vs. T.V. Eachara Warrier and Ors.

Back to Section 344 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Back to Section 476 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

P.K. Goswami and V.D. Tulzapurkar, JJ.

JUDGMENT

P.K. Goswami,J.

1. This appeal by special leave is directed against the judgment and order of the High Court of Kerala of June 13, 1977, sanctioning a complaint against the appellant along with two others, who are not before us, for an offence under Section 193 I.P.C. after making an enquiry under Section 340(1) CrPC, 1973. At the time of granting special leave this Court ordered for impleading the State of Kerala and the State is represented before us by its Advocate General who adopts the arguments of the appellant's counsel, Mr. Debabrata Mookerjee, and also addressed us in support of the appeal.

2. This particular proceeding is an off- shoot out of a habeas corpus application instituted on March 25, 1977, in the High Court of Kerala by T. V. Eachara Warrier who is a retired Professor of Hindi of the Government Arts and Science College, Calicut. His son Rajan who was a final year student in the Regional Engineering College, Calicut, was a resident of the College Hostel. Shri Warrier received a registered letter from the Principal of the College informing him that his son, Rajan, was arrested and taken into police custody on March 1, 1976.

3. This was a time when the proclamation of emergency had been in force in the country since June 25, 1975. Nothing, therefore, could be done in the courts in view of the majority decision of the Constitution Bench of this Court (Khanna, J. dissenting) that challenge of even mala fide orders of detention could not be entertained under Article 226 of the Constitution (see Additional District Magistrate, Jabalpur v. S.S. Shukla etc. etc. [1976] Suppl. S.C.R. 172.

4. The heart- broken father had to make numerous efforts and entreaties in appropriate quarters, high, and low, to anyhow ascertain the whereabouts of his son. The point that is, relevant is that Shri Warrier also saw and met the appellant (Shri Karunakaran) who was then the Home Minister of Kerala, on March 10, 1976, after nine days of the arrest. We are referring to this fact since it will assume some importance as will appear hereinafter on account of omission by Shri Warrier to mention about this interview with Shri Karunakaran in the original writ application. Shri Warrier also met the then Chief Minister Shri V. Achutha Menon, several times and on the last occasion when he had met him "he expressed his helplessness in the matter and said that the same was being dealt with by Shri Karunakaran, Minister for Home Affairs". There was also a written representation by Shri Warrier to the Home Minister, Government of India, on August 24, 1976, with copy to all Members of Parliament from Kerala. There was a reminder to him on October 22, 1976. Certain Members of Parliament also took the matter up with. Shri Karunakaran in November, 1976. It is sufficient to state that Shri Warrier did not receive any answer to his piteous queries about the whereabouts of his son. This is how the matter had been dragging keeping the parents in great suspense, misery and distress which can only be imagined.

5. It so happened that the Lok Sabha was dissolved on January 18, 1977, and elections to Parliament and the Kerala State Assembly were to take place on March 19, 1977. Emergency was also necessarily relaxed. Finding all his efforts to trace the whereabouts of his son unavailing, the appellant ultimately printed out a leaflet inviting attention of the general public in Kerala about his utter distress at the time when the people were about to go to the polls. In the leaflet Shri Warrier had detailed that his son was kept in illegal custody without even informing him and the members of his family his whereabouts. It was mentioned in his original habeas corpus application that during the election Shri Karunakaran, then, Home Minister, had addressed several public meetings in various constituencies of the State and that he had stated during his speeches that Rajan was involved as an accused in a murder case and that was why he was kept in detention. Shri Karunakaran and his party won in the State Assembly elections and Shri Karunakaran became the Chief Minister in March 1977.

6. On March 25, 1977, which was a Friday, Shri Warrier filed in the High Court the habeas corpus application for production of his son, impleading the Home Secretary, Kerala, the Inspector General of Police, Kerala, and the Deputy Inspector General of Police, Crime Branch, Kerala, as the first three respondents. The application was moved on the next working day, namely, March 28, 1977, and the learned Advocate General took notice on behalf of the respondents in the petition and, the case was posted to March 30, 1977, for stowing cause as to why the application should not be granted.

7. Meanwhile Shri Karunakaran, who was by then the Chief Minister, stated on the floor of the State Assembly that Shri Rajan had never been arrested, and that was published in all the papers. That led to the application by Shri Warrier on March 30, 1977, to implead Shri Karunakaran and the District Superintendent of Police, Kozhikode, as additional respondents to his petition. The learned Additional Advocate General took notice of this petition and the same was allowed by the High Court on that very day.

8. Counter affidavits by the respondents, including Shri karunakaran's, were sworn on March 31, 1977 and filed on April 4, 1977, and the case was posted to April 6, 1977. On April 6, 1977, Shri Warrier filed a reply affidavit. Along with it affidavits of 12 persons were also filed in support of his case that Rajan had been taken into police custody on March 1, 1976.

9. Shri Warrier as well as most of the deponents of the affidavits offered themselves for cross-examination and although some of them were cross- examined, the Additional Advocate General declined to cross- examine Shri Warrier. However, the Principal of the Engineering College, who had informed Shri Warrier about Rajan's arrest, was also examined as a witness. The learned Additional Advocate General was candid enough not to question his veracity except to point out that he had no direct knowledge about the arrest of Rajan which he came to know from the warden and the students. After a full hearing of the matter the High Court delivered its Judgment in the habeas corpus application on April 13, 1977, but in the nature of things the proceedings were not closed: The High Court, faced with a unique situation, ordered as follows :-

We hereby issue a writ of Habeas Corpus to the respondents directing them to produce Sri Rajan in this Court on the 21st of April, 1977.

If, for any reason the respondents think that the) will not be able to produce the said Sri Rajan on that day their counsel may file a Memo submitting this information before the Registrar of the High Court on 19th April, 1977, in which case the case will stand posted to 23- 5- 1977, the date of reopening of the Courts after the, midsummer recess, ' On that day the respondents may furnish to the Court detailed information as to the steps taken by the respondents to comply with the order of this Court, and particularly to locate Sri Rajan. Thereupon it will be open to this Court to pass further orders on this petition and to that extent this order need not be taken to/ have closed the case.

10. The Advocate General filed a Memorandum as ordered by the High Court on April 19, 1977, on behalf of respondents, 1, 2 and - 4, the Home Secretary, Inspector General of Police and Shri Karunakaran respectively, stating that these respondents were not able to produce Rajan "since the said Rajan is not in the illegal detention or in the custody or control of the respondents anywhere in the State or outside". It was also stated that police sources in Kerala as well as outside were alerted to locate the said Rajan. It was further mentioned in the Memo that certain police officers were placed under suspension by the Government and the Deputy Inspector General of Police was relieved from the Crime Branch on transfer. It was also disclosed that Criminal Case No. 304/77 under Sections 342, 323, 324 read with Section 34 IPC has been registered in the Crime Branch C.I.D. based on the observations in the judgment of the High Court in the above habeas corpus petition, The Memo closed as follows :-

From the efforts so far made the said Rajan remains untraced. The efforts to locate him continue unabated and no efforts will be spared to trace him.

11. The above Memo was filed in the High Court on April 19, 1977, as stated earlier. It also appears that the petition for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the judgment was rejected by the High Court on April 23, 1977. Later, the petition for special leave to appeal against the judgment and order in the habeas corpus application was also rejected by this Court on April 25, 1977.

12. It appears that Shri Karunakaran resigned as Chief Minister after the judgment of the High Court in the habeas corpus petition on April 26, 1977. On May 22, 1977, Shri Karunakaran filed his second affidavit before the High Court, this time describing himself as a Member of the Legislative Assembly, Kerala State. In para 5 of this affidavit he stated as follows :-

To the best of my knowledge and information now available, Sri Rajan after he was taken into custody by the police was belaboured by the police and there is every reason to think that he met with his death while in police custody. It is humbly submitted that in the circumstances stated above, I am not able to comply with the writ of Habeas Corpus issued to me since compliance with the writ has become impossible on account of Sri Rajan having died as a result of police torture at the Kakkayam Investigation Camp on 2- 3- 1976, while in unlawful custody of the police as disclosed in the report dated 17- 5- 1977 of the investigating Officer.

13. It will be of relevance now, as indicated at the outset, to refer to the affidavit of Shri Warrier of March 30, 1977, in support of his application for impleading Shri Karunakaran and it may be appropriate to quote paragraph 2 therefrom :

I met the present Chief Minister Sri K. Karunakaran on the 10th of March, 1976 at the Man Mohan Palace at Trivandrum (His Official residence then) and Sri Karunakaran told me) then that my son Rajan had been arrested from his college for involvement in some serious case and he will do his level best to look into the matter and help the petitioner.

Shri Karunakaran as Chief Minister made his first affidavit on March; 31, 1977, and in reply to the above quoted paragraph 1 he stated- in that affidavit as follows :-

The allegation made in paragraph 2 of the additional affidavit that I told the petitioner on 10th March, 1976, that his son Rajan had been arrested from his College for involvement in some serious cases and he will do his level best to look into the matter and help the petitioner is absolutely incorrect. I have never told the petitioner that his son Rajan was in police custody at any time and so far, I have no knowledge that the said Rajan has been in Police custody at any time.

He also denied as false in this affidavit about any reference to Rajan's arrest in his speeches during the election campaign. In his second affidavit of May 22, 1977, referred to above, he made reference to the interview with Shri Warrier of 10th March, 1976, and stated- as follows in para 8 therein :

Shri T. V. Eachara Warrier, the petitioner in the Original Petition had met me on or about 10th March, 1976 and told me that he suspected that his son is involved in the criminal case registered in connection with the attack by some persons on Kakkayam Police Station on 29- 2- 1976 and that he wanted me to use my good offices to exclude his son from that case. I told him this was a crime under investigation by the police and that it would not be proper for me as the Home Minister to interfere with the investigation by the police by issuing directions to them.

He also stated in paragraph 9 as under :-

I had stated in the Legislative Assembly that Sri Rajan had not been in police custody on the basis of the report of the Inspector General of Police dated 7- 1- 1977. Apart from this report I had no other source of information on this matter. I had no means whatever to doubt the correctness of the facts stated in the report of the Inspector General of Police.

He added in paragraph 10 as follows :-

It is a matter of intense agony and anguish for me., as the Minister for Home, Government of Kerala, at that time, that Sri Rajan, the son of the petitioner who was taken into custody by the police on 1- 3- 1976 happened to be tortured while in police custody at the Kakkayam camp as a result of which he breathed his last while in such custody at the camp on the evening of 2- 3- 1976 as it has now, been revealed by the investigation of Crime No. 304/77 of Crime Branch CID I may be permitted to say in retrospect that the judgment of this Hon'ble Court dated 13- 4- 1977 had helped me as Chief Minister to apply my pointed attention to this matter and take certain expeditious steps to bring to light the true facts.

14. In the above backdrop, Shri Warrier filed an application under Section 340(1) Cr.P.C. before the High Court for taking action against Shri Karunakaran and others for perjury.

15. Lie tends to become almost a style of life. Lies are resorted to by the high and the low being faced with inconvenient situations which require a Mahatma Gandhi to own up Himalayan blunders and unfold unpleasant truths truthfully. But when principles are sacrificed at the altar of individuals, selfishness of man, desire to continue in position and power, lining up with the high and mighty, lead to lies, euphemistically prevarication. But all lies made, here and there, ignored by the people or exposed on their own to nudity, are not subject matters for the Court to take action. When the Court takes action it is a species of falsehood clearly defined under Section 191 IPC and punishable under Section 193 IPC.

16. The High Court after hearing the said application has come to the conclusion that a prima facie case has been made out under Section 193 IPC and that it is expedient in the interest of justice to lay a complaint against Shri Karunakaran under that section before the appropriate court. The High Court also passed similar orders against the Deputy Inspector General of Police, Crime Branch and the Superintendent of Police, respondents 3 and 5 respectively in the original application. The High Court, however, declined to take action against the Home Secretary and the Inspector General of Police for certain reasons recorded by it.

17. It is submitted by Mr. Debabrata Mookerjee, on behalf of the appellant, that the High Court had no legal justification to make a distinction between Shri Karunakaran on the one hand and the Home Secretary and the Inspector General of Police on the other. All the three had no direct knowledge of Rajan's arrest, says counsel. Counsel submits that Shri Karunakaran as Chief Minister could only rely on the official channel of information and he submitted before the Court all the information and he truly derived from the report of the Inspector General of Police of January 7, 1977. Mr. Mookerjee strenuously contends that no prima facie case has been made out against Shri Karunakaran, nor is it expedient in the interest of justice to lay a complaint for perjury against him.

18. On the other hand Mr. Niren De, on behalf of Shri Warrier. submits that in an appeal by special leave under Article 136 of the Constitution it will be most inappropriate in a case of this nature to interfere with the discretion exercised by the High Court in laying a complaint under Section 193 IPC after a regular enquiry carefully made under Section 340 Cr. P.C. According to Mr. De a prima facie case has been made out and it is expedient in the interest of justice that Shri Karunakaran should face a trial in accordance with law.

19. Chapter XXVI of the CrPC 1973 makes provisions as to offences affecting the administration of justice. Section 340 Cr.P.C. with which the chapter opens is the equivalent of the old Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898. The chapter has undergone one significant change with regard to the [provision of appeal which was there under the old Section 476B CrP.C. Under Section 476B Cr.P.C. (old) there was a right of appeal from the order of a subordinate Court to the superior Court to which appeals ordinarily lay from an appealable decree or sentence of such former Court Under Section 476B (old) there would have ordinarily [been a right of appeal against the order of the High Court to this Court. There is, however, a distinct departure from that position under Section 341 Cr.P.C. (new) with regard to an appeal against the order of a High Court under Section 340 to this Court. An order of the High Court made under Sub- section (1) or Sub- section (2) of Section 340 is specifically excluded for the purpose of appeal to the superior court under Section 341(1) Cr.P.C. (new). This is, therefore, a new restriction in the way of the appellant when he approaches this Court under Article 136 of the Constitution.

20. Whether, suo moto, or on an application by a party under Section 340(1) Cr. P.C., a Court having been already seized of a matter may be tentatively of opinion that further action against some party or witness may be necessary in the interest of justice. In a proceeding under Section 340(1) Cr.P.C. the reasons recorded in the principal case, in which a false statement has been made, have a great bearing and indeed action is taken having regard to the overall opinion formed by the Court in the earlier proceedings.

21. At an enquiry held by the court under Section 340(1) Cr.P.C, irrespective of the result of the main case, the only question, is whether a prima facie case is made out which, if unrebutted, may have a reasonable likelihood to establish the specified offence and whether it is also expedient in the interest of justice to take such action.

22. The party may choose to place all its materials before the court at that stage, but if it does not, it will not be estopped from doing so later in the trial, in case prosecution is sanctioned by the court.

23. In this case the High Court came to the conclusion in the enquiry that Shri Karunakaran's first affidavit of 31st March, 1977 filed on 4th April, 1977, contained a false statement to the effect that he had no knowledge that Rajan was in police custody at any time and that "he could not have believed it to be true". It is only on that basis that the High Court held that an offence under Section 193 IPC was prima facie made out. Having regard to the second affidavit of 22nd May, 1977 and for any other reasons recorded by it the aforesaid statement in that behalf was considered by the High Court as "deliberately" made.

24. We should make it clear that when the trial of the appellant commences under Section 193 IPC the reasons given in the main judgment of the High Court or those in the order passed under Section 340(1) Cr.P.C, should not weigh with the criminal] court in coming to its independent conclusion whether the offence under Section 193 IPC has been fully established (against the appellant beyond reasonable doubt It will be for the Prosecution to establish all the ingredients of the offence under Section 193 IPC against the appellant and the decision will be based only on the evidence and the materials produced before the criminal court during the trial and the conclusion of the court will be independent of opinions formed by the High Court in the habeas corpus proceeding and also in the enquiry under Section 340(1) Cr.P.C.

25. An enquiry, when made, under Section 340(1) Cr.P.C. is really in the nature of affording a locus poenitentiae to a person and if at that stage the court chooses to take action, it does not mean that he will not have full and adequate opportunity in due course of the process of justice to establish his innocence.

26. It is well- settled that this Court under Article 136 of the Constitution would come to the aid of a party when any gross injustice is manifestly committed by a court whose order gives rise to the cause for grievance before this Court. Even when two views are possible in the matter it will not be expedient in the interest of justice to interfere with the order of the High Court unless we are absolutely certain that the two pre- conditions which are necessary for laying a complaint after an enquiry under Section 340 are completely absent. The two pre- conditions are that the materials produced before the High Court make put a prima facie case for a complaint and secondly that it is expedient in the interest of justice to permit the prosecution under Section 193 IPC.

27. We should bear in mind an important aspect. We are not dealing with a case of conviction of an accused under Section 193 IPC. The appellant is still to be tried. We are invited to quash the complaint made by the High Court prior to its regular trial. That can, be only on the basis that the order of the High Court's prima facie view that a complaint should be laid under Section 193 IPC is so manifestly perverse, so grossly erroneous and so palpably unjust that this Court must interfere in the interest of justice and fair play.

28. There is another anxiety on our part not to speak more than what is absolutely necessary in this appeal as any expression or observation on any facet of the case may prejudice either party in the trial which must be free and impartial wherein no party should have any feeling of misgiving, suspicion or embarrassment.

29. We have seen in the judgment of the High Court that it has taken good care not to express on the merits of certain aspects which it has expressly enumerated. We will only add that even in those aspects where the High Court may be said to have even remotely expressed some views, these shall not certainly weigh with the trial court. We read in the judgment of the High Court their natural anxiety on this score and we are only clarifying the true position so that there need be no embarrassment or apprehension in any quarters about the trial. It is for this very reason that although arguments were heard at length of both sides on every conceivable aspect of the case, we deliberately refrain ourselves from making any observation thereon. We feel that any observation one way or the other in respect of certain submissions made before us may have unintended likelihood of prejudicing some party or the other at the trial. Even a remote possibility of this nature must be avoided at all costs.

30. The fact that a prima facie case has been made out for laying a complaint does not mean that the charge has been established against a person beyond reasonable doubt. That will be thrashed out in the trial itself where the parties will have opportunity to produce evidence and controvert each other's case exhaustively without any reservation. There may be often a constraint on the part of a. person sought to be proceeded against under Section 340 Cr.P.C. to come out with all materials in the preliminary enquiry. That constraint will not be there in a regular trial where he will have ample opportunity to defend himself and produce all materials to show that an offence under Section 193 IPC has not been made out. That section contemplates that making of a false statement is not enough. It has to be made intentionally. The accused in a trial under Section 193 will be able to place all circumstances bearing upon the ingredient of the intention attributed to him.

31. After giving our anxious consideration to all the submissions made by counsel of both sides we do not feel justified in interfering with the order of the High Court to scotch the complaint against the appellant at the threshold.

32. It is true, we are dealing with the former Chief Minister of a State who happened to be the Home Minister at the time of the incident. Even the time was singularly unique when the occurrence took place and such cases give rise to emotions and feelings of bitterness. It is also true that a person cannot swear a falsehood in the court as a minister with impunity and come out with the truth only as a commoner. When, however, the court is called upon to ultimately try an offence we do not have any doubt that the matters germane to the offence under Section 193 IPC alone will be taken into consideration on the materials produced by the parties and justice will be done in accordance with law.

33. Where a Chief Minister, for reasons best known to him, relying entirely on the official channel of information denied knowledge of an event, people were humming about, it is a matter which must go forward for a trial in public interest. Truth does not lie between two lights.

34. Whether the appellant made a false statement before the High Court and intentionally did so will be an issue at large for trial in the criminal court. We decline to put the lid on the controversy, out of hand, since that way does not point to justice according to law. We close by saying ne quid nimis.

35. The appeal is dismissed.

Naresh and Ors. Vs. State of Uttar Pradesh

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.N. Sen, Baharul Islam and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ.

JUDGMENT

1. We are afraid we have to voice our grave concern and express our serious displeasure at the course of events in the High Court in the present case. We consider it our duty to do so. We are not a little disturbed by what has been done in the High Court. The High Court, some weeks after pronouncing its judgment in a Criminal appeal, altered a conviction under Section 302 Indian Penal Code which it had confirmed to one under Section 304 Indian Penal Code, ostensibly exercising its power to correct clerical errors but ignoring Section 362 of the CrPC 1973 which expressly provides "Save as otherwise provided by this Cede or by any other law for the time being in force, no Court, when it has signed its judgment or final order disposing of a case, shall alter or review the same except to correct a clerical or arithmetical error."

2. Naresh, one of the appellants, was convicted by the Trial Court of an offence under Section 302 Indian Penal Code and the rest of the appellants were convicted under Section 302 read with. Section 149 Indian Penal Code. All of them were sentenced to imprisonment for life. The accused preferred appeals to the High Court. J.P. Chaturvedi and R.C. Srivastava JJ who heard the appeals, while discussing the question of the culpability of the appellant Naresh observed as follows : "It may be pointed out that Bahadur (deceased) had a single injury on his head. This blow was inflicted by Naresh appellant and it resulted in fractures of frontal and parietal bones into eight pieces. The blow was very effective and powerful and as such, so far as Naresh appellant is concerned, we have no doubt that he intended to kill Bahadur and therefore, committed an offence punishable under Section 302 Indian Penal Code." After recording this categoric finding about the culpability of Naresh, the High Court proceeded to discuss the case against the rest of the accused. Then, in the ultimate paragraph of the judgment, which we may call the operative part of the judgement, the High Court again said about Naresh : "His conviction under Section 302 Indian Penal Code and sentence of imprisonment for life awarded thereunder are affirmed." The judgment of the High Court was pronounced on February 25, 1980. Thereafter on an application filed by the" appellant Naresh, the High Court made the following order on April 14, 1980 :

The application is allowed as there is a clerical mistake in the operative part of the judgment in Criminal Appeal No. 674 of 1975 regarding the conviction and sentence of appellant Naresh. The sentence, 'but his conviction under Section 302 I.P.C. and sentence of imprisonment for life awarded thereunder are affirmed' be substituted by the sentence 'He is convicted under Section 304(Part I) I.P.C. instead of Section 302 I.P.C. and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for seven years.

We are entirely at a loss to understand the order dated April 14, 1980. In their judgment dated February 25, 1980 while discussing the case against Naresh the learned Judges had given a specific and express finding that he intended to kill the deceased Bahadur and, therefore, had committed an offence punishable under Section 302 Indian Penal Code. The operative part of the judgment also said the same thing. We do not understand what the learned Judges mean when they state in their order dated April 14, 1980, "there is a clerical mistake in the operative part of the judgment." The High Court was wholly wrong in altering the judgment pronounced by them disposing of the Criminal Appeals. That was clearly in contravention of the provisions of Section 362 CrPC. What was worse, the High Court acted in purported exercise of the power to correct clerical mistakes when in fact there was none. The conviction under Section 302 Indian Penal Code was perfectly correct and the conviction had been rightly affirmed by the High Court in the first instance. There was no occasion at all for the purported exercise of power to correct a clerical mistake and alter the conviction under Section 302 to one under Section 304 Indian Penal Code. We are greatly concerned that the High Court should have committed this grievous error. There is, however, nothing that we can do about it at this juncture as the State has not chosen to file any appeal against the order dated April 14, 1980.

3. Shri S.P. Singh has taken us through the relevant evidence. We are unable to find any reason to reject the evidence of the four eye witnesses. Their evidence has been accepted by both the Trial Court and the High Court. The questions raised relate to appreciation of evidence and we find no ground for interference under Article 136 of the Constitution. Criminal Appeal No. 197 and 198 of 1981 are accordingly dismissed.

Balwant Singh Vs. State of Punjab

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

N.L. Untwalia and P.K. Goswami, JJ.

JUDGMENT

N.L. Untwalia, J.

1. Balwant Singh, the sole appellant in this appeal was convicted under Section 302 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death by the Trial Court. He conviction and sentence have been confirmed by the High Court of Punjab and Haryana. Special leave to appeal was granted by this Court limited to the question of sentence only. We have, therefore, to see whether on the facts of this case the High Court was right in confirming the death sentence imposed upon the appellant or was it a case where the lessor sentence of life imprisonment ought to have been awarded.

2. The appellant was aged about 60 years at the lime of the occurrence. He was working as a Granthi of a Gurudwara in village Salihna District Faridkot. Mohan Singh the deceased was a member of the Managing Committee of the Gurudwara. He made certain complaints against the appellant to the President of the Managing Committee and asked, for the removal from the post of the Granthi. The appellant, therefore, bore a grudge against the deceased. In the early hours of April 13, 1974 the appellant gave Karan Parshad of Granthi Sahib to Mohan Singh mixing opium in it. As soon as Mohan Singh took the Parshad he felt sick and his heart began to sink. Inspite of the medical aid he could not survive and died about 4 hours after the administering of the poison to him by the appellant. On the facts found by the learned Sessions Judge and as affirmed by the High Court, the appellant was convicted under Section 302 of the Penal Cole. The question for consideration is whether the sentence of death was rightly passed. It may be noticed that the occurrence took place on April 13, 1974 after coming into force of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 on and from April 1, 1974. Provisions of Section 354(3) of the new Code, as noticed by the High Court, governed this case. Yet the High Court confirmed the sentence of death relying upon two decisions of this Court which were not concerned with the application of law engrafted in Section 354(3) of the CrPC, 1973 but were given with reference to the CrPC Code, 1898 as it stood at the relevant time.

3. It is well- known that in many parts of the world an agitation has been going on against the imposition of death penalty even in murder cases. And in many countries or States death penalty has been abolished. In India the Legislature in this wisdom has not thought it fit and proper to abolish the death penalty altogether but there has been a gradual swing against the imposition of such penalty. Under the CrPC, 1898 as it stood before the amendment by Act 26 of 1955, Sub-section (5) of Section 367 required:

If the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death, and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall in its judgment state the reason why sentence of death was not passed:

Under the provision aforesaid if an accused was convicted for an offence punishable with death then imposition of death sentence was the rule and awarding of a lesser sentence was an exception and the Court had to state the reasons for not passing the sentence of death. By the Amending Act 26 of 1955 the said provision was deleted. Thereafter it was left to the direction of the Court, on the facts of each case, to pass the sentence of death or to award the lesser sentence. In the context of the changed law if in a given case the passing of the death sentence was not called for or there were extenuating circumstances to justify the passing of the lesser sentence then the lesser sentence was awarded and not the death sentence.

4. Section 354(3) of the new Criminal Procedure Code says:

When the conviction is for an offence punishable with death or, in the alternative, with imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of years, the judgment shall state the reasons for the sentence awarded, and, in the case of sentence of death, the special reasons for such sentence.

Under this provision the Court is required to state the reasons for the sentence awarded and in the case of sentence of death, special reasons are required to be stated. It would thus be noticed that awarding of the sentence other than the sentence of death is the general rule now and only special reasons, that is to say, special facts and circumstances in the given case, will warrant the passing of the death sentence. It is unnecessary nor is it possible to make a catalogue of the special reasons which may justify the passing of the death sentence in a case.

But we may indicate just a few, such as, the crime has been committed by a professional or a hardened criminal, or it has been committed in a very brutal manner or on a helpless child or a woman or the like. On the facts of this case, it is true that the appellant had a motive to commit the murder and he did it with an intention to kill the deceased. His conviction under Section 302 of the Penal Code was justified but the facts found were not such as to enable the Court to say that there were special reasons for passing the sentence of death in this case.

5. The High Court has referred to the two decisions of this Court namely in Mangal Singh v. State of U.P. MANU/SC/0166/1974 : 1975CriLJ36 and in Perumal v. The State of Kerala MANU/SC/0183/1974 : AIR1975SC95 and has then said "There are no extenuating circumstances in this case and the death sentence awarded to Balwant Singh appellant by the Sessions Judge is confirmed...." As we have said above, even after noticing the provisions of Section 354(3) of the new Criminal Procedure Code the High Court committed an error in relying upon the two decisions of this Court in which the trials were held under the old Code. It wrongly relied upon the principle of extenuating circumstances a principle which was applicable after the amendment of the old Code from January 1, 1956 until the Coming into force of the new Code from April 1, 1974. In our judgment there is no special reason nor any has been recorded by the High Court for confirming the death sentence in this case. We accordingly allow the appeal on the question of sentence and commute the death sentence imposed upon the appellant to one for imprisonment for life.

Dinanath Singh and Ors. Vs. State of Bihar

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.D. Koshal and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ.

JUDGMENT

S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, J.

1. This appeal under Section 2(a) of the Supreme Court (Enlargement of Criminal Appellate Jurisdiction) Act is directed against a judgment of the Patna High Court convicting all the five appellants under Section 302/34 and sentencing them to imprisonment for life. The Sessions Judge acquitted all the accused of the charges framed against them. The State filed an appeal before the High Court in which the High Court reversed the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge and convicted the appellants as indicated above. To have been taken through the judgment of the High Court, Sessions Judge and also the relevant evidence in the case We are clearly of the opinion after perusing the evidence that this was not a fit case in which the High Court ought to have interfered with the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge. It is now well settled by long course of decisions of this Court that where the view taken by the trial Court in acquitting the accused is reasonably possible, even if the High Court were to take a different view on the evidence, that is no ground for reversing the order of acquittal. In the instant case after going through the evidence we feel that the view taken by the Sessions Judge was not only a reasonably possible view but the only reasonable view which could be taken on the evidence produced by the prosecution.

2. According to the prosecution on 12th December, 1968 at about 11.30 A.M. the accused persons had a scuffle with the deceased in Lallam Hotel and at the exhortation of accused 3 and 4, Bhagwati Pandey gave a knife injury to the deceased which resulted in his death. Immediately thereafter some of the accused were found running away but could not be apprehended. The solitary eye witness, who has been examined by the prosecution to prove the actual assault, is PW 10 Bhagwan Singh. To begin with, the evidence of this witness suffers from several infirmities In the first place the witness was examined by the police as late on the 25th December, 1955 i.e. to say 13 days after the occurrence. Far from giving any reasonable explanation for the delay in his examination by the police, the witness admits that although the Investigating Officers or other police constables were scorching for him, he kept himself concealed due to fear for 12 days. The witness does cot at all state in his evidence that either at the time of occurrence of sometime later any of the accused gave any threat to the witness not to depose against them. Thus the theory of fear appears to be clearly an after- thought. Other witnesses were declared hostile as they appeared to have been gained over as alleged by the prosecution, as a result of which the sheet anchor of the prosecution was the solitary testimony of PW 10.

3. Mr. Shambhu Prasad Singh, Sr. Advocate for the respondent submitted that the evidence of PW 10 though belated stands corroborated by the evidence of PW 3, PW 4 and PW 13. PW 3 undoubtedly says that is found some persons running away and same of Raj Nath and Bhagwati Pandey was taken. He, however, admits in Para 10 of his evidence that Shri Bhagwan Singh PW 10 had told him at Mahadeva Mor i.e. the place of occurrence, that the scuffle took place between Rajnath and Vidyadhar Chaubey and Rajnath caught Vidyadhar Chaubey from the front. Thereafter Bhagwati Pandey took out a CHHURA from his waist and stabbed the deceased. Bhagwan Singh PW 10 however has made no such statement in his evidence. He never claims to have made any such statement to PW 3. Thus PW 3 seems to be more loyal than the King is attributing a statement to Bhagwan Singh which in fact were never made to him, and thus if PW 10 is to be believed then evidence of PW 3 is hearsay and therefore, inadmissible. Similarly PW 4 in his evidence, has admitted that he did not know the deceased but he knew Rabindra Bihari Pandey. He merely says that Shri Bhagwan Singh told him at the place of occurrence that Bhagwati Pandey stabbed Vidyadhar Chaubey and Rajnath was holding the deceased while Bhagwati Pandey stabbed him. This also is a false statement because PW 10 does not say that he mentioned this fact to PW 4. On the other hand it appears from the evidence of PW 10 that in spite of the fact that a number of persons assembled at the spot, including an Advocate, the supposed eye witness PW 10 did not disclose the names of the assailants of the deceased to any one of them. In view of this infirmity the trial Court was fully justified in not placing reliance on the solitary eye witness who concealed himself for 12 days after the occurrence. Reliance was placed by Mr. Singh on the fact that there was some defect in investigation as a result of which PW 10 could not have been examined earlier. Even if there was any defect or jacuna in the investigation, the prosecution cannot get any benefit of the same. Moreover PW 10 himself clearly admits that there was no lapse on the part of the police at all because the police were trying to search him but he concealed himself and did not allow himself to be examined by the police. Taking the totality of the circumstances we are not impressed with the evidence of PW 10. If the evidence of PW 10, the solitary eye witness is excluded from consideration then the evidence of other witnesses showing that some of the accused were running away, by itself does not prove participation of the accused in the murderous assault on the deceased. The High Court seems to have reappraised the evidence and accepted the evidence of PW 10 but has not tried to consider the effect of the infirmities indicated above.

4. For these reasons, therefore, we are satisfied that the learned Sessions Judge in acquitting the appellants took a very reasonable view and the High Court was in error in disturbing the judgment of the trial Court. The appeal is accordingly allowed the conviction and sentence passed on the appellants are set aside and they are acquitted of the charges framed against them. The appellants shall now be discharged from their bail bonds.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

N.L. Untwalia and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ.

JUDGMENT

S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, J.

1. This appeal by special leave involves an important question as to the interpretation scope, ambit and connotation word "interlocutory order" as appearing in Sub- section (2) of Section 397 of the CrPC 1973. For the purpose of brevity, we shall refer to the CrPC, 1898 as "the 1898 Code", to the CrPC, 1898 as amended in 1955 as "the 1955 Amendment" and to, the CrPC, 1973 as "the 1973 Code". The appeal arises in the following circumstances.

2. An incident took place in village Amin on April 23, 1976 in the course of which three persons died and, F. I. R. No. 139 dated April 23, 1976 was filed at police station Butana, District Kamal at about 5- 30 P. M. The F. I. R. mentioned a number of accused persons including the appellants as having participated in the occurrence which resulted in the death of the deceased. The police, after holding investigations, submitted a charge- sheet against the other accused persons except the appellants against whom the police opined that no case at all was made out as no weapon was recovered nor was there any clear evidence about the participation of the appellants. The police thus submitted its final report under Section 173 of the 1973 Code in so far as the appellants were concerned. The report was placed before Mr. B.K. Gupta the Judicial Magistrate 1st Class, Karnal, who after perusing the same set the appellants at liberty after having accepted the report. It appears that the complainant filed a revision petition, before the Additional Sessions Judge, karnal against the order of the Judicial Magistrate, 1st Class, Karnal releasing the appellants, but the same was dismissed on July 3, 1976. The informant filed a regular complaint before the Judicial Magistrate, 1st Class, on July 1, 1976 against all the 11 accused including the appellants. The learned Magistrate, after having examined the complainant and going through the record, dismissed the complaint as he was satisfied that no case was made out against the appellants. Thereafter the complainant took up the matter in revision before the Sessions Judge, Karnal, who this time accepted the revision petition and remanded the case to the Judicial Magistrate for further enquiry. On November 15, 1976, the learned Judicial Magistrate, on receiving the order of the Sessions Judge, issued summons to the appellants straightway. The appellants then moved the High Court under Section 482 and Section 397 of the 1973 Code for quashing the order of the Judicial Magistrate mainly on the ground that the Magistrate had issued the summons in a mechanical manner without applying his judicial mind to the facts of the case. The High Court dismissed the petition in limine and refused to entertain it on the ground that as the order of the Judicial Magistrate dated November 15, 1976 summoning the appellants was an interlocutory order, a revision to the High Court was barred by virtue of Sub- section (2) of Section 397 of the 1973 Code. The learned Judge further held that as the revision was barred, the Court could not take up the case under Section 482 in order to quash the very order of the Judicial Magistrate under Section 397(1) of the 1973 Code otherwise, the very object of Section 397(2) would be defeated.

3. While we fully agree with the view taken by the learned Judge that where a revision to the High Court against the order of the Subordinate Judge is expressly barred under Sub- section (2) of Section 397 of the 1973 Code the inherent powers contained in Section 482 would not be available to defeat the bar contained in Section 397(2). Section 482 of the 1973 Code contains the inherent powers of the Court and does not confer any new powers but preserves the powers which the High Court already possessed. A harmonious construction of Sections 397 and 482 would lead to the irresistible conclusion that where a particular order is expressly barred under Section 397(2) and cannot be the subject of revision by the High Court, then to such a case the provisions of Section 482 would not apply. It is well settled that the inherent powers of the Court can ordinarily be exercised when there is no express provision on the subject- matter. Where there is an express, provision, barring a particular remedy, the Court cannot (sic) to the exercise of inherent powers.

4. So far as the second plank of the view of the learned Judge that the order of the Judicial Magistrate in the instant case was an interlocutory order is concerned, it is a matter which merits serious consideration. A history of the criminal legislation in India would manifestly reveal that so far the CrPC is concerned both in the 1898 Code and 1955 amendment the widest possible powers of revision had been given to the High Court under Sections 435 and 439 of those Codes. The High Court could examine the propriety of any order - - whether final or interlocutory- - passed by any Subordinate Court in a criminal matter. No limitation and restriction on the powers of the High Court were placed. But this Court as also the various High Courts in India, by a long course of decisions, confined the exercise of revisional powers only to cases where the impugned order suffered from any error of law or any legal infirmity causing injustice or prejudice to the accused or was manifestly foolish or perverse. These restrictions were placed by the case law, merely as a rule of prudence rather than a rule of law and in suitable cases the High Courts had the undoubted power to interfere with the impugned order even on facts. Sections 435 and 439 being identical in the 1898 Code and 1955 insofar as they are relevant run thus:

435 (1) The High Court or any Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, or any Sub- divisional Magistrate empowered by the State Govt. in this behalf, may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior criminal Court situate within the local limits of its or his jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court....

439. (1) In the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, the High Court may, in its discretion, exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of appeal by Sections 423, 426, 427 and 428 or on a Court by Section 338, and may enhance, the sentence; and, when the Judges composing the Court of revision are equally divided in opinion, the case shall be disposed of in manner provided by Section 429.

(2) No order under this section shall be made to the prejudice of the accused unless he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by pleader in his own defence." In fact the only rider that was put under Section 439 was that where the Court enhanced the sentence the accused had to be given an opportunity of being heard.

5. The concept of an interlocutory order qua the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, therefore, was completely foreign to the earlier Code. Subsequently it appeals that there had been large number of arrears and the High Courts were flooded with revisions of all kinds against interim or interlocutory orders which led to enormous delay in the disposal of cases and exploitation of the poor accused by the affluent prosecutors. Sometimes interlocutory orders caused harassment to the accused by unnecessarily protracting the trials. It was in the background of these facts that the Law Commission dwelt on this aspect of the matter and in the 14th and 41st reports submitted by the commission which formed the basis of the 1973 Code the said commission suggested revolutionary changes to be made in the powers of the High Courts. The recommendations of the commission were examined carefully by the Government, keeping in view, the following basic considerations:

(i) an accused person should get a fair trial in accordance with the accepted principles of natural justice;

(ii) every effort should be made to avoid delay in investigation and trial which is harmful not only to the individuals involved but also to society; and

(iii) the procedure should not be complicated and should, to the utmost extent possible, ensure fair deal to the poorer sections of the community.

This is clearly mentioned in the Statement of Objects and Reasons accompanying the 1973 Code. Clause (d) of Paragraph 5 of the Statement of Objects and Reasons runs thus:

the powers of revision against interlocutory orders are being taken away, as it has been found to be one of the main contributing factors in the delay of disposal of criminal cases.

Similarly, replying to the debate in the Lok Sabha on Sub- clause (2) of Clause 397, Shri Ram Niwas Mirdha, the Minister concerned, observed as follows:

It was stated before the Select Committee that a large number of appeals against interlocutory orders are filed with the result that the appeals got delayed considerably. Some of the more notorious cases concern big business persons. So, this new provision was also welcomed by most of the witnesses as well as the Select Committee.... This was a well- thought out measure so we do not want to delete it.

Thus it would appear that Section 397(2) was incorporated in the 1973 Code with the avowed purpose of cutting out delays and ensuring that the accused persons got a fair trial without much delay and the procedure was not made complicated. Thus the paramount object in inserting this new provision of Sub- section (2) of Section 397 was to safeguard the interest of the accused.

6. Let us now proceed to interpret the provisions of Section 397 against the historical background of these facts. Sub- section (2) of Section 397 of the 1973 Code may be extracted thus:

The powers of revision conferred by Sub- section (1) shall not be exercised in relation to any interlocutory order passed in any appeal, inquiry, trial or other proceeding.

The main question which falls for determination in this appeal is as to what is the connotation of the term "interlocutory order" as appearing in Sub- section (2) of Section 397 which bars any revision of such an order by the High Court. The term "interlocutory order" is a term of well-known legal significance and does not present any serious difficulty. It has been used in various statutes including the CPC, Letters Patent of the High Courts and other like statutes. In Webster's New World Dictionary "interlocutory" has been defined as an order other than final decision. Decided cases have laid down that interlocutory orders to be appealable must be those which decide the rights and liabilities of the parties concerning a particular aspect. It seems to us that the term "interlocutory order" in Section 397(2) of the 1973 Code has been used in a restricted sense and not in any broad or artistic sense. It merely denotes orders of a purely interim or temporary nature which do not decide or touch the important rights or the liabilities of the parties. Any order which substantially affects the rights of the accused, or decides certain rights of the parties cannot be said to be an interlocutory order so as to bar a revision to the High Court against that order, because that would be against the very object which formed the basis for insertion of this particular provision in Section 397 of the 1973 Code.

Thus, for instance, orders summoning witnesses adjourning cases, passing orders for bail, calling for reports and such other steps in aid of the pending proceeding, may no doubt amount to interlocutory orders against which no revision would lie under Section 397(2) of the 1973 Code.

But orders which are matters of moment and which affect or adjudicate the rights of the accused or a particular aspect of the trial cannot be said to be interlocutory order so as to be outside the purview of the re- visional jurisdiction of the High Court.

7. In Central Bank of India v. Gokal Chand MANU/SC/0053/1966 : [1967]1SCR310 this Court while describing the incidents of an interlocutory order, observed as follows:

In the context of Section 38(1), the words "every order of the Controller made under this Act", though very wide, do not include interlocutory orders, which are merely procedural and do not affect the rights or liabilities of the parties. In a pending proceeding, the Controller, may pass many interlocutory orders under Sections 36 and 37, such as orders regarding the summoning of witnesses, discovery, production and inspection of documents, issue of a commission for examination of witnesses, inspection of premises, fixing a date of hearing and the admissibility of a document or the relevancy of a question. All these interlocutory orders are steps taken towards the final adjudication and for assisting the parties in the prosecution of their case in the pending proceeding; they regulate the procedure only and do not affect any right or liability of the parties." The aforesaid decision clearly illustrates the nature and incidents of an interlocutory order and the incidents given by this Court constitute sufficient guidelines to interpret the connotation of the word "interlocutory order" as appearing in Sub- section (2) of Section 397 of the 1973 Code.

8. Similarly in a later case in Mohan Lal Magan Lal Thacker v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0071/1967 : 1968CriLJ876 this Court pointed out that the finality of an order could not be judged by correlating that order with the controversy in the complaint. The fact that the controversy still remained alive was irrelevant. In that case this Court held that even though it was an interlocutory order, the order was a final order.

9. Similarly in Baldevdas v. Filmistan Distributors (India) Pvt. Ltd. MANU/SC/0489/1969 : [1970]1SCR435 while interpreting the import of the words "case decided" appearing in Section 115 of the CPC, this Court observed as follows:

A case may be said to be decided, if the Court adjudicates for the purposes of the suit some right or obligation of the parties in controversy." Apart from this it would appear that under the various provisions of the Letters Patent of the High Courts in India, an appeal lies to a Division Bench from an order passed by a single Judge and some High Courts have held that even though the order may appear to be an interlocutory one where it does decide one of the aspect of the rights of the parties it is, appealable. For instance, an order of a single Judge granting a temporary injunction was held by a Full Bench of Allahabad High Court in Standard Class Beads Factory v. Shri Dhar MANU/UP/0198/1960 : AIR1960All692 as not being an interlocutory order having decided some rights of the parties and was, therefore, appealable. To the same effect are the decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Union of India v. Khetra Mohan Banerjee MANU/WB/0050/1960 : AIR1960Cal190 of the Lahore High Court in Gokal Chand v. Sanwal Das AIR 1920 Lah 326 of the Delhi High Court in Begum Aftab Zamani v. Shri Lal Chand Khanna

AIR 1969 Del 85 and of the Jammu & Kashmir High Court in Har Parshad Wali v. Naranjan Nath Matoo AIR 1959 J & K 139.

10. Applying the aforesaid tests, let us now see whether the order impugned in the instant case can be said to be an interlocutory order as held by the High Court. In the first place, so far as the appellants are concerned, the police had submitted its final report against them and they were released by the Judicial Magistrate. A revision against that order to the Additional Sessions Judge preferred by the complainant had failed. Thus the appellants, by virtue of the order of the Judicial Magistrate as affirmed by the Additional Sessions Judge acquired a valuable right of not being put on trial unless a proper order was made against them. Then came the complaint by respondent No. 2 before the Judicial Magistrate which was also dismissed on merits. The Sessions Judge in revision however, set aside the order dismissing the complaint and ordered further inquiry. The Magistrate on receiving the order of the Sessions Judge summoned the appellants straightway which meant that the appellants were to be put on trial. So long as the Judicial Magistrate had not passed this order, no proceedings were started against the appellants, nor were any such proceedings pending against them. It was only with the passing of the impugned order that the proceedings started and the question of the appellants being put up for trial arose for the first time. This was undoubtedly a valuable right which the appellants possessed and which was being denied to them by the impugned order. It cannot, therefore, be said that the appellants were not at all prejudiced, or that any right of their's was not involved by the impugned order. It is difficult to hold that the impugned order summoning the appellants straightway was merely an interlocutory order which could not be revised by the High Court under Sub- sections (1) and (2) of Section 397 of the 1973 Code. The order of the Judicial Magistrate summoning the appellants in the circumstances of the present case, particularly having regard to what had preceded was undoubtedly a matter of moment, and a valuable right of the appellants had been taken away by the Magistrate in passing an order prima facie in sheer mechanical fashion without applying his mind. We are, therefore satisfied that the order impugned was one which was a matter of moment and which did involve a decision regarding the rights of the appellants. If the appellants were not summoned, then they could not have faced the trial at all, but by compelling the appellants to face a trial without proper application of mind cannot be held to be an interlocutory matter but one which decided a serious question as to the rights of the appellants to be put on trial.

11. For these reasons, the order of the Judicial Magistrate, 1st Class, Karnal dated November 15, 1976 cannot be said to be an interlocutory order and does not fall within the mischief of Sub-section (2) of Section 397 of the 1973 Code and is not covered by the same. That being the position, a revision against this order was fully competent under Section 397(1) or under Section 482 of the 1973 Code, because the scope of both these sections in a matter of this kind is more ear less the same.

12. As we propose to remand this case to the High Court to decide the revision on merits, we refrain from making any observation regarding the merits of the case. The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the order of the High Court dated February 14, 1977 refusing to entertain the revision petition of the appellants is set aside. The High Court is directed to admit the revision petition filed by the appellants and to decide it on merits in accordance with the law.

JUDGMENT

M. Patanjali Sastri, J.

1. This is an appeal by special leave from an order of the High Court of Judicature at Patna setting aside an order of acquittal of the appellants by the Sessions Judge, Purnea, and directing their retrial.

2. The appellants were prosecuted for alleged offences under sections 147, 148, 323, 324, 326, 302 and 302/149 of the Indian Penal Code at the instance of one Polai Lal Biswas who lodged a complaint against them before the police. The prosecution case was that, while the complainant was harvesting the paddy crop on his field at about 10 a.m. on 29th November, 1949, a mob of about fifty persons came on to the field armed with ballams, lathis and other weapons and that the first appellant Logendranath Jha, who was leading the mob, demanded a settlement of all outstanding disputes with the complainant and said he would not allow the paddy to be removed unless the disputes were settled. An altercation followed as a result of which Logendra ordered an assault by his men. Then Logendra and one of his men, Harihar, gave ballam blows to one of the abourers, Kangali, who fell down and died on the spot. Information was given to the police who investigated the case and submitted the charge- sheet. The committing Magistrate found that a prima facie case was made out and committed the appellants to the Court of Sessions for trial.

3. The appellants pleaded not guilty alleging inter alia, that Mohender and Debender, the brothers of Logendra (appellants 2 and 3) were not present in the village of Dandkhora with which they had no concern, as all the lands in that village had been allotted to Logendra at a previous partition, that Logendra himself was not in the village at the time of the occurrence but arrived soon after and was dragged to the place at the instance of his enemies in the village and was placed under arrest by the Assistant Sub- Inspector of Police who had arrived there previously. It was also alleged that there were two factions in the village, one of which was led by one Harimohan, a relation of the complainant, and the other by Logendra and there had been numerous revenue and criminal proceedings and long- standing enmity between the families of these leaders as a result of which this false case was foisted upon the appellants.

4. The learned Sessions Judge examined the evidence in great detail and found that the existence of factions as alleged by the appellants was true. He found, however, that the appellants' plea of alibi was not satisfactorily made out, "but the truth of the prosecution", he proceeded to observe,

"cannot be judged by the falsehood of the defence nor can the prosecution derive its strength from the weakness of the defence. Prosecution must stand on its own legs and must prove the story told by it at the very first stage. The manner of occurrence alleged by the prosecution must be established beyond doubt before the accused persons can be convicted".

Approaching the case in this manner and seeing that the basis of the prosecution case was that Polai had batai settlement of the disputed land and had raised the paddy crop which he was harvesting when the occurrence took place, the learned Sessions Judge examined the evidence of the prosecution witnesses who belonged to the opposite faction critically and found that the story of the prosecution was not acceptable. Polai, who was alleged to have taken the land on batai settlement from his own maternal grandmother Parasmani who brought him up from his childhood, was only 19 years old and unmarried and was still living with his grandmother. He did not claim to be a bataidar of any other person. "In these circumstances", said the learned Judge,

"it does not appear to me to be probable that Polai would have been allowed to maintain himself by running adhi cultivation of his mamu's land in the lifetime of his nani who has brought him up from his infancy like her own child. Nor does it appeal to me that the unmarried boy Polai would have undertaken upon himself the task of running batai cultivation of the lands of his mamu where he has been living since his childhood without any trouble, more particularly in view of the heavy expenses of cultivation brought out by the evidence of Tirthanand (P.W. 14)".

He, therefore, disbelieved the whole story that Polai had taken the lands of his grandmother or his uncles as bataidar for cultivation and that he was engaged in harvesting the paddy crop on the lands at the time of the occurrence. This false story, in his opinion, "vitally affected the prosecution case regarding the alleged manner of the occurrence". He also found a number of discrepancies and contradictions in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, which, in his view, tended to show that the prosecution was guilty of concealment of the real facts. "In view of such concealment of real facts," the learned Judge concluded,

"it does not appear to me to be possible to apportion liability and to decide which of the two parties commenced the fight and which acted in self- defence. Such being the position, it is not possible at all to hold either party responsible for what took place. In such a view of the matter coupled with the fact that the manner of occurrence alleged by the prosecution has not been established to be true beyond doubt, I think that the accused persons cannot be safely convicted of any of the offences for which they have been charged."

The learned Judge accordingly acquitted the appellants of all the charges framed against them.

5. Against that order the complainant Polai preferred a revision petition to the High Court under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Judge who heard the petition reviewed the evidence at some length and came to the conclusion that the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge could not be allowed to stand as the acquittal of the appellants was "perverse". In his opinion, "the entire judgment displays a lack of true perspective in a case of this kind. The Sessions Judge had completely misdirected himself in looking to the minor discrepancies in the case and ignoring the essential matters so far as the case is concerned," and there was no justifiable ground for rejecting the prosecution evidence regarding the cultivation and harvesting by Polai. And he concluded with the warning:

"I would, however, make it perfectly clear that when the case is re- tried, which I am now going to order, the Judge proceeding with the trial will not be in the least influenced by any expression of opinion which I may have given in this judgment."

6. On behalf of the appellants Mr. Sinha raised two contentions. In the first place, he submitted that having regard to section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code which provides for an appeal to the High Court from an order of acquittal only at the instance of the Government, a revision petition under section 439 at the instance of a private party was incompetent, and secondly, that sub- section (4) of section 439 clearly showed that the High Court exceeded its powers of revisions in the present case in upsetting the findings of fact of the trial Judge. We think it is unnecessary to express any opinion on the first contention of Mr. Sinha especially as the respondent is unrepresented, as we are of opinion that his second and alternative contention must prevail.

7. It will be seen from the judgment summarised above that the learned Judge in the High Court re- appraised the evidence in the case and disagreed with the Sessions Judge's findings of fact on the ground that they were perverse and displayed a lack of true perspective. He went further and, by way of "expressing in very clear terms as to how perverse the judgment of the court below is", he indicated that the discrepancies in the prosecution evidence and the circumstances of the case which led the Sessions Judge to discredit the prosecution story afforded no justifiable ground for the conclusion that the prosecution failed to establish their case. We are of opinion that the learned Judge in the High Court did not properly appreciate the scope of inquiry in revision against an order of acquittal. Though sub- section (1) of section 439 authorises the High Court to exercise, in its discretion, any of the powers conferred on a court of appeal by section 423, sub-section (4) specifically excludes the power to "convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction". This does not mean that in dealing with a revision petition by a private party against an order of acquittal, the High Court could in the absence of any error on a point of law re-appraise the evidence and reverse the findings of facts on which the acquittal was based, provided only it stopped short of finding the accused guilty and passing sentence on him.

By merely characterising the judgment of the trial Court as "perverse" and "lacking in perspective", the High Court cannot reverse pure findings of fact based on the trial Court's appreciation of the evidence in the case. That is what the learned Judge in the court below has done, but could not, in our opinion, properly do on an application in revision filed by a private party against acquittal. No doubt, the learned Judge formally complied with sub- section (4) by directing only a re- trial of the appellants without convicting them, and warned that the courts retrying the case should not be influenced by any expression of opinion contained in his judgment. But there can be little doubt that he loaded the dice against the appellants, and it might prove difficult for any subordinate judicial officer dealing with the case to put aside altogether the strong views expressed in the judgment as to the credibility of the prosecution witnesses and the circumstances of the case in general.

8. We are of opinion that the learned Judge in the High Court exceeded his powers of revision in dealing with the case in the manner he did, and we set aside his order for retrial of the appellants and restore the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 381 of 1975

Decided On: 02.02.1976

Suraj Bhan Vs. Om Prakash and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

Raja Jaswant Singh, P.K. Goswami and P.N. Shinghal, JJ.

JUDGMENT

P.K. Goswami, J.

1. On April, 19, 1975, the respondent Om Parkash (hereinafter to be described as the accused) inflicted as many as five stab wounds on the appellant Suraj Bhan. The injuries were very severe as will be found from the description given below :

1. Incised wounds 5 cm x 2 cm oblique spindle shape on the left side of the front of abdomen, 8 cm below the xiphisternum and 6 cm to the left of mid line. Depth not probed edges were fresh.

2. Incised wound 21/2 cm x 1 cm oblique, 6 cm on the left and 2 cm above injury No. 1, spindle shaped. Edges were fresh and depth was not probed.

3. Incised wound 21/2 cm x 1 cm horizontal, spindle shaped 6 cm above the left anterior superior iliac spine. Depth was not probed and edges were fresh.

4. Incised wound 1 cm x 1/4 cm x 2 mm deep, horizontal 5 cm inner to end at the level of left anterior superior iliac spin edges were fresh.

5. Penetrating wound 5 cm x 21/2 cm x cavity deep, horizontal on the front of abdomen 2 cm to the right of mid line 10 cm below the level of xiphisternum, edges were clean cut and fresh the coils of small intestine protruding through the wound.

The appellant had also to under go an operation. There is no doubt that prompt and proper medical attention alone saved the appellant from death.

2. The accused was convicted under Section 307 IPC by the trial court by its judgment dated February 26, 1974 and sentenced to 10 years rigorous imprisonment & also to a fine of Rs. 200/- in default rigorous imprisonment for one year. Although the accused gave his age as 19 years, according to the trial court he appeared to be aged about 23 years.

3. The accused appealed to the High Court against his conviction and sentence. The appeal was numbered as Criminal Appeal No. 442 of 1974, The injured Suraj Bhan also filed a Criminal Revision Application being numbered as 606 of 1974 for enhancement of the sentence passed on the accused. The appeal was decided by a learned single judge of the High Court of Punjab and Haryana on January 10, 1975. It appears from the judgment of the High Court in that appeal that conviction of the accused was not challenged. The only point that was argued was that the accused was entitled to set off the period of his detention as an under trial prisoner against the period of imprisonment imposed upon him under Section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code 1973 (Act No. 2 of 1974) which came into force from April 1, 1974 It appears also from the judgment that the State did not oppose the aforesaid submission on behalf of the accused. The learned single Judge, therefore, passed the order in the following terms :

There is force in this submission of the learned Counsel which is not opposed by the State counsel. I am of the view that the ends of justice will be met if the term of imprisonment of the convict appellant is reduced to that already undergone by him.

Having said so the learned single Judge dismissed the appeal maintaining the conviction and reduced the accused's term of imprisonment to that already undergone by him and also maintained and the sentence of fine. Including the pre- conviction detention the accused served only one year and eight months of the sentence.

4. It appears the State did not choose to prefer any appeal against the grossly inadequate sentence passed by the High Court. On the other hand the injured Suraj Bhan made an application to the High Court for a certificate of fitness for leave to appeal to this Court under Article 134(1)(c) of the Constitution without success and thereafter obtained special leave from this Court after notice to the respondents including the State to show cause why special leave to appeal should not be granted.

5. We have described the above facts in some detail as we fail to appreciate why the State in this case should have ordinarily ignored to take notice of such a grossly lenient sentence.

6. The order of the High Court was clearly unsustainable even in terms of Section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, as the only set off which was urged for under the section and which was admissible, was a period of about nine months which the accused had served as an under trial prisoner prior to the conviction.

7. It is also clear from Section 428, Criminal Procedure Code itself even though the conviction was prior to the enforcement of the CrPC, benefit of Section 428 would be available to such a conviction. Indeed Section 428 does not contemplate any challenge to a conviction or a sentence. It confers a benefit on a conviction reducing his liability to undergo imprisonment out of the sentence imposed for the period which he had already served as an under trial prisoner. The procedure to invoke Section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, could be a miscellaneous application by the accused to the court at any time while the sentence runs for passing an appropriate order for reducing the term of imprisonment which is the mandate of the section.

8. In the appeal before the High Court there was no scope for the High Court to reduce the sentence only to the period already undergone under Section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, in view of the only point argued before it.

9. Since in an attempt to murder hurt was caused, the maximum punishment under the second part of Section 307, IPC would be imprisonment for life. The injured was not satisfied with the maximum punishment of ten years contained in the first part of the section and moved the High Court in revision for enhancement of the sentence. The revision was separately dismissed by the High Court for the "reasons recorded in Criminal Appeal No. 442 of 1974" and it is against this order of the High Court in revision that special leave was obtained by the appellant.

10. In the absence of an appeal against the judgment of the High Court in Criminal Appeal No. 442 of 1974, either by the State or by the injured, that judgment has become final which means that the accused's sentence remains to be for a period of one year and eight months and a fine of Rs. 200/- , in default rigorous imprisonment for one year.

11. The scope of the criminal revision before the High Court was whether the sentence of ten years should be further enhanced but that sentence itself disappeared by virtue of the judgment of the High Court in the criminal appeal. The criminal revision therefore, became infructuous and we can do nothing about it while the judgment of the High Court remains operative. Unfortunately that judgment in the criminal appeal is not before us in this Court. Although, therefore, we cannot approve of such a grossly lenient sentence in the present case, we have no other alternative than to dismiss the present appeal. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Writ Petition (Criminal) No. 96 of 1989

Ashok Kumar Vs. Union of India (UOI) and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

A.M. Ahmadi, P.B. Sawant and S.C. Agrawal, JJ.

ORDER

A.M. Ahmadi, J.

1. Liberty is the life line of every human being. Life without liberty is 'lasting' but not 'living'. Liberty is, therefore, considered one of the most precious and cherished possessions of a human being. Any attempt to take liberties with the liberty of a human being is visited with resistance. Since no human being can tolerate fetters on his personal liberty it is not surprising that the petitioner Ashok Kumar alias Golu continues to struggle for his liberty, premature release, not fully content with the enunciation of the law in this behalf by this Court in Maru Ram v. Union of India MANU/SC/0159/1980 : 1980CriLJ1440 .

2. The questions of law which are raised in this petition brought under Article 32 of the Constitution arise upon facts of which we give an abridged statement. On the basis of a FIR lodged on October 21, 1977, the petitioner was arrested on the next day and he along with others was chargesheeted for the murder of one Prem Nagpal. The petitioner was tried and convicted for murder on December 20, 1978 in Sessions Case No. 32 of 1978 by the learned Sessions Judge, Ganganagar, and was ordered to suffer imprisonment for life. His appeal, Criminal Appeal No. 40 of 1979, was dismissed by the High Court of Rajasthan. Since then he is serving time. It appears that he filed a Habeas Corpus Writ Petition No. 2963 of 1987 in the High Court of Rajasthan at Jodhpur for premature release on the plea that he was entitled to be considered for such release under the relevant rules of Rajasthan Prisons (Shortening of Sentences) Rules, 1958, (hereinafter alluded to as 'the 1958 Rules') notwithstanding the insertion of Section 433A in the CrPC, 1973 (hereinafter called 'the Code') with effect from December 18, 1978, just two days before his conviction. His grievance was that he was being denied the benefit of early release under the 1958 Rules under the garb of the newly added Section 433A, on the ground that it places a statutory embargo against the release of such a convict 'unless he has served atleast 14 years of imprisonment'. He contended that the said provision could not curtail the constitutional power vested in the Governor by virtue of Article 161 of the Constitution which had to be exercised on the advice of the Council of Ministers which advice could be based on a variety of considerations including the provisions of the 1958 Rules. The writ petition was, however, dismissed by the High Court on October 31, 1988, on the ground that it was premature inasmuch as the petitioner's two representations, one to the Governor and another to the State Home Minister, were pending consideration. The High Court directed that they should be disposed of within one month. In this view of the matter the High Court did not deem it necessary to consider the various questions of law raised in the petition on merits. After the rejection of his writ petition by the High Court, the petitioner through his counsel addressed a letter dated November 28, 1988 to the Governor inviting his attention to the earlier representation dated August 29, 1988 and requesting him to take a decision thereon within a month as observed by the High Court. Failing to secure his early release notwithstanding the above efforts, the petitioner has invoked the extraordinary jurisdiction of this Court under Article 32 of the Constitution.

3. The petitioner's case in a nutshell is that under the provisions of the 1958 Rules, a 'lifer' who has served an actual sentence of about 9 years and 3 months is entitled to be considered for premature release if the total sentence including remissions works out to 14 years and he is reported to be of good behaviour. However, the petitioner contends, his case for premature release is not considered by the concerned authorities in view of the newly added Section 433A of the Code on the interpretation that by virtue of the said provision the case of a 'lifer' cannot be considered for early release unless he has completed 14 years of actual incarceration, the provisions of Sections 432 and 433 of the Code as well as the 1958 Rules notwithstanding. According to him, even if the provisions of Sections 432 and 433 of the Code do not come into play unless a convict sentenced to life imprisonment has completed actual incarceration for 14 years as required by Section 433A, the authorities have failed to realise that Section 433A cannot override the constitutional power conferred by Articles 72 and 161 of the Constitutional on the President and the Governor, respectively, and the State Government i.e., the Council of Ministers, could advise the Governor to exercise power under Article 161 treating the 1958 Rules as guidelines. Since the petitioner had already moved the Governor under Article 161 of the Constitution it was incumbent on the State Government to consider his request for early release, notwithstanding Section 433A, and failure to do so entitled the petitioner to immediate release as his continued detention was, wholly illegal and invalid. In support of this contention the petitioner has placed reliance on the ratio of Maru Ram's decision.

4. The petitioner brands Section 433A of the Code to be a 'legislative fraud' inasmuch as the said provision was got approved by the Parliament on the assurance that the said provision is complementary to the various amendments proposed in the Indian Penal Code. In the alternative it is contended that in any case this Court should by a process of interpretation limit the scope of Section 433A of the Code to those cases only to which it would have been limited had the legislation proposing amendments in the Indian Penal Code gone through. In any case after the decision of this Court in Maru Ram's case, the efficacy of Section 433A is considerably reduced and the petitioner is entitled to early release by virtue of the power contained in Article 161 read with the 1958 Rules even if guidelines are not formulated notwithstanding the subsequent decision of this Court in Kehar Singh v. Union of India MANU/SC/0240/1988 : 1989CriLJ941 . Counsel submitted that after the decision of this Court in Bhagirath v. Delhi Administration MANU/SC/0062/1985 : 1985CriLJ1179 where- under this Court extended the benefit of Section 428 of the Code even to life convicts, the ratio in Gopal Godse v. State of Maharashtra

MANU/SC/0156/1961 : 1961CriLJ736a had undergone a change. On this broad approach, counsel for the petitioner, formulated questions of law which may be stated as under:

1. Whether the insertion of Section 433A in the Code was a legislative fraud inasmuch as the connected legislation, namely, the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill XLII of 1972 did not become law although passed by the Rajya Sabha as the I.P.C. (Amendment) Act, 1978, on November 23, 1978?

2. Whether on the ratio of Maru Ram's decision, in the absence of any guidelines formulated by the State under Article 72 or 161 of the Constitution, Section 433A of the Code would not apply to life convicts and the 1958 Rules will prevail for the purpose of exercise of power under Article 72 or 161 of the Constitution?

Inter- connected with this question, the following questions were raised:

a) Whether Maru Ram's decision is in conflict with Kehar Singh's Judgment on the question of necessity or otherwise of guidelines for the exercise of power under Article 72 and 161 of the Constitution?

b) Whether the use of two expressions "remission" and "remit" in Articles 72 and 161 convey two different meanings and if yes, whether the content of power in the two expressions is different?

c) Whether the persons sentenced to death by Courts, whose death sentence has been commuted to life imprisonment by executive clemency, form a distinct and separate class for the purpose of application of Section 433A of the Code as well as for the purpose of necessity (or not) of guidelines for premature release in exercise of power under Articles 72 and 161, from the persons who at the initial stage itself were sentenced to life imprisonment by court verdict? And whether in the latter case guide lines are mandatory under Article 72 and 161 and a well designed scheme of remission must be formulated if the constitutional guarantee under Articles 14 and 21 is to be preserved?

d) Whether the whole law of remission needs to be reviewed after Bhagirath's case wherein this Court held that imprisonment for life is also an imprisonment for a term and that a life convict is entitled to set off under Section 428 Cr.P.C.?

e) Whether it is permissible in law to grant conditional premature release to a life convict even before completion of 14 years of actual imprisonment notwithstanding Section 433A of the Code?

If yes, whether the grant of such conditional release will be treated as the prisoner actually serving time for the purpose of Section 433A of the Code?

5. First the legislative history. The Law Commission had in its 42nd Report submitted in June, 1971 suggested numerous changes in the Indian Penal Code (I.P.C.). Pursuant thereto an Amendment Bill No. XLII of 1972 was introduced in the Rajya Sabha on December 11, 1972 proposed wide ranging changes in the I.P.C. One change proposed was to bifurcate Section 302, I.P.C. into two parts, the first part providing that except in cases specified in the second part, the punishment for murder will be imprisonment for life whereas for the more heinous crimes enumerated in Clauses (a) to (c), of Sub- section (2) the punishment may be death or imprisonment for life. A motion for reference of the Bill to the Joint Committee of both the Houses was moved in the Rajya Sabha on December 14, 1972 by the then Minister of State in the Ministry of Home Affairs and was adopted on the same day. The Lok Sabha concurred in the motion of the Rajya Sabha on December 21, 1972. The Joint Parliamentary Committee presented its report to the Rajya Sabha on January 29, 1976 recommending changes in several clauses of the Bill. While retaining the amendment proposed in Section 302, I.P.C., it recommended inclusion of one more Clause (d) after Clause (c) in Sub- section (2) thereof and at the same time recommended deletion of Section 303, I.P.C. It also recommended substitution of the existing Section 57, I.P.C., by a totally new section, the proviso whereto has relevance. The proposed proviso was as under:

Provided that where a sentence of imprisonment for life is imposed on conviction of a person for a capital offence, or where a sentence of death imposed on a person has been commuted into one of imprisonment for life, such person shall not be released from prison unless he had served at least fourteen years of imprisonment.

The reason which impelled the Committee to introduce the above proviso was "that sometimes due to grant of remission even murderers sentenced or commuted to life imprisonment were released at the end of 5 to 6 years." The Committee, therefore, felt that such a convict should not be released unless he has served atleast 14 years of imprisonment. It is evident from the scheme of the aforesaid recommendations that the proviso was intended to apply to only those convicts who were convicted for a capital offence (this expression was defined by Clause 15 of the Bill recommending substitution of Section 40, I.P.C., as 'an offence for which death is one of the punishments provided by law') or whose sentence of death was commuted into one of imprisonment for life and not to those who were governed by the first part of the proposed Section 302, I.P.C. It was pointed out by counsel that similar benefit would have accrued to offenders convicted for offences covered under Section 305, 307 or 396 if the proposed Sections 305, 307(b) and 396(b) had come into being. That, contends the petitioner's counsel, would have considerably narrowed down the scope of the proposed proviso to Section 57, I.P.C., and consequently the rigour of the said provision would have fallen on a tiny minority of offenders guilty of a capital offence. Pursuant to the recommendations made by the Committee, two bills, namely, the I.P.C. (Amendment) Bill, 1978 and the CrPC (Amendment) Bill, 1978, came to be introduced, the former was passed with changes by the Rajya Sabha on November 23, 1978 while the latter was introduced in the Lok Sabha on November 28, 1978, and in the Rajya Sabha on December 5, 1978. The proposal to add a proviso to the proposed Section 57, I.P.C. did not find favour as it was thought that the said subject matter appropriately related to Chapter XXXII of the Code and accordingly the said provision was introduced as Section 433A in the Code. While the amendments to the Code became law with effect from December 18, 1978, the I.P.C. amendments, though passed by the Rajya Sabha could not be got through the Lok- Sabha and lapsed. It may here be mentioned that the I.P.C. Bill as approved by the Rajya Sabha contained the proposal to divide Section 302 into two parts, in fact an additional clause was sought to be introduced in the second part thereof and Sections 305, 307 and 396 were also sought to be amended as proposed by the Committee. This in brief is the legislative history.

6. In the backdrop of the said legislative history, counsel for the petitioner argued that a legislative fraud was practised by enacting Section 433A of the Cede and failing to carry out the corresponding changes in Sections 302, 305, 307, 396, etc., assured by the passing of the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act, 1978, by the Rajya Sabha on November 23, 1978. According to him it is evident from the scheme of the twin Amendment Bills that the legislative intent was to apply the rigour of Section 433A of the Code to a small number of heinous crimes which fell within the meaning of the expression capital offence. It was to achieve this objective that Section 302, I.P.C. was proposed to be bifurcated so that a large number of murders would fall within the first part of the proposed provision which prescribed the punishment of life imprisonment only and thus fell beyond the mischief of Section 433A of the Code. To buttress his submission our attention was invited to Annexure II to the petition which is a copy of the letter dated July 10, 1979, written by the Joint- Secretary in the Ministry of Home Affairs to Home Secretaries of all the concerned State Governments explaining the purport of the newly added Section 433A. After explaining that Section 57, I.P.C., had a limited scope, namely, calculating fractions of terms of imprisonment only, he proceeds to state in paragraph 3 of the letter as under:

The restrictions imposed by Section 433A applies only to those life convicts who are convicted for offences for which death is one of the punishments prescribed by law. In the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill, 1978 as passed by the Rajya Sabha and now pending in the Lok Sabha, Section 302 is proposed to be amended so as to provide that the normal punishment for murder shall be imprisonment for life and that only in certain cases of aggravating circumstances will the court have discretion to award death sentences.

Then in paragraph 4 he proceeds to clarify as under:

Even regarding these convicts the restriction imposed by Section 433A is not absolute for, the Constitutional power of the Governor under Article 161 to commute and remit sentences remains unaffected and can be exercised in each case in which the exercise of this power is considered suitable.

In paragraph 6 of the detailed note appended to the said letter, the legal position was explained thus:

It may be pointed out that the restriction introduced by Section 433A does not apply to all life convicts. It applies only to those prisoners who are convicted of a capital offence i.e. an offence for which death is one of the punishments prescribed by law. Once the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill becomes the law, offenders sentenced under proposed Section 302(i) will not be covered by this provision as the offence will not be a capital offence. Thus in future the restriction introduced by Section 433A will not be applicable to them and will, in effect, cover only a very small number of cases. Even in this small number of cases the restriction will not in any way curb the Constitutional power to grant remission and commutation vested in the President or the Governor by virtue of Articles 72 and 161.

There can be no doubt that by this letter it was clarified that Section 433A of the Code will apply to only those convicted of a capital offence and not to all life convicts. It is equally clear that the said provision was expected to apply to exceptionally heinous offences falling within the definition of 'capital offence' once the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill became law. Section 433A was, therefore, expected to deny premature release before completion of actual 14 years of incarceration to only those limited convicts convicted of a capital offence, i.e., an exceptionally heinous crime specified in the second part of the proposed Section , I.P.C. Lastly it clarifies that Section 433A cannot and does not in any way affect the constitutional power conferred on the President/Governor under Article 72/161 of the Constitution. It cannot, therefore, be denied that this letter and the accompanying note does give an impression that certain provisions of the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill were interlinked with Section 433A of the Code.

7. Assuming the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Bill and the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill were intended to provide an integrated scheme of legislation, can it be said that the failure on the part of the Lok Sabha to pass the letter renders the enactment of the former by which Section 433A was introduced in the Code, 'a legislative fraud' as counsel has liked to call it or to use a more familiar expression 'colourable exercise of legislative power'? Counsel submitted that Section 433A was got introduced on the statute book by deception, in that, when the former Bill was made law an impression was given that the twin legislation which had already been cleared by the Rajya Sabha on November 23, 1978 would in due course be cleared by the Lok Sabha also so that the application of Section 433A would be limited to capital offences only and would have no application to a large number of 'lifers'. It must be conceded that such would have been the impact if the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill was passed by the Lok Sabha in the form in which the Rajya Sabha had approved it.

8. This is not a case of legislative incompetence to enact Section 433A. No such submission was made. Besides the question of vires of Section 433A of the Code has been determined by the Constitution Bench of this Court in Maru Ram's case. This Court repelled all the thrusts aimed at challenging the constitutional validity of Section 433A. But counsel submitted that the question was not examined from the historical perspective of the twin legislations. Counsel for the State submitted that it was not permissible for us to reopen the challenge closed by the Constitution Bench on the specious plea that a particular argument or plea was not canvassed or made before that Bench. The objection raised by counsel for the State Government is perhaps not without substance but we do not propose to deal with it because even otherwise we see no merit in the submission of the petitioner's counsel. It is only when a legislature which has no power to legislate frames a legislation so camouflaging it as to appear to be within its competence when it knows it is not, it can be said that the legislation so enacted is colourable legislation. In K.C. Gajapati Narayan Deo v. State of Orissa, [1954] 1SCR 1950, was challenged on the ground of colourable legislation or a fraud on the Constitution as its real purpose was to effect a drastic reduction in the amount of compensation payable under the Orissa Estates Abolition Act, 1952. The facts were that a Bill relating to the Orissa Estates Abolition Act, 1952 was published in the Gazette on January 3, 1950. It provided that any sum payable for agricultural income- tax for the previous year should be deducted from the gross asset of an estate for working out the net income on the basis whereof compensation payable to the estate owner could be determined. Thereafter on January 8, 1950, a Bill to amend the Orissa Agricultural Income- tax, 1947, was introduced to enhance the highest rate of tax from 3 annas to 4 annas in a rupee and to reduce the highest slab from Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 20,000. The next Chief Minister, however, dropped this Bill and introduced a fresh Bill enhancing the highest rate to 12 annas 6 pies in a rupee and reducing the highest slab to Rs. 15,000 only. On the same becoming law it was challenged on the ground that the real purpose of the legislation was to drastically reduce the compensation payable to the estate owners. Mukherjea, J., who spoke for the Court observed as under:

It may be made clear at the outset that the doctrine of colourable legislation does not involve any question of bona fides or mala fides on the part of the legislature. The whole doctrine resolves itself into the question of competency of a particular legislature to enact a particular law. If the legislature is competent to pass a particular law, the motives which impelled it to act are really irrelevant. On the other hand, if the legislature lacks competency, the question of motive does not arise at all. Whether a statute is constitutional or not is thus always a question of power.

Thus the whole doctrine resolves itself into a question of competency of the concerned legislature to enact the impugned legislation. If the legislature has transgressed the limits of its powers and if such transgression is indirect, covert or disguised, such a legislation is described as colourable in legal parlance. The idea conveyed by the use of the said expression is that although apparently a legislature in passing the statute purported to act within the limits of its powers, it had in substance and reality transgressed its powers, the transgression being veiled by what appears on close scrutiny to be a mere pretence or disguise. In other words if in pith and substance the legislation does not belong to the subject falling within the limits of its power but is outside it, the mere form of the legislation will not be determinate of the legislative competence. In Sonapur Tea Co. Ltd. v. Must. Mazirunnessa MANU/SC/0069/1961 : [1962]1SCR724 it was reiterated relying on Gajapati's case that the doctrine of colourable legislation really postulates that legislation attempts to do indirectly what it cannot do directly. Such is not the case before us. It is no body's contention that Parliament was not competent to amend the Criminal Procedure Code by which Section 433A was inserted. Whether or not the connecting Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill ought to have been cleared or not was a matter left to the wisdom of the Lok Sabha. Merely because the Criminal Procedure Bill was made law and the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill was passed by the Rajya Sabha did not obligate the Lok Sabha to clear it. The Lok Sabha could have its own views on the proposed Indian Penal Code amendments. It may agree with the executive's policy reflected in the Bill, with or without modifications, or not at all. Merely because in the subsequent instructions issued by the letter of July 10, 1979 and the accompanying note (Annex. II) the Joint- Secretary had interlinked the two Bills, the Lok Sabha was under no obligation to adopt the measure as such representation could not operate as estoppel against it. Even the indirect attempt on the part of the High Court of Himachal Pradesh in the ragging case to force the State Government to legislate, State of Himachal Pradesh v. A Parent of a student of Medical College, Simla MANU/SC/0046/1985 : [1985]3SCR676 was disapproved by this Court as a matter falling, outside the functions and duties of the judiciary. It is, therefore, obvious that no question of mala fides on the part of the legislature was involved in the enactment of one legislation and failure to enact another. There is no question of 'legislative fraud' or 'colourable legislation' involved in the backdrop of the legislative history of Section 433A of the Code as argued on behalf of the petitioner.

9. Counsel for the petitioner, however, tried to seek support from the Privy Council decision in W.R. Moram v. Deputy Commissioner of Taxation for N.S.W. [1940] AC 838 Wherein the question to be considered was whether the legislative scheme was a colourable one forbidden by Section 5(ii) of the Australian Constitution. There was no attempt to disguise the scheme as it was fully disclosed. The Privy Council, while holding that the scheme was not a colourable legislation, observed that 'where there is admittedly a scheme of proposed legislation, it seems to be necessary when the 'pith and substance' or 'scope and effect' of any one of the Acts is under consideration, to treat them together and to see how they interact'. But that was a case where the scheme was carried out through enactments passed by the concerned legislatures. It is in that context that the above observations must be read and understood. In the present case also if both the Bills had become law, counsel would perhaps have been justified in demanding that in understanding or construing one legislation or the other, the scheme common to both must be kept in view and be permitted to interact. But where the linkage does not exist on account of the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill not having become law we are unable to appreciate how Section 433A can be read down to apply to only those classes of capital offences to which it would have applied had the said Bill been passed by the Lok Sabha in the terms in which it was approved by the Rajya Sabha. The language of Section 433A is clear and unambiguous and does not call for extrinsic aid for its interpretation. To accept the counsel's submission to read down or interpret Section 433A of the Code with the aid of the changes proposed by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill would tantamount to treating the provisions of the said Bill as forming part of the Indian Penal Code which is clearly impermissible. To put such an interpretation with the aid of such extrinsic material would result in violence to the plain language of Section 433A of the Code. We are, therefore, unable to accept even this second limb of the contention.

10. The law governing suspension, remission and commutation of sentence is both statutory and constitutional. The stage for the exercise of this power generally speaking is post judicial, i.e., after the judicial process has come to an end. The duty to judge and to award the appropriate punishment to the guilty is a judicial function which culminates by a judgment pronounced in accordance with law. After the judicial function thus ends the executive function of giving effect to the judicial verdict commences. We first refer to the statutory provisions. Chapter III of I.P.C. deals with punishments. The punishments to which the offenders can be liable are enumerated in Section 53, namely, (i) death (ii) imprisonment for life (iii) imprisonment of either description, namely, rigorous or simple (iv) forfeiture of property and (v) fine. Section 54 empowers the appropriate government to commute the punishment of death for any other punishment. Similarly Section 55 empowers the appropriate government to commute the sentence of imprisonment for life for imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding 14 years. Chapter XXXII of the Code, to which Section 433A was added, entitled 'Execution, Suspension, Remission and Commutation of sentences' contains Sections 432 and 433 which have relevance; the former confers power on the appropriate government to suspend the execution of an offender's sentence or to remit the whole or any part of the punishment to which he has been sentenced while the latter confers power on such Government to commute (a) a sentence of death for any other punishment (b) a sentence of imprisonment for life, for imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years or for fine (c) a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for simple imprisonment or for fine and (d) a sentence of simple imprisonment for fine. It is in the context of the aforesaid provisions that we must read Section 433A which runs as under:

433A. Restriction on powers of remission or commutation in certain cases- Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 432, where a sentence of imprisonment for life is imposed on conviction of a person for an offence for which death is one of the punishments provided by law, or where a sentence of death imposed on a person has been commuted under Section 433 into one of imprisonment for life, such person shall not be released from prison unless he had served at least fourteen years of imprisonment.

The section begins with a non- obstante clause notwithstanding anything contained in Section 432 and proceeds to say that where a person is convicted for an offence for which death is one of the punishments and has been visited with the lesser sentence of imprisonment for life or where the punishment of an offender sentenced to death has been commuted under Section 433 into one of imprisonment for life, such offender will not be released unless he has served at least 14 years of imprisonment. The reason which impelled the legislature to insert this provision has been stated earlier. Therefore, one who could have been visited with the extreme punishment of death but on account of the sentencing court's generosity was sentenced to the lesser punishment of imprisonment for life and another who actually was sentenced to death but on account of executive generosity his sentence was commuted under Section 433(a) for imprisonment for life have been treated under Section 433A as belonging to that class of prisoners who do not deserve to be released unless they have completed 14 years of actual incarceration. Thus the effect of Section 433A is to restrict the exercise of power under Sections 432 and 433 by the stipulation that the power will not be so exercised as would enable the two categories of convicts referred to in Section 433A to freedom before they have completed 14 years of actual imprisonment. This is the legislative policy which is clearly discernible from the plain language of Section 433A of the Code. Such prisoners constitute a single class and have, therefore, been subjected to the uniform requirement of suffering atleast 14 years of internment.

11. Counsel for the petitioner next submitted that after this Court's decision in Bhagirath's case permitting the benefit of set off under Section 428 in respect of the detention period as an undertrial, the ratio of the decision in Godse's case must be taken as impliedly disapproved. We see no basis for this submission. In Godse's case the convict who was sentenced to transportation for life had earned remission for 2963 days during his internment. He claimed that in view of Section 57 read with Section 53A, I.P.C., the total period of his incarceration could not exceed 20 years which he had completed, inclusive of remission, and, therefore, his continued detention was illegal. Section 57, I.P.C. reads as follows:

57. Fractions of terms of punishment- In calculating fractions of terms of punishment, imprisonment for life shall be reckoned as equivalent to imprisonment for twenty years.

The expression 'imprisonment for life' must be read in the context of Section 45, I.P.C. Under that provision the word 'life' denotes the life of a human being unless the contrary appears from the context. We have seen that the punishments are set out in Section 53, imprisonment for life being one of them. Read in the light of Section 45 it would ordinarily mean imprisonment for the full or complete span of life.

Does Section 57 convey to the contrary? Dealing with this contention based on the language of Section 57, this Court observed in Godse's case at pages 444- 45 as under:

Section 57 of the Indian Penal Code has no real bearing on the question raised before us. For calculating fractions of terms of punishment the section provides that transportation for life shall be regarded as equivalent to imprisonment for twenty years. It does not say that transportation for life shall be deemed to be transportation for twenty years for all purposes; nor does the amended section which substitutes the words "imprisonment for life" for "transportation for life" enable the drawing of any such all- embracing fiction. A sentence of transportation for life or imprisonment for life must prima facie be treated as transportation or imprisonment for the whole of the remaining period of the convicted person's natural life.

This interpretation of Section 57 gets strengthened if we refer to Sections 65, 116, 119, 120 and 511, of the Indian Penal Code which fix the term of imprisonment thereunder as a fraction of the maximum fixed for the principal offence. It is for the purpose of working out this fraction that it became necessary to provide that imprisonment for life shall be reckoned as equivalent to imprisonment for 20 years. If such a provision had not been made it would have been impossible to work out the fraction of an in- definite term. In order to work out the fraction of terms of punishment provided in sections such as those enumerated above, it was imperative to lay down the equivalent term for life imprisonment.

12. The second contention urged before the Court in Godse's case was based on the Bombay Rules governing the remission system framed in virtue of the provisions contained in the Prisons Act, 1894. This Court pointed out that the Prisons Act did not confer on any authority a power to commute or remit sentences. The Remission Rules made thereunder had, therefore, to be confined to the scope and ambit of that statute and could not be extended to other statutes. Under the Bombay Rules three types of remissions for good conduct were allowed and for working them out transportation for life was equated to 15 years of actual imprisonment. Dealing with Godse's plea for premature release on the strength of these rules this Court observed at page 447 as under:

The rules framed under the Prisons Act enable such a person to remission ordinary, special and State- and the said remissions will be given credit towards his term of imprisonment. For the purpose of working out the remissions the sentence of transportation for life is ordinarily equated with a definite period, but it is only for that particular purpose and not for any other purpose. As the sentence of transportation for life or its prison equivalent the life imprisonment is one of indefinite duration, the remissions so earned do not in practice help such a convict as it is not possible to predicate the time of his death. That is why the rules provide for a procedure to enable an appropriate Government to remit the sentence under Section 401 (now Section 432) of the CrPC on a consideration of the relevant factors including the period of remissions earned. The question of remission is exclusively within province of the appropriate Government; and in this case it is admitted that though the appropriate Government made certain remissions under Section 401 of the CrPC, it did not remit the entire sentence.

On this line of reasoning the submission of counsel that if the Court were to take the view that transportation for life or imprisonment for life enures till the last breath of the convict passes out, the entire scheme of remissions framed under the Prisons Act or any like statute and the whole exercise of crediting remissions to the account of the convict would collapse, was spurned. This Court came to the conclusion that the Remission Rules have a limited scope and in the case of a convict undergoing sentence of transportation for life or imprisonment for life it acquires significance only if the sentence is commuted or remitted, subject to Section 433A of the Code or in exercise of constitutional power under Articles 72/161.

13. In Maru Ram's case the Constitution Bench reaffirmed the ratio of Godse's case and held that the nature of a life sentence is incarceration until death; judicial sentence for imprisonment for life cannot be in jeopardy merely because of long accumulation of remissions. Release would follow only upon an order under Section 401 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 by the appropriate Government or on a clemency order in exercise of power under Articles 72/161 of the Constitution. At page 1220 the Constitution Bench expressed itself thus:

Ordinary where a sentence is for a definite term, the calculus of remissions may benefit the prisoner to instant release at that point where the subtraction result is zero. Here, we are concerned with life imprisonment and so we come upon another concept bearing on the nature of sentence which has been highlighted in Godse's case. Where the sentence is indeterminate or of uncertain duration, the result of subtraction from an uncertain quantity is still an uncertain quantity and release of the prisoner cannot follow except on some fiction of quantification of a sentence of uncertain duration.

Referring to the facts of Godse's case and affirming the view that the sentence of imprisonment for life enures upto the last breath of the convict, this Court proceeded to state as under:

Since death was uncertain, deduction by way of remission did not yield any tangible date for release and so the prayer of Godse was refused. The nature of a life sentence is incarceration until death, judicial sentence of imprisonment for life cannot be in jeopardy merely because of the long accumulation of remissions.

It is, therefore, clear from the aforesaid observations that unless the sentence for life imprisonment is commuted or remitted as stated earlier by the appropriate authority under the provisions of the relevant law, a convict is bound in law to serve the entire life term in prison; the rules framed under the Prisons Act or like statute may enable such a convict to earn remissions but such remissions will not entitle him to release before he has completed 14 years of incarceration in view of Section 433A of the Code unless of course power has been exercised under Article 72/161 of the Constitution.

14. It will thus be seen from the ratio laid down in the aforesaid two cases that where a person has been sentenced to imprisonment for life the remissions earned by him during his internment in prison under the relevant remission rules have a limited scope and must be confined to the scope and ambit of the said rules and do not acquire significance until the sentence is remitted under Section 432, in which case the remission would be subject to limitation of Section 433A of the Code, or constitutional power has been exercised under Articles 72/161 of the Constitution. In Bhagirath's case the question which the Constitution Bench was required to consider was whether a person sentenced to imprisonment for life can claim the benefit of Section 428 of the Code which, inter alia provides for setting off the period of detention undergone by the accused as an undertrial against the sentence of imprisonment ultimately awarded to him.

Referring to Section 57, I.P.C., the Constitution Bench reiterated the legal position as under:

The provision contained in Section 57 that imprisonment for life has to be reckoned as equivalent to imprisonment for 20 years is for the purpose of calculating fractions of terms of punishment. We cannot press that provision into service for a wider purpose.

These observations are consistent with the ratio laid down in Godse and Maru Ram's cases. Coming next to the question of set off under Section 428 of the Code, this Court held:

The question of setting off the period of detention undergone by an accused as an undertrial prisoner against the sentence of life imprisonment can arise only if an order is passed by the appropriate authority under Section 432 or Section 433 of the Code. In the absence or such order, passed generally or specially, and apart from the provisions, if any of the relevant Jail Manual, imprisonment for life would mean, according to the rule in Gopal Vinayak Godse, imprisonment for the remainder of life.

We fail to see any departure from the ratio of Godse's case; on the contrary the afore- quoted passage clearly shows approval of that ratio and this becomes further clear from the final order passed by the Court while allowing the appeal/writ petition. The Court directed that the period of detention undergone by the two accused as undertrial prisoners would be set off against the sentence of life imprisonment imposed upon them, subject to the provisions contained in Section 433A and, 'provided that orders have been passed by the appropriate authority under Section 433 of the CrPC'. These directions make it clear beyond any manner of doubt that just as in the case of remissions so also in the case of set off the period of detention as undertrial would enure to the benefit of the convict provided the appropriate Government has chosen to pass an order under Sections 432/433 of the Code. The ratio of Bhagirath's case, therefore, does not run counter to the ratio of this Court in the case of Godse or Maru Ram.

15. Under the Constitutional Scheme the President is the Chief Executive of the Union of India in whom the executive power of the Union vests. Similarly, the Governor is the Chief Executive of the concerned State and in him vests the executive power of that State. Articles 72 and 161 confer the clemency power of pardon, etc., on the President and the State Governors, respectively. Needless to say that this constitutional power would override the statutory power contained in Sections 432 and 433 and the limitation of Section 433A of the Code as well as the power conferred by Sections 54 and 55, I.P.C. No doubt, this power has to be exercised by the President/Governor on the advice of his Council of Ministers. How this power can be exercised consistently with Article 14 of the Constitution was one of the questions which this Court was invited to decide in Maru Ram's case. In order that there may not be allegations of arbitrary exercise of this power this Court observed at pages 1243- 44 as under:

The proper thing to do, if Government is to keep faith with the founding fathers, is to make rules for its own guidance in the exercise of the pardon power keeping, of course, a large residuary power to meet special situations or sudden developments. This will exclude the vice of discrimination such as may arise where two persons have been convicted and sentenced in the same case for the same degree of guilt but one is released and the other refused, for such irrelevant reasons as religion, caste, colour or political loyalty.

Till such rules are framed this Court thought that extant remission rules framed under the Prisons Act or under any other similar legislation by the State Governments may provide effective guidelines of a recommendatory nature helpful to the Government to release the prisoner by remitting the remaining term. It was, therefore, suggested that the said rules and remission schemes be continued and benefit thereof be extended to all those who come within their purview. At the same time the Court was aware that special cases may require different considerations and 'the wide power of executive clemency cannot be bound down even by self-created rules'. Summing up its finding in paragraph 10 at page 1249, this Court observed:

We regard it as fair that until fresh rules are made in keeping with the experience gathered, current social conditions and accepted penological thinking- a desirable step, in our view- the present remissions and release Schemes may usefully be taken as guidelines under Articles 72/161 and orders for release passed. We cannot fault the Government, if in some intractably savage delinquents, Section 433A is itself treated as a guideline for exercise of Articles 72/161. These observations of ours are recommendatory to avoid a hiatus, but it is for Government, Central or State, to decide whether and why the current Remission Rules should not survive until replaced by a more wholesome scheme.

It will be obvious from the above that the observations were purely recommendatory in nature.

16. In Kehar Singh's case on the question of laying down guidelines for the exercise of power under Article 72 of the Constitution this Court observed in paragraph 16 as under:

It seems to us that there is sufficient indication in the terms of Article 72 and in the history of the power enshrined in that provision as well as existing case- law, and specific guidelines need not be spelled out. Indeed, it may not be possible to lay down any precise, clearly defined and sufficiently channelised guidelines, for we must remember that the power under Article 72 is of the widest amplitude, can contemplate a myriad kinds of and categories of cases with facts and situations varying from case to case, in which the merits and reasons of State may be profoundly assisted by prevailing occasion and passing time. And it is of great significance that the function itself enjoys high status in the constitutional scheme.

These observations do indicate that the Constitution Bench which decided Kehar Singh's case was of the view that the language of Article 72 itself provided sufficient guidelines for the exercise of power and having regard to its wide amplitude and the status of the function to be discharged thereunder, it was perhaps unnecessary to spell out specific guidelines since such guidelines may not be able to conceive of all myriad kinds and categories of cases which may come up for the exercise of such power. No doubt in Maru Ram's case the Constitution Bench did recommend the framing of guidelines for the exercise of power under Articles 72/161 of the Constitution. But that was a mere recommendation and not a ratio decidendi having a binding effect on the Constitution Bench which decided Kehar Singh's case. Therefore, the observation made by the Constitution Bench in Kehar Singh's case does not upturn any ratio laid down in Maru Ram's case. Nor has the Bench in Kehar Singh's case said anything with regard to using the provisions of extent Remission Rules as guidelines for the exercise of the clemency powers.

17. It is true that Articles 72/161 make use of two expressions 'remissions' with regard to punishment and 'remit' in relation to sentence but we do not think it proper to express any opinion as to the content and amplitude of these two expressions in the abstract in the absence of a fact- situation. We, therefore, express no opinion on this question formulated by the learned Counsel for the petitioner.

18. Lastly the learned Counsel for the petitioner raised a hypothetical question whether it was permissible in law to grant conditional premature release to a life convict even before completion of 14 years of actual imprisonment, which release would tantamount to the prisoner serving time for the purpose of Section 433A of the Code? It is difficult and indeed not advisable to answer such a hypothetical question without being fully aware of the nature of conditions imposed for release. We can do no better than quote the following observations made at page 1247 in Maru Ram's case:

...the expression 'prison' and 'imprisonment' must receive a wider connotation and include any place notified as such for detention purposes. 'Stone- walls and iron bars do not a prison- make': nor are 'stone walls and iron bars' a sine qua non to make a jail. Open jails are capital instances. Any life under the control of the State whether within high- walled or not may be a prison if the law regards it as such. House detentions, for example, Palaces, where Gandhiji was detained were prisons. Restraint on freedom under the prison law is the test. Licensed releases where instant re-capture is sanctioned by the law and likewise parole, where the parole is no free agent, and other categories under the invisible fetters of the prison law may legitimately be regarded as imprisonment. This point is necessary to be cleared even for computation of 14 years under Section 433A.

Therefore, in each case, the question whether the grant of conditional premature release answers the test laid down by this Court in the afore- quoted passage, would depend on the nature of the conditions imposed and the circumstances in which the order is passed and is to be executed. No general observation can be made and we make none.

19. In paragraph 10 of the memorandum of the Writ Petition., three reasons have been assigned for invoking this Court's jurisdiction under Article 32 of the Constitution, viz., (i) the questions involved in this petition will affect the right of a large body of life convicts seeking premature release; (ii) this Court's judgment in Bhagirath's case deviated from the ratio laid down in Godse's case and, therefore, the entire law of remissions needed a review; and (iii) the High Court of Rajasthan had refused to examine the merits of the various important questions of law raised before it. It is on account of the fact that this petition was in the nature of a representative petition touching the rights of a large number of convicts of the categories referred to in Sections 433A of the Code, that we have dealt with the various questions of law in extenso. Otherwise the petition could have been disposed of on the narrow ground that even though in view of Sections 433A of the Code, premature release could not be ordered under Sections 432/433 of the Code read with the 1958 Rules until the petitioner had completed 14 years of actual imprisonment, his release could be considered in exercise of powers under Articles 72/161 of the Constitution treating the 1958 Rules guidelines, if necessary.

20. The relief claimed in the petition is two- fold, namely, (a) to grant a mandamus to the appropriate Government for the premature release of the petitioner by exercising constitutional power with the aid of 1958 Rules and (b) to declare the petitioner's continued detention as illegal and void. The petitioner has not completed 14 years of actual incarceration and as such he cannot invoke Sections 432 and 433 of the Code. His continued detention is consistent with Section 433A of the Code and there is nothing on record to show that it is otherwise illegal and void. The outcome of his clemency application under the Constitution is not put in issue in the present proceedings if it has been rejected and if the same is pending despite the directive of the High Court it would be open to the petitioner to approach the High Court for the compliance of its order. Under the circumstance no mandamus can issue. The writ petition must, therefore, fail. It is hereby dismissed. Rule discharged.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 343 of 2009 (Arising out of SLP (Crl.) No. 4008 of 2008

Decided On: 20.02.2009

Rasiklal Vs. Kisore

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ.

JUDGMENT

J.M. Panchal, J.

1. Leave granted.

2. The appellant is accused in Criminal Complaint No. 1604 of 2005 filed in the court of learned Judicial Magistrate First Class, Indore, M.P., for alleged commission of offences punishable under Sections 499 and 500 of the Indian Penal Code and assails the order dated March 24, 2008, rendered by the learned Single Judge of High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Bench at Indore, in Criminal Revision No. 1362 of 2006 by which bail granted to the appellant by the learned Judicial Magistrate First Class, Indore, M.P. on December 1, 2006 is cancelled on the ground that the order granting bail was passed by the learned Judicial Magistrate First Class, Indore, without hearing the original complainant and was, therefore, bad for violation of principles of natural justice.

3. It is the case of the respondent that the appellant gave an interview on December 15, 2004 on Star News TV Channel and defamed him. The respondent, therefore, filed a Criminal Complaint No. 1604 of 2005 in the court of learned Judicial Magistrate First Class, Indore, M.P. on January 27, 2005 for alleged commission of offences punishable under Sections 499 and 500 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Judicial Magistrate examined the respondent on oath as required by Section 200 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 and issued summons to the appellant for commission of alleged offences under Sections 499 and 500 of the Indian Penal Code vide order dated May 9, 2006. The appellant appeared before the court on November 20, 2006 and submitted an application under Section 317 of the Code of .Criminal Procedure, 1973 seeking exemption for personal appearance along with vakalatnama of his counsel. In the said application prayer for grant of bail was also made. The application was fixed for hearing on December 26, 2006. However, on December 1, 2006 the appellant filed an application mentioning his appearance before the court and to consider his prayer for grant of bail under Section 436 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 as offences alleged to have been committed by him under Sections 499 and 500 of the Indian Penal Code are bailable. The application was heard on the day on which it was filed. The learned Magistrate noticed that the offences alleged to have been committed by the appellant were bailable. Therefore, the appellant was admitted to bail on his furnishing a surety in the sum of Rs. 5,000/- and also furnishing a bond of the same amount. While enlarging the appellant on bail the learned Magistrate imposed a condition on the appellant that he would appear before the court on each date of hearing or else he would be taken into custody and sent to jail. The order dated December 1, 2006 passed by the learned Judicial Magistrate further indicates that in compliance of the direction issued by the court the appellant furnished a bail bond in the sum of Rs. 5,000/- and also executed a bond for the said amount and that the bail bonds were accepted by the court after which the appellant was released on bail.

4. The respondent, who is original complainant, filed Criminal Revision No. 1362 of 2006 in the High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Bench at Indore, on December 26, 2006 for cancelling the bail granted to the appellant by the learned Judicial Magistrate First Class, Indore, on the ground that he was not heard and, therefore, the order was violative of principles of natural justice. The learned Single Judge, before whom the revision application was notified for hearing, had issued notice to the appellant but the appellant did not remain present before the High Court. The revision application filed by the respondent was taken up for final disposal on March 24, 2008. The learned Single Judge, by order dated March 24, 2008, has cancelled the bail granted to the appellant by the learned Judicial Magistrate on the ground that the respondent, who was original complainant, was not heard and, therefore, the order granting bail violates the principles of natural justice. After cancelling the bail granted to the appellant the learned Single Judge remitted the matter to the court below with a direction that the matter be taken up according to law between the parties relating to the grant of bail to the appellant. Feeling aggrieved the appellant has invoked appellate jurisdiction of this Court under Article 136 of the Constitution.

5. This Court has heard the learned Counsel for the parties and taken into consideration the documents forming part of the appeal.

6. As is evident, the appellant is being tried for alleged commission of offences punishable under Sections 499 and 500 of the Indian Penal Code. Admittedly, both the offences are bailable. The grant of bail to a person accused of bailable offence is governed by the provisions of Section 436 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. The said section reads as under:

436 - In what cases bail to be taken - (1) When any person other than a person accused of a non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station, or appears or is brought before a Court, and is prepared at any time while in the custody of such officer or at any stage of the proceeding before such Court to give bail, such person shall be released on bail:

Provided that such officer or Court, if he or it thinks fit, may, and shall, if such person is indigent and is unable to furnish surety, instead of taking bail from such person, discharge him on his executing a bond without sureties for his. appearance as hereinafter provided:

Explanation. - Where a person is unable to give bail within a week of the date of his arrest, it shall be a sufficient ground for the officer or the Court to presume that he is an indigent person for the purposes of this proviso.

Provided further that nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the provisions of Sub-section (3) of Section 116 or Section 446A.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in Sub- section (1), where a person has failed to comply with the conditions of the bail- bond as regards the time and place of attendance, the Court may refuse to release him on bail, when on a subsequent occasion in the same case he appears before the Court or is brought in custody and any such refusal shall be without prejudice to the powers of the Court to call upon any person bound by such bond to pay the penalty thereof under Section 446.

There is no doubt that under Section 436 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a person accused of a bailable offence is entitled to be released on bail pending his trial. As soon as it appears that the accused person is prepared to give bail, the police officer or the court before whom he offers to give bail, is bound to release him on such terms as to bail as may appear to the officer or the court to be reasonable. It would even be open to the officer or the court to discharge such person on his executing a bond as provided in the Section instead of taking bail from him. The position of persons accused of non- bailable offence is entirely different. The right to claim bail granted by Section 436 of the Code in a bailable offence is an absolute and indefeasible right. In bailable offences there is no question of discretion in granting bail as the words of Section 436 are imperative. The only choice available to the officer or the court is as between taking a simple recognizance of the accused and demanding security with surety. The persons contemplated by Section 436 cannot be taken into custody unless they are unable or willing to offer bail or to execute personal bonds. There is no manner of doubt that bail in a bailable offence can be claimed by accused as of right and the officer or the court, as the case may be, is bound to release the accused on bail if he is willing to abide by reasonable conditions which may be imposed on him.

7. There is no express provision in the Code prohibiting the court from re- arresting an accused released on bail under Section 436 of the Code. However, the settled judicial trend is that the High Court can cancel the bail bond while exercising inherent powers under Section 482 of the Code. According to this Court a person accused of a bailable offence is entitled to be released on bail pending his trial, but he forfeits his right to be released on bail if his conduct subsequent to his release is found to be prejudicial to a fair trial. And this forfeiture can be made effective by invoking the inherent powers of the High Court under Section 482 of the Code. See: Talab Haji

Hussain v. Madhukar Purushottam Mondkar and Anr. MANU/SC/0028/1958 : 1958CriLJ701 reiterated by a Constitution Bench in Ratilal Bhanji Mithani v. Asstt. Collector of Customs and Anr. MANU/SC/0077/1967 : 1967CriLJ1576 .

8. It may be noticed that Sub- section (2) of Section 436 of the 1973 Code empowers any court to refuse bail without prejudice to action under Section 446 where a person fails to comply with the conditions of bail bond giving effect to the view expressed by this Court in the above mentioned case. However, it is well settled that bail granted to an accused with reference to bailable offence can be cancelled only if the accused (1) misuses his liberty by indulging in similar criminal activity, (2) interferes with the course of investigation, (3) attempts to tamper with evidence of witnesses, (4) threatens witnesses or indulges in similar activities which would hamper smooth investigation, (5) attempts to flee to another country, (6) attempts to make himself scarce by going underground or becoming unavailable to the investigating agency, (7) attempts to place himself beyond the reach of his surety, etc. These grounds are illustrative and not exhaustive. However, a bail granted to a person accused of bailable offence cannot be cancelled on the ground that the complainant was not heard. As mandated by Section 436 of the Code what is to be ascertained by the officer or the court is whether the offence alleged to have been committed is a bailable offence and whether he is ready to give bail as may be directed by the officer or the court. When a police officer releases a person accused of a bailable offence, he is not required to hear the complainant at all. Similarly, a court while exercising powers under Section 436 of the Code is not bound to issue notice to the complainant and hear him.

9. The contention raised by the learned Counsel for the respondent on the basis of decision of this Court in Arun Kumar v. State of Bihar and Anr. MANU/SC/7168/2008 : 2008CriLJ1924 , that the complainant should have been heard by the Magistrate before granting bail to the appellant, cannot be accepted. In the decision relied upon by the learned Counsel for the respondent challenge was to the order passed by a learned Single Judge of the Patna High Court quashing the order passed by the learned Fast Track Court holding that the respondent No. 2 therein was not juvenile and, therefore, there was no need to refer his case to the Juvenile Justice Board for ascertaining his age and then for trial. The High Court was of the view that the prayer was rejected only on the ground that two or three witnesses were examined and though the accused was in possession of school leaving certificate, mark sheet, etc. to show that he was a juvenile, the prayer could not have been rejected. This Court found that the High Court in a very cryptic manner had observed that the application of the accused deserved to be allowed and directed the court below to consider the accused as a juvenile and proceed accordingly. Before this Court it was submitted by the learned Counsel for the informant that the documents produced had been analysed by the trial court and it was found at the time of framing charge that he was major' without any doubt. The grievance was made on behalf of the informant before this Court that the High Court did not even consider as to how the conclusions of the trial court suffered from any infirmity and merely referring to the stand of the accused and even without analyzing the correctness or otherwise of the observations and conclusions made by the trial court the learned Single Judge came to the conclusion that the accused was a juvenile. This Court concluded that the High Court had failed to notice several relevant factors and no discussion was made as to how the conclusions of the trial court suffered from any infirmity. It was also noticed by this Court that no notice was issued to the appellant before the matter was disposed of. In view of the above position the order impugned in the appeal was set aside by this Court. To say the least, the facts of the present case are quite different from those mentioned in the above reported decision. Therefore the ratio laid down in the said decision cannot be applied to the fact of the instant case.

10. Even if notice had been issued to the respondent before granting bail to the appellant, the respondent could not have pointed out to the court that the appellant had allegedly committed non- bailable offences. As observed earlier, what has to be ascertained by the officer or the court is as to whether the person accused is alleged to have committed bailable offences and if the same is found to be in affirmative, the officer or the court has no other alternative but to release such person on bail if he is ready and willing to abide by reasonable conditions, which may be imposed on him. Having regard to the facts of the case this Court is of the firm opinion that the bail granted to the appellant for alleged commission of bailable offence could not have been cancelled by the High Court on the ground that the complainant was not heard and, thus, principles of natural justice were violated. Principles of natural justice is not a 'mantra' to be applied in vacuum in all cases. The question as to what extent, the principles of natural justice are required to be complied with, will depend upon the facts of the case. They are not required to be complied with when it will lead to an empty formality See State Bank of Patiala v. S.K. Sharma MANU/SC/0438/1996 : (1996)IILLJ296SC and Karnataka State Road Transport Corporation v. S.G. Kotturappa MANU/SC/0177/2005 : (2005)IILLJ161SC . The impugned order is, therefore, liable to be set aside.

11. For the foregoing reasons the appeal succeeds. The order dated March 24, 2008, passed by the learned Single Judge of High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Bench at Indore, in Criminal Revision No. 1362 of 2006 cancelling the bail granted to the appellant by the learned Judicial Magistrate is hereby set aside and order dated December 1, 2006, passed by the learned Judicial Magistrate First Class, Indore, M.P., in Criminal Complaint No. 1604 of 2005 is hereby restored.

12. The appeal accordingly stands disposed of.

Liberty is one of the most essential requirements of the modern man. It is said to be the delicate fruit of a mature civilization. It is the very quintessence of civilized existence and essential requirement of a modern man

- John E.E.D. in "Essays on Freedom and Power"

1. Taking note of the continuous supply of cases seeking bail after filing of the final report on a wrong interpretation of Section 170 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (hereinafter referred to as "the Code" for short), an endeavour was made by this Court to categorize the types of offenses to be used as guidelines for the future. Assistance was sought from Shri Sidharth Luthra, learned Senior Counsel, and learned Additional Solicitor General Shri S.V. Raju. After allowing the application for intervention, an appropriate Order was passed on 07.10.2021. The same is reproduced as under:

We have been provided assistance both by Mr. S.V. Raju, learned Additional Solicitor General and Mr. Sidharth Luthra, learned Senior Counsel and there is broad unanimity in terms of the suggestions made by learned ASG. In terms of the suggestions, the offences have been categorized and guidelines are sought to be laid down for grant of bail, without fettering the discretion of the courts concerned and keeping in mind the statutory provisions.

We are inclined to accept the guidelines and make them a part of the order of the Court for the benefit of the Courts below. The guidelines are as under:

Categories/Types of Offences

A) Offences punishable with imprisonment of 7 years or less not falling in category B & D.

B) Offences punishable with death, imprisonment for life, or imprisonment for more than 7 years.

C) Offences punishable under Special Acts containing stringent provisions for bail like NDPS (Section 37), PMLA (Section 45), UAPA (Section 43D(5), Companies Act, 212(6), etc.

D) Economic offences not covered by Special Acts.

REQUISITE CONDITIONS

1) Not arrested during investigation.

2) Cooperated throughout in the investigation including appearing before Investigating Officer whenever called.

(No need to forward such an Accused along with the chargesheet (Siddharth v. State of UP, MANU/SC/0600/2021)

CATEGORY A

After filing of chargesheet/complaint taking of cognizance

a) Ordinary summons at the 1st instance/including permitting appearance through Lawyer.

b) If such an Accused does not appear despite service of summons, then Bailable Warrant for physical appearance may be issued.

c) NBW on failure to failure to appear despite issuance of Bailable Warrant.

d) NBW may be cancelled or converted into a Bailable Warrant/Summons without insisting physical appearance of Accused, if such an application is moved on behalf of the Accused before execution of the NBW on an undertaking of the Accused to appear physically on the next date/s of hearing.

e) Bail applications of such Accused on appearance may be decided w/o. the Accused being taken in physical custody or by granting interim bail till the bail application is decided.

CATEGORY B/D

On appearance of the Accused in Court pursuant to process issued bail application to be decided on merits.

CATEGORY C

Same as Category B & D with the additional condition of compliance of the provisions of Bail under NDPS Section 37, 45 PMLA, 212(6) Companies Act 43D(5) of UAPA, POSCO etc.

Needless to say that the category A deals with both police cases and complaint cases.

The trial Courts and the High Courts will keep in mind the aforesaid guidelines while considering bail applications. The caveat which has been put by learned ASG is that where the Accused have not cooperated in the investigation nor appeared before the Investigating Officers, nor answered summons when the Court feels that judicial custody of the Accused is necessary for the completion of the trial, where further investigation including a possible recovery is needed, the aforesaid approach cannot give them benefit, something we agree with.

We may also notice an aspect submitted by Mr. Luthra that while issuing notice to consider bail, the trial Court is not precluded from granting interim bail taking into consideration the conduct of the Accused during the investigation which has not warranted arrest. On this aspect also we would give our imprimatur and naturally the bail application to be ultimately considered, would be guided by the statutory provisions.

The suggestions of learned ASG which we have adopted have categorized a separate set of offences as "economic Offences" not covered by the special Acts. In this behalf, suffice to say on the submission of Mr. Luthra that this Court in Sanjay Chandra v. CBI, MANU/SC/1375/2011 : (2012) 1 SCC 40 has observed in para 39 that in determining whether to grant bail both aspects have to be taken into account:

a) seriousness of the charge and

b) severity of punishment.

Thus, it is not as if economic offences are completely taken out of the aforesaid guidelines but do form a different nature of offences and thus the seriousness of the charge has to be taken into account but simultaneously, the severity of the punishment imposed by the statute would also be a factor.

We appreciate the assistance given by the learned Counsels and the positive approach adopted by the learned ASG.

The SLP stands disposed of and the matter need not be listed further.

A copy of this order be circulated to the Registrars of the different High Courts to be further circulated to the trial Courts so that the unnecessary bail matters do not come up to this Court.

This is the only purpose for which we have issued these guidelines, but they are not fettered on the powers of the Courts.

2. Two more applications, being M.A. No. 1849/2021 and M.A. Diary No. 29164/2021, were filed seeking a clarification referring to category 'C' wherein, inadvertently, Section 45 of the Prevention of Money Laundering Act, 2002 despite being struck down, found a place, thus came the Order dated 16.12.2021:

Learned Senior Counsels for parties state that they will endeavour to work out some of the fine tuning which is required to give meaning to the intent of our order dated 07.10.2021.

We make it clear that our intent was to ease the process of bail and not to restrict it. The order, in no way, imposes any additional fetters but is in furtherance of the line of judicial thinking to enlarge the scope of bail.

At this stage, suffice for us to say that while referring to category 'C', inadvertently, Section 45 of Prevention of Money laundering Act (PMLA) has been mentioned which has been struck down by this Court. Learned ASG states that an amendment was made and that is pending challenge before this Court before a different Bench. That would be a matter to be considered by that Bench.

We are also putting a caution that merely by categorizing certain offences as economic offences which may be non- cognizable, it does not mean that a different meaning is to be given to our order.

We may also clarify that if during the course of investigation, there has been no cause to arrest the Accused, merely because a charge sheet is filed, would not be an ipso facto cause to arrest the Petitioner, an aspect in general clarified by us in Criminal Appeal No. 838/2021 Siddharth v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Anr. dated 16.08.2021.

3. Some more applications have been filed seeking certain directions/clarifications, while impressing this Court to deal with the other aspects governing the grant of bail. We have heard Shri Amit Desai, learned Senior Counsel, Shri Sidharth Luthra, learned Senior Counsel, and learned Additional Solicitor General Shri S.V. Raju.

4. Having found that special leave petitions pertaining to different offenses, particularly on the rejection of bail applications are being filed before this Court, despite various directions issued from time to time, we deem it appropriate to undertake this exercise. We do make it clear that all our discussion along with the directions, are meant to act as guidelines, as each case pertaining to a bail application is obviously to be decided on its own merits.

PREVAILING SITUATION

5. Jails in India are flooded with undertrial prisoners. The statistics placed before us would indicate that more than 2/3rd of the inmates of the prisons constitute undertrial prisoners. Of this category of prisoners, majority may not even be required to be arrested despite registration of a cognizable offense, being charged with offenses punishable for seven years or less. They are not only poor and illiterate but also would include women. Thus, there is a culture of offense being inherited by many of them. As observed by this Court, it certainly exhibits the mindset, a vestige of colonial India, on the part of the Investigating Agency, notwithstanding the fact arrest is a draconian measure resulting in curtailment of liberty, and thus to be used sparingly. In a democracy, there can never be an impression that it is a police State as both are conceptually opposite to each other.

DEFINITION OF TRIAL

6. The word 'trial' is not explained and defined under the Code. An extended meaning has to be given to this word for the purpose of enlargement on bail to include, the stage of investigation and thereafter. Primary considerations would obviously be different between these two stages. In the former stage, an arrest followed by a police custody may be warranted for a thorough investigation, while in the latter what matters substantially is the proceedings before the Court in the form of a trial. If we keep the above distinction in mind, the consequence to be drawn is for a more favourable consideration towards enlargement when investigation is completed, of course, among other factors.

7. Similarly, an appeal or revision shall also be construed as a facet of trial when it comes to the consideration of bail on suspension of sentence.

DEFINITION OF BAIL

8. The term "bail" has not been defined in the Code, though is used very often. A bail is nothing but a surety inclusive of a personal bond from the Accused. It means the release of an Accused person either by the orders of the Court or by the police or by the Investigating Agency.

9. It is a set of pre- trial restrictions imposed on a suspect while enabling any interference in the judicial process. Thus, it is a conditional release on the solemn undertaking by the suspect that he would cooperate both with the investigation and the trial. The word "bail" has been defined in the Black's Law Dictionary, 9th Edn., pg. 160 as:

A security such as cash or a bond; esp., security required by a court for the release of a prisoner who must appear in court at a future time.

10. Wharton's Law Lexicon, 14th Edn., pg. 105 defines bail as:

to set at liberty a person arrested or imprisoned, on security being taken for his appearance on a day and at a place certain, which security is called bail, because the party arrested or imprisoned is delivered into the hands of those who bind themselves or become bail for his due appearance when required, in order that he may be safely protected from prison, to which they have, if they fear his escape, etc., the legal power to deliver him.

BAIL IS THE RULE

11. The principle that bail is the Rule and jail is the exception has been well recognised through the repetitive pronouncements of this Court. This again is on the touchstone of Article 21 of the Constitution of India. This Court in Nikesh Tarachand Shah v. Union of India, MANU/SC/1480/2017 : (2018) 11 SCC 1, held that:

19. In Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab [Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, MANU/SC/0215/1980 : (1980) 2 SCC 565 : 1980 SCC (Cri.) 465], the purpose of granting bail is set out with great felicity as follows: (SCC pp. 586- 88, paras 27- 30)

27. It is not necessary to refer to decisions which deal with the right to ordinary bail because that right does not furnish an exact parallel to the right to anticipatory bail. It is, however, interesting that as long back as in 1924 it was held by the High Court of Calcutta in Nagendra Nath Chakravarti, In re [Nagendra Nath Chakravarti, In re, MANU/WB/0119/1923 : AIR 1924 Cal 476 : 1924 Cri. LJ 732], AIR pp. 479- 80 that the object of bail is to secure the attendance of the Accused at the trial, that the proper test to be applied in the solution of the question whether bail should be granted or refused is whether it is probable that the party will appear to take his trial and that it is indisputable that bail is not to be withheld as a punishment. In two other cases which, significantly, are the "Meerut Conspiracy cases" observations are to be found regarding the right to bail which deserve a special mention. In K.N. Joglekar v. Emperor [K.N. Joglekar v. Emperor, MANU/UP/0060/1931 : AIR 1931 All 504 : 1932 Cri. LJ 94] it was observed, while dealing with Section 498 which corresponds to the present Section 439 of the Code, that it conferred upon the Sessions Judge or the High Court wide powers to grant bail which were not handicapped by the restrictions in the preceding Section 497 which corresponds to the present Section 437. It was observed by the Court that there was no hard- and- fast Rule and no inflexible principle governing the exercise of the discretion conferred by Section 498 and that the only principle which was established was that the discretion should be exercised judiciously. In Emperor v. H.L. Hutchinson [Emperor v. H.L. Hutchinson, MANU/UP/0014/1931 : AIR 1931 All 356 : 1931 Cri. LJ 1271], AIR p. 358 it was said that it was very unwise to make an attempt to lay down any particular Rules which will bind the High Court, having regard to the fact that the legislature itself left the discretion of the court unfettered. According to the High Court, the variety of cases that may arise from time to time cannot be safely classified and it is dangerous to make an attempt to classify the cases and to say that in particular classes a bail may be granted but not in other classes. It was observed that the principle to be deduced from the various Sections in the Code of Criminal Procedure was that grant of bail is the Rule and refusal is the exception. An Accused person who enjoys freedom is in a much better position to look after his case and to properly defend himself than if he were in custody. As a presumably innocent person he is therefore entitled to freedom and every opportunity to look after his own case. A presumably innocent person must have his freedom to enable him to establish his innocence.

28. Coming nearer home, it was observed by Krishna Iyer, J., in Gudikanti Narasimhulu v. State [Gudikanti Narasimhulu v. State, MANU/SC/0089/1977 : (1978) 1 SCC 240 : 1978 SCC (Cri.) 115] that: (SCC p. 242, para 1)

'1. ... the issue [of bail] is one of liberty, justice, public safety and burden of the public treasury, all of which insist that a developed jurisprudence of bail is integral to a socially sensitised judicial process. ... After all, personal liberty of an Accused or convict is fundamental, suffering lawful eclipse only in terms of "procedure established by law". The last four words of Article 21 are the life of that human right.'

29. In Gurcharan Singh v. State (UT of Delhi) [Gurcharan Singh v. State (UT of Delhi), MANU/SC/0420/1978 : (1978) 1 SCC 118 : 1978 SCC (Cri.) 41] it was observed by Goswami, J., who spoke for the Court, that: (SCC p. 129, para 29)

'29. ... There cannot be an inexorable formula in the matter of granting bail. The facts and circumstances of each case will govern the exercise of judicial discretion in granting or cancelling bail.'

30. In AMERICAN JURISPRUDENCE (2nd, Vol. 8, p. 806, para 39), it is stated:

'Where the granting of bail lies within the discretion of the court, the granting or denial is regulated, to a large extent, by the facts and circumstances of each particular case. Since the object of the detention or imprisonment of the Accused is to secure his appearance and submission to the jurisdiction and the judgment of the court, the primary inquiry is whether a recognizance or bond would effect that end.'

It is thus clear that the question whether to grant bail or not depends for its answer upon a variety of circumstances, the cumulative effect of which must enter into the judicial verdict. Any one single circumstance cannot be treated as of universal validity or as necessarily justifying the grant or refusal of bail.

xxx xxx xxx

24. Article 21 is the Ark of the Covenant so far as the Fundamental Rights Chapter of the Constitution is concerned. It deals with nothing less sacrosanct than the rights of life and personal liberty of the citizens of India and other persons. It is the only Article in the Fundamental Rights Chapter (along with Article 20) that cannot be suspended even in an emergency [see Article 359(1) of the Constitution]. At present, Article 21 is the repository of a vast number of substantive and procedural rights post Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India [Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, MANU/SC/0133/1978 : (1978) 1 SCC 248].

12. Further this Court in Sanjay Chandra v. CBI MANU/SC/1375/2011 : (2012) 1 SCC 40, has observed that:

21. In bail applications, generally, it has been laid down from the earliest times that the object of bail is to secure the appearance of the Accused person at his trial by reasonable amount of bail. The object of bail is neither punitive nor preventative. Deprivation of liberty must be considered a punishment, unless it is required to ensure that an Accused person will stand his trial when called upon. The courts owe more than verbal respect to the principle that punishment begins after conviction, and that every man is deemed to be innocent until duly tried and duly found guilty.

22. From the earliest times, it was appreciated that detention in custody pending completion of trial could be a cause of great hardship. From time to time, necessity demands that some unconvicted persons should be held in custody pending trial to secure their attendance at the trial but in such cases, "necessity" is the operative test. In this country, it would be quite contrary to the concept of personal liberty enshrined in the Constitution that any person should be punished in respect of any matter, upon which, he has not been convicted or that in any circumstances, he should be deprived of his liberty upon only the belief that he will tamper with the witnesses if left at liberty, save in the most extraordinary circumstances.

23. Apart from the question of prevention being the object of refusal of bail, one must not lose sight of the fact that any imprisonment before conviction has a substantial punitive content and it would be improper for any court to refuse bail as a mark of disapproval of former conduct whether the Accused has been convicted for it or not or to refuse bail to an unconvicted person for the purpose of giving him a taste of imprisonment as a lesson.

PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE

13. Innocence of a person Accused of an offense is presumed through a legal fiction, placing the onus on the prosecution to prove the guilt before the Court. Thus, it is for that agency to satisfy the Court that the arrest made was warranted and enlargement on bail is to be denied.

14. Presumption of innocence has been acknowledged throughout the world. Article 14(2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966 and Article 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights acknowledge the presumption of innocence, as a cardinal principle of law, until the individual is proven guilty.

15. Both in Australia and Canada, a prima facie right to a reasonable bail is recognized based on the gravity of offence. In the United States, it is a common practice for bail to be a cash deposit. In the United Kingdom, bail is more likely to consist of a set of restrictions.

16. The Supreme Court of Canada in Corey Lee James Myers v. Her Majesty the Queen, 2019 SCC 18, has held that bail has to be considered on acceptable legal parameters. It thus confers adequate discretion on the Court to consider the enlargement on bail of which unreasonable delay is one of the grounds. Her Majesty the Queen v. Kevin Antic and Ors., MANU/SCCN/0024/2017 : 2017 SCC 27:

The right not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause is an essential element of an enlightened criminal justice system. It entrenches the effect of the presumption of innocence at the pre- trial stage of the criminal trial process and safeguards the liberty of Accused persons. This right has two aspects: a person charged with an offence has the right not to be denied bail without just cause and the right to reasonable bail. Under the first aspect, a provision may not deny bail without "just cause" there is just cause to deny bail only if the denial occurs in a narrow set of circumstances, and the denial is necessary to promote the proper functioning of the bail system and is not undertaken for any purpose extraneous to that system. The second aspect, the right to reasonable bail, relates to the terms of bail, including the quantum of any monetary component and other restrictions that are imposed on the Accused for the release period. It protects Accused persons from conditions and forms of release that are unreasonable.

While a bail hearing is an expedited procedure, the bail provisions are federal law and must be applied consistently and fairly in all provinces and territories. A central part of the Canadian law of bail consists of the ladder principle and the authorized forms of release, which are found in Section 515(1) to (3) of the Criminal Code. Save for exceptions, an unconditional release on an undertaking is the default position when granting release. Alternative forms of release are to be imposed in accordance with the ladder principle, which must be adhered to strictly: release is favoured at the earliest reasonable opportunity and on the least onerous grounds. If the Crown proposes an alternate form of release, it must show why this form is necessary for a more restrictive form of release to be imposed. Each rung of the ladder must be considered individually and must be rejected before moving to a more restrictive form of release. Where the parties disagree on the form of release, it is an error of law for a judge to order a more restrictive form without justifying the decision to reject the less onerous forms. A recognizance with sureties is one of the most onerous forms of release, and should not be imposed unless all the less onerous forms have been considered and rejected as inappropriate. It is not necessary to impose cash bail on Accused persons if they or their sureties have reasonably recoverable assets and are able to pledge those assets to the satisfaction of the court. A recognizance is functionally equivalent to cash bail and has the same coercive effect. Cash bail should be relied on only in exceptional circumstances in which release on a recognizance with sureties is unavailable. When cash bail is ordered, the amount must not be set so high that it effectively amounts to a detention order, which means that the amount should be no higher than necessary to satisfy the concern that would otherwise warrant detention and proportionate to the means of the Accused and the circumstances of the case. The judge is under a positive obligation to inquire into the ability of the Accused to pay. Terms of release Under Section 515(4) should only be imposed to the extent that they are necessary to address concerns related to the statutory criteria for detention and to ensure that the Accused is released. They must not be imposed to change an Accused person's behaviour or to punish an Accused person. Where a bail review is requested, courts must follow the bail review process set out in R. v. St- Cloud, MANU/SCCN/0023/2015 : 2015 SCC 27 : [2015] 2 S.C.R. 328.

17. We may only state that notwithstanding the special provisions in many of the countries world-over governing the consideration for enlargement on bail, courts have always interpreted them on the accepted principle of presumption of innocence and held in favour of the Accused.

18. The position in India is no different. It has been the consistent stand of the courts, including this Court, that presumption of innocence, being a facet of Article 21, shall inure to the benefit of the Accused. Resultantly burden is placed on the prosecution to prove the charges to the court of law. The weightage of the evidence has to be assessed on the principle of beyond reasonable doubt.

PROVISIONS OF THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

An uncontrolled power is the natural enemy of freedom

- Harold Laski in 'Liberty in the Modern State'

19. The Code of Criminal Procedure, despite being a procedural law, is enacted on the inviolable right enshrined Under Article 21 and 22 of the Constitution of India. The provisions governing clearly exhibited the aforesaid intendment of the Parliament.

20. Though the word 'bail' has not been defined as aforesaid, Section 2A defines a bailable and non- bailable offense. A non- bailable offense is a cognizable offense enabling the police officer to arrest without a warrant. To exercise the said power, the Code introduces certain embargoes by way of restrictions.

Section 41, 41A and 60A of the Code

CHAPTER V

ARREST OF PERSONS

41. When police may arrest without warrant.- - (1) Any police officer may without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant, arrest any person- -

(a) who commits, in the presence of a police officer, a cognizable offence;

(b) against whom a reasonable complaint has been made, or credible information has been received, or a reasonable suspicion exists that he has committed a cognizable offence punishable with imprisonment for a term which may be less than seven years or which may extend to seven years whether with or without fine, if the following conditions are satisfied, namely:

(i) the police officer has reason to believe on the basis of such complaint, information, or suspicion that such person has committed the said offence;

(ii) the police officer is satisfied that such arrest is necessary- -

(a) to prevent such person from committing any further offence; or

(b) for proper investigation of the offence; or

(c) to prevent such person from causing the evidence of the offence to disappear or tampering with such evidence in any manner; or

(d) to prevent such person from making any inducement, threat or promise to any person acquainted with the facts of the case so as to dissuade him from disclosing such facts to the Court or to the police officer; or

(e) as unless such person is arrested, his presence in the Court whenever required cannot be ensured, and the police officer shall record while making such arrest, his reasons in writing:

Provided that a police officer shall, in all cases where the arrest of a person is not required under the provisions of this Sub- section, record the reasons in writing for not making the arrest.

(ba) against whom credible information has been received that he has committed a cognizable offence punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to more than seven years whether with or without fine or with death sentence and the police officer has reason to believe on the basis of that information that such person has committed the said offence;

(c) who has been proclaimed as an offender either under this Code or by order of the State Government; or

(d) in whose possession anything is found which may reasonably be suspected to be stolen property and who may reasonably be suspected of having committed an offence with reference to such thing; or

(e) who obstructs a police officer while in the execution of his duty, or who has escaped, or attempts to escape, from lawful custody; or

(f) who is reasonably suspected of being a deserter from any of the Armed Forces of the Union; or

(g) who has been concerned in, or against whom a reasonable complaint has been made, or credible information has been received, or a reasonable suspicion exists, of his having been concerned in, any act committed at any place out of India which, if committed in India, would have been punishable as an offence, and for which he is, under any law relating to extradition, or otherwise, liable to be apprehended or detained in custody in India; or

(h) who, being a released convict, commits a breach of any Rule made Under Sub- section (5) of Section 356; or

(i) for whose arrest any requisition, whether written or oral, has been received from another police officer, provided that the requisition specifies the person to be arrested and the offence or other cause for which the arrest is to be made and it appears therefrom that the person might lawfully be arrested without a warrant by the officer who issued the requisition.

(2) Subject to the provisions of Section 42, no person concerned in a non- cognizable offence or against whom a complaint has been made or credible information has been received or reasonable suspicion exists of his having so concerned, shall be arrested except under a warrant or order of a Magistrate.

41A. Notice of appearance before police officer.- - (1) [The police officer shall], in all cases where the arrest of a person is not required under the provisions of Sub- section (1) of Section 41, issue a notice directing the person against whom a reasonable complaint has been made, or credible information has been received, or a reasonable suspicion exists that he has committed a cognizable offence, to appear before him or at such other place as may be specified in the notice.

(2) Where such a notice is issued to any person, it shall be the duty of that person to comply with the terms of the notice.

(3) Where such person complies and continues to comply with the notice, he shall not be arrested in respect of the offence referred to in the notice unless, for reasons to be recorded, the police officer is of the opinion that he ought to be arrested.

(4) Where such person, at any time, fails to comply with the terms of the notice or is unwilling to identify himself, the police officer may, subject to such orders as may have been passed by a competent Court in this behalf, arrest him for the offence mentioned in the notice.

60A. Arrest to be made strictly according to the Code.- - No arrest shall be made except in accordance with the provisions of this Code or any other law for the time being in force providing for arrest.

21. Section 41 Under Chapter V of the Code deals with the arrest of persons. Even for a cognizable offense, an arrest is not mandatory as can be seen from the mandate of this provision. If the officer is satisfied that a person has committed a cognizable offense, punishable with imprisonment for a term which may be less than seven years, or which may extend to the said period, with or without fine, an arrest could only follow when he is satisfied that there is a reason to believe or suspect, that the said person has committed an offense, and there is a necessity for an arrest. Such necessity is drawn to prevent the committing of any further offense, for a proper investigation, and to prevent him/her from either disappearing or tampering with the evidence. He/she can also be arrested to prevent such person from making any inducement, threat, or promise to any person according to the facts, so as to dissuade him from disclosing said facts either to the court or to the police officer. One more ground on which an arrest may be necessary is when his/her presence is required after arrest for production before the Court and the same cannot be assured.

22. This provision mandates the police officer to record his reasons in writing while making the arrest. Thus, a police officer is duty- bound to record the reasons for arrest in writing. Similarly, the police officer shall record reasons when he/she chooses not to arrest. There is no requirement of the aforesaid procedure when the offense alleged is more than seven years, among other reasons.

23. The consequence of non- compliance with Section 41 shall certainly inure to the benefit of the person suspected of the offense. Resultantly, while considering the application for enlargement on bail, courts will have to satisfy themselves on the due compliance of this provision. Any non-compliance would entitle the Accused to a grant of bail.

24. Section 41A deals with the procedure for appearance before the police officer who is required to issue a notice to the person against whom a reasonable complaint has been made, or credible information has been received or a reasonable suspicion exists that he has committed a cognizable offence, and arrest is not required Under Section 41(1). Section 41B deals with the procedure of arrest along with mandatory duty on the part of the officer.

25. On the scope and objective of Section 41 and 41A, it is obvious that they are facets of Article 21 of the Constitution. We need not elaborate any further, in light of the judgment of this Court in Arnesh Kumar v. State of Bihar, MANU/SC/0559/2014 : (2014) 8 SCC 273:

7.1. From a plain reading of the aforesaid provision, it is evident that a person Accused of an offence punishable with imprisonment for a term which may be less than seven years or which may extend to seven years with or without fine, cannot be arrested by the police officer only on his satisfaction that such person had committed the offence punishable as aforesaid. A police officer before arrest, in such cases has to be further satisfied that such arrest is necessary to prevent such person from committing any further offence; or for proper investigation of the case; or to prevent the Accused from causing the evidence of the offence to disappear; or tampering with such evidence in any manner; or to prevent such person from making any inducement, threat or promise to a witness so as to dissuade him from disclosing such facts to the court or the police officer; or unless such Accused person is arrested, his presence in the court whenever required cannot be ensured. These are the conclusions, which one may reach based on facts.

7.2. The law mandates the police officer to state the facts and record the reasons in writing which led him to come to a conclusion covered by any of the provisions aforesaid, while making such arrest. The law further requires the police officers to record the reasons in writing for not making the arrest.

7.3. In pith and core, the police officer before arrest must put a question to himself, why arrest? Is it really required? What purpose it will serve? What object it will achieve? It is only after these questions are addressed and one or the other conditions as enumerated above is satisfied, the power of arrest needs to be exercised. In fine, before arrest first the police officers should have reason to believe on the basis of information and material that the Accused has committed the offence. Apart from this, the police officer has to be satisfied further that the arrest is necessary for one or the more purposes envisaged by Sub- clauses (a) to (e) of Clause (1) of Section 41 Code of Criminal Procedure.

8. An Accused arrested without warrant by the police has the constitutional right Under Article 22(2) of the Constitution of India and Section 57 Code of Criminal Procedure to be produced before the Magistrate without unnecessary delay and in no circumstances beyond 24 hours excluding the time necessary for the journey:

8.1. During the course of investigation of a case, an Accused can be kept in detention beyond a period of 24 hours only when it is authorised by the Magistrate in exercise of power Under Section 167 Code of Criminal Procedure. The power to authorise detention is a very solemn function. It affects the liberty and freedom of citizens and needs to be exercised with great care and caution. Our experience tells us that it is not exercised with the seriousness it deserves. In many of the cases, detention is authorised in a routine, casual and cavalier manner.

8.2. Before a Magistrate authorises detention Under Section 167 Code of Criminal Procedure, he has to be first satisfied that the arrest made is legal and in accordance with law and all the constitutional rights of the person arrested are satisfied. If the arrest effected by the police officer does not satisfy the requirements of Section 41 of the Code, Magistrate is duty- bound not to authorise his further detention and release the Accused. In other words, when an Accused is produced before the Magistrate, the police officer effecting the arrest is required to furnish to the Magistrate, the facts, reasons and its conclusions for arrest and the Magistrate in turn is to be satisfied that the condition precedent for arrest Under Section 41 Code of Criminal Procedure has been satisfied and it is only thereafter that he will authorise the detention of an Accused.

8.3. The Magistrate before authorising detention will record his own satisfaction, may be in brief but the said satisfaction must reflect from his order. It shall never be based upon the ipse dixit of the police officer, for example, in case the police officer considers the arrest necessary to prevent such person from committing any further offence or for proper investigation of the case or for preventing an Accused from tampering with evidence or making inducement, etc. the police officer shall furnish to the Magistrate the facts, the reasons and materials on the basis of which the police officer had reached its conclusion. Those shall be perused by the Magistrate while authorising the detention and only after recording his satisfaction in writing that the Magistrate will authorise the detention of the Accused.

8.4. In fine, when a suspect is arrested and produced before a Magistrate for authorising detention, the Magistrate has to address the question whether specific reasons have been recorded for arrest and if so, prima facie those reasons are relevant, and secondly, a reasonable conclusion could at all be reached by the police officer that one or the other conditions stated above are attracted. To this limited extent the Magistrate will make judicial scrutiny.

9. ...The aforesaid provision makes it clear that in all cases where the arrest of a person is not required Under Section 41(1) Code of Criminal Procedure, the police officer is required to issue notice directing the Accused to appear before him at a specified place and time. Law obliges such an Accused to appear before the police officer and it further mandates that if such an Accused complies with the terms of notice he shall not be arrested, unless for reasons to be recorded, the police officer is of the opinion that the arrest is necessary. At this stage also, the condition precedent for arrest as envisaged Under Section 41 Code of Criminal Procedure has to be complied and shall be subject to the same scrutiny by the Magistrate as aforesaid.

10. We are of the opinion that if the provisions of Section 41 Code of Criminal Procedure which authorises the police officer to arrest an Accused without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant are scrupulously enforced, the wrong committed by the police officers intentionally or unwittingly would be reversed and the number of cases which come to the Court for grant of anticipatory bail will substantially reduce. We would like to emphasise that the practice of mechanically reproducing in the case diary all or most of the reasons contained in Section 41 Code of Criminal Procedure for effecting arrest be discouraged and discontinued.

11. Our endeavour in this judgment is to ensure that police officers do not arrest the Accused unnecessarily and Magistrate do not authorise detention casually and mechanically. In order to ensure what we have observed above, we give the following directions:

11.1. All the State Governments to instruct its police officers not to automatically arrest when a case Under Section 498- A Indian Penal Code is registered but to satisfy themselves about the necessity for arrest under the parameters laid down above flowing from Section 41 Code of Criminal Procedure;

11.2. All police officers be provided with a check list containing specified Sub- clauses Under Section 41(1)(b)(ii);

11.3. The police officer shall forward the check list duly filled and furnish the reasons and materials which necessitated the arrest, while forwarding/producing the Accused before the Magistrate for further detention;

11.4. The Magistrate while authorising detention of the Accused shall peruse the report furnished by the police officer in terms aforesaid and only after recording its satisfaction, the Magistrate will authorise detention;

11.5. The decision not to arrest an Accused, be forwarded to the Magistrate within two weeks from the date of the institution of the case with a copy to the Magistrate which may be extended by the Superintendent of Police of the district for the reasons to be recorded in writing;

11.6. Notice of appearance in terms of Section 41- A Code of Criminal Procedure be served on the Accused within two weeks from the date of institution of the case, which may be extended by the Superintendent of Police of the district for the reasons to be recorded in writing;

11.7. Failure to comply with the directions aforesaid shall apart from rendering the police officers concerned liable for departmental action, they shall also be liable to be punished for contempt of court to be instituted before the High Court having territorial jurisdiction.

11.8. Authorising detention without recording reasons as aforesaid by the Judicial Magistrate concerned shall be liable for departmental action by the appropriate High Court.

12. We hasten to add that the directions aforesaid shall not only apply to the cases Under Section 498- A Indian Penal Code or Section 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, the case in hand, but also such cases where offence is punishable with imprisonment for a term which may be less than seven years or which may extend to seven years, whether with or without fine.

26. We only reiterate that the directions aforesaid ought to be complied with in letter and spirit by the investigating and prosecuting agencies, while the view expressed by us on the non-compliance of Section 41 and the consequences that flow from it has to be kept in mind by the Court, which is expected to be reflected in the orders.

27. Despite the dictum of this Court in Arnesh Kumar (supra), no concrete step has been taken to comply with the mandate of Section 41A of the Code. This Court has clearly interpreted Section 41(1)(b)(i) and (ii) inter alia holding that notwithstanding the existence of a reason to believe qua a police officer, the satisfaction for the need to arrest shall also be present. Thus, Sub- clause (1)(b)(i) of Section 41 has to be read along with Sub- clause (ii) and therefore both the elements of 'reason to believe' and 'satisfaction qua an arrest' are mandated and accordingly are to be recorded by the police officer.

28. It is also brought to our notice that there are no specific guidelines with respect to the mandatory compliance of Section 41A of the Code. An endeavour was made by the Delhi High Court while deciding Writ Petition (C) No. 7608 of 2017 vide order dated 07.02.2018, followed by order dated 28.10.2021 in Contempt Case (C) No. 480 of 2020 & CM Application No. 25054 of 2020, wherein not only the need for guidelines but also the effect of non- compliance towards taking action against the officers concerned was discussed. We also take note of the fact that a standing order has been passed by the Delhi Police viz., Standing Order No. 109 of 2020, which provides for a set of guidelines in the form of procedure for issuance of notices or orders by the police officers. Considering the aforesaid action taken, in due compliance with the order passed by the Delhi High Court in Writ Petition (C) No. 7608 of 2017 dated 07.02.2018, this Court has also passed an order in Writ Petition (Crl.) 420 of 2021 dated 10.05.2021 directing the State of Bihar to look into the said aspect of an appropriate modification to give effect to the mandate of Section 41A. A recent judgment has also been rendered on the same lines by the High Court of Jharkhand in Cr.M.P. No. 1291 of 2021 dated 16.06.2022.

29. Thus, we deem it appropriate to direct all the State Governments and the Union Territories to facilitate standing orders while taking note of the standing order issued by the Delhi Police i.e., Standing Order No. 109 of 2020, to comply with the mandate of Section 41A. We do feel that this would certainly take care of not only the unwarranted arrests, but also the clogging of bail applications before various Courts as they may not even be required for the offences up to seven years.

30. We also expect the courts to come down heavily on the officers effecting arrest without due compliance of Section 41 and Section 41A. We express our hope that the Investigating Agencies would keep in mind the law laid down in Arnesh Kumar (Supra), the discretion to be exercised on the touchstone of presumption of innocence, and the safeguards provided Under Section 41, since an arrest is not mandatory. If discretion is exercised to effect such an arrest, there shall be procedural compliance. Our view is also reflected by the interpretation of the specific provision Under Section 60A of the Code which warrants the officer concerned to make the arrest strictly in accordance with the Code.

Section 87 and 88 of the Code

87. Issue of warrant in lieu of, or in addition to, summons.- - A Court may, in any case in which it is empowered by this Code to issue a summons for the appearance of any person, issue, after recording its reasons in writing, a warrant for his arrest- -

(a) if, either before the issue of such summons, or after the issue of the same but before the time fixed for his appearance, the Court sees reason to believe that he has absconded or will not obey the summons; or

(b) if at such time he fails to appear and the summons is proved to have been duly served in time to admit of his appearing in accordance therewith and no reasonable excuse is offered for such failure

88. Power to take bond for appearance.- - When any person for whose appearance or arrest the officer presiding in any Court is empowered to issue a summons or warrant, is present in such Court, such officer may require such person to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for his appearance in such Court, or any other Court to which the case may be transferred for trial.

31. When the courts seek the attendance of a person, either a summons or a warrant is to be issued depending upon the nature and facts governing the case. Section 87 gives the discretion to the court to issue a warrant, either in lieu of or in addition to summons. The exercise of the aforesaid power can only be done after recording of reasons. A warrant can be either bailable or non-bailable. Section 88 of the Code empowers the Court to take a bond for appearance of a person with or without sureties.

32. Considering the aforesaid two provisions, courts will have to adopt the procedure in issuing summons first, thereafter a bailable warrant, and then a non- bailable warrant may be issued, if so warranted, as held by this Court in Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal, MANU/SC/7999/2007 : (2007) 12 SCC 1. Despite the aforesaid clear dictum, we notice that non-bailable warrants are issued as a matter of course without due application of mind and against the tenor of the provision, which merely facilitates a discretion, which is obviously to be exercised in favour of the person whose attendance is sought for, particularly in the light of liberty enshrined Under Article 21 of the Constitution. Therefore, valid reasons have to be given for not exercising discretion in favour of the said person. This Court in Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal, MANU/SC/7999/2007 : (2007) 12 SCC 1, has held that:

50. Civilised countries have recognised that liberty is the most precious of all the human rights. The American Declaration of Independence, 1776, French Declaration of the Rights of Men and the Citizen, 1789, Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, 1966 all speak with one voice- - liberty is the natural and inalienable right of every human being. Similarly, Article 21 of our Constitution proclaims that no one shall be deprived of his liberty except in accordance with procedure prescribed by law.

51. The issuance of non- bailable warrants involves interference with personal liberty. Arrest and imprisonment means deprivation of the most precious right of an individual. Therefore, the courts have to be extremely careful before issuing non- bailable warrants.

52. Just as liberty is precious for an individual so is the interest of the society in maintaining law and order. Both are extremely important for the survival of a civilised society. Sometimes in the larger interest of the public and the State it becomes absolutely imperative to curtail freedom of an individual for a certain period, only then the non- bailable warrants should be issued.

When non- bailable warrants should be issued

53. Non- bailable warrant should be issued to bring a person to court when summons or bailable warrants would be unlikely to have the desired result. This could be when:

- it is reasonable to believe that the person will not voluntarily appear in court; or
- the police authorities are unable to find the person to serve him with a summon; or
- it is considered that the person could harm someone if not placed into custody immediately.

54. As far as possible, if the court is of the opinion that a summon will suffice in getting the appearance of the Accused in the court, the summon or the bailable warrants should be preferred. The warrants either bailable or non- bailable should never be issued without proper scrutiny of facts and complete application of mind, due to the extremely serious consequences and ramifications which ensue on issuance of warrants. The court must very carefully examine whether the criminal complaint or FIR has not been filed with an oblique motive.

55. In complaint cases, at the first instance, the court should direct serving of the summons along with the copy of the complaint. If the Accused seem to be avoiding the summons, the court, in the second instance should issue bailable warrant. In the third instance, when the court is fully satisfied that the Accused is avoiding the court's proceeding intentionally, the process of issuance of the non- bailable warrant should be resorted to. Personal liberty is paramount, therefore, we caution courts at the first and second instance to refrain from issuing non- bailable warrants.

56. The power being discretionary must be exercised judiciously with extreme care and caution. The court should properly balance both personal liberty and societal interest before issuing warrants. There cannot be any straitjacket formula for issuance of warrants but as a general rule, unless an Accused is charged with the commission of an offence of a heinous crime and it is feared that he is likely to tamper or destroy the evidence or is likely to evade the process of law, issuance of non- bailable warrants should be avoided.

57. The court should try to maintain proper balance between individual liberty and the interest of the public and the State while issuing non- bailable warrant.

33. On the exercise of discretion Under Section 88, this Court in Pankaj Jain v. Union of India, MANU/SC/0151/2018 : (2018) 5 SCC 743, has held that:

12. The main issue which needs to be answered in the present appeal is as to whether it was obligatory for the Court to release the Appellant by accepting the bond Under Section 88 Code of Criminal Procedure on the ground that he was not arrested during investigation or the Court has rightly exercised its jurisdiction Under Section 88 in rejecting the application filed by the Appellant praying for release by accepting the bond Under Section 88 Code of Criminal Procedure.

13. Section 88 Code of Criminal Procedure is a provision which is contained in Chapter VI "Processes to Compel Appearance" of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. Chapter VI is divided in four Sections - - A. Summons; B. Warrant of arrest; C. Proclamation and Attachment; and D. Other Rules regarding processes. Section 88 provides as follows:

88. Power to take bond for appearance.- - When any person for whose appearance or arrest the officer presiding in any court is empowered to issue a summons or warrant, is present in such court, such officer may require such person to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for his appearance in such court, or any other court to which the case may be transferred for trial.

14. We need to first consider as to what was the import of the words "may" used in Section 88.

xxx xxx xxx

22. Section 88 Code of Criminal Procedure does not confer any right on any person, who is present in a court. Discretionary power given to the court is for the purpose and object of ensuring appearance of such person in that court or to any other court into which the case may be transferred for trial. Discretion given Under Section 88 to the court does not confer any right on a person, who is present in the court rather it is the power given to the court to facilitate his appearance, which clearly indicates that use of the word "may" is discretionary and it is for the court to exercise its discretion when situation so demands. It is further relevant to note that the word used in Section 88 "any person" has to be given wide meaning, which may include persons, who are not even Accused in a case and appeared as witnesses.

Section 167(2) of the Code

167. Procedure when investigation cannot be completed in twenty- four hours.- -

(1) xxx xxx xxx

(2) The Magistrate to whom an Accused person is forwarded under this Section may, whether he has or has not jurisdiction to try the case, from time to time, authorise the detention of the Accused in such custody as such Magistrate thinks fit, for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole; and if he has no jurisdiction to try the case or commit it for trial, and considers further detention unnecessary, he may order the Accused to be forwarded to a Magistrate having such jurisdiction:

Provided that- -

(a) the Magistrate may authorise the detention of the Accused person, otherwise than in the custody of the police, beyond the period of fifteen days, if he is satisfied that adequate grounds exist for doing so, but no Magistrate shall authorise the detention of the Accused person in custody under this paragraph for a total period exceeding,- -

(i) ninety days, where the investigation relates to an offence punishable with death, imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of not less than ten years;

(ii) sixty days, where the investigation relates to any other offence, and, on the expiry of the said period of ninety days, or sixty days, as the case may be, the Accused person shall be released on bail if he is prepared to and does furnish bail, and every person released on bail under this Sub-section shall be deemed to be so released under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII for the purposes of that Chapter;

(b) no Magistrate shall authorise detention of the Accused in custody of the police under this Section unless the Accused is produced before him in person for the first time and subsequently every time till the Accused remains in the custody of the police, but the Magistrate may extend further detention in judicial custody on production of the Accused either in person or through the medium of electronic video linkage;

(c) no Magistrate of the second class, not specially empowered in this behalf by the High Court, shall authorise detention in the custody of the police.

Explanation I.- - For the avoidance of doubts, it is hereby declared that, notwithstanding the expiry of the period specified in Para (a), the Accused shall be detained in custody so long as he does not furnish bail.

Explanation II.- - If any question arises whether an Accused person was produced before the Magistrate as required under Clause (b), the production of the Accused person may be proved by his signature on the order authorising detention or by the order certified by the Magistrate as to production of the Accused person through the medium of electronic video linkage, as the case may be.

Provided further that in case of a woman under eighteen years of age, the detention shall be authorised to be in the custody of a remand home or recognised social institution.

34. Section 167(2) was introduced in the year 1978, giving emphasis to the maximum period of time to complete the investigation. This provision has got a laudable object behind it, which is to ensure an expeditious investigation and a fair trial, and to set down a rationalised procedure that protects the interests of the indigent Sections of society. This is also another limb of Article 21. Presumption of innocence is also inbuilt in this provision. An investigating agency has to expedite the process of investigation as a suspect is languishing under incarceration. Thus, a duty is enjoined upon the agency to complete the investigation within the time prescribed and a failure would enable the release of the Accused. The right enshrined is an absolute and indefeasible one, inuring to the benefit of suspect. Such a right cannot be taken away even during any unforeseen circumstances, such as the recent pandemic, as held by this Court in M. Ravindran v. Directorate of Revenue Intelligence, MANU/SC/0788/2020 : (2021) 2 SCC 485:

II. Section 167(2) and the Fundamental Right to Life and Personal Liberty

17. Before we proceed to expand upon the parameters of the right to default bail Under Section 167(2) as interpreted by various decisions of this Court, we find it pertinent to note the observations made by this Court in Uday Mohanlal Acharya [Uday Mohanlal Acharya v. State of Maharashtra, MANU/SC/0222/2001 : (2001) 5 SCC 453 : 2001 SCC (Cri.) 760] on the fundamental right to personal liberty of the person and the effect of deprivation of the same as follows: (SCC p. 472, para 13)

13. ... Personal liberty is one of the cherished objects of the Indian Constitution and deprivation of the same can only be in accordance with law and in conformity with the provisions thereof, as stipulated Under Article 21 of the Constitution. When the law provides that the Magistrate could authorise the detention of the Accused in custody up to a maximum period as indicated in the proviso to Sub- section (2) of Section 167, any further detention beyond the period without filing of a challan by the investigating agency would be a subterfuge and would not be in accordance with law and in conformity with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, and as such, could be violative of Article 21 of the Constitution.

17.1. Article 21 of the Constitution of India provides that "no person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law". It has been settled by a Constitution Bench of this Court in Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India [Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, MANU/SC/0133/1978 : (1978) 1 SCC 248], that such a procedure cannot be arbitrary, unfair or unreasonable. The history of the enactment of Section 167(2) Code of Criminal Procedure and the safeguard of "default bail" contained in the proviso thereto is intrinsically linked to Article 21 and is nothing but a legislative exposition of the constitutional safeguard that no person shall be detained except in accordance with Rule of law.

17.2. Under Section 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 ("the 1898 Code") which was in force prior to the enactment of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the maximum period for which an Accused could be remanded to custody, either police or judicial, was 15 days. However, since it was often unworkable to conclude complicated investigations within 15 days, a practice arose wherein investigating officers would file "preliminary charge- sheets" after the expiry of the remand period. The State would then request the Magistrate to postpone commencement of the trial and authorise further remand of the Accused Under Section 344 of the 1898 Code till the time the investigation was completed and the final charge- sheet was filed. The Law Commission of India in Report No. 14 on Reforms of the Judicial Administration (Vol. II, 1948, pp. 758- 760) pointed out that in many cases the Accused were languishing for several months in custody without any final report being filed before the courts. It was also pointed out that there was conflict in judicial opinion as to whether the Magistrate was bound to release the Accused if the police report was not filed within 15 days.

17.3. Hence the Law Commission in Report No. 14 recommended the need for an appropriate provision specifically providing for continued remand after the expiry of 15 days, in a manner that "while meeting the needs of a full and proper investigation in cases of serious crime, will still safeguard the liberty of the person of the individual". Further, that the legislature should prescribe a maximum time period beyond which no Accused could be detained without filing of the police report before the Magistrate. It was pointed out that in England, even a person Accused of grave offences such as treason could not be indefinitely detained in prison till commencement of the trial.

17.4. The suggestion made in Report No. 14 was reiterated by the Law Commission in Report No. 41 on The Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Vol. I, 1969, pp. 76- 77). The Law Commission reemphasised the need to guard against the misuse of Section 344 of the 1898 Code by filing "preliminary reports" for remanding the Accused beyond the statutory period prescribed Under Section 167. It was pointed out that this could lead to serious abuse wherein "the arrested person can in this manner be kept in custody indefinitely while the investigation can go on in a leisurely manner". Hence the Commission recommended fixing of a maximum time- limit of 60 days for remand. The Commission considered the reservation expressed earlier in Report No. 37 that such an extension may result in the 60- day period becoming a matter of routine. However, faith was expressed that proper supervision by the superior courts would help circumvent the same.

17.5. The suggestions made in Report No. 41 were taken note of and incorporated by the Central Government while drafting the Code of Criminal Procedure Bill in 1970. Ultimately, the 1898 Code was replaced by the present Code of Criminal Procedure. The Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that the Government took the following important considerations into account while evaluating the recommendations of the Law Commission:

3. The recommendations of the Commission were examined carefully by the Government, keeping in view, among others, the following basic considerations:

(i) an Accused person should get a fair trial in accordance with the accepted principles of natural justice;

(ii) every effort should be made to avoid delay in investigation and trial which is harmful not only to the individuals involved but also to society; and

(iii) the procedure should not be complicated and should, to the utmost extent possible, ensure fair deal to the poorer Sections of the community.

17.6. It was in this backdrop that Section 167(2) was enacted within the present day Code of Criminal Procedure, providing for time- limits on the period of remand of the Accused, proportionate to the seriousness of the offence committed, failing which the Accused acquires the indefeasible right to bail. As is evident from the recommendations of the Law Commission mentioned supra, the intent of the legislature was to balance the need for sufficient time- limits to complete the investigation with the need to protect the civil liberties of the Accused. Section 167(2) provides for a clear mandate that the investigative agency must collect the required evidence within the prescribed time period, failing which the Accused can no longer be detained. This ensures that the investigating officers are compelled to act swiftly and efficiently without misusing the prospect of further remand. This also ensures that the court takes cognizance of the case without any undue delay from the date of giving information of the offence, so that society at large does not lose faith and develop cynicism towards the criminal justice system.

17.7. Therefore, as mentioned supra, Section 167(2) is integrally linked to the constitutional commitment Under Article 21 promising protection of life and personal liberty against unlawful and arbitrary detention, and must be interpreted in a manner which serves this purpose. In this regard we find it useful to refer to the decision of the three- Judge Bench of this Court in Rakesh Kumar Paul v. State of Assam [Rakesh Kumar Paul v. State of Assam, MANU/SC/0993/2017 : (2017) 15 SCC 67 : (2018) 1 SCC (Cri.) 401], which laid down certain seminal principles as to the interpretation of Section 167(2) Code of Criminal Procedure though the questions of law involved were somewhat different from the present case. The questions before the three- Judge Bench in Rakesh Kumar Paul [Rakesh Kumar Paul v. State of Assam, MANU/SC/0993/2017 : (2017) 15 SCC 67 : (2018) 1 SCC (Cri.) 401] were whether, firstly, the 90- day remand extension Under Section 167(2)(a)(i) would be applicable in respect of offences where the maximum period of imprisonment was 10 years, though the minimum period was less than 10 years. Secondly, whether the application for bail filed by the Accused could be construed as an application for default bail, even though the expiry of the statutory period Under Section 167(2) had not been specifically pleaded as a ground for bail. The majority opinion held that the 90- day limit is only available in respect of offences where a minimum ten year' imprisonment period is stipulated, and that the oral arguments for default bail made by the counsel for the Accused before the High Court would suffice in lieu of a written application. This was based on the reasoning that the court should not be too technical in matters of personal liberty. Madan B. Lokur, J. in his majority opinion, pertinently observed as follows: (SCC pp. 95- 96 & 99, paras 29, 32 & 41)

29. Notwithstanding this, the basic legislative intent of completing investigations within twenty-four hours and also within an otherwise time- bound period remains unchanged, even though that period has been extended over the years. This is an indication that in addition to giving adequate time to complete investigations, the legislature has also and always put a premium on personal liberty and has always felt that it would be unfair to an Accused to remain in custody for a prolonged or indefinite period. It is for this reason and also to hold the investigating agency accountable that time- limits have been laid down by the legislature. ...

xxx xxx xxx

32. ...Such views and opinions over a prolonged period have prompted the legislature for more than a century to ensure expeditious conclusion of investigations so that an Accused person is not unnecessarily deprived of his or her personal liberty by remaining in prolonged custody for an offence that he or she might not even have committed. In our opinion, the entire debate before us must also be looked at from the point of view of expeditious conclusion of investigations and from the angle of personal liberty and not from a purely dictionary or textual perspective as canvassed by the learned Counsel for the State.

xxx xxx xxx

41. We take this view keeping in mind that in matters of personal liberty and Article 21 of the Constitution, it is not always advisable to be formalistic or technical. The history of the personal liberty jurisprudence of this Court and other constitutional courts includes petitions for a writ of habeas corpus and for other writs being entertained even on the basis of a letter addressed to the Chief Justice or the Court.

(emphasis supplied)

Therefore, the courts cannot adopt a rigid or formalistic approach whilst considering any issue that touches upon the rights contained in Article 21.

17.8. We may also refer with benefit to the recent judgment of this Court in S. Kasi v. State [S. Kasi v. State, MANU/SC/0491/2020 : (2021) 12 SCC 1], wherein it was observed that the indefeasible right to default bail Under Section 167(2) is an integral part of the right to personal liberty Under Article 21, and the said right to bail cannot be suspended even during a pandemic situation as is prevailing currently. It was emphasised that the right of the Accused to be set at liberty takes precedence over the right of the State to carry on the investigation and submit a charge- sheet.

17.9. Additionally, it is well- settled that in case of any ambiguity in the construction of a penal statute, the courts must favour the interpretation which leans towards protecting the rights of the Accused, given the ubiquitous power disparity between the individual Accused and the State machinery. This is applicable not only in the case of substantive penal statutes but also in the case of procedures providing for the curtailment of the liberty of the Accused.

17.10. With respect to the Code of Criminal Procedure particularly, the Statement of Objects and Reasons (supra) is an important aid of construction. Section 167(2) has to be interpreted keeping in mind the threefold objectives expressed by the legislature, namely, ensuring a fair trial, expeditious investigation and trial, and setting down a rationalised procedure that protects the interests of indigent Sections of society. These objects are nothing but subsets of the overarching fundamental right guaranteed Under Article 21.

17.11. Hence, it is from the perspective of upholding the fundamental right to life and personal liberty Under Article 21 that we shall clarify and reconcile the various judicial interpretations of Section 167(2) for the purpose of resolving the dilemma that has arisen in the present case.

35. As a consequence of the right flowing from the said provision, courts will have to give due effect to it, and thus any detention beyond this period would certainly be illegal, being an affront to the liberty of the person concerned. Therefore, it is not only the duty of the investigating agency but also the courts to see to it that an Accused gets the benefit of Section 167(2).

Section 170 of the Code:

170. Cases to be sent to Magistrate when evidence is sufficient.- - (1) If, upon an investigation under this Chapter, it appears to the officer in charge of the police station that there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground as aforesaid, such officer shall forward the Accused under custody to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence upon a police report and to try the Accused or commit him for trial, or, if the offence is bailable and the Accused is able to give security, shall take security from him for his appearance before such Magistrate on a day fixed and for his attendance from day to day before such Magistrate until otherwise directed.

36. The scope and ambit of Section 170 has already been dealt with by this Court in Siddharth v. State of U.P., MANU/SC/0600/2021 : (2021) 1 SCC 676. This is a power which is to be exercised by the court after the completion of the investigation by the agency concerned. Therefore, this is a procedural compliance from the point of view of the court alone, and thus the investigating agency has got a limited role to play. In a case where the prosecution does not require custody of the Accused, there is no need for an arrest when a case is sent to the magistrate Under Section 170 of the Code. There is not even a need for filing a bail application, as the Accused is merely forwarded to the court for the framing of charges and issuance of process for trial. If the court is of the view that there is no need for any remand, then the court can fall back upon Section 88 of the Code and complete the formalities required to secure the presence of the Accused for the commencement of the trial. Of course, there may be a situation where a remand may be required, it is only in such cases that the Accused will have to be heard. Therefore, in such a situation, an opportunity will have to be given to the Accused persons, if the court is of the prima facie view that the remand would be required. We make it clear that we have not said anything on the cases in which the Accused persons are already in custody, for which, the bail application has to be decided on its own merits. Suffice it to state that for due compliance of Section 170 of the Code, there is no need for filing of a bail application. This Court in Siddharth v. State of U.P., MANU/SC/0600/2021 : (2021) 1 SCC 676, has held that:

There are judicial precedents available on the interpretation of the aforesaid provision albeit of the Delhi High Court.

5. In High Court of Delhi v. CBI [High Court of Delhi v. CBI, MANU/DE/0026/2004 : (2004) 72 DRJ 629], the Delhi High Court dealt with an argument similar to the contention of the Respondent that Section 170 Code of Criminal Procedure prevents the trial court from taking a charge- sheet on record unless the Accused is taken into custody. The relevant extracts are as under : (SCC OnLine Del paras 15- 16 & 19- 20)

15. Word "custody" appearing in this Section does not contemplate either police or judicial custody. It merely connotes the presentation of Accused by the investigating officer before the Court at the time of filing of the charge- sheet whereafter the role of the Court starts. Had it not been so the investigating officer would not have been vested with powers to release a person on bail in a bailable offence after finding that there was sufficient evidence to put the Accused on trial and it would have been obligatory upon him to produce such an Accused in custody before the Magistrate for being released on bail by the Court.

16. In case the police/investigating officer thinks it unnecessary to present the Accused in custody for the reason that the Accused would neither abscond nor would disobey the summons as he has been cooperating in investigation and investigation can be completed without arresting him, the IO is not obliged to produce such an Accused in custody.

19. It appears that the learned Special Judge was labouring under a misconception that in every non- bailable and cognizable offence the police is required to invariably arrest a person, even if it is not essential for the purpose of investigation.

20. Rather the law is otherwise. In normal and ordinary course the police should always avoid arresting a person and sending him to jail, if it is possible for the police to complete the investigation without his arrest and if every kind of cooperation is provided by the Accused to the investigating officer in completing the investigation. It is only in cases of utmost necessity, where the investigation cannot be completed without arresting the person, for instance, a person may be required for recovery of incriminating articles or weapon of offence or for eliciting some information or clue as to his accomplices or any circumstantial evidence, that his arrest may be necessary. Such an arrest may also be necessary if the investigating officer concerned or officer in charge of the police station thinks that presence of the Accused will be difficult to procure because of grave and serious nature of crime as the possibility of his absconding or disobeying the process or fleeing from justice cannot be ruled out.

6. In a subsequent judgment the Division Bench of the Delhi High Court in High Court of Delhi v. State [High Court of Delhi v. State, (2018) 254 DLT 641] relied on these observations in High Court of Delhi [High Court of Delhi v. CBI, MANU/DE/0026/2004 : (2004) 72 DRJ 629] and observed that it is not essential in every case involving a cognizable and non- bailable offence that an Accused be taken into custody when the charge- sheet/final report is filed.

7. The Delhi High Court is not alone in having adopted this view and other High Courts apparently have also followed suit on the proposition that criminal courts cannot refuse to accept a charge- sheet simply because the Accused has not been arrested and produced before the court.

8. In Deendayal Kishanchand v. State of Gujarat [Deendayal Kishanchand v. State of Gujarat, MANU/GJ/0130/1982 : 1983 Cri. LJ 1583], the High Court observed as under : (SCC OnLine Guj paras 2 & 8)

2. ... It was the case of the prosecution that two Accused i.e. present Petitioners 4 and 5, who are ladies, were not available to be produced before the court along with the charge- sheet, even though earlier they were released on bail. Therefore, as the court refused to accept the charge-sheet unless all the Accused are produced, the charge- sheet could not be submitted, and ultimately also, by a specific letter, it seems from the record, the charge- sheet was submitted without Accused 4 and 5. This is very clear from the evidence on record.

8. I must say at this stage that the refusal by criminal courts either through the learned Magistrate or through their office staff to accept the charge- sheet without production of the Accused persons is not justified by any provision of law. Therefore, it should be impressed upon all the courts that they should accept the charge- sheet whenever it is produced by the police with any endorsement to be made on the charge- sheet by the staff or the Magistrate pertaining to any omission or requirement in the charge- sheet. But when the police submits the charge- sheet, it is the duty of the court to accept it especially in view of the provisions of Section 468 of the Code which creates a limitation of taking cognizance of offence. Likewise, police authorities also should impress on all police officers that if charge- sheet is not accepted for any such reason, then attention of the Sessions Judge should be drawn to these facts and get suitable orders so that such difficulties would not arise henceforth.

9. We are in agreement with the aforesaid view of the High Courts and would like to give our imprimatur to the said judicial view. It has rightly been observed on consideration of Section 170 Code of Criminal Procedure that it does not impose an obligation on the officer- in- charge to arrest each and every Accused at the time of filing of the charge- sheet. We have, in fact, come across cases where the Accused has cooperated with the investigation throughout and yet on the charge- sheet being filed non- bailable warrants have been issued for his production premised on the requirement that there is an obligation to arrest the Accused and produce him before the court. We are of the view that if the investigating officer does not believe that the Accused will abscond or disobey summons he/she is not required to be produced in custody. The word "custody" appearing in Section 170 Code of Criminal Procedure does not contemplate either police or judicial custody but it merely connotes the presentation of the Accused by the investigating officer before the court while filing the charge- sheet.

10. We may note that personal liberty is an important aspect of our constitutional mandate. The occasion to arrest an Accused during investigation arises when custodial investigation becomes necessary or it is a heinous crime or where there is a possibility of influencing the witnesses or Accused may abscond. Merely because an arrest can be made because it is lawful does not mandate that arrest must be made. A distinction must be made between the existence of the power to arrest and the justification for exercise of it [Joginder Kumar v. State of U.P., MANU/SC/0311/1994 : (1994) 4 SCC 260 : 1994 SCC (Cri.) 1172]. If arrest is made routine, it can cause incalculable harm to the reputation and self- esteem of a person. If the investigating officer has no reason to believe that the Accused will abscond or disobey summons and has, in fact, throughout cooperated with the investigation we fail to appreciate why there should be a compulsion on the officer to arrest the Accused.

11. We are, in fact, faced with a situation where contrary to the observations in Joginder Kumar case [Joginder Kumar v. State of U.P., MANU/SC/0311/1994 : (1994) 4 SCC 260 : 1994 SCC (Cri.) 1172] how a police officer has to deal with a scenario of arrest, the trial courts are stated to be insisting on the arrest of an Accused as a prerequisite formality to take the charge- sheet on record in view of the provisions of Section 170 Code of Criminal Procedure. We consider such a course misplaced and contrary to the very intent of Section 170 Code of Criminal Procedure.

Section 204 and 209 of the Code

204. Issue of process.- - (1) If in the opinion of a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence there is sufficient ground for proceeding, and the case appears to be- -

(a) a summons- case, he shall issue his summons for the attendance of the Accused, or

(b) a warrant- case, he may issue a warrant, or, if he thinks fit, a summons, for causing the Accused to be brought or to appear at a certain time before such Magistrate or (if he has no jurisdiction himself) some other Magistrate having jurisdiction.

209. Commitment of case to Court of Session when offence is triable exclusively by it.- - When in a case instituted on a police report or otherwise, the Accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate and it appears to the Magistrate that the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, he shall- -

(a) commit, after complying with the provisions of Section 207 or Section 208, as the case may be, the case to the Court of Session, and subject to the provisions of this Code relating to bail, remand the Accused to custody until such commitment has been made;

(b) subject to the provisions of this Code relating to bail, remand the Accused to custody during, and until the conclusion of, the trial;

37. Section 204 of the Code speaks of issue of process while commencing the proceeding before the Magistrate. Sub- section (1)(b) gives a discretion to a Magistrate qua a warrant case, either to issue a warrant or a summons. As this provision gives a discretion, and being procedural in nature, it is to be exercised as a matter of course by following the prescription of Section 88 of the Code. Thus, issuing a warrant may be an exception in which case the Magistrate will have to give reasons.

38. Section 209 of the Code pertains to commitment of a case to a Court of Sessions by the Magistrate when the offence is triable exclusively by the said court. Sub- sections (a) and (b) of Section 209 of the Code give ample power to the Magistrate to remand a person into custody during or until the conclusion of the trial. Since the power is to be exercised by the Magistrate on a case- to- case basis, it is his wisdom in either remanding an Accused or granting bail. Even here, it is judicial discretion which the Magistrate has to exercise. As we have already dealt with the definition of bail, which in simple parlance means a release subject to the restrictions and conditions, a Magistrate can take a call even without an application for bail if he is inclined to do so. In such a case he can seek a bond or surety, and thus can take recourse to Section 88. However, if he is to remand the case for the reasons to be recorded, then the said person has to be heard. Here again, we make it clear that there is no need for a separate application and Magistrate is required to afford an opportunity and to pass a speaking order on bail.

Section 309 of the Code

39. This provision has been substituted by Act 13 of 2013 and Act 22 of 2018. It would be appropriate to reproduce the said provision for better appreciation:

309. Power to postpone or adjourn proceedings. - - (1) In every inquiry or trial the proceedings shall be continued from day- to- day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the Court finds the adjournment of the same beyond the following day to be necessary for reasons to be recorded:

Provided that when the inquiry or trial relates to an offence Under Section 376, [Section 376A, Section 376AB, Section 376B, Section 376C, Section 376D, Section 376DA or Section 376DB of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860), the inquiry or trial shall] be completed within a period of two months from the date of filing of the charge sheet.

(2) If the Court, after taking cognizance of an offence, or commencement of trial, finds it necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of, or adjourn, any inquiry or trial, it may, from time to time, for reasons to be recorded, postpone or adjourn the same on such terms as it thinks fit, for such time as it considers reasonable, and may by a warrant remand the Accused if in custody:

Provided that no Magistrate shall remand an Accused person to custody under this Section for a term exceeding fifteen days at a time:

Provided further that when witnesses are in attendance, no adjournment or postponement shall be granted, without examining them, except for special reasons to be recorded in writing:

Provided also that no adjournment shall be granted for the purpose only of enabling the Accused person to show cause against the sentence proposed to be imposed on him.

[Provided also that- -

(a) no adjournment shall be granted at the request of a party, except where the circumstances are beyond the control of that party;

(b) the fact that the pleader of a party is engaged in another Court, shall not be a ground for adjournment;

(c) where a witness is present in Court but a party or his pleader is not present or the party or his pleader though present in Court, is not ready to examine or cross- examine the witness, the Court may, if thinks fit, record the statement of the witness and pass such orders as it thinks fit dispensing with the examination- in- chief or cross- examination of the witness, as the case may be.]

Explanation 1.- - If sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the Accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, this is a reasonable cause for a remand.

Explanation 2.- - The terms on which an adjournment or postponement may be granted include, in appropriate cases, the payment of costs by the prosecution or the Accused.

40. Sub- section (1) mandates courts to continue the proceedings on a day- to- day basis till the completion of the evidence. Therefore, once a trial starts, it should reach the logical end. Various directions have been issued by this Court not to give unnecessary adjournments resulting in the witnesses being won over. However, the non- compliance of Section 309 continues with gay abandon. Perhaps courts alone cannot be faulted as there are multiple reasons that lead to such adjournments. Though the Section makes adjournments and that too not for a longer time period as an exception, they become the norm. We are touching upon this provision only to show that any delay on the part of the court or the prosecution would certainly violate Article 21. This is more so when the Accused person is under incarceration. This provision must be applied inuring to the benefit of the Accused while considering the application for bail. Whatever may be the nature of the offence, a prolonged trial, appeal or a revision against an Accused or a convict under custody or incarceration, would be violative of Article 21. While the courts will have to endeavour to complete at least the recording of the evidence of the private witnesses, as indicated by this Court on quite a few occasions, they shall make sure that the Accused does not suffer for the delay occasioned due to no fault of his own.

41. Sub- section (2) has to be read along with Sub- section (1). The proviso to Sub- section (2) restricts the period of remand to a maximum of 15 days at a time. The second proviso prohibits an adjournment when the witnesses are in attendance except for special reasons, which are to be recorded. Certain reasons for seeking adjournment are held to be permissible. One must read this provision from the point of view of the dispensation of justice. After all, right to a fair and speedy trial is yet another facet of Article 21. Therefore, while it is expected of the court to comply with Section 309 of the Code to the extent possible, an unexplained, avoidable and prolonged delay in concluding a trial, appeal or revision would certainly be a factor for the consideration of bail. This we hold so notwithstanding the beneficial provision Under Section 436A of the Code which stands on a different footing.

• Hussainara Khatoon and Ors. v. Home Secretary, State of Bihar, MANU/SC/0119/1979 : 1980 (1) SCC 81:

2. Though we issued notice to the State of Bihar two weeks ago, it is unfortunate that on February 5, 1979, no one has appeared on behalf of the State and we must, therefore, at this stage proceed on the basis that the allegations contained in the issues of the Indian Express dated January 8 and 9, 1979 which are incorporated in the writ petition are correct. The information contained in these newspaper cuttings is most distressing and it is sufficient to stir the conscience and disturb the equanimity of any socially motivated lawyer or judge. Some of the undertrial prisoners whose names are given in the newspaper cuttings have been in jail for as many as 5, 7 or 9 years and a few of them, even more than 10 years, without their trial having begun. What faith can these lost souls have in the judicial system which denies them a bare trial for so many years and keeps them behind bars, not because they are guilty, but because they are too poor to afford bail and the courts have no time to try them. It is a travesty of justice that many poor Accused, "little Indians, are forced into long cellular servitude for little offences" because the bail procedure is beyond their meagre means and trials don't commence and even if they do, they never conclude. There can be little doubt, after the dynamic interpretation placed by this Court on Article 21 in Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India MANU/SC/0133/1978 : [(1978) 2 SCR 621 : (1978) 1 SCC 248] that a procedure which keeps such large numbers of people behind bars without trial so long cannot possibly be regarded as 'reasonable, just or fair"' so as to be in conformity with the requirement of that article. It is necessary, therefore, that the law as enacted by the legislature and as administered by the courts must radically change its approach to pre- trial detention and ensure 'reasonable, just and fair' procedure which has creative connotation after Maneka Gandhi case MANU/SC/0133/1978 : [(1978) 2 SCR 621 : (1978) 1 SCC 248].

3. Now, one reason why our legal and judicial system continually denies justice to the poor by keeping them for long years in pre- trial detention is our highly unsatisfactory bail system. It suffers from a property oriented approach which seems to proceed on the erroneous assumption that risk of monetary loss is the only deterrent against fleeing from justice. The Code of Criminal Procedure, even after its re- enactment, continues to adopt the same antiquated approach as the earlier Code enacted towards the end of the last century and where an Accused is to be released on his personal bond, it insists that the bond should contain a monetary obligation requiring the Accused to pay a sum of money in case he fails to appear at the trial. Moreover, as if this were not sufficient deterrent to the poor, the courts mechanically and as a matter of course insist that the Accused should produce sureties who will stand bail for him and these sureties must again establish their solvency to be able to pay up the amount of the bail in case the Accused fails to appear to answer the charge. This system of bails operates very harshly against the poor and it is only the non- poor who are able to take advantage of it by getting themselves released on bail. The poor find it difficult to furnish bail even without sureties because very often the amount of the bail fixed by the courts is so unrealistically excessive that in a majority of cases the poor are unable to satisfy the police or the Magistrate about their solvency for the amount of the bail and where the bail is with sureties, as is usually the case, it becomes an almost impossible task for the poor to find persons sufficiently solvent to stand as sureties. The result is that either they are fleeced by the police and revenue officials or by touts and professional sureties and sometimes they have even to incur debts for securing their release or, being unable to obtain release, they have to remain in jail until such time as the court is able to take up their cases for trial, leading to grave consequences, namely, (1) though presumed innocent, they are subjected to psychological and physical deprivations of jail life, (2) they are prevented from contributing to the preparation of their defence, and (3) they lose their job, if they have one, and are deprived of an opportunity to work to support themselves and their family members with the result that the burden of their detention almost invariably falls heavily on the innocent members of the family. It is here that the poor find our legal and judicial system oppressive and heavily weighted against them and a feeling of frustration and despair occurs upon them as they find that they are helplessly in a position of inequality with the non- poor. The Legal Aid Committee appointed by the Government of Gujarat under the chairmanship of one of us, Mr. Justice Bhagwati, emphasised this glaring inequality in the following words:

The bail system, as we see it administered in the criminal courts today, is extremely unsatisfactory and needs drastic change. In the first place it is virtually impossible to translate risk of non-appearance by the Accused into precise monetary terms and even its basic premise that risk of financial loss is necessary to prevent the Accused from fleeing is of doubtful validity. There are several considerations which deter an Accused from running away from justice and risk of financial loss is only one of them and that too not a major one. The experience of enlightened Bail Projects in the United States such as Manhattan Bail Project and D.C. Bail Project shows that even without monetary bail it has been possible to secure the presence of the Accused at the trial in quite a large number of cases. Moreover, the bail system causes discrimination against the poor since the poor would not be able to furnish bail on account of their poverty while the wealthier persons otherwise similarly situate would be able to secure their freedom because they can afford to furnish bail. This discrimination arises even if the amount of the bail is fixed by the Magistrate is not high, for a large majority of those who are brought before the courts in criminal cases are so poor that they would find it difficult to furnish bail even in a small amount.

The Gujarat Committee also pointed out how the practice of fixing the amount of bail with reference to the nature of the charge without taking into account relevant factors, such as the individual financial circumstances of the Accused and the probability of his fleeing before trial, is harsh and oppressive and discriminates against the poor:

The discriminatory nature of the bail system becomes all the more acute by reason of the mechanical way in which it is customarily operated. It is no doubt true that theoretically the Magistrate has broad discretion in fixing the amount of bail but in practice it seems that the amount of bail depends almost always on the seriousness of the offence. It is fixed according to a Schedule related to the nature of the charge. Little weight is given either to the probability that the Accused will attempt to flee before his trial or to his individual financial circumstances, the very factors which seem most relevant if the purpose of bail is to assure the appearance of the Accused at the trial. The result of ignoring these factors and fixing the amount of bail mechanically having regard only to the seriousness of the offence is to discriminate against the poor who are not in the same position as the rich as regards capacity to furnish bail. The courts by ignoring the differential capacity of the rich and the poor to furnish bail and treating them equally produce inequality between the rich and the poor: the rich who is charged with the same offence in the same circumstances is able to secure his release while the poor is unable to do so on account of his poverty. These are some of the major defects in the bail system as it is operated today.

The same anguish was expressed by President Lyndon B. Johnson at the time of signing the Bail Reforms Act, 1966:

Today, we join to recognise a major development in our system of criminal justice: the reform of the bail system.

This system has endured- - archaic, unjust and virtually unexamined - - since the Judiciary Act of 1789.

The principal purpose of bail is to insure that an Accused person will return for trial if he is released after arrest.

How is that purpose met under the present system? The Defendant with means can afford to pay bail. He can afford to buy his freedom. But poorer Defendant cannot pay the price. He languishes in jail weeks, months and perhaps even years before trial.

He does not stay in jail because he is guilty.

He does not stay in jail because any sentence has been passed.

He does not stay in jail because he is any more likely to flee before trial.

He stays in jail for one reason only- - because he is poor....

The bail system, as it operates today, is a source of great hardship to the poor and if we really want to eliminate the evil effects of poverty and assure a fair and just treatment to the poor in the administration of justice, it is imperative that the bail system should be thoroughly reformed so that it should be possible for the poor, as easily as the rich, to obtain pre- trial release without jeopardising the interest of justice.

4. It is high time that our Parliament realises that risk of monetary loss is not the only deterrent against fleeing from justice, but there are also other factors which act as equal deterrents against fleeing. Ours is a socialist republic with social justice as the signature tune of our Constitution and Parliament would do well to consider whether it would not be more consonant with the ethos of our Constitution that instead of risk of financial loss, other relevant considerations such as family ties, roots in the community, job security, membership of stable organisations etc., should be the determinative factors in grant of bail and the Accused should in appropriate cases be released on his personal bond without monetary obligation. Of course, it may be necessary in such a case to provide by an amendment of the penal law that if the Accused wilfully fails to appear in compliance with the promise contained in his personal bond, he shall be liable to penal action. But even under the law as it stands today the courts must abandon the antiquated concept under which pre- trial release is ordered only against bail with sureties. That concept is outdated and experience has shown that it has done more harm than good. The new insight into the subject of pre- trial release which has been developed in socially advanced countries and particularly the United States should now inform the decisions of our courts in regard to pre- trial release. If the Court is satisfied, after taking into account, on the basis of information placed before it, that the Accused has his roots in the community and is not likely to abscond, it can safely release the Accused on his personal bond. To determine whether the Accused has his roots in the community which would deter him from fleeing, the Court should take into account the following factors concerning the Accused:

1. The length of his residence in the community,

2. his employment status, history and his financial condition,

3. his family ties and relationships,

4. his reputation, character and monetary condition,

5. his prior criminal record including any record of prior release on recognizance or on bail,

6. the identity of responsible members of the community who would vouch for his reliability,

7. the nature of the offence charged and the apparent probability of conviction and the likely sentence insofar as these factors are relevant to the risk of non- appearance, and

8. any other factors indicating the ties of the Accused to the community or bearing on the risk of wilful failure to appear.

If the court is satisfied on a consideration of the relevant factors that the Accused has his ties in the community and there is no substantial risk of non- appearance, the Accused may, as far as possible, be released on his personal bond. Of course, if facts are brought to the notice of the court which go to show that having regard to the condition and background of the Accused, his previous record and the nature and circumstances of the offence, there may be a substantial risk of his non- appearance at the trial, as for example, where the Accused is a notorious bad character or a confirmed criminal or the offence is serious (these examples are only by way of illustration), the Court may not release the Accused on his personal bond and may insist on bail with sureties. But in the majority of cases, considerations like family ties and relationship, roots in the community, employment status etc. may prevail with the Court in releasing the Accused on his personal bond and particularly in cases where the offence is not grave and the Accused is poor or belongs to a weaker Section of the community, release on personal bond could, as far as possible, be preferred. But even while releasing the Accused on personal bond it is necessary to caution the Court that the amount of the bond which it fixes should not be based merely on the nature of the charge. The decision as regards the amount of the bond should be an individualised decision depending on the individual financial circumstances of the Accused and the probability of his absconding. The amount of the bond should be determined having regard to these relevant factors and should not be fixed mechanically according to a Schedule keyed to the nature of the charge. Otherwise, it would be difficult for the Accused to secure his release even by executing a personal bond. Moreover, when the Accused is released on his personal bond, it would be very harsh and oppressive if he is required to satisfy the Court- - and what we have said here in regard to the court must apply equally in relation to the police while granting bail- - that he is solvent enough to pay the amount of the bond if he fails to appear at the trial and in consequence the bond is forfeited. The inquiry into the solvency of the Accused can become a source of great harassment to him and often result in denial of bail and deprivation of liberty and should not, therefore, be insisted upon as a condition of acceptance of the personal bond. We have no doubt that if the system of bail, even under the existing law, is administered in the manner we have indicated in this judgment, it would go a long way towards relieving hardship of the poor and help them to secure pre- trial release from incarceration. It is for this reason we have directed the undertrial prisoners whose names are given in the two issues of the Indian Express should be released forthwith on their personal bond. We should have ordinarily said that personal bond to be executed by them should be with monetary obligation but we directed as an exceptional measure that there need be no monetary obligation in the personal bond because we found that all these persons have been in jail without trial for several years, and in some cases for offences for which the punishment would in all probability be less than the period of their detention and, moreover, the order we were making was merely an interim order. The peculiar facts and circumstances of the case dictated such an unusual course.

5. There is also one other infirmity of the legal and judicial system which is responsible for this gross denial of justice to the undertrial prisoners and that is the notorious delay in disposal of cases. It is a sad reflection on the legal and judicial system that the trial of an Accused should not even commence for a long number of years. Even a delay of one year in the commencement of the trial is bad enough: how much worse could it be when the delay is as long as 3 or 5 or 7 or even 10 years. Speedy trial is of the essence of criminal justice and there can be no doubt that delay in trial by itself constitutes denial of justice. It is interesting to note that in the United States, speedy trial is one of the constitutionally guaranteed rights. The Sixth Amendment to the Constitution provides that:

In all criminal prosecutions, the Accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial.

So also Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights provides that:

Every one arrested or detained. . . shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial.

We think that even under our Constitution, though speedy trial is not specifically enumerated as a fundamental right, it is implicit in the broad sweep and content of Article 21 as interpreted by this Court in Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India MANU/SC/0133/1978 : [(1978) 2 SCR 621 : (1978) 1 SCC 248]. We have held in that case that Article 21 confers a fundamental right on every person not to be deprived of his life or liberty except in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law and it is not enough to constitute compliance with the requirement of that Article that some semblance of a procedure should be prescribed by law, but that the procedure should be "reasonable, fair and just". If a person is deprived of his liberty under a procedure which is not "reasonable, fair or just", such deprivation would be violative of his fundamental right Under Article 21, and he would be entitled to enforce such fundamental right and secure his release. Now obviously procedure prescribed by law for depriving a person of liberty cannot be 'reasonable, fair or just' unless that procedure ensures a speedy trial for determination of the guilt of such person. No procedure which does not ensure a reasonably quick trial can be regarded as 'reasonable, fair or just' and it would fall foul of Article 21. There can, therefore, be no doubt that speedy trial, and by speedy trial we mean reasonably expeditious trial, is an integral and essential part of the fundamental right to life and liberty enshrined in Article 21. The question which would, however, arise is as to what would be the consequence if a person Accused of an offence is denied speedy trial and is sought to be deprived of his liberty by imprisonment as a result of a long- delayed trial in violation of his fundamental right Under Article 21. Would he be entitled to be released unconditionally freed from the charge levelled against him on the ground that trying him after an unduly long period of time and convicting him after such trial would constitute violation of his fundamental right Under Article 21. That is a question we shall have to consider when we hear the writ petition on merits on the adjourned date. But one thing is certain, and we cannot impress it too strongly on the State Government that it is high time that the State Government realized its responsibility to the people in the matter of administration of justice and set up more courts for the trial of cases. We may point out that it would not be enough merely to establish more courts but the State Government would also have to man them by competent Judges and whatever is necessary for the purpose of recruiting competent Judges, such as improving their conditions of service, would have to be done by the State Government, if they want to improve the system of administration of justice and make it an effective instrument for reaching justice to the large masses of people for whom justice is today a meaningless and empty word.

- Hussain and Anr. v. Union of India and Ors., MANU/SC/0274/2017 : 2017 (5) SCC 702:

28. Judicial service as well as legal service are not like any other services. They are missions for serving the society. The mission is not achieved if the litigant who is waiting in the queue does not get his turn for a long time. The Chief Justices and Chief Ministers have resolved that all cases must be disposed of within five years which by any standard is quite a long time for a case to be decided in the first court. Decision of cases of undertrials in custody is one of the priority areas. There are obstructions at every level in enforcement of right of speedy trial- - vested interests or unscrupulous elements try to delay the proceedings. Lack of infrastructure is another handicap. In spite of all odds, determined efforts are required at every level for success of the mission. Ways and means have to be found out by constant thinking and monitoring. The Presiding Officer of a court cannot rest in a state of helplessness. This is the constitutional responsibility of the State to provide necessary infrastructure and of the High Courts to monitor the functioning of subordinate courts to ensure timely disposal of cases. The first step in this direction is preparation of an appropriate action plan at the level of the High Court and thereafter at the level of each and every individual judicial officer. Implementation of the action plan will require serious efforts and constant monitoring.

29. To sum up:

29.1. The High Courts may issue directions to subordinate courts that- -

29.1.1. Bail applications be disposed of normally within one week;

29.1.2. Magisterial trials, where Accused are in custody, be normally concluded within six months and sessions trials where Accused are in custody be normally concluded within two years;

29.1.3. Efforts be made to dispose of all cases which are five years old by the end of the year;

29.1.4. As a supplement to Section 436- A, but consistent with the spirit thereof, if an undertrial has completed period of custody in excess of the sentence likely to be awarded if conviction is recorded such undertrial must be released on personal bond. Such an assessment must be made by the trial courts concerned from time to time;

29.1.5. The above timelines may be the touchstone for assessment of judicial performance in annual confidential reports.

29.2. The High Courts are requested to ensure that bail applications filed before them are decided as far as possible within one month and criminal appeals where Accused are in custody for more than five years are concluded at the earliest;

29.3. The High Courts may prepare, issue and monitor appropriate action plans for the subordinate courts;

29.4. The High Courts may monitor steps for speedy investigation and trials on administrative and judicial side from time to time;

29.5. The High Courts may take such stringent measures as may be found necessary in the light of judgment of this Court in Harish Uppal [Harish Uppal v. Union of India, MANU/SC/1141/2002 : (2003) 2 SCC 45].

30. Accordingly, we request the Chief Justices of all the High Courts to forthwith take appropriate steps consistent with the directions of this Court in Hussainara Khatoon [Hussainara Khatoon (7) v. State of Bihar, MANU/SC/0760/1995 : (1995) 5 SCC 326 : 1995 SCC (Cri.) 913], Akhtari Bi [Akhtari Bi v. Union of India, MANU/SC/1141/2002 : (2003) 2 SCC 45] and Resolution of Chief Justices' Conference and observations hereinabove and to have appropriate monitoring mechanism in place on the administrative side as well as on the judicial side for speeding up disposal of cases of undertrials pending in subordinate courts and appeals pending in the High Courts.

• Surinder Singh @ Shingara Singh v. State Of Punjab, MANU/SC/0541/2005 : 2005 (7) SCC 387:

8. It is no doubt true that this Court has repeatedly emphasised the fact that speedy trial is a fundamental right implicit in the broad sweep and content of Article 21 of the Constitution. The aforesaid Article confers a fundamental right on every person not to be deprived of his life or liberty except in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law. If a person is deprived of his liberty under a procedure which is not reasonable, fair, or just, such deprivation would be violative of his fundamental right Under Article 21 of the Constitution. It has also been emphasised by this Court that the procedure so prescribed must ensure a speedy trial for determination of the guilt of such person. It is conceded that some amount of deprivation of personal liberty cannot be avoided, but if the period of deprivation pending trial becomes unduly long, the fairness assured by Article 21 would receive a jolt. These are observations made in several decisions of this Court dealing with the subject of speedy trial. In this case, we are concerned with the case where a person has been found guilty of an offence punishable Under Section 302 Indian Penal Code and who has been sentenced to imprisonment for life. The Code of Criminal Procedure affords a right of appeal to such a convict. The difficulty arises when the appeal preferred by such a convict cannot be disposed of within a reasonable time. In Kashmira Singh v. State of Punjab [MANU/SC/0099/1977 : (1977) 4 SCC 291 : 1977 SCC (Cri.) 559] this Court dealt with such a case. It is observed: (SCC pp. 292- 93, para 2)

The practice not to release on bail a person who has been sentenced to life imprisonment was evolved in the High Courts and in this Court on the basis that once a person has been found guilty and sentenced to life imprisonment, he should not be let loose, so long as his conviction and sentence are not set aside, but the underlying postulate of this practice was that the appeal of such person would be disposed of within a measurable distance of time, so that if he is ultimately found to be innocent, he would not have to remain in jail for an unduly long period. The rationale of this practice can have no application where the Court is not in a position to dispose of the appeal for five or six years. It would indeed be a travesty of justice to keep a person in jail for a period of five or six years for an offence which is ultimately found not to have been committed by him. Can the Court ever compensate him for his incarceration which is found to be unjustified? Would it be just at all for the Court to tell a person: 'We have admitted your appeal because we think you have a prima facie case, but unfortunately we have no time to hear your appeal for quite a few years and, therefore, until we hear your appeal, you must remain in jail, even though you may be innocent?' What confidence would such administration of justice inspire in the mind of the public? It may quite conceivably happen, and it has in fact happened in a few cases in this Court, that a person may serve out his full term of imprisonment before his appeal is taken up for hearing. Would a judge not be overwhelmed with a feeling of contrition while acquitting such a person after hearing the appeal? Would it not be an affront to his sense of justice? Of what avail would the acquittal be to such a person who has already served out his term of imprisonment or at any rate a major part of it? It is, therefore, absolutely essential that the practice which this Court has been following in the past must be reconsidered and so long as this Court is not in a position to hear the appeal of an Accused within a reasonable period of time, the Court should ordinarily, unless there are cogent grounds for acting otherwise, release the Accused on bail in cases where special leave has been granted to the Accused to appeal against his conviction and sentence.

9. Similar observations are found in some of the other decisions of this Court which have been brought to our notice. But, however, it is significant to note that all these decisions only lay down broad guidelines which the courts must bear in mind while dealing with an application for grant of bail to an Appellant before the court. None of the decisions lay down any invariable Rule for grant of bail on completion of a specified period of detention in custody. Indeed in a discretionary matter, like grant or refusal of bail, it would be impossible to lay down any invariable Rule or evolve a straitjacket formula. The court must exercise its discretion having regard to all the relevant facts and circumstances. What the relevant facts and circumstances are, which the court must keep in mind, has been laid down over the years by the courts in this country in a large number of decisions which are well known. It is, therefore, futile to attempt to lay down any invariable Rule or formula in such matters.

10. The counsel for the parties submitted before us that though it has been so understood by the courts in Punjab, the decision of the Punjab and Haryana High Court in Dharam Pal case [(2000) 1 Chan LR 74] only lays down guidelines and not any invariable rule. Unfortunately, the decision has been misunderstood by the Court in view of the manner in which the principles have been couched in the aforesaid judgment. After considering the various decisions of this Court and the difficulties faced by the courts, the High Court in Dharam Pal case [(2000) 1 Chan LR 74] observed: (Chan LR p. 87, para 18)

We, therefore, direct that life convicts, who have undergone at least five years of imprisonment of which at least three years should be after conviction, should be released on bail pending the hearing of their appeals should they make an application for this purpose. We are also of the opinion that the same principles ought to apply to those convicted by the courts martial and such prisoners should also be entitled to release after seeking a suspension of their sentences. We further direct that the period of five years would be reduced to four for females and minors, with at least two years imprisonment after conviction. We, however, clarify that these directions shall not be applicable in cases where the very grant of bail is forbidden by law.

Section 389 of the Code

389. Suspension of sentence pending the appeal; release of Appellant on bail.- - (1) Pending any appeal by a convicted person, the Appellate Court may, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, order that the execution of the sentence or order appealed against be suspended and, also, if he is in confinement, that he be released on bail, or on his own bond.

Provided that the Appellate Court shall, before releasing on bail or on his own bond a convicted person who is convicted of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of not less than ten years, shall give opportunity to the Public Prosecutor for showing cause in writing against such release:

Provided further that in cases where a convicted person is released on bail it shall be open to the Public Prosecutor to file an application for the cancellation of the bail.

(2) The power conferred by this Section on an Appellate Court may be exercised also by the High Court in the case of an appeal by a convicted person to a Court subordinate thereto.

(3) Where the convicted person satisfies the Court by which he is convicted that he intends to present an appeal, the Court shall,- -

(i) where such person, being on bail, is sentenced to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or

(ii) where the offence of which such person has been convicted is a bailable one, and he is on bail, order that the convicted person be released on bail, unless there are special reasons for refusing bail, for such period as will afford sufficient time to present the appeal and obtain the orders of the Appellate Court Under Sub- section (1), and the sentence of imprisonment shall, so long as he is so released on bail, be deemed to be suspended.

(4) When the Appellant is ultimately sentenced to imprisonment for a term or to imprisonment for life, the time during which he is so released shall be excluded in computing the term for which he is so sentenced.

42. Section 389 of the Code concerns itself with circumstances pending appeal leading to the release of the Appellant on bail. The power exercisable Under Section 389 is different from that of the one either Under Section 437 or Under Section 439 of the Code, pending trial. This is for the reason that "presumption of innocence" and "bail is the Rule and jail is the exception" may not be available to the Appellant who has suffered a conviction. A mere pendency of an appeal per se would not be a factor.

43. A suspension of sentence is an act of keeping the sentence in abeyance, pending the final adjudication. Though delay in taking up the main appeal would certainly be a factor and the benefit available Under Section 436A would also be considered, the Courts will have to see the relevant factors including the conviction rendered by the trial court. When it is so apparent that the appeals are not likely to be taken up and disposed of, then the delay would certainly be a factor in favour of the Appellant.

44. Thus, we hold that the delay in taking up the main appeal or revision coupled with the benefit conferred Under Section 436A of the Code among other factors ought to be considered for a favourable release on bail.

- Atul Tripathi v. State of U.P. and Anr., MANU/SC/0627/2014 : 2014 (9) SCC 177:

13. It may be seen that there is a marked difference between the procedure for consideration of bail Under Section 439, which is pre- conviction stage and Section 389 Code of Criminal Procedure, which is post- conviction stage. In case of Section 439, the Code provides that only notice to the public prosecutor unless impractical be given before granting bail to a person who is Accused of an offence which is triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions or where the punishment for the offence is imprisonment for life; whereas in the case of post- conviction bail Under Section 389 Code of Criminal Procedure, where the conviction in respect of a serious offence having punishment with death or life imprisonment or imprisonment for a term not less than ten years, it is mandatory that the appellate court gives an opportunity to the public prosecutor for showing cause in writing against such release.

14. ...in case the appellate court is inclined to consider the release of the convict on bail, the public prosecutor shall be granted an opportunity to show cause in writing as to why the Appellant be not released on bail. Such a stringent provision is introduced only to ensure that the court is apprised of all the relevant factors so that the court may consider whether it is an appropriate case for release having regard to the manner in which the crime is committed, gravity of the offence, age, criminal antecedents of the convict, impact on public confidence in the justice-delivery system, etc. Despite such an opportunity being granted to the Public Prosecutor, in case no cause is shown in writing, the appellate court shall record that the State has not filed any objection in writing. This procedure is intended to ensure transparency, to ensure that there is no allegation of collusion and to ensure that the court is properly assisted by the State with true and correct facts with regard to the relevant considerations for grant of bail in respect of serious offences, at the post- conviction stage.

- Angana v. State of Rajasthan, MANU/SC/0133/2009 : (2009) 3 SCC 767:

14. When an appeal is preferred against conviction in the High Court, the Court has ample power and discretion to suspend the sentence, but that discretion has to be exercised judiciously depending on the facts and circumstances of each case. While considering the suspension of sentence, each case is to be considered on the basis of nature of the offence, manner in which occurrence had taken place, whether in any manner bail granted earlier had been misused. In fact, there is no straitjacket formula which can be applied in exercising the discretion. The facts and circumstances of each case will govern the exercise of judicial discretion while considering the application filed by the convict Under Section 389 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

- Sunil Kumar v. Vipin Kumar MANU/SC/0673/2014 : (2014) 8 SCC 868:

13. We have heard the rival legal contentions raised by both the parties. We are of the opinion that the High Court has rightly applied its discretionary power Under Section 389 Code of Criminal Procedure to enlarge the Respondents on bail. Firstly, both the criminal appeal and criminal revision filed by both the parties are pending before the High Court which means that the convictions of the Respondents are not confirmed by the appellate court. Secondly, it is an admitted fact that the Respondents had been granted bail earlier and they did not misuse the liberty. Also, the Respondents had conceded to the occurrence of the incident though with a different version.

14. We are of the opinion that the High Court has taken into consideration all the relevant facts including the fact that the chance of the appeal being heard in the near future is extremely remote, hence, the High Court has released the Respondents on bail on the basis of sound legal reasoning. We do not wish to interfere with the decision of the High Court at this stage. The appeal is dismissed accordingly.

45. However, we hasten to add that if the court is inclined to release the Appellant on bail, it has to be predicated on his own bond as facilitated by Sub- section (1).

Section 436A of the Code

436A. Maximum period for which an undertrial prisoner can be detained.- - Where a person has, during the period of investigation, inquiry or trial under this Code of an offence under any law (not being an offence for which the punishment of death has been specified as one of the punishments under that law) undergone detention for a period extending up to one- half of the maximum period of imprisonment specified for that offence under that law, he shall be released by the Court on his personal bond with or without sureties:

Provided that the Court may, after hearing the Public Prosecutor and for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, order the continued detention of such person for a period longer than one- half of the said period or release him on bail instead of the personal bond with or without sureties:

Provided further that no such person shall in any case be detained during the period of investigation, inquiry or trial for more than the maximum period of imprisonment provided for the said offence under that law.

Explanation.- - In computing the period of detention under this Section for granting bail, the period of detention passed due to delay in proceeding caused by the Accused shall be excluded.

46. Section 436A of the Code has been inserted by Act 25 of 2005. This provision has got a laudable object behind it, particularly from the point of view of granting bail. This provision draws the maximum period for which an undertrial prisoner can be detained. This period has to be reckoned with the custody of the Accused during the investigation, inquiry and trial. We have already explained that the word 'trial' will have to be given an expanded meaning particularly when an appeal or admission is pending. Thus, in a case where an appeal is pending for a longer time, to bring it Under Section 436A, the period of incarceration in all forms will have to be reckoned, and so also for the revision.

47. Under this provision, when a person has undergone detention for a period extending to one-half of the maximum period of imprisonment specified for that offense, he shall be released by the court on his personal bond with or without sureties. The word 'shall' clearly denotes the mandatory compliance of this provision. We do feel that there is not even a need for a bail application in a case of this nature particularly when the reasons for delay are not attributable against the Accused. We are also conscious of the fact that while taking a decision the public prosecutor is to be heard, and the court, if it is of the view that there is a need for continued detention longer than one- half of the said period, has to do so. However, such an exercise of power is expected to be undertaken sparingly being an exception to the general rule. Once again, we have to reiterate that 'bail is the Rule and jail is an exception' coupled with the principle governing the presumption of innocence. We have no doubt in our mind that this provision is a substantive one, facilitating liberty, being the core intendment of Article 21. The only caveat as furnished under the Explanation being the delay in the proceeding caused on account of the Accused to be excluded. This Court in Bhim Singh v. Union of India, MANU/SC/0786/2014 : (2015) 13 SCC 605, while dealing with the aforesaid provision, has directed that:

5. Having given our thoughtful consideration to the legislative policy engrafted in Section 436- A and large number of undertrial prisoners housed in the prisons, we are of the considered view that some order deserves to be passed by us so that the undertrial prisoners do not continue to be detained in prison beyond the maximum period provided Under Section 436- A.

6. We, accordingly, direct that jurisdictional Magistrate/Chief Judicial Magistrate/Sessions Judge shall hold one sitting in a week in each jail/prison for two months commencing from 1- 10- 2014 for the purposes of effective implementation of Section 436- A of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In its sittings in jail, the above judicial officers shall identify the undertrial prisoners who have completed half period of the maximum period or maximum period of imprisonment provided for the said offence under the law and after complying with the procedure prescribed Under Section 436- A pass an appropriate order in jail itself for release of such undertrial prisoners who fulfil the requirement of Section 436- A for their release immediately. Such jurisdictional Magistrate/Chief Judicial Magistrate/Sessions Judge shall submit the report of each of such sittings to the Registrar General of the High Court and at the end of two months, the Registrar General of each High Court shall submit the report to the Secretary General of this Court without any delay. To facilitate compliance with the above order, we direct the Jail Superintendent of each jail/prison to provide all necessary facilities for holding the court sitting by the above judicial officers. A copy of this order shall be sent to the Registrar General of each High Court, who in turn will communicate the copy of the order to all Sessions Judges within his State for necessary compliance.

48. The aforesaid directions issued by this Court if not complied fully, are expected to be complied with in order to prevent the unnecessary incarceration of undertrials, and to uphold the inviolable principle of presumption of innocence until proven guilty.

Section 437 of the Code

437. When bail may be taken in case of non- bailable offence.- - [(1) When any person Accused of, or suspected of, the commission of any non- bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station or appears or is brought before a Court other than the High Court or Court of session, he may be released on bail, but- -

(i) such person shall not be so released if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life;

(ii) such person shall not be so released if such offence is a cognizable offence and he had been previously convicted of an offence punishable with death, imprisonment for life or imprisonment for seven years or more, or he had been previously convicted on two or more occasions of a cognizable offence punishable with imprisonment for three years or more but not less than seven years:

Provided that the Court may direct that a person referred to in Clause (i) or Clause (ii) be released on bail if such person is under the age of sixteen years or is a woman or is sick or infirm:

Provided further that the Court may also direct that a person referred to in Clause (ii) be released on bail if it is satisfied that it is just and proper so to do for any other special reason:

Provided also that the mere fact that an Accused person may be required for being identified by witnesses during investigation shall not be sufficient ground for refusing to grant bail if he is otherwise entitled to be released on bail and gives an undertaking that he shall comply with such directions as may be given by the Court:]

Provided also that no person shall, if the offence alleged to have been committed by him is punishable with death, imprisonment for life, or imprisonment for seven years or more, be released on bail by the Court under this Sub- section without giving an opportunity of hearing to the Public Prosecutor.

(2) If it appears to such officer or Court at any stage of the investigation, inquiry or trial, as the case may be, that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the Accused has committed a non- bailable offence, but that there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt, the Accused shall, subject to the provisions of Section 446A and pending such inquiry, be released on bail, or, at the discretion of such officer or Court, on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance as hereinafter provided.

(3) When a person Accused or suspected of the commission of an offence punishable with imprisonment which may extend to seven years or more or of an offence under Chapter VI, Chapter XVI or Chapter XVII of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860) or abatement of, or conspiracy or attempt to commit, any such offence, is released on bail Under Sub- section (1), the Court shall impose the conditions,- -

(a) that such person shall attend in accordance with the conditions of the bond executed under this Chapter,

(b) that such person shall not commit an offence similar to the offence of which he is Accused, or suspected, of the commission of which he is suspected, and

(c) that such person shall not directly or indirectly make any inducement, threat or promise to any person acquainted with the facts of the case so as to dissuade him from disclosing such facts to the Court or to any police officer or tamper with the evidence, and may also impose, in the interests of justice, such other conditions as it considers necessary.]

(4) An officer or a Court releasing any person on bail Under Sub- section (1) or Sub- section (2), shall record in writing his or its reasons or special reasons for so doing.

(5) Any Court which has released a person on bail Under Sub- section (1) or Sub- section (2), may, if it considers it necessary so to do, direct that such person be arrested and commit him to custody.

(6) If, in any case triable by a Magistrate, the trial of a person Accused of any non- bailable offence is not concluded within a period of sixty days from the first date fixed for taking evidence in the case, such person shall, if he is in custody during the whole of the said period, be released on bail to the satisfaction of the Magistrate, unless for reasons to be recorded in writing, the Magistrate otherwise directs.

(7) If, at any time, after the conclusion of the trial of a person Accused of a non- bailable offence and before judgment is delivered, the Court is of opinion that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the Accused is not guilty of any such offence, it shall release the Accused, if he is in custody, on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance to hear judgment delivered.

49. Seeking to impeach Warren Hastings for his activities during the colonial period, Sir Edmund Burke made the following famous statement in "The World's Famous Orations" authored by Bryan, William Jennings, published by New York: Funk and Wagnalls Company, 1906:

Law and arbitrary power are in eternal enmity. Name me a magistrate, and I will name property; name me power, and I will name protection. It is a contradiction in terms, it is blasphemy in religion, it is wickedness in politics, to say that any man can have arbitrary power. In every patent of office the duty is included. For what else does a magistrate exist? To suppose for power is an absurdity in idea. Judges are guided and governed by the eternal laws of justice, to which we are all subject. We may bite our chains, if we will, but we shall be made to know ourselves, and be taught that man is born to be governed by law; and he that will substitute will in the place of it is an enemy to God.

50. Section 437 of the Code is a provision dealing with bail in case of non- bailable offenses by a court other than the High Court or a Court of Sessions. Here again, bail is the Rule but the exception would come when the court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds that the Accused has been guilty of the offense punishable either with death or imprisonment for life. Similarly, if the said person is previously convicted of an offense punishable with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for seven years or more or convicted previously on two or more occasions, the Accused shall not be released on bail by the magistrate.

51. Proviso to Section 437 of the Code mandates that when the Accused is under the age of sixteen years, sick or infirm or being a woman, is something which is required to be taken note of. Obviously, the court has to satisfy itself that the Accused person is sick or infirm. In a case pertaining to women, the court is expected to show some sensitivity. We have already taken note of the fact that many women who commit cognizable offenses are poor and illiterate. In many cases, upon being young they have children to take care of, and there are many instances when the children are to live in prisons. The statistics would show that more than 1000 children are living in prisons along with their mothers. This is an aspect that the courts are expected to take note of as it would not only involve the interest of the Accused, but also the children who are not expected to get exposed to the prisons. There is a grave danger of their being inherited not only with poverty but with crime as well.

52. The power of a court is quite enormous while exercising the power Under Section 437. Apart from the general principle which we have discussed, the court is also empowered to grant bail on special reasons. The said power has to be exercised keeping in view the mandate of Section 41 and 41A of the Code as well. If there is a proper exercise of power either by the investigating agencies or by the court, the majority of the problem of the undertrials would be taken care of.

53. The proviso to Section 437 warrants an opportunity to be afforded to the learned Public Prosecutor while considering an offense punishable with death, imprisonment for life, or imprisonment for seven years or more. Though, this proviso appears to be contrary to the main provision contained in Section 437(1) which, by way of a positive direction, prohibits the Magistrate from releasing a person guilty of an offense punishable with either death or imprisonment for life. It is trite that a proviso has to be understood in the teeth of the main provision. Section 437(1)(i) operates in a different field. The object is to exclude the offense exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions. Thus, one has to understand the proviso by a combined reading of Sections 437 and 439 of the Code, as the latter provision reiterates the aforesaid provision to the exclusion of the learned Magistrate over an offense triable exclusively by a Court of Sessions. To make the position clear, if the Magistrate has got the jurisdiction to try an offense for which the maximum punishment is either life or death, when such jurisdiction is conferred on the learned Magistrate, it goes without saying that the power to release the Accused on bail for the offense alleged also can be exercised. This Court in Prahlad Singh Bhati v. NCT, Delhi, MANU/SC/0193/2001 : (2001) 4 SCC 280 has held:

7. Powers of the Magistrate, while dealing with the applications for grant of bail, are regulated by the punishment prescribed for the offence in which the bail is sought. Generally speaking if punishment prescribed is for imprisonment for life and death penalty and the offence is exclusively triable by the Court of Session, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to grant bail unless the matter is covered by the provisos attached to Section 437 of the Code. The limitations circumscribing the jurisdiction of the Magistrate are evident and apparent. Assumption of jurisdiction to entertain the application is distinguishable from the exercise of the jurisdiction.

54. We wish to place reliance on the judgment of the Bombay High Court in The Balasaheb Satbhai Merchant Coop Bank Ltd. v. The State of Maharashtra and Ors., MANU/MH/1159/2011:

13. At this stage, it may be useful to quote the observations of this Court in "Ambarish Rangshahi Patnigere v. State of Maharashtra" referred supra, which reads thus-

17. It may be noted here that the learned Counsel for intervener contended that the Magistrate did not have jurisdiction to grant bail because the offences Under Sections 467 and 409 Indian Penal Code, carry punishment which may be life imprisonment. According to the learned Counsel, if the offence is punishable with sentence of death or life imprisonment, the Magistrate cannot grant bail Under Section 437(1) Code of Criminal Procedure, unless there are special grounds mentioned therein. He relied upon certain authorities in this respect including Prahlad Sigh Bhati v. NCT, Delhi and Anr. MANU/SC/0193/2001 : JT 2001 (4) SCC 280. In that case, offence was Under Section 302 which is punishable with death sentence or life imprisonment and is exclusively triable by Court of Sessions. The offence Under Section 409 is punishable with imprisonment for life or imprisonment for 10 years and fine. Similarly, the office Under Section 467 is also punishable with imprisonment for life or imprisonment for 10 years and fine. Even though the maximum sentence which may be awarded is life imprisonment, as per Part I of Schedule annexed to Code of Criminal Procedure, both these offences are triable by a Magistrate of First Class. It appears that there are several offences including Under Sections 326 in the Penal Code, 1860 wherein sentence, which may be awarded, is imprisonment for life or imprisonment for lesser terms and such offences are triable by Magistrate of the First Class. If the Magistrate is empowered to try the case and pass judgment and order of conviction or acquittal, it is difficult to understand why he cannot pass order granting bail, which is interlocutory in nature, in such cases. In fact, the restriction Under Section 437(1) Code of Criminal Procedure is in respect of those offences which are punishable with alternative sentence of death or life imprisonment. If the offence is punishable with life imprisonment or any other lesser sentence and is triable by Magistrate, it cannot be said that Magistrate does not have jurisdiction to consider the bail application. In taking this view, I am supported by the old Judgment of Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court in Tularam and Ors. v. Emperor MANU/NA/0031/1926 : 27 Cri.L.J. 1926 page 1063 and also by the Judgment of the Kerala High Court in Satyan v. State MANU/KE/0126/1981 : 1981 Cr.L.J. 1313. In Satyan, the Kerala High Court considered several earlier judgments and observed thus in paras 7 and 8:

7. According to the learned Magistrate Section 437(1) does not empower him to release a person on bail if there are reasonable grounds for believing that he has committed an offence punishable with death or an offence punishable with imprisonment for life. In other words the learned Magistrate has interpreted the expression "offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life" in Section 437(1) to include all offences where the punishment extends to imprisonment for life. This reasoning, no doubt, is seen adopted in an old Rangoon Case H.M. Boudville v. Emperor, MANU/RA/0131/1924 : AIR 1925 129 : (1925) 26 Cri. LJ 427 while interpreting the phrase "an offence punishable with death or transportation for life" in Section 497 Code of Criminal Procedure 1898. But that case was dissented from in Mahammed Eusoof v. Emperor, MANU/RA/0325/1925 : AIR 1926 Rang 51 : (1926) 27 Cri LJ 401). The Rangoon High Court held that the prohibition against granting bail is confined to cases where the sentence is either death or alternative transportation for life. In other words, what the Court held was that the phrase "death or transportation for life" in Section 497 of the old Code did not extend to offences punishable with transportation for life only, it will be interesting to note the following passage from the above judgment:

It is difficult to see what principle, other than pure empiricism should distinguish offences punishable with transportation for life from offences punishable with long terms of imprisonment; why, for instance, the detenu Accused of lurking house trespass with a view to commit theft, for which the punishment is fourteen years imprisonment, should be specially favoured as against the individual who has dishonestly received stolen property, knowing that it was obtained by dacoity, for which the punishment happens to be transportation for life? It cannot seriously be argued that the comparatively slight difference in decree of possible punishment will render it morally less likely that the person arrested will put in an appearance in the one case rather than the other. On the other hand the degree of difference is so great as between transportation for life and death as to be immeasurable. A prudent Legislature will, therefore, withdraw from the discretion of the Magistracy cases in which, if guilt is probable, even a man of the greatest fortitude may be willing to pay a material price, however, exorbitant, for life.

The above decision has been followed by the Nagpur High Court in the case reported in Tularam v. Emperor, (MANU/NA/0031/1926 : AIR 1927 Nag 53) : (1926) 27 Cri LJ 1063).

8. The reasoning applies with equal force in interpreting the phrase "offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life" So long as an offence Under Section 326 is triable by a Magistrate of the First Class there is no reason why it should be viewed differently in the matter of granting bail from an offence Under Section 420 Indian Penal Code for which the punishment extends imprisonment for 7 years or any other non- bailable offence for which the punishment is a term of imprisonment.

It would be illogical and incomprehensible to say that the magistrate who can hold the trial and pass judgment of acquittal or conviction for the offences punishable with sentence of life imprisonment or lesser term of imprisonment, for example in offences Under Section 326, 409, 467, etc., cannot consider the application for bail in such offences. In fact, it appears that the restriction Under Section 437(1)(a) is applicable only to those cases which are punishable with death sentence or life imprisonment as alternative sentence. It may be noted that in Prahlad Sigh Bhati (supra), in para 6, the Supreme Court held that even though there is no legal bar for a Magistrate to consider an application for grant of bail to a person who is arrested for an offence exclusively triable by a Court of session, yet it would be proper and appropriate that in such a case the Magistrate directs the Accused person to approach the Court of Session for the purposes of getting the relief of bail. This may be applicable to many cases, wherein the sentence, which may be awarded, is not even life imprisonment, but the offence is exclusively triable by court of Sessions for example offences punishable Under Sections 306, 308, 314, 315, 316, 399, 400 and 450. Taking into consideration the legal position, I do not find any substance in the contention of Mr. Bhatt, learned Counsel for the intervener that merely because the offence is Under Section 409 and 467 Indian Penal Code, Magistrate did not have jurisdiction to hear and grant the bail.

14. It may also be useful to refer the observations of this Court in Ishan Vasant Deshmukh v. State of Maharashtra" referred supra, which read thus- -

The observations of the Supreme Court that generally speaking if the punishment prescribed is that of imprisonment for life or death penalty, and the offence is exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to grant bail, unless the matter is covered by the provisos attached to Section 437 of the Code. Thus, merely because an offence is punishable when imprisonment for life, it does not follow a Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to grant bail, unless offence is also exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions. This, implies that the Magistrate would be entitled to grant bail in cases triable by him even though punishment prescribed may extend to imprisonment for life. This Judgment in Prahlad Singh Bhati's case had not been cited before Judge, who decided State of Maharashtra v. Rajkumar Kunda Swami. Had this Judgment been noticed by the Hon'ble Judge deciding that case, the observation that the Magistrate may not decide an application for bail if the offence is punishable with imprisonment for life would possibly would not have been made. In view of the observations of the Supreme Court in Prahlad Singh Bhati's case, it is clear that the view taken by J.H. Bhatia, J. in Ambarish Rangshahi Patnigere v. State of Maharashtra, reported at MANU/MH/0806/2010 : 2010 ALL Mr. (Cri.) 2775 is in tune with the Judgment of the Supreme Court and therefore, the Magistrate would have jurisdiction to grant bail.

55. Thus, we would like to reiterate the aforesaid position so that the jurisdictional Magistrate who otherwise has the jurisdiction to try a criminal case which provides for a maximum punishment of either life or death sentence, has got ample jurisdiction to consider the release on bail.

Section 439 of the Code

439. Special powers of High Court or Court of Session regarding bail.- -

(1) A High Court or Court of Session may direct- -

(a) that any person Accused of an offence and in custody be released on bail, and if the offence is of the nature specified in Sub- section (3) of Section 437, may impose any condition which it considers necessary for the purposes mentioned in that Sub- section;

(b) that any condition imposed by a Magistrate when releasing any person on bail be set aside or modified:

Provided that the High Court or the Court of Session shall, before granting bail to a person who is Accused of an offence which is triable exclusively by the Court of Session or which, though not so triable, is punishable with imprisonment for life, give notice of the application for bail to the Public Prosecutor unless it is, for reasons to be recorded in writing, of opinion that it is not practicable to give such notice.

xxx xxx xxx

(2) A High Court or Court of Session may direct that any person who has been released on bail under this Chapter be arrested and commit him to custody.

56. Section 439 confers a power upon the High Court or a Court of Sessions regarding the bail. This power is to be exercised against the order of the judicial magistrate exercising power Under Section 437 of the Code or in a case triable by the Court of Sessions exclusively. In the former set of cases, the observations made by us would apply to the exercise of power Under Section 439 as well.

57. Interestingly, the second proviso to Section 439 prescribes for the notice of an application to be served on the public prosecutor within a time limit of 15 days on the set of offenses mentioned thereunder. Similarly, proviso to Sub- section (1)(a) makes it obligatory to give notice of the application for bail to the public prosecutor as well as the informant or any other person authorised by him at the time of hearing the application for bail. This being the mandate of the legislation, the High Court and the Court of Sessions shall see to it that it is being complied with.

58. Section 437 of the Code empowers the Magistrate to deal with all the offenses while considering an application for bail with the exception of an offense punishable either with life imprisonment or death triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions. The first proviso facilitates a court to conditionally release on bail an Accused if he is under the age of 16 years or is a woman or is sick or infirm, as discussed earlier. This being a welfare legislation, though introduced by way of a proviso, has to be applied while considering release on bail either by the Court of Sessions or the High Court, as the case may be. The power Under Section 439 of the Code is exercised against an order rejecting an application for bail and against an offence exclusively decided by the Court of Sessions. There cannot be a divided application of proviso to Section 437, while exercising the power Under Section 439. While dealing with a welfare legislation, a purposive interpretation giving the benefit to the needy person being the intendment is the role required to be played by the court. We do not wish to state that this proviso has to be considered favourably in all cases as the application depends upon the facts and circumstances contained therein. What is required is the consideration per se by the court of this proviso among other factors.

Section 440 of the Code

440. Amount of bond and reduction thereof.- - (1) The amount of every bond executed under this Chapter shall be fixed with due regard to the circumstances of the case and shall not be excessive.

(2) The High Court or Court of Session may direct that the bail required by a police officer or Magistrate be reduced.

59. Before we deal with the objective behind Section 440, certain precedents and laws adopted in the United States of America are required to be taken note of.

60. In the State of Illinois, a conscious decision was taken to dispense with the requirement of cost as a predominant factor in the execution of a warrant while granting bail, as such a condition is an affront to liberty, and thus, affects the fundamental rights of an arrestee. If an individual is not able to comply with the condition due to the circumstances beyond his control, and thus making it impossible for him to enjoy the fruits of the bail granted, it certainly constitutes an act of injustice. The objective behind granting of bail is different from the conditions imposed. The State of Illinois took note of the fact that a prisoner cannot be made to comply with the deposit of cash as a pre- condition for enlargement, and therefore dispensed with the same.

61. When such an onerous condition was challenged on the premise that it affects a category of persons who do not have the financial wherewithal, making them to continue in incarceration despite a temporary relief being granted, enabling them to conduct the trial as free persons, the Supreme Court of California in In re Kenneth Humphrey, S247278; 482 P.3d 1008 (2021), was pleased to hold that the very objective is lost and would possibly impair the preparation of a defense, as such, the court was of the view that such onerous conditions cannot be sustained in the eye of law. Relevant paras of the judgment are reproduced hereunder:

IV.

....In choosing between pretrial release and detention, we recognize that absolute certainty - - particularly at the pretrial stage, when the trial meant to adjudicate guilt or innocence is yet to occur - - will prove all but impossible. A court making these determinations should focus instead on risks to public or victim safety or to the integrity of the judicial process that are reasonably likely to occur. (See Stack v. Boyle MANU/FENT/0191/1951 : (1951) 342 U.S. 1, 8 (conc. opn. of Jackson, J.) ["Admission to bail always involves a risk that the Accused will take flight. That is a calculated risk which the law takes as the price of our system of justice"]; cf. Salerno, supra, 481 U.S. at p. 751 [discussing an arrestee's "identified and articulable threat to an individual or the community"].)

Even when a bail determination complies with the above prerequisites, the court must still consider whether the deprivation of liberty caused by an order of pretrial detention is consistent with state statutory and constitutional law specifically addressing bail - - a question not resolved here - - and with due process. While due process does not categorically prohibit the government from ordering pretrial detention, it remains true that "[i]n our society liberty is the norm, and detention prior to trial or without trial is the carefully limited exception." (Salerno, supra, 481 U.S. at p. 755.)

V.

In a crucially important respect, California law is in line with the federal Constitution: "liberty is the norm, and detention prior to trial or without trial is the carefully limited exception." (Salerno, supra, 481 U.S. at p. 755.) An arrestee may not be held in custody pending trial unless the court has made an individualized determination that (1) the arrestee has the financial ability to pay, but nonetheless failed to pay, the amount of bail the court finds reasonably necessary to protect compelling government interests; or (2) detention is necessary to protect victim or public safety, or ensure the Defendant's appearance, and there is clear and convincing evidence that no less restrictive alternative will reasonably vindicate those interests. (See Humphrey, supra, 19 Cal.App. 5th at p. 1026.) Pretrial detention on victim and public safety grounds, subject to specific and reliable constitutional constraints, is a key element of our criminal justice system. Conditioning such detention on the arrestee's financial resources, without ever assessing whether a Defendant can meet those conditions or whether the state's interests could be met by less restrictive alternatives, is not.

62. Under Section 440 the amount of every bond executed Under Chapter XXXIII is to be fixed with regard to the circumstances of the case and shall not be excessive. This is a salutary provision which has to be kept in mind. The conditions imposed shall not be mechanical and uniform in all cases. It is a mandatory duty of the court to take into consideration the circumstances of the case and satisfy itself that it is not excessive. Imposing a condition which is impossible of compliance would be defeating the very object of the release. In this connection, we would only say that Section 436, 437, 438 and 439 of the Code are to be read in consonance. Reasonableness of the bond and surety is something which the court has to keep in mind whenever the same is insisted upon, and therefore while exercising the power Under Section 88 of the Code also the said factum has to be kept in mind. This Court in Hussainara Khatoon and Ors. v. Home Secretary, State of Bihar, MANU/SC/0119/1979 : 1980 (1) SCC 81, has held that:

8. In regard to the exercise of the judicial power to release a prisoner awaiting trial on bail or on the execution of a personal bond without sureties for his appearance, I have to say this briefly. There is an amplitude of power in this regard within the existing provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is for the courts to fully acquaint themselves with the nature and extent of their discretion in exercising it. I think it is no longer possible to countenance a mechanical exercise of the power. What should be the amount of security required or the monetary obligation demanded in a bond is a matter calling for the careful consideration of several factors. The entire object being only to ensure that the undertrial does not flee or hide himself from trial, all the relevant considerations which enter into the determination of that question must be taken into account. [Section 440, Code of Criminal Procedure.] A synoptic impression of what the considerations could be may be drawn from the following provision in the United States Bail Reform Act of 1966:

In determining which conditions of releases will reasonably assure appearance, the judicial officer shall, on the basis of available information, take into account the nature and circumstances of the offence charged, the weight of the evidence against the Accused, the Accused's family ties, employment, financial resources, character and mental condition, the length of his residence in the community, his record of convictions, and his record of appearance at court proceedings or of flight to avoid prosecution or failure to appear at court proceedings. [18 US S. 3146(b)]

These are considerations which should be kept in mind when determining the amount of the security or monetary obligation. Perhaps, if this is done the abuses attendant on the prevailing system of pre- trial release in India could be avoided or, in any event, greatly reduced. See Moti Ram v. State of M.P. [MANU/SC/0132/1978 : (1978) 4 SCC 47]

CATEGORIES A & B

63. We have already dealt with the relevant provisions which would take care of categories A and B. At the cost of repetition, we wish to state that, in category A, one would expect a better exercise of discretion on the part of the court in favour of the Accused. Coming to category B, these cases will have to be dealt with on a case- to- case basis again keeping in view the general principle of law and the provisions, as discussed by us.

SPECIAL ACTS (CATEGORY C)

64. Now we shall come to category (C). We do not wish to deal with individual enactments as each special Act has got an objective behind it, followed by the rigor imposed. The general principle governing delay would apply to these categories also. To make it clear, the provision contained in Section 436A of the Code would apply to the Special Acts also in the absence of any specific provision. For example, the rigor as provided Under Section 37 of the NDPS Act would not come in the way in such a case as we are dealing with the liberty of a person. We do feel that more the rigor, the quicker the adjudication ought to be. After all, in these types of cases number of witnesses would be very less and there may not be any justification for prolonging the trial. Perhaps there is a need to comply with the directions of this Court to expedite the process and also a stricter compliance of Section 309 of the Code.

Precedents

- Union of India v. K.A. Najeeb, MANU/SC/0046/2021 : (2021) 3 SCC 713:

15. This Court has clarified in numerous judgments that the liberty guaranteed by Part III of the Constitution would cover within its protective ambit not only due procedure and fairness but also access to justice and a speedy trial. In Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee (Representing Undertrial Prisoners) v. Union of India [Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee (Representing Undertrial Prisoners) v. Union of India, MANU/SC/0877/1994 : (1994) 6 SCC 731, para 15 : 1995 SCC (Cri.) 39], it was held that undertrials cannot indefinitely be detained pending trial. Ideally, no person ought to suffer adverse consequences of his acts unless the same is established before a neutral arbiter. However, owing to the practicalities of real life where to secure an effective trial and to ameliorate the risk to society in case a potential criminal is left at large pending trial, the courts are tasked with deciding whether an individual ought to be released pending trial or not. Once it is obvious that a timely trial would not be possible and the Accused has suffered incarceration for a significant period of time, the courts would ordinarily be obligated to enlarge them on bail.

• Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee v. Union of India MANU/SC/0877/1994 : (1994) 6 SCC 731:

15. ...In substance the Petitioner now prays that all undertrials who are in jail for the commission of any offence or offences under the Act for a period exceeding two years on account of the delay in the disposal of cases lodged against them should be forthwith released from jail declaring their further detention to be illegal and void and pending decision of this Court on the said larger issue, they should in any case be released on bail. It is indeed true and that is obvious from the plain language of Section 36(1) of the Act, that the legislature contemplated the creation of Special Courts to speed up the trial of those prosecuted for the commission of any offence under the Act. It is equally true that similar is the objective of Section 309 of the Code. It is also true that this Court has emphasised in a series of decisions that Articles 14, 19 and 21 sustain and nourish each other and any law depriving a person of "personal liberty" must prescribe a procedure which is just, fair and reasonable, i.e., a procedure which promotes speedy trial. See Hussainara Khatoon (IV) v. Home Secy., State of Bihar [MANU/SC/0121/1979 : (1980) 1 SCC 98 : 1980 SCC (Cri.) 40], Raghubir Singh v. State of Bihar [MANU/SC/0199/1986 : (1986) 4 SCC 481 : 1986 SCC (Cri.) 511] and Kadra Pahadiya v. State of Bihar [MANU/SC/0757/1981 : (1983) 2 SCC 104 : 1983 SCC (Cri.) 361] to quote only a few. This is also the avowed objective of Section 36(1) of the Act. However, this laudable objective got frustrated when the State Government delayed the constitution of sufficient number of Special Courts in Greater Bombay; the process of constituting the first two Special Courts started with the issuance of notifications Under Section 36(1) on 4- 1- 1991 and Under Section 36(2) on 6- 4- 1991 almost two years from 29- 5- 1989 when Amendment Act 2 of 1989 became effective. Since the number of courts constituted to try offences under the Act were not sufficient and the appointments of Judges to man these courts were delayed, cases piled up and the provision in regard to enlargement on bail being strict the offenders have had to languish in jails for want of trials. As stated earlier Section 37 of the Act makes every offence punishable under the Act cognizable and non- bailable and provides that no person Accused of an offence punishable for a term of five years or more shall be released on bail unless (i) the Public Prosecutor has had an opportunity to oppose bail and (ii) if opposed, the court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he is not guilty of the offence and is not likely to indulge in similar activity. On account of the strict language of the said provision very few persons Accused of certain offences under the Act could secure bail. Now to refuse bail on the one hand and to delay trial of cases on the other is clearly unfair and unreasonable and contrary to the spirit of Section 36(1) of the Act, Section 309 of the Code and Articles 14, 19 and 21 of the Constitution. We are conscious of the statutory provision finding place in Section 37 of the Act prescribing the conditions which have to be satisfied before a person Accused of an offence under the Act can be released. Indeed, we have adverted to this Section in the earlier part of the judgment. We have also kept in mind the interpretation placed on a similar provision in Section 20 of the TADA Act by the Constitution Bench in Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab [MANU/SC/1597/1994 : (1994) 3 SCC 569 : 1994 SCC (Cri.) 899]. Despite this provision, we have directed as above mainly at the call of Article 21 as the right to speedy trial may even require in some cases quashing of a criminal proceeding altogether, as held by a Constitution Bench of this Court in A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak [MANU/SC/0326/1992 : (1992) 1 SCC 225 : 1992 SCC (Cri.) 93], release on bail, which can be taken to be embedded in the right of speedy trial, may, in some cases be the demand of Article 21. As we have not felt inclined to accept the extreme submission of quashing the proceedings and setting free the Accused whose trials have been delayed beyond reasonable time for reasons already alluded to, we have felt that deprivation of the personal liberty without ensuring speedy trial would also not be in consonance with the right guaranteed by Article 21. Of course, some amount of deprivation of personal liberty cannot be avoided in such cases; but if the period of deprivation pending trial becomes unduly long, the fairness assured by Article 21 would receive a jolt. It is because of this that we have felt that after the Accused persons have suffered imprisonment which is half of the maximum punishment provided for the offence, any further deprivation of personal liberty would be violative of the fundamental right visualised by Article 21, which has to be telescoped with the right guaranteed by Article 14 which also promises justness, fairness and reasonableness in procedural matters. What then is the remedy? The offences under the Act are grave and, therefore, we are not inclined to agree with the submission of the learned Counsel for the Petitioner that we should quash the prosecutions and set free the Accused persons whose trials are delayed beyond reasonable time. Alternatively, he contended that such Accused persons whose trials have been delayed beyond reasonable time and are likely to be further delayed should be released on bail on such terms as this Court considers appropriate to impose. This suggestion commends to us. We were told by the learned Counsel for the State of Maharashtra that additional Special Courts have since been constituted but having regard to the large pendency of such cases in the State we are afraid this is not likely to make a significant dent in the huge pile of such cases. We, therefore, direct as under:

(i) Where the undertrial is Accused of an offence(s) under the Act prescribing a punishment of imprisonment of five years or less and fine, such an undertrial shall be released on bail if he has been in jail for a period which is not less than half the punishment provided for the offence with which he is charged and where he is charged with more than one offence, the offence providing the highest punishment. If the offence with which he is charged prescribes the maximum fine, the bail amount shall be 50% of the said amount with two sureties for like amount. If the maximum fine is not prescribed bail shall be to the satisfaction of the Special Judge concerned with two sureties for like amount.

(ii) Where the undertrial Accused is charged with an offence(s) under the Act providing for punishment exceeding five years and fine, such an undertrial shall be released on bail on the term set out in (i) above provided that his bail amount shall in no case be less than Rs. 50,000 with two sureties for like amount.

(iii) Where the undertrial Accused is charged with an offence(s) under the Act punishable with minimum imprisonment of ten years and a minimum fine of Rupees one lakh, such an undertrial shall be released on bail if he has been in jail for not less than five years provided he furnishes bail in the sum of Rupees one lakh with two sureties for like amount.

(iv) Where an undertrial Accused is charged for the commission of an offence punishable Under Sections 31 and 31- A of the Act, such an undertrial shall not be entitled to be released on bail by virtue of this order.

The directives in clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) above shall be subject to the following general conditions:

(i) The undertrial Accused entitled to be released on bail shall deposit his passport with the learned Judge of the Special Court concerned and if he does not hold a passport he shall file an affidavit to that effect in the form that may be prescribed by the learned Special Judge. In the latter case the learned Special Judge will, if he has reason to doubt the accuracy of the statement, write to the Passport Officer concerned to verify the statement and the Passport Officer shall verify his record and send a reply within three weeks. If he fails to reply within the said time, the learned Special Judge will be entitled to act on the statement of the undertrial Accused;

(ii) the undertrial Accused shall on being released on bail present himself at the police station which has prosecuted him at least once in a month in the case of those covered under Clause (i), once in a fortnight in the case of those covered under Clause (ii) and once in a week in the case of those covered by Clause (iii), unless leave of absence is obtained in advance from the Special Judge concerned;

(iii) the benefit of the direction in clauses (ii) and (iii) shall not be available to those Accused persons who are, in the opinion of the learned Special Judge, for reasons to be stated in writing, likely to tamper with evidence or influence the prosecution witnesses;

(iv) in the case of undertrial Accused who are foreigners, the Special Judge shall, besides impounding their passports, insist on a certificate of assurance from the Embassy/High Commission of the country to which the foreigner- Accused belongs, that the said Accused shall not leave the country and shall appear before the Special Court as and when required;

(v) the undertrial Accused shall not leave the area in relation to which the Special Court is constituted except with the permission of the learned Special Judge;

(vi) the undertrial Accused may furnish bail by depositing cash equal to the bail amount;

(vii) the Special Judge will be at liberty to cancel bail if any of the above conditions are violated or a case for cancellation of bail is otherwise made out; and

(viii) after the release of the undertrial Accused pursuant to this order, the cases of those undertrials who have not been released and are in jail will be accorded priority and the Special Court will proceed with them as provided in Section 309 of the Code.

16. We may state that the above are intended to operate as one- time directions for cases in which the Accused persons are in jail and their trials are delayed. They are not intended to interfere with the Special Court's power to grant bail Under Section 37 of the Act. The Special Court will be free to exercise that power keeping in view the complaint of inordinate delay in the disposal of the pending cases. The Special Court will, notwithstanding the directions, be free to cancel bail if the Accused is found to be misusing it and grounds for cancellation of bail exist. Lastly, we grant liberty to apply in case of any difficulty in the implementation of this order.

65. We may clarify on one aspect which is on the interpretation of Section 170 of the Code. Our discussion made for the other offences would apply to these cases also. To clarify this position, we may hold that if an Accused is already under incarceration, then the same would continue, and therefore, it is needless to say that the provision of the Special Act would get applied thereafter. It is only in a case where the Accused is either not arrested consciously by the prosecution or arrested and enlarged on bail, there is no need for further arrest at the instance of the court. Similarly, we would also add that the existence of a pari materia or a similar provision like Section 167(2) of the Code available under the Special Act would have the same effect entitling the Accused for a default bail. Even here the court will have to consider the satisfaction Under Section 440 of the Code.

ECONOMIC OFFENSES (CATEGORY D)

66. What is left for us now to discuss are the economic offences. The question for consideration is whether it should be treated as a class of its own or otherwise. This issue has already been dealt with by this Court in the case of P. Chidambaram v. Directorate of Enforcement, MANU/SC/1670/2019 : (2020) 13 SCC 791, after taking note of the earlier decisions governing the field. The gravity of the offence, the object of the Special Act, and the attending circumstances are a few of the factors to be taken note of, along with the period of sentence. After all, an economic offence cannot be classified as such, as it may involve various activities and may differ from one case to another. Therefore, it is not advisable on the part of the court to categorise all the offences into one group and deny bail on that basis. Suffice it to state that law, as laid down in the following judgments, will govern the field:

Precedents

• P. Chidambaram v. Directorate of Enforcement, MANU/SC/1670/2019 : (2020) 13 SCC 791:

23. Thus, from cumulative perusal of the judgments cited on either side including the one rendered by the Constitution Bench of this Court, it could be deduced that the basic jurisprudence relating to bail remains the same inasmuch as the grant of bail is the Rule and refusal is the exception so as to ensure that the Accused has the opportunity of securing fair trial. However, while considering the same the gravity of the offence is an aspect which is required to be kept in view by the Court. The gravity for the said purpose will have to be gathered from the facts and circumstances arising in each case. Keeping in view the consequences that would befall on the society in cases of financial irregularities, it has been held that even economic offences would fall under the category of "grave offence" and in such circumstance while considering the application for bail in such matters, the Court will have to deal with the same, being sensitive to the nature of allegation made against the Accused. One of the circumstances to consider the gravity of the offence is also the term of sentence that is prescribed for the offence the Accused is alleged to have committed. Such consideration with regard to the gravity of offence is a factor which is in addition to the triple test or the tripod test that would be normally applied. In that regard what is also to be kept in perspective is that even if the allegation is one of grave economic offence, it is not a Rule that bail should be denied in every case since there is no such bar created in the relevant enactment passed by the legislature nor does the bail jurisprudence provide so. Therefore, the underlining conclusion is that irrespective of the nature and gravity of charge, the precedent of another case alone will not be the basis for either grant or refusal of bail though it may have a bearing on principle. But ultimately the consideration will have to be on case- to- case basis on the facts involved therein and securing the presence of the Accused to stand trial.

• Sanjay Chandra v. CBI MANU/SC/1375/2011 : (2012) 1 SCC 40:

39. Coming back to the facts of the present case, both the courts have refused the request for grant of bail on two grounds: the primary ground is that the offence alleged against the Accused persons is very serious involving deep- rooted planning in which, huge financial loss is caused to the State exchequer; the secondary ground is that of the possibility of the Accused persons tampering with the witnesses. In the present case, the charge is that of cheating and dishonestly inducing delivery of property and forgery for the purpose of cheating using as genuine a forged document. The punishment for the offence is imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years. It is, no doubt, true that the nature of the charge may be relevant, but at the same time, the punishment to which the party may be liable, if convicted, also bears upon the issue. Therefore, in determining whether to grant bail, both the seriousness of the charge and the severity of the punishment should be taken into consideration.

40. The grant or refusal to grant bail lies within the discretion of the court. The grant or denial is regulated, to a large extent, by the facts and circumstances of each particular case. But at the same time, right to bail is not to be denied merely because of the sentiments of the community against the Accused. The primary purposes of bail in a criminal case are to relieve the Accused of imprisonment, to relieve the State of the burden of keeping him, pending the trial, and at the same time, to keep the Accused constructively in the custody of the court, whether before or after conviction, to assure that he will submit to the jurisdiction of the court and be in attendance thereon whenever his presence is required.

46. We are conscious of the fact that the Accused are charged with economic offences of huge magnitude. We are also conscious of the fact that the offences alleged, if proved, may jeopardise the economy of the country. At the same time, we cannot lose sight of the fact that the investigating agency has already completed investigation and the charge- sheet is already filed before the Special Judge, CBI, New Delhi. Therefore, their presence in the custody may not be necessary for further investigation. We are of the view that the Appellants are entitled to the grant of bail pending trial on stringent conditions in order to ally the apprehension expressed by CBI.

ROLE OF THE COURT

67. The rate of conviction in criminal cases in India is abysmally low. It appears to us that this factor weighs on the mind of the Court while deciding the bail applications in a negative sense. Courts tend to think that the possibility of a conviction being nearer to rarity, bail applications will have to be decided strictly, contrary to legal principles. We cannot mix up consideration of a bail application, which is not punitive in nature with that of a possible adjudication by way of trial. On the contrary, an ultimate acquittal with continued custody would be a case of grave injustice.

68. Criminal courts in general with the trial court in particular are the guardian angels of liberty. Liberty, as embedded in the Code, has to be preserved, protected, and enforced by the Criminal Courts. Any conscious failure by the Criminal Courts would constitute an affront to liberty. It is the pious duty of the Criminal Court to zealously guard and keep a consistent vision in safeguarding the constitutional values and ethos. A criminal court must uphold the constitutional thrust with responsibility mandated on them by acting akin to a high priest. This Court in Arnab

Manoranjan Goswami v. State of Maharashtra, MANU/SC/0902/2020 : (2021) 2 SCC 427, has observed that:

67. Human liberty is a precious constitutional value, which is undoubtedly subject to Regulation by validly enacted legislation. As such, the citizen is subject to the edicts of criminal law and procedure. Section 482 recognises the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as are necessary to give effect to the provisions of Code of Criminal Procedure "or prevent abuse of the process of any court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice". Decisions of this Court require the High Courts, in exercising the jurisdiction entrusted to them Under Section 482, to act with circumspection. In emphasising that the High Court must exercise this power with a sense of restraint, the decisions of this Court are founded on the basic principle that the due enforcement of criminal law should not be obstructed by the Accused taking recourse to artifices and strategies. The public interest in ensuring the due investigation of crime is protected by ensuring that the inherent power of the High Court is exercised with caution. That indeed is one- - and a significant- - end of the spectrum. The other end of the spectrum is equally important : the recognition by Section 482 of the power inhering in the High Court to prevent the abuse of process or to secure the ends of justice is a valuable safeguard for protecting liberty. The Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 was enacted by a legislature which was not subject to constitutional rights and limitations; yet it recognised the inherent power in Section 561- A. Post- Independence, the recognition by Parliament [Section 482 Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973] of the inherent power of the High Court must be construed as an aid to preserve the constitutional value of liberty. The writ of liberty runs through the fabric of the Constitution. The need to ensure the fair investigation of crime is undoubtedly important in itself, because it protects at one level the rights of the victim and, at a more fundamental level, the societal interest in ensuring that crime is investigated and dealt with in accordance with law. On the other hand, the misuse of the criminal law is a matter of which the High Court and the lower courts in this country must be alive. In the present case, the High Court could not but have been cognizant of the specific ground which was raised before it by the Appellant that he was being made a target as a part of a series of occurrences which have been taking place since April 2020. The specific case of the Appellant is that he has been targeted because his opinions on his television channel are unpalatable to authority. Whether the Appellant has established a case for quashing the FIR is something on which the High Court will take a final view when the proceedings are listed before it but we are clearly of the view that in failing to make even a prima facie evaluation of the FIR, the High Court abdicated its constitutional duty and function as a protector of liberty. Courts must be alive to the need to safeguard the public interest in ensuring that the due enforcement of criminal law is not obstructed. The fair investigation of crime is an aid to it. Equally it is the duty of courts across the spectrum- - the district judiciary, the High Courts and the Supreme Court- - to ensure that the criminal law does not become a weapon for the selective harassment of citizens. Courts should be alive to both ends of the spectrum- - the need to ensure the proper enforcement of criminal law on the one hand and the need, on the other, of ensuring that the law does not become a ruse for targeted harassment. Liberty across human eras is as tenuous as tenuous can be. Liberty survives by the vigilance of her citizens, on the cacophony of the media and in the dusty corridors of courts alive to the Rule of (and not by) law. Yet, much too often, liberty is a casualty when one of these components is found wanting.

69. We wish to note the existence of exclusive Acts in the form of Bail Acts prevailing in the United Kingdom and various States of USA. These Acts prescribe adequate guidelines both for investigating agencies and the courts. We shall now take note of Section 4(1) of the Bail Act of 1976 pertaining to United Kingdom:

General right to bail of Accused persons and Ors..

4.- (1) A person to whom this Section applies shall be granted bail except as provided in Schedule 1 to this Act.

70. Even other than the aforesaid provision, the enactment does take into consideration of the principles of law which we have discussed on the presumption of innocence and the grant of bail being a matter of right.

71. Uniformity and certainty in the decisions of the court are the foundations of judicial dispensation. Persons Accused with same offense shall never be treated differently either by the same court or by the same or different courts. Such an action though by an exercise of discretion despite being a judicial one would be a grave affront to Articles 14 and 15 of the Constitution of India.

72. The Bail Act of United Kingdom takes into consideration various factors. It is an attempt to have a comprehensive law dealing with bails by following a simple procedure. The Act takes into consideration clogging of the prisons with the undertrial prisoners, cases involving the issuance of warrants, granting of bail both before and after conviction, exercise of the power by the investigating agency and the court, violation of the bail conditions, execution of bond and sureties on the unassailable principle of presumption and right to get bail. Exceptions have been carved out as mentioned in Schedule I dealing with different contingencies and factors including the nature and continuity of offence. They also include Special Acts as well. We believe there is a pressing need for a similar enactment in our country. We do not wish to say anything beyond the observation made, except to call on the Government of India to consider the introduction of an Act specifically meant for granting of bail as done in various other countries like the United Kingdom. Our belief is also for the reason that the Code as it exists today is a continuation of the pre- independence one with its modifications. We hope and trust that the Government of India would look into the suggestion made in right earnest.

SUMMARY/CONCLUSION

73. In conclusion, we would like to issue certain directions. These directions are meant for the investigating agencies and also for the courts. Accordingly, we deem it appropriate to issue the following directions, which may be subject to State amendments.:

a) The Government of India may consider the introduction of a separate enactment in the nature of a Bail Act so as to streamline the grant of bails.

b) The investigating agencies and their officers are duty- bound to comply with the mandate of Section 41 and 41A of the Code and the directions issued by this Court in Arnesh Kumar (supra). Any dereliction on their part has to be brought to the notice of the higher authorities by the court followed by appropriate action.

c) The courts will have to satisfy themselves on the compliance of Section 41 and 41A of the Code. Any non- compliance would entitle the Accused for grant of bail.

d) All the State Governments and the Union Territories are directed to facilitate standing orders for the procedure to be followed Under Section 41 and 41A of the Code while taking note of the order of the High Court of Delhi dated 07.02.2018 in Writ Petition (C) No. 7608 of 2018 and the standing order issued by the Delhi Police i.e. Standing Order No. 109 of 2020, to comply with the mandate of Section 41A of the Code.

e) There need not be any insistence of a bail application while considering the application Under Section 88, 170, 204 and 209 of the Code.

f) There needs to be a strict compliance of the mandate laid down in the judgment of this Court in Siddharth (supra).

g) The State and Central Governments will have to comply with the directions issued by this Court from time to time with respect to constitution of special courts. The High Court in consultation with the State Governments will have to undertake an exercise on the need for the special courts. The vacancies in the position of Presiding Officers of the special courts will have to be filled up expeditiously.

h) The High Courts are directed to undertake the exercise of finding out the undertrial prisoners who are not able to comply with the bail conditions. After doing so, appropriate action will have to be taken in light of Section 440 of the Code, facilitating the release.

i) While insisting upon sureties the mandate of Section 440 of the Code has to be kept in mind.

j) An exercise will have to be done in a similar manner to comply with the mandate of Section 436A of the Code both at the district judiciary level and the High Court as earlier directed by this Court in Bhim Singh (supra), followed by appropriate orders.

k) Bail applications ought to be disposed of within a period of two weeks except if the provisions mandate otherwise, with the exception being an intervening application. Applications for anticipatory bail are expected to be disposed of within a period of six weeks with the exception of any intervening application.

l) All State Governments, Union Territories and High Courts are directed to file affidavits/status reports within a period of four months.

74. The Registry is directed to send copy of this judgment to the Government of India and all the State Governments/Union Territories.

75. As such, M.A. 1849 of 2021 is disposed of in the aforesaid terms. I.A. No. 51315 of 2022, application for intervention is allowed. I.A. Nos. 164761 of 2021, 148421 of 2021 and M.A. Diary No. 29164 of 2021 (I.A. No. 154863 of 2021), applications for clarification/direction are also disposed of. List for compliance after a period of four months from today.

JUDGMENT

Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.

1. These appeals by Special Leave involve a question of great public importance bearing, at once, on personal liberty and the investigational powers of the police. The society has a vital stake in both of these interests, though their relative importance at any given time depends upon the complexion and restraints of political conditions. Our task in these appeals is how best to balance these interests while determining the scope of Section 438 of the CrPC, 1973 (Act No. 2 of 1974).

2. Section 438 provides for the issuance of direction for the grant of bail to a person who apprehends arrest. It reads thus :

438. (1) When any person has reason to believe that he may be arrested on an accusation of having committed a non- bailable offence, he may apply to the High Court or the Court of Session for a direction under this section; and that Court may, if it thinks fit, direct that in the event of such arrest, he shall be released on bail.

(2) When the High Court or the Court of Session makes a direction under Sub- section (1), it may include such conditions in such directions in the light of the facts of the particular case, as it may think fit, including-

(i) a condition that the person shall make himself available for interrogation by a police officer as and when required;

(ii) a condition that the person shall not, directly or indirectly, make any inducement, threat or promise to any person acquainted with the facts of the case so as to dissuade him from disclosing such facts to the Court or to any police officer;

(iii) a condition that the person shall not leave India without the previous permission of the Court;

(iv) such other condition as may be imposed under Sub- section (3) of Section 437, as if the bail were granted under that section.

(3) If such person is thereafter arrested without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station on such accusation, and is prepared either at the time of arrest or at any time while in the custody of such officer to give bail, he shall be released on bail; and if a Magistrate taking cognizance of such offence decides that a warrant should issue in the first instance against that person, he shall issue a bailable warrant in conformity with the direction of the Court under Sub- Section (1).

3. Criminal Appeal No. 335 of 1975 which is the first of the many appeals before us, arises out of a judgment dated September 13, 1977 of a Full Bench of the High Court of Punjab and Haryana. The appellant herein, Shri Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia, was a Minister of Irrigation and Power in the Congress Ministry of the Government of Punjab. Grave allegations of political corruption were made against him and others whereupon, applications were filed in the High Court of Punjab and Haryana Under Section 438, praying that the appellants be directed to be released on bail, in the event of their arrest on the aforesaid charges. Considering the importance of the matter, a learned Single Judge referred the applications to a Full Bench, which by its judgment dated September 13, 1977 dismissed them.

4. The CrPC, 1898 did not contain any specific provision corresponding to the present Section 438. Under the old Code, there was a sharp difference of opinion amongst the various High Courts on the question as to whether courts had the inherent power to pass an order of bail, in anticipation of arrest, the preponderance of view being that it did not have such power. The need for extensive amendments to the CrPC was felt for a long time and various suggestions were made in different quarters in order to make the Code more effective and comprehensive. The Law Commission of India, in its 41st Report dated September 24, 1969 pointed put the necessity of introducing a provision in the Code enabling the High Court and the Court of Session to grant "anticipate; bail". It observed in paragraph 39.9 of its report (Volume I) :

39.9. The suggestion for directing the release of a person on bail prior to his arrest (commonly known as "anticipatory bail") was carefully considered by us. Though there is a conflict of judicial opinion about the power of a Court to- grant anticipatory bail, the majority view is that there is no such power under the existing provisions of the Code. The necessity for granting anticipatory bail arises mainly because sometimes influential persons try to' implicate their rivals in false cases for the purpose of disgracing them or for other purposes by getting them detained in jail for some days. In recent times, with the accentuation of political rivalry, this tendency is showing signs of steady increase. Apart from false cases, where there are reasonable grounds for holding that a person accused of an offence is not likely to abscond, or otherwise misuse his liberty while on bail, there seems no justification to require him first to submit to custody, remain in prison for some days and then apply for bail.

We recommend the acceptance of this suggestion. We are further of the view that this special power should be conferred only on the High Court and the Court of Session, and that the order should take effect at the time of arrest or thereafter.

In order to settle the details of this suggestion, the following draft of a, new section is placed for consideration :

497A. (1) When any person has a reasonable apprehension that he would be arrested on an accusation of having committed a non- bailable offence, he may apply to the High Court or the Court of Session for a direction under this section. That Court may, in its discretion, direct that in the event of his arrest, he shall be released on bail.

(2) A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence against that person shall, while taking steps Under Section 204(1), either issue summons or a bailable warrant as indicated in the direction of the Court under Sub- section (1).

(3) if any person in respect of whom such a direction is made is arrested without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station on an accusation of having committed that; offence, and is prepared either at the time of arrest or at any time while in the custody of such officer to give bail, such person shall be released on bail.

We considered carefully the question of laying down in the statute certain conditions under which alone anticipatory bail could be granted. But we found that it may not be practicable to exhaustively enumerate those conditions; and moreover, the laying down of such conditions may be construed as prejudging (partially at any rate) the whole case. Hence we would leave it to the discretion, of the; court and prefer not to fetter such discretion in the statutory provision itself. Superior Courts will, undoubtedly, exercise their discretion properly, and not make any observations in the order granting anticipatory bail which will have a tendency to prejudice the fair trial of the accused.

5. The suggestion made by the Law Commission was, in principle, accepted by the Central Government which introduced Clause 447 in the Draft Bill of the CrPC, 1970 with a view to conferring an express power on the High Court and the Court of Session to grant anticipatory bail. That Clause read thus :

447. (1) When any person has reason to believe that he would be arrested on an accusation of having committed a non- bailable offence, he may apply to the High Court or the Court of Session for a direction under this section; and that Court may, if it thinks fit, direct that in the event of such arrest, he shall be released on bail.

(2) If such person is thereafter arrested without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station on such accusation, and is prepared either at the lime of arrest or at any time while in the custody of such officer to give bail, he shall be released on bail; and if a Magistrate taking cognizance of such offence decides that a warrant should issue in the first instance against that person, he shall issue a bailable warrant in conformity with the direction of the Court under Sub- section (1).

6. The Law Commission, in paragraph 31 of its 48th Report (1972), made the following comments on the aforesaid Clause.

31. The Bill introduces a provision for the grant of anticipatory bail. This is substantially in accordance with the recommendation made by the previous Commission. We agree that this would be a useful addition, though we must add that it is in very exceptional cases that such a power should be exercised.

We are further of the view that in order to ensure that the provision is not put to abuse at the instance of unscrupulous petitioners, the final order should be made only after notice to the Public Prosecutor. The initial order should only be an interim one. Further, the relevant section should make it clear that the direction can be issued only for reasons to be recorded, and if the court is satisfied that such a direction is necessary in the interests of justice.

It will also be convenient to provide that notice of the interim order as well as of the final orders will be given to the Superintendent of Police forthwith.

Clause 447 of the Draft Bill of 1970 was enacted with certain modifications and became Section 438 of the CrPC, 1973 which we have extracted at the outset of this judgment.

7. The facility which Section 438 affords is generally referred to as 'anticipatory bail', an expression which was used by the Law Commission in its 41st report. Neither the section nor its marginal note so describes it but, the expression 'anticipatory bail' is a convenient mode of conveying that it is possible to apply for bail in anticipation of arrest. Any order of bail can, of course, be effective only from the time of arrest because, to grant bail, as stated in Wharton's Law Lexicon, is to 'set at liberty a person arrested or imprisoned, on security being taken for his appearance'. Thus, bail is basically release from restraint, more particularly, release from the custody of the police. The act of arrest directly affects freedom of movement of the person arrested by the police, and speaking generally, an order of bail gives back to the accused that freedom on condition that he will appear to take his trial. Personal recognizance , suretyship bonds and such other modalities are the means by which an assurance is secured from the accused that though he has been released on bail, he will present himself at the trial of offence or offences of which he is charged and for which he was arrested. The distinction between an ordinary order of bail and an order of anticipatory bail is that whereas the former is granted after arrest and therefore means release from the custody of the police, the latter is granted in anticipation of arrest and is therefore effective at the very moment of arrest. Police custody is an inevitable concomitant of arrest for non- bailable offences. An order of anticipatory bail, constitutes, so to say, an insurance against police custody following upon arrest for offence or offences in respect of which the order is issued. In other words, unlike a post- arrest order of bail, it is a pre- arrest legal process which directs that if the person in whose favour it is issued is thereafter arrested on the accusation in respect of which the direction is issued, he shall be released on bail. Section 46(1) of the CrPC which deals with how arrests are to be made, provides that in making the arrest, the police officer or other person making the arrest "shall actually touch or confine the body of the person to be arrested, unless there be a submission to the custody by word or action". A direction Under Section 438 is intended to confer conditional immunity from this 'touch' or confinement.

8. No one can accuse the police of possessing a healing touch nor indeed does anyone have misgivings in regard to constraints consequent upon confinement in police custody. But, society has come to accept and acquiesce in all that follows upon a police arrest with a certain amount of sangfroid, in so far as the ordinary rut of criminal investigation is concerned. It is the normal day-to- day business of the police to investigate into charges brought before them and, broadly and generally, they have nothing to gain, not favours at any rate, by subjecting ordinary criminals to needless harassment. But the crimes, the criminals and even the complainants can occasionally possess extra- ordinary features. When the even flow of life becomes turbid, the police can be called upon to inquire into charges arising out of political antagonism. The powerful processes of criminal law can then be perverted for achieving extraneous ends. Attendant upon such investigations, when the police are not free agents within their sphere of duty, is a great amount of inconvenience, harassment and humiliation. That can even take the form of the parading of a respectable person in handcuffs, apparently on way to a court of justice. The foul deed is done when an adversary is exposed to social ridicule and obloquy, no matter when and whether a conviction is secured or is at all possible. It is in order to meet such situations, though not limited to these contingencies, that the power to grant anticipatory bail was introduced into the Code of 1973.

9. Are we right in saying that the power conferred by Section 438 to grant anticipatory bail is "not limited to these contingencies"? In fact that is one of the main points of controversy between the parties. Whereas it is argued by Shri M.C. Bhandare, Shri O.P. Sharma and the other learned Counsel who appear for the appellants that the power to grant anticipatory bail ought to be left to the discretion of the court concerned, depending on the facts and circumstances of each particular case, it is argued by the, learned Additional Solicitor General on behalf of the State Government that the grant of anticipatory bail should at least be conditional upon the applicant showing that he is likely to be arrested for an ulterior motive, that is to say, that the proposed charge or charges are evidently baseless: and are actuated by mala, fides It is argued that anticipatory bail is an extra- ordinary remedy and therefore, whenever it appears that the proposed accusations are prima facie plausible, the applicant should be left to the ordinary remedy of applying for bail Under Section 437 or Section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, after he is arrested.

10. Shri V.M. Tarkunde, appearing on behalf of some of the appellants, while supporting the contentions of the other appellants, said that since the denial of bail amounts to deprivation of personal liberty, court should lean against the imposition of unnecessary restrictions on the scope of Section 438, when no such restrictions are imposed by the legislature in the terms of that Section. The learned Counsel added a new dimension to the argument by invoking Article 21 of the Constitution. He urged that Section 438 is a procedural provision which is concerned with the personal liberty of an individual who has not been convicted of the offence in respect of which he seeks bail and who must therefore be presumed to be innocent. The validity of that section must accordingly be examined by the test of fairness and reasonableness which is implicit in Article 21. If the legislature itself were to impose an unreasonable restriction on the grant of anticipatory bail, such a restriction could have been struck down as being violative of Article 21. Therefore, while determining the scope of Section 438, the court should not impose any unfair or unreasonable limitation on the individual's right to obtain an order of anticipatory bail. Imposition of an unfair or unreasonable limitation, according to the learned Counsel, would be violative of Article 21, irrespective of whether it is imposed by legislation or by judicial decision.

11. The Full Bench of the Punjab and Haryana High Court rejected the appellants' applications for bail after summarising, what according to it Is the true legal position, thus:

(1) The power Under Section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, is of an extra- ordinary character and must be exercised sparingly in exceptional cases only;

(2) Neither Section 438 nor any other provision of the Code authorises the grant of blanket anticipatory bail for offences not yet committed or with regard to accusations not so far leveled.

(3) The said power is not unguided or uncanalised but all the limitations imposed in the preceding Section 437, are implicit therein and must be read into Section 438.

(4) In addition to the limitations mentioned in Section 437, the petitioner must make out a special case for the exercise of the power to grant anticipatory bail.

(5) Where a legitimate case for the remand of the offender to the police custody Under Section 167(2) can be made out by the investigating agency or a reasonable claim to secure incriminating material from information likely to be received from the offender Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act can be made out, the power Under Section 438 should not be exercised.

(6) The discretion Under Section 438 cannot be exercised with regard to offences punishable with death or imprisonment for life unless the court at that very stage is satisfied that such a charge appears to be false or groundless.

(7) The larger interest of the public and State demand that in serious cases like economic offences involving blatant corruption at the higher rungs of the executive and political power, the discretion Under Section 438 of the Code should not be exercised; and

(8) Mere general allegation of mala fides in the petition are inadequate. The court must be satisfied on materials before it that the allegations of mala fides are substantial and the accusation appears to be false and groundless.

It was urged before the Full Bench that the appellants were men of substance and position who were hardly likely to abscond and would be prepared willingly to face trial. This argument was rejected with the observation that to accord differential treatment to the appellants on account of their status will amount to negation of the concept of equality before the law and that it could hardly be contended that every man of status, who was intended to be charged with serious crimes, including the one Under Section 409 which was punishable with life imprisonment, "was entitled to knock at the door of the court for anticipatory bail". The possession of high status, according to the Full Bench, is not only an irrelevant consideration for granting anticipatory bail but is, if anything, an aggravating circumstance.

12. We find ourselves unable to accept, in their totality, the submissions of the learned Additional Solicitor General or the constraints which the Full Bench of the High Court has engrafted on the power conferred by Section 438. Clause (1) of Section 438 is couched in terms, broad and unqualified. By any known canon of construction, words of width and amplitude ought not generally to be cut down so as to read into the language of the statute restraints and conditions which the legislature itself did not think it proper or necessary to impose.

This is especially true when the statutory provisions which falls for consideration is designed to secure a valuable right like the right to personal freedom and involves the application of a presumption as salutary and deep- grained in our Criminal Jurisprudence as the presumption of innocence. Though the right to apply for anticipatory bail was conferred for the first time by Section 438, while enacting that provision the legislature was not writing on a clean slate in the sense of taking an unprecedented step, in so far as the right to apply for bail is concerned. It had before it two cognate provisions of the Code : Section 437 which deals with the power of courts other than the Court of Session and the High Court to grant bail in non- bailable cases and Section 439 which deals with the "special powers" of the High Court and the Court of Session regarding bail. The whole of Section 437 is riddled and hedged in by restrictions on the power of certain courts to grant bail. That section reads thus :

437. When bail may be taken in case of non- bailable offence. (1) When any person accused of or suspected of the commission of any non- bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station or appears or is brought before a Court other than the High Court or Court of Session, he may be released on bail, but he shall not be so released if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life :

Provided that the Court may direct that any person under the age of sixteen years or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of such an offence be released on bail:

Provided further that the mere fact that an accused person may be required for being identified by witnesses during investigation shall not be sufficient ground for refusing to grant bail if he is otherwise entitled to be released on bail and gives an undertaking that he shall comply with such directions as may be given by the Court.

(2) If it appears to such officer or Court at any stage of the investigation, inquiry or trial as the case may be, that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed a non- bailable offence, but that there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt, the accused shall, pending such inquiry, be released on bail, or, at the discretion of such officer or Court, on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance as hereinafter provided.

(3) When a person accused or suspected of the commission of an offence punishable with imprisonment which may extend to seven years or more or of an offence under Chapter VI, Chapter XVI or Chapter XVII of the Indian Penal Code or abetment of, or conspiracy or attempt to commit, any such offence, is released on bail under Sub- Section (1), the Court may impose any condition which the Court considers necessary-

(a) in order to ensure that such person shall attend in accordance with the conditions of the bond executed under this Chapter, or

(b) in order to ensure that such person shall not commit an offence similar to the offence of which he is accused or of the commission of which he is suspected, or

(c) otherwise in the interests of justice.

(4) Art officer or a Court releasing any person on bail under Sub- section (1) or Sub- section (2), shall record in writing his or its reasons for so doing.

(5) Any Court which has released a person on bail under Sub- section (1) or Sub- section (2), may, if it considers it necessary so to do, direct that such person be arrested and commit him to custody.

(6) If, in any case triable by a Magistrate, the trial of a person accused of any non- bailable offence is not concluded within a period of sixty days from the first date feed for taking evidence in the case, such person shall, if he is in custody during the whole of the said period, be released on bail to the satisfaction of the Magistrate, unless for reasons to be recorded in writing, the Magistrate otherwise directs.

(7) If, at any time after the conclusion of the trial of a person accused of an non- bailable offence and before judgment is delivered, the Court is of opinion that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is not guilty of any such offence, it shall release the accused, if he is in custody, on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance to hear judgment delivered.

13. Section 439(1)(a) incorporates the conditions mentioned in Section 437(3) if the offence in respect of which the bail is sought is of the nature specified in that Sub- section. Section 439 reads thus :

439. Special powers of High Court or Court of Session regarding bail. (1) A High Court or Court of Session direct-

(a) That any person accused of an offence and in custody be released on bail, and if the offence is of the nature specified in Sub- section (3) of Section 437. may impose any condition which it considers necessary for the purposes mentioned in that Sub- section;

(b) that any condition imposed by a Magistrate when releasing any person on bail be set aside or modified:

Provided that the High Court or the Court of Session shall, before granting bail to a person who is accused of an offence which is triable exclusively by the Court of Session or which, though not so triable, is punishable with imprisonment for life, give notice of the application for bail to the Public Prosecutor unless it is, for reasons to be recorded in writing, of opinion that it is not practicable to give notice.

(2) A High Court or Court of Session may direct that any person who has been released on bail under this Chapter be arrested and commit him to custody.

14. The provisions of Section 437 and 439 furnished a convenient model for the legislature to copy while enacting Section 438. If it has not done so and has departed from a pattern which could easily be adopted with the necessary modifications, it would be wrong to refuse to give to the departure its full effect by assuming that it was not intended to serve any particular or specific purpose. The departure, in our opinion, was made advisedly and purposefully : Advisedly, at least in part, because of the 41st Report of the Law Commission which, while pointing out the necessity of introducing a provision in the Code enabling the High Court and the Court of Session to grant anticipatory bail, said in paragraph 29.9 that it had "considered" carefully the question of laying down in the statute certain conditions under which alone anticipatory bail could be granted" but had come to the conclusion that the question of granting such bail should be left "to the discretion of the court" and ought not to be fettered by the statutory provision itself, since the discretion was being conferred upon superior courts which were expected to exercise it judicially. The legislature conferred a wide discretion of the High Court and the Court of Session to grant anticipatory bail because it evidently felt, firstly, that it would be difficult to enumerate the conditions under which anticipatory bail should or should not be granted and secondly, because the intention was to allow the higher courts in the echelon a somewhat free hand in the grant of relief in the nature of anticipatory, bail. That is why, departing from the terms of Sections 437 and 439, Section 438(1) uses the language that the High Court or the Court of Session "may, if it thinks fit" direct that the applicant be released on bail. Sub- section (2) of Section 438 is a further and clearer manifestation of the same legislative intent to confer a wide discretionary power to grant anticipatory bail. It provided that the High Court or the Court of Session, while issuing a direction for the grant of anticipatory bail, "may include such conditions in such directions in the light of the facts of the particular case, as it may think fit", including the conditions which are set out in Clauses (i) to (iv) of Sub- section (2). The proof of legislative intent can best be found in the language which the legislature uses. Ambiguities can undoubtedly be resolved by resort to extraneous aids but words, as wide and explicit as have been used in Section 438, must be given their full effect, especially when to refuse to do so will result in undue impairment of the freedom of the individual and the presumption of innocence. It has to be borne in mind that anticipatory bail is sought when there is a mere apprehension of arrest on the accusation that the applicant has committed a non- bailable offence. A person who has yet to lose his freedom by being arrested asks for freedom in the event of arrest. That is the stage at which it is imperative to protect his freedom, in so far as one may, and to give full play to the presumption that he is innocent. In fact, the stage at which anticipatory bail is generally sought brings about its striking dissimilarity with the situation in which a person who is arrested for the commission of a non- bailable offence asks for bail. In the latter situation, adequate data is available to the Court, or can be called for by it, in the light of which it can grant or refuse relief and while granting it, modify it by the imposition of all or any of the conditions mentioned in Section 437.

15. This is not to say that anticipatory bail, if granted, must be granted without the imposition of any conditions. That will be plainly contrary to the very terms of Section 438. Though Sub- section (1) of that section says that the Court "may, if it thinks fit" issue the necessary direction for bail, sub- section (2) confers on the Court the power to include such conditions in the direction as, it may think fit in the light of the facts of the particular case, including the conditions mentioned in Clauses (i) to (iv) of that sub- section. The controversy therefore is not whether the Court has the power to impose conditions while granting anticipatory bail. It clearly and expressly has that power. The true question is whether by a process of construction, the amplitude of judicial discretion which is given to the High Court and the Court of Session, to impose such conditions as they may think fit while granting anticipatory bail, should be cut down by reading into the statute conditions which are not to be found therein, like those evolved by the High Court or canvassed by the learned Additional Solicitor General. Our answer, clearly and emphatically, is in the negative. The High Court and the Court of Session to whom the application for anticipatory bail is made ought to be left free in the exercise of their judicial discretion to grant bail if they consider it fit so to do on the particular facts and circumstances of the case and on such conditions as the case may warrant. Similarly, they must be left free to refuse bail if the circumstances of the case so warrant, on considerations similar to those mentioned in Section 437 or which are generally considered to be relevant Under Section 439 of the Code.

16. Generalisations on matters which rest on discretion and the attempt to discover formulae of universal application when facts are bound to differ from case to case frustrate the very purpose of conferring discretion. No two cases are alike on facts and therefore, Courts have to be allowed a little free play in the joints if the conferment of discretionary power is to be meaningful. There is no risk involved in entrusting a wide discretion to the Court of Session and the High Court in granting anticipatory bail because, firstly, these are higher courts manned by experienced persons, secondly, their orders are not final but are open to appellate or revisional scrutiny and above all because, discretion has always to be exercised by courts judicially and not according to whim, caprice or fancy. On the other hand, there is a risk in foreclosing categories of cases in which anticipatory bail may be allowed because life throws up unforeseen possibilities and offers new challenges. Judicial discretion has to be free enough to be able to take these possibilities in its stride and to meet these challenges. While dealing with the necessity for preserving judicial discretion unhampered by rules of general application, Earl Loreburn L.C. said in Hyman and Anr. v. Rose [1912] A. C 623 :

I desire in the first instance to point out that the discretion given by the section is very wide.... Now it seems to me that when the Act is so express to provide a wide discretion... it is not advisable to lay down any rigid rules for guiding that discretion. I do not doubt that the rules enunciated by the Master of the Rolls in the present case are useful maxims in general, and that in general they reflect the point of view from which judges would, regard an application for relief. But I think it ought to be distinctly understood that there may be cases in which any or all of them may be disregarded. If it were otherwise, the free discretion given by the statute would be fettered by limitations which have nowhere been enacted. It is one thing to decide what is the true meaning of the language contained in an Act of Parliament. It is quite a different thing to place conditions upon a free discretion entrusted by statute to the Court where the conditions are not based upon statutory enactment at all. It is not safe, I think, to say that the Court must and will always insist upon certain things when the Act does not require them, and the facts of some unforeseen case may make the Court wish it had kept a free hand.

17. Judges have to decide cases as they come before them, mindful of the need to keep passions and prejudices out of their decisions. And it will be strange if, by employing judicial artifices and techniques, we cut down the discretion so wisely conferred upon the Courts, by devising a formula which will confine the power to grant anticipatory bail within a strait- jacket. While laying down cast- iron rules in a matter like granting anticipatory bail, as the High Court has done, it is apt to be overlooked that even Judges can have but an imperfect awareness of the needs of new situations. Life is never static and every situation has to be assessed in the context of emerging concerns as and when it arises. Therefore, even if We were to frame a 'Code for the grant of anticipatory bail', which really is the business of the legislature, it can at best furnish broad guide- lines and cannot compel blind adhere'nce. In which case to grant bail and in which to refuse it is, in the very nature of things, a matter of discretion. But apart from the fact that the question is inherently of a kind which calls for the use of discretion from case to case, the legislature has, in terms express, relegated the decision of that question to the discretion of the court, by providing that it may grant bail "if it thinks fit". The concern of the courts generally is to preserve their discretion without meaning to abuse it. It will be strange if we exhibit concern to stultify the discretion conferred upon the Courts by law.

18. A close look at some of the rules in the eight- point code formulated by he High Court will show how difficult it is to apply them in practice. The seventh proposition says :

The larger interest of the public and State demand that in serious cases like economic offences involving blatant corruption at the higher rungs of the executive and political power, the discretion Under Section 438 of the Code should not be exercised.

19. How can the Court, even if it had a third eye, assess the bluntness of corruption at the stage of anticipatory bail ? And will it be correct to say that bluntness of the accusation will suffice for rejecting bail, even if the applicant's conduct is painted in colours tod lurid to be true ? The eighth proposition rule framed by. the High Court says :

Mere general allegations of mala fides in the petition are inadequate. The court must be satisfied on materials before it that the allegations of mala fide are substantial and the accusation appears to be false and groundless,

20. Does this rule mean, and that is the argument of the learned Additional Solicitor- General, that the anticipatory bail cannot be granted unless it is alleged (and naturally, also shown, because mere allegation is never enough) that the proposed accusations are mala fide ? It is understandable that if mala fides are shown anticipatory ;bail should be granted in the generality of cases. But it is not easy to appreciate why an application for anticipatory bail must be rejected unless the accusation is shown to be mala fide. This, truly, is the risk involved in framing rules by judicial construction. Discretion, therefore, ought to be permitted to remain in the domain of discretion, to be exercised objectively and open to correction by the higher courts. The safety of discretionary power lies in this twin protection which provides, a safeguard against its abuse.

21. According to the sixth proposition framed by the High Court, the discretion Under Section 438 cannot be exercised in regard to offences punishable with death or imprisonment for life unless, the court: at the stage of granting anticipatory bail, is satisfied that such a charge appears to be false or groundless. Now, Section 438 confers on the High Court and the Court of Session the power to grant anticipatory bail if the applicant has reason to believe that he may be arrested on an accusation of having committed "a non- bailable offence". We see no warrant for reading into this provision the conditions subject to which bail can be granted Under Section 437(1) of the Code. That section, while conferring the power to grant bail in cases, of non- bailable offences, provides by way of an exception that a person accused or suspected of the commission of a non-bailable offence "shall not be so released" if there appear to be reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life. If it was intended that the exception contained in Section 437(1) should govern the grant of relief Under Section 438(1), nothing would have been easier for the legislature than to introduce into the latter section a similar provision. We have already pointed out the basic distinction between these two sections. Section 437 applies only after a person, who is alleged to have committed a non- bailable offence, is arrested or detained without warrant or appears or is brought before a court. Section 438 applies before the arrest is made and, in fact, one of the pre- conditions of its application is that the person, who applies for relief under it, must be able to show that he has reason to believe that "he may be arrested", which plainly means that he is not yet arrested. The nexus which this 'distinction bears with the grant or refusal of bail is that in cases falling Under Section 437, there is some concrete data on the basis of which it is possible to show that there appear to be reasonable grounds for believing that the applicant has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life. In cases falling Under Section 438 that stage is still to arrive and, in the generality of cases thereunder, it would be premature and indeed difficult to predicate that there are or are not reasonable grounds for so believing. The foundation of the belief spoken of in Section 437(1), by reason of which the court cannot release the applicant on bail is, normally, the credibility of the allegations contained in the First Information Report. In the majority- of cases falling Under Section 438, that data will be lacking for forming the requisite belief. If at all the conditions mentioned in Section 437 are to be read into the provisions of Section 438, the transplantation shall have to be done without amputation. That is to say, on the reasoning of the High Court, Section 438(1) shall have to be read as containing the clause that the applicant "shall not" be released on bail "if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life". In this process one shall have overlooked that whereas, the power Under Section 438(1) can be exercised if the High Court or the Court of Session "thinks fits to do so, Section 437(1) does not confer the power to grant bail in the same wide terms. The expression "if it thinks fit", which occurs in Section, 438(1) in relation to the power of the High Court or the Court of Session, is conspicuously absent in Section 437(1). We see no valid reason for re- writing Section 438 with a view, not to expanding the scope and ambit of the discretion conferred on the High Court and the Court of Session but, for the purpose of limiting it. Accordingly, we are unable to endorse the view of the High Court that anticipatory bail cannot be granted in respect of offences like criminal breach of trust for the mere reason that the punishment provided therefore is imprisonment for life. Circumstances may broadly justify the grant of bail in such cases too, though of course, the Court is free to refuse anticipatory bail in any case if there is material before it justifying such refusal.

22. A great deal has been said by the High Court on the fifth proposition, framed by it, according to which, inter alia, the power Under Section 438 should not be exercised if the investigating agency can make a reasonable claim that it can secure incriminating material from information likely to be received from the offender Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act. According to the High Court, it is the right and the duty of the police to investigate into offences brought to their notice and therefore, courts should be careful not to exercise their powers in a manner which is calculated to cause interference therewith. It is true that the functions of the Judiciary and the police are in a sense complementary and not overlapping, And, as, observed by the Privy Council in King Emperor v. Khwaja Nasir Ahmed 71 Ind App 203.

Just as it is essential that every one accused of a crime should have free access to a court of justice so that he may be duly acquitted if found not guilty of the offence with which he is charged, so it is of the utmost importance that the judiciary should not interfere with the police in matters which are within their province and into which the law imposes on them the duty of inquiry. The functions of the Judiciary and the Police are complementary, not overlapping, and the combination of the individual liberty with a due observance of law and order is only to be obtained by leaving each to exercise its own function....

23. But, these remarks, may it be remembered, were made by the Privy Council while rejecting the view of the Lahore High Court that it had inherent jurisdiction under the old Section 561A, Criminal Procedure Code, to quash all proceedings taken by the police in pursuance of two First Information Reports made to them. An order quashing such proceedings puts an end to the proceedings with the inevitable result that all investigation into the accusation comes to a halt. Therefore, it was held that the Court cannot, in the exercise of its inherent powers, virtually direct that the police shall not investigate into the charges contained in the F.I.R. We are concerned here with a situation of an altogether different kind. An order of anticipatory bail does not in any way, directly or indirectly, take away from the police their right to investigate into charges made or to be made against the person released on bail. In fact, two of the usual conditions incorporated in a direction issued Under Section 438(1) are those recommended in Sub- section (2) (i) and (ii) which require the applicant to co- operate with the police and to assure that he shall not tamper with the witnesses during and after the investigation. While granting relief Under Section 438(1), appropriate conditions can be imposed Under Section 438(2) so as to ensure an uninterrupted investigation. One of such conditions can even be that in the event of the police making out a case of a likely discovery Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act, the person released on bail shall be liable to be taken in police custody for facilitating the discovery. Besides, if and when the occasion arises, it may be possible for the prosecution to claim the benefit of Section 27 of the Evidence Act in regard to a discovery of facts made in pursuance of information supplied by a person released on bail by invoking the principle stated by this Court in State of U.P. v. Deoman Upadhyaya MANU/SC/0060/1960 : 1960CriLJ1504 to the effect that when a person not in custody approaches a police officer investigating an offence and offers to give information leading to the discovery of a fact, having a bearing on the charge which may be made against him, he may appropriately be deemed to have surrendered himself to the police. The broad foundation of this rule is stated to be that Section 46 of the CrPC does not contemplate any formality before a person can be said to be taken in custody : submission to the custody by word or action by a person is sufficient. For similar reasons, we are unable to agree that anticipatory bail should be refused if a legitimate case for the remand of the offender to the police custody Under Section 167(2) of the Code is made out by the investigating agency.

24. It is unnecessary to consider the third proposition of the High Court in any great details because we have already indicated that there is no justification for reading into Section 438 the limitations mentioned in Section 437. The High Court says that such limitations are implicit in Section 438 but, with respect, no such implications arise or can be read into that section. The plenitude of the section must be given its full play.

25. The High Court says in its fourth proposition that in addition the limitations mentioned in Section 437, the petitioner must make out a "special case" for the exercise of the power to grant anticipatory bail. This, virtually, reduces the salutary power conferred by Section 438 to a dead letter. In its anxiety, otherwise just, to show that the power conferred by Section 438 is not "unguided or uncanalised", the High Court has subjected that power to a restraint which will have the effect of making the power utterly unguided. To say that the applicant must make out a "special case" for the exercise of the power to grant anticipatory bail is really to say nothing. The applicant has undoubtedly to make out a case for the grant of anticipatory bail. But one cannot go further and say that he must make out a "special case". We do not see why the provisions of Section 438 should be suspected as containing something volatile or incendiary, which needs to be handled with the greatest care and caution imaginable. A wise exercise of judicial power inevitably takes care of the evil consequences which are likely to flow out of its intemperate use. Every kind of judicial discretion, whatever may be the nature of the matter in, regard to which it is required to be exercised, has to be used with due care and caution. In fact, an awareness of the context in which the discretion is required to be exercised and of the reasonably foreseeable consequences of its use, is the hall mark of a prudent exercise of judicial discretion. One ought not to make a bugbear of the power to grant anticipatory bail.

26. By proposition No. 1 the High Court says that the power conferred by Section 438 is "of an extraordinary character and must be exercised sparingly in exceptional cases only". It may perhaps be right to describe the power as of an extraordinary character because ordinarily the bail is applied for Under Section 437 or Section 439. These Sections deal with the power to grant or, refuse bail to a person who is in the custody of the police and that is the ordinary situation in which bail is generally applied for. But this does not justify the conclusion that the power must be exercised in exceptional cases only, because it is of an extra- ordinary character. We will really be saying once too often that all discretion has to be exercised with care and circumspection depending on circumstances justifying its exercise. It is unnecessary to travel beyond it and subject the wide power conferred by the legislature to a rigorous code of self- imposed limitations.

27. It remains only to consider the second proposition formulated by the High Court, Which is the only one with which we are disposed to agree but we will say more about it a little later.

28. It will be appropriate at this stage to refer to a decision of this Court in Balchand Jain v. State of Madhya Pradesh MANU/SC/0172/1976 : [1977]2SCR52 on which. the High Court has leaned heavily in formulating its propositions. One of us, Bhagwati J. who spoke for himself and A.C. Gupta, J. observed ed in that case that :

the power of granting 'anticipatory bail' is somewhat extraordinary in character and it is only in exceptional cases where it appears that a person might be falsely implicated, or a frivolous case might be launched against farm, or "there are reasonable grounds for holding that a person accused of an offence is not likely to abscond, or otherwise misuse his liberty while on bail" that such power is to be exercised.

29. Fazal Ali, J. who delivered a separate judgment of concurrence also observed that:

an order for anticipatory bail is an extraordinary remedy available in special cases", and proceeded to say :

As Section 438 immediately follows Section 437 which is the main provision for bail in respect of non- bailable offences, it is manifest that the conditions imposed by Section 437(1) are implicitly contained in Section 438 of the Code. Otherwise the result would be that a person who is accused of murder can get away Under Section 438 by obtaining an order for anticipatory bail without the necessity of proving that there were reasonable grounds for believing that he was not guilty of offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Such a course would render the provisions of Section 437 nugatory and will give a free licence to the accused persons charged with non- bailable offences to get easy bail by approaching the Court Under Section 438 and by-passing Section 437 of the Code. This, we feel, could never have been the intention of the Legislature. Section 438 does not contain unguided or uncanalised powers to pass an order for anticipatory bail, but such an order being of an exceptional type can only be passed if, apart from the conditions mentioned in Section 437, there is a special case made out for passing the order. The words "for a direction under this section" and "Court may, if it thinks fit, direct" clearly show that the Court has to be guided by a large number of considerations including those mentioned in Section 437 of the Code.

While stating his conclusions Fazal Ali, J. reiterated in conclusion no. 3 that "Section 438 of the Code is an extraordinary remedy and should be resorted to only in special cases."

30. We hold the decision in Balchand Jain (supra) in great respect but it is necessary to remember that the question as regards the interpretation of Section 438 did not at all arise in that case. Fazal Ali, J. has stated in paragraph 3 of his judgment that "the only point" which arose for consideration before the Court was whether the provisions of Section 438 relating to anticipatory bail stand overruled and repealed by virtue of Rule 184 of the Defence and Internal Security of India Rules, 1971: or whether both the provisions can, by the rule of harmonious interpretation, exist side by side. Bhagwati, J. has also stated in his judgment, after adverting to Section 438 that Rule 184 is what the Court was concerned with in the appeal. The observations made in Balchand Jain (supra) regarding the nature of the power conferred by Section 438 and regarding the question whether the conditions mentioned in Section 437 should be read into Section 438 cannot therefore be treated as concluding the points which arise directly for our consideration. We agree, with respect, that the power conferred by Section 438 is of an extraordinary character in the sense indicated above, namely, that it is not ordinarily resorted to like the power conferred by Sections 437 and 439. We also agree that the power to grant anticipatory bail should be exercised with due care and circumspection but beyond that, it is not possible- to agree with the observations made in Balchand Jain (supra) in an altogether different context on an altogether different point.

31. We find a great deal of substance in Mr. Tarkunde's submission that since denial of bail amounts to deprivation of personal liberty, the Court should lean against the imposition of unnecessary restrictions on the scope of Section 438, especially when no such restrictions have been imposed by the legislature in the terms of that section. Section 438 is a procedural provision which is concerned with the personal liberty of the individual, who is entitled to the benefit of the presumption of innocence since he is not, on the date of his application for anticipatory bail, convicted of the offence in respect of which he seeks bail. An over- generous infusion of constraints and conditions which are not to be found in Section 438 can make its provisions constitutionally vulnerable since the right to personal freedom cannot be made to depend on, compliance with unreasonable restrictions. The beneficent provision contained in Section 438 must be saved, not jettisoned. No doubt) can linger after the decision in Maneka Gandhi MANU/SC/0133/1978 : [1978]2SCR621 that in order to meet the challenge of Article 21 of the Constitution, the procedure established by law for depriving a person of his liberty must be fair, just and reasonable. Section 438, in the form in which it; is conceived by the legislature, is open to no exception on the ground that it prescribes a procedure which is unjust or unfair. We ought, at all costs, to avoid throwing it open to a Constitutional challenge by reading words in it which are not be found therein.

32. It is not necessary to refer to decisions which deal with the right to ordinary bail because that right does not furnish an exact parallel to the right to anticipatory bail. It is, however, interesting that as long back as in 1924 it was held by the High Court of Calcutta in Nagendra v. King

Emperor MANU/WB/0119/1923 : AIR1924Cal476 that the object of bail is to secure the attendance of the accused at the trial, that the proper test to be applied in the solution of the question whether bail should be granted or refused is whether it is probable that the party will appear to take his trial and that it is indisputable that bail is not to be withheld as a punishment. In two other cases which, significantly, are the 'Meerut Conspiracy cases' observations are to- be found regarding the right to bail which observe a special mention. In K.N. Joglekar v. Emperor MANU/UP/0060/1931 : AIR1931All504 , it was observed, while dealing with Section 438 which corresponds to the present Section 439 of the Code, that it conferred upon the Sessions Judge of the High Court wide powers to grant bail which were not handicapped by tire restrictions in the preceding Section 497 which corresponds) to the present Section 437. It was observed by the Court that there was no; hard and fast rule and no inflexible principle governing the exercise of the discretion conferred by Section 498 and that the only principle which was established was that the discretion should be exercised judiciously. In Emperor v. H.L. Hutchinson MANU/UP/0014/1931 : AIR1931All356 it was said that it was very unwise to make an attempt to lay down any particular rules which will bind the High Court, having regard to the fact that the legislature itself left the discretion of the Court unfettered. According) to the High Court, the variety of cases that may arise from time to time cannot be safely classified and it is dangerous to make an attempt to classify the cases and to say that in particular classes a bail may be granted but not in other classes. It was observed that the principle to be deduced from the various sections in the Criminal Procedure Code was that grant of bail is the rule and refusal is the exception. An accused person who enjoys freedom is in a much better position to look after his case and to properly defend himself than if he were in custody. As a presumably innocent person he is therefore entitled to freedom and every opportunity to look after his own case. A presumably innocent person must have his freedom to enable him to establish his innocence.

33. Coming nearer home, it was observed by Krishna Iyer, J., in Gudikanti Narasimhulu v. Public Prosecutor, High Court of Andhra Pradesh MANU/SC/0089/1977 : 1978CriLJ502 that "the issue of bail is one of liberty, justice, public safety and burden of the public treasury, all of which insist that a developed jurisprudence of bail is integral to a socially sensitized judicial process. After all, personal liberty of an accused or convict is fundamental, suffering lawful eclipse only in terms of procedure established by (law. The last four words of Article 21 are the life of that human right."

34. In Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.) MANU/SC/0420/1978 : 1978CriLJ129 it was observed by Goswami, J. who spoke for the Court, that "there cannot be an inexorable formula in the matter of granting bail. The facts and circumstances of each case will govern the exercise of judicial discretion in granting or cancelling bail."

35. In American Jurisprudence (2d, Volume 8, page 806, para 39) it is stated :

Where the granting of bail lies within the discretion of the court, the granting or denial is regulated, to a large extent, by the facts and circumstances of each particular case. Since the object of the detention or imprisonment of the accused is to secure his appearance and submission to the jurisdiction and the judgment of the court, the primary inquiry is whether a recognizance or bond would effect that end.

It is thus clear that the question whether to grant bail or not depends for its answer upon a variety of circumstances, the cumulative effect of which must enter into the judicial verdict. Any one single circumstance cannot be treated as of universal validity or as necessarily justifying the grant or refusal of bail.

36. In regard to anticipatory bail, if the proposed accusation appears to stem not from motives of furthering the ends of justice but from some ulterior motive, the object being to injure and humiliate the applicant by having him arrested, a direction for the release of the applicant on bail in the event of his arrest would generally be made. On the other hand, if it appears likely, considering the antecedents of the applicant, that taking advantage of the order of anticipatory bail he will flee from justice, such an order would not be made. But the converse of these propositions is not necessarily true. That is to say, it cannot be laid down as an inexorable rule that anticipatory bail cannot be granted unless the proposed accusation appears to be actuated by mala fides; told, equally, that anticipatory bail must be granted if there is no fear that the applicant will abscond. There are several other considerations, too numerous to enumerate, the combined effect of which must weigh with the court while granting or rejecting anticipatory bail. The nature and seriousness of the proposed charges, the context of the events likely to lead to the making of the charges, a reasonable possibility of the applicant's presence not being secured at the trial, a reasonable apprehension that witnesses will be tampered with and "the larger interests of the public or the state" are some of the considerations which the court has to keep in mind while deciding an application for anticipatory bail. The relevance of these considerations was pointed out in The State v. Captain Jagjit Singh MANU/SC/0139/1961 : [1962]3SCR622 which, though, was a case under the old Section 498 which corresponds to the present Section 439 of the Code. It is of paramount consideration to remember that the freedom of the individual is as necessary for the survival of the society as it is for the egoistic purposes of the individual. A person seeking anticipatory bail is still a free man entitled to the presumption of innocence. He is willing to submit to restraints on his freedom, by the acceptance of conditions which the court may think fit to impose, in consideration of the assurance that if arrested, he shall be enlarged on bail.

37. A word of caution may perhaps be necessary in the evaluation of the consideration whether the applicant is likely to abscond. There can be no presumption that the wealthy and the mighty will submit themselves to trial and that the humble and the poor will run away from the course of justice, any more than there can be a presumption that the former are not likely to commit a crime and the latter are more likely to commit it. In his charge to the grand jury at Salisbury Assizes, 1899 (to which Krishna Iyer, J. has referred in Gudikanti), Lord Russel of Killowen said :

...it was the duty of magistrates to admit accused persons to bail, wherever practicable, unless there were strong grounds for supposing that such persons would not appear to take their trial. It was not the poorer classes who did not appear, for their circumstances were such as to tie them to the place where they carried on their work. They had not the golden wings with which to fly from justice.

This, incidentally, will serve to show how no hard and fast rules can A, be laid down in discretionary matters like the grant or refusal of bail, whether anticipatory or otherwise. No such rules can be laid down for the simple reason that a circumstance which, in a given case, turns out to be conclusive, may have no more than ordinary signification in another case.

38. We would, therefore, prefer to leave the High Court and the Court of Session to exercise their jurisdiction Under Section 438 by a wise and careful use of their discretion which, by their long training and experience, they are ideally suited to do. The ends of justice will be better served by trusting these courts to act objectively and in consonance with principles governing the grant of bail which are recognised over the years, than by divesting them of their discretion which the legislature has conferred upon them, by laying down inflexible rules of general application. It is customary, almost chronic, to take a statute as one finds it on the grounds that, after all "the legislature in, its wisdom" has thought it fit to use a particular expression. A convention may usefully grow whereby the High Court and the Court of Session may be trusted to exercise their discretionary powers in their wisdom, especially when the discretion is entrusted to their care by the legislature in its wisdom. If they err, they are liable to be corrected.

39. This should be the end of the matter, but it is necessary to clarify a few points which have given rise to certain misgivings.

40. Section 438(1) of the Code lays down a condition which has to be satisfied before anticipatory bail can be granted. The applicant must; show that he has "reason to believe" that he may be arrested for a non- bailable offence. The use of the expression "reason to believe" shows that the belief that the applicant may be so arrested must be founded on reasonable grounds. Mere 'fear' is not 'belief, for which reason it is not enough for the applicant to show that he has some sort of a vague apprehension that some one is going to make an accusation against him, in pursuance of which he may be arrested. The grounds on which the belief of the applicant is based that he may be arrested for a non- bailable offence, must be capable of being examined by the court objectively, because it is then alone that the court can determine whether the applicant has reason to believe that he may be so arrested. Section 438(1), therefore, cannot be invoked on the basis of vague and general allegations, as if to arm oneself in perpetuity against a possible arrest. Otherwise, the number of applications for anticipatory bail H will be as large as, at any rate, the adult populace. Anticipatory bail is a device to secure the individual's liberty; it is neither a passport to the commission of crimes nor a shield against any and all kinds of accusations, likely or unlikely.

41. Secondly, if an application for anticipatory bail is made to the High Court or the Court of Session it must apply its own mind to the question and decide whether a case has been made out for granting such relief. It cannot leave the question for the decision of the Magistrate concerned Under Section 437 of the Code, as and when an occasion arises. Such a course will defeat the very object of Section 438.

42. Thirdly, the filing of a First Information Report is not a condition precedent to the exercise of the power Under Section 438. The imminence of a likely arrest founded on a reasonable belief can be shown to exist even if an F.I.R. is not yet filed.

43. Fourthly, anticipatory bail can be granted even after an F.I.R. is filed, so long as the applicant has not been arrested.

44. Fifthly, the provisions of Section 438 cannot be invoked after the arrest of the accused. The grant of "anticipatory bail" to an accused who is under arrest involves a contradiction in terms, in so far as the offence or offences for which he 'is arrested, are concerned. After arrest, the accused must seek his remedy Under Section 437 or Section 439 of the Code, if he wants to be released on bail in respect of the offence or offences for which he is arrested.

45. We have said that there is one proposition formulated by the High Court with which we are inclined to agree. That is preposition No. (2). We agree that a 'blanket order' of anticipatory bail should not generally be passed. This flows from the very language of the section which, as discussed above, requires the applicant to show that he has "reason to believe" that he may be arrested. A belief can be said to be founded on reasonable grounds only if there is something tangible to go by on the basis of which it can be said that the applicant's apprehension that he may be arrested is genuine. That is why, normally, a direction should not issue Under Section 438(1) to the effect that the applicant shall be released on bail "whenever arrested for whichever offence whatsoever." That is what is meant by a 'blanket order' of anticipatory bail, an order which serves as a blanket to cover or protect any and every kind of allegedly unlawful activity, in fact any eventuality, likely or unlikely regarding which, no concrete information can possibly be had. The rationale of a direction Under Section 438(1) is the belief of the applicant founded on reasonable grounds that he may be arrested for a non- bailable offence. It is unrealistic to expect the applicant to draw up his application with the meticulousness of a pleading hi a civil case and such is not requirement of the section.; But specific events; and facts must be disclosed by the applicant in order to enable the court to judge of the reasonableness of his belief, the existence of which is the sine qua non of the exercise of power conferred by the section.

46. Apart from the fact that the very language of the statute compels this construction, there is an important principle involved in the insistence that facts, on the basis of which a direction Under Section 438(1) is sought, must be clear and specific, not vague and general. It is only by the observance of that principle that a possible conflict between the right of an individual to his liberty and the right of the police to investigate into crimes reported to them can be avoided.

47. A blanket order of anticipatory bail is bound to cause serious interference with both the right and the duty of the police in the matter of investigation because, regardless of what kind of offence is alleged to have been committed by the applicant and when, an order of bail which comprehends allegedly unlawful activity of any description whatsoever, will prevent the police from arresting the applicant even if he commits, say, a murder in the presence of the public. Such an order can then become a charter of lawlessness and a weapon to stifle prompt investigation into offences which could not possibly be predicated when the order was passed. Therefore, the court which grants anticipatory bail must take care to specify the offence or offences in respect of which alone the order will be effective. The power should not be exercised in a. vacuum.

48. There was some discussion before us on certain minor modalities regarding the passing of bail orders Under Section 438(1). Can an carder of bail be passed under that section without notice to the public prosecutor? It can be. But notice should issue to the public prosecutor or the Government Advocate forthwith and the question of bail should be re- examined in the light of the respective contentions of the parties. The ad- interim order too must conform to the requirements of the section and suitable conditions should be imposed on the applicant even at that stage. Should the operation of an order passed Under Section 438(1) be limited in point of tune? Not necessarily. The Court may, if there are reasons for doing so, limit the operation of the order to a short period until after the filing of an F.I.R. in respect of the matter covered by the order. The applicant may in such cases be directed to obtain an order of bail Under Section 437 or 439 of the Code within a reasonably short period after the filing of the F.I.R. as aforesaid. But this need not be followed as an invariable rule. The normal rule should be not to limit the operation of the order in relation to a period of time.

49. During the last couple of years this Court, while dealing with appeals against orders passed by various High Courts, has granted anticipatory bail to many a person by imposing conditions set out in; Section 438(2)(i), (ii) and (iii). The Court has, in addition, directed in most of those cases that (a) the applicant should surrender himself to the police for a brief period if a discovery is to be made Under Section 27 of the Evidence Act or that he should be deemed to have surrendered himself if such a discovery is to be made. In certain exceptional cases, the Court has", in view of the material placed before it, directed that the order of anticipatory bail will remain in operation only for a week or so until after the filing of the F.I.R. in respect of matters covered by the order. These orders, on the whole, have worked satisfactorily , causing the least inconvenience to the individuals concerned and least interference with the investigational rights of the police. The Court has attempted through those orders to strike a balance between the individual's right to personal freedom and the investigational rights of the police. The appellants who were refused anticipatory bail by various courts have long since been released by this Court Under Section 438(1) of the Code.

50. The various appeals and Special Leave petitions before us will stand disposed of in terms of this Judgment. The judgment of the Full Bench of the Punjab and Haryana High Court, which was treated as the main case under appeal, is substantially set aside as indicated during the course of this Judgment.

Neutral Citation: 2023/DHC/8429

Back to Section 482 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE HIGH COURT OF DELHI

W.P. (Crl.) 562/2023 and Crl. M.A. 5126/2023

Decided On: 24.11.2023

Rajinder Singh Chadha Vs. Union of India and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

Amit Sharma, J.

JUDGMENT

Amit Sharma, J.

1. The present petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India read with Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 ('CrPC') seeks primarily the following prayer:

"i. Pass a writ/order/direction in the nature of certiorari thereby issuing direction to quash and set aside all proceedings and actions taken pursuant to the Enforcement Case Information Report bearing number ECIR/09/HIU/2019 dated 27.06.2019."

Background

2. Briefly stated, the facts of the case, relevant for adjudication of the present petition are as under:

i. Two FIRs, i.e., FIR No. 16/2018 dated 24.01.2018 and FIR No. 49/2021 dated 12.03.2021 were registered under Sections 420/406/120B of the Indian Penal Code, 1860 ('IPC') at PS Economic Offences Wing ('EOW'). The said FIRs. were registered against the persons accused therein, including the petitioner and arose out of a similar set of facts and circumstances.

ii. In both the FIRs, the respective complainants, inter- alia, alleged that despite payment of monies in 2006- 07, they did not receive possession of flats, as was promised by accused company M/s Uppal Chadha Hi- Tech (hereinafter referred to as the 'company'). It was alleged that in his capacity as a Director of the said firm, the petitioner was responsible for siphoning of the funds collected from the complainants.

iii. During the pendency of the respective trials in FIRs. No. 16/2018 and 49/2021, the accused persons therein settled the dispute with the respective complainants amicably.

iv. In FIR No. 16/2018, the accused persons moved an application for compounding under Section 320 of the CrPC before the learned Trial Court, which was allowed vide order dated 19.11.2019 passed by Sh. Deepak Sherawat, Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, South- East, Saket and the accused persons were accordingly acquitted for offences under Sections 406/420/120B of the IPC.

v. FIR No. 49/2021 was quashed by a coordinate bench of this Court, vide order dated 22.12.2022 passed in CRL.MC. 7083/2022 titled 'Uppal Chadha Hi Tech Developers Pvt. Ltd. & Ors. v. State & Ors.'.

vi. The present ECIR was lodged on 26.07.2019 by the Directorate of Enforcement/respondent no. 2 ('the department') against M/s Uppal Chadha Hi- Tech, Harmandeep Singh, Gurjit Singh Kochar, Kritika Gupta, Rajinder Singh Chadha- the petitioner and other unknown persons.

vii. After the ECIR was lodged, the department carried out a search and seizure on 18.11.2022 under Section 17(1) of the Prevention of Money Laundering Act, 2002 at the office and residential premises of the petitioner. Various phones, documents, digital records and cash was seized. Follow- up searches were conducted on 19.11.2022, 22.11.2022 and 09.12.2022. Pursuant to the search and seizure, the department filed an application under Section 17(4) of the PMLA for retention of records and digital devices seized on 18.11.2022, 19.11.2022, 22.11.2022 and 09.12.2022.

viii. A show- cause notice under Section 8(1) of the PMLA, alongwith recording of reasons dated 21.12.2022 was issued by the Adjudicating Authority to the petitioner, for filing of a written response, on or before 09.02.2023, as to why the department's application under Section 17(4) of the PMLA should not be allowed.

Submissions of behalf of the Petitioner/Rajinder Singh Chadha

3. Learned Senior Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner submitted that the basis of the present ECIR, i.e., the predicate offences in FIRs. No. 16/2018 and 49/2021 now stand compounded and quashed, respectively. As a consequence of that, the jurisdictional fact which formed the basis of the department's investigation has now come to an end and hence, the ECIR and the subsequent proceedings cannot continue any longer. Attention of this Court was drawn to the application under Section 17(4) of the PMLA filed on behalf of the department, wherein it has been clearly stated that the ECIR in question was registered on account of FIRs. No. 16/2018 and 49/2021. It was submitted that it is thus clear, that the ECIR was initiated on account of the aforesaid two FIRs, which no longer exist and therefore, the ECIR cannot continue either. In support of the said argument, learned Senior Counsel for the petitioner placed reliance on the following judgments:

i. Vijay Madanlal Choudhary & Ors. v. Union of India & Ors., MANU/SC/0924/2022 : 2022:INSC:757.

ii. Harish Fabiani and Ors. v. Enforcement Directorate & Ors., MANU/DE/3707/2022.

iii. Naresh Goyal v. The Directorate of Enforcement, Judgment dated 20.02.2023 passed by the Hon'ble High Court of Bombay in Criminal Writ Petition No. 4037 of 2022.

iv. Prakash Industries Limited v. Union of India and Ors., MANU/DE/0424/2023 : 2023:DHC:481.

v. Parvathi Kollur and Anr. v. State by Directorate of Enforcement MANU/SC/1517/2022, Order dated 16.08.2022 passed by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Criminal Appeal No. 1254/2022.

vi. Directorate of Enforcement v. M/s Obulapuram Mining Company, Order dated 02.12.2022 passed by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Criminal Appeal No. 1269/2017.

vii. EMTA Coal v. Deputy Director, Directorate of Enforcement MANU/DE/0181/2023, 2023/DHC/000277.

viii. M/s Nik Nish Retail and Anr. v. Assistant Director, Enforcement Directorate, Government of India and Ors., MANU/WB/1688/2022.

ix. Manturi Shashi Kumar v. ED, MANU/TL/0641/2023.

x. Arun Kumar and Ors vs. Union of India and Others, MANU/SC/7267/2007 : (2007) 1 SCC 732.

3.1. Reliance was placed on Vijay Madanlal Choudhary and Ors. v. Union of India, (supra), and in particular, the following paragraphs thereof:

"253. Tersely put, it is only such property which is derived or obtained, directly or indirectly, as a result of criminal activity relating to a scheduled offence can be regarded as proceeds of crime. The authorities under the 2002 Act cannot resort to action against any person for money-laundering on an assumption that the property recovered by them must be proceeds of crime and that a scheduled offence has been committed, unless the same is registered with the jurisdictional police or pending inquiry by way of complaint before the competent forum. For, the expression "derived or obtained" is indicative of criminal activity relating to a scheduled offence already accomplished. Similarly, in the event the person named in the criminal activity relating to a scheduled offence is finally absolved by a Court of competent jurisdiction owing to an order of discharge, acquittal or because of quashing of the criminal case (scheduled offence) against him/her, there can be no action for money- laundering against such a person or person claiming through him in relation to the property linked to the stated scheduled offence. This interpretation alone can be countenanced on the basis of the provisions of the 2002 Act, in particular Section 2(1)(u) read with Section 3. Taking any other view would be rewriting of these provisions and disregarding the express language of definition clause "proceeds of crime", as it obtains as of now.

***

281. The next question is : whether the offence under Section 3 is a standalone offence? Indeed, it is dependent on the wrongful and illegal gain of property as a result of criminal activity relating to a scheduled offence. Nevertheless, it is concerning the process or activity connected with such property, which constitutes offence of money- laundering. The property must qualify the definition of "proceeds of crime" under Section 2(1)(u) of the 2002 Act. As observed earlier, all or whole of the crime property linked to scheduled offence need not be regarded as proceeds of crime, but all properties qualifying the definition of "proceeds of crime" under Section 2(1)(u) will necessarily be crime properties. Indeed, in the event of acquittal of the person concerned or being absolved from allegation of criminal activity relating to scheduled offence, and if it is established in the court of law that the crime property in the concerned case has been rightfully owned and possessed by him, such a property by no stretch of imagination can be termed as crime property and ex- consequenti proceeds of crime within the meaning of Section 2(1)(u) as it stands today. On the other hand, in the trial in connection with the scheduled offence, the Court would be obliged to direct return of such property as belonging to him. It would be then paradoxical to still regard such property as proceeds of crime despite such adjudication by a Court of competent jurisdiction. It is well within the jurisdiction of the concerned Court trying the scheduled offence to pronounce on that matter.

467. In light of the above analysis, we now proceed to summarise our conclusion on seminal points in issue in the following terms:-

*** *** ***

(d) The offence under Section 3 of the 2002 Act is dependent on illegal gain of property as a result of criminal activity relating to a scheduled offence. It is concerning the process or activity connected with such property, which constitutes the offence of money- laundering. The Authorities under the 2002 Act cannot prosecute any person on notional basis or on the assumption that a scheduled offence has been committed, unless it is so registered with the jurisdictional police and/or pending enquiry/trial including by way of criminal complaint before the competent forum. If the person is finally discharged/acquitted of the scheduled offence or the criminal case against him is quashed by the Court of competent jurisdiction, there can be no offence of money- laundering against him or any one claiming such property being the property linked to stated scheduled offence through him."

3.2. Learned Senior Counsel submitted that in Naresh Goyal (supra), it was held as under:

"11. Although, the learned counsel for the respondent No. 1- ED tried to impress upon this Court that the ECIR is a private internal document and not at par with an FIR, and as such is not required to be quashed, the said submission was not pressed, when the learned senior counsel for the petitioner in both the petitions showed a copy of the order passed by the Apex Court in the case of M/s. Obulapuram Mining Company Pvt. Ltd. (supra). In the said case, the learned Solicitor General appearing for the appellant- ED made a statement that since the proceedings before the Court (Apex Court) arose from an order of attachment and there is acquittal in respect of the predicate offence, the ED proceeding really would not survive.

*** *** ***

13. As noted above, admittedly there is no scheduled offence as against the petitioner in both the petitions, in view of the closure report filed by the police, which was accepted by the Courts as stated aforesaid. There being no predicate offence i.e. scheduled offence, the impugned ECIR registered by the respondent No. 1- ED will not survive and as such the said ECIR will have to be quashed and set aside."

3.3. Reliance was placed on a judgment of the Hon'ble High Court of Calcutta in Nik Nish Retail (supra) and in particular, on the following paragraph thereof:

"34. The quashing of FIR of regular case automatically created a situation that the offences, stated and alleged in the FIR has no existence; thus the "Scheduled Offence" has also no existence after quashing of the FIR. When there is no "Scheduled Offence", the proceeding initiated under the provisions of Prevention of Money Laundering Act, 2002 cannot stand alone."

It was further submitted that the aforesaid judgment in Nik Nish Retail (supra) was carried in appeal before the Hon'ble Supreme Court and was not interfered with. The said Special Leave Petition (Criminal) Diary No. 24321/2023 titled 'Assistant Director Enforcement Directorate v. M/s Nik Nish Retail Ltd. & Ors.' was disposed of by the Hon'ble Supreme Court vide order dated 14.07.2023 in the following terms:

"In paragraph 187 (v)(d) of the decision in the case of Vijay Madanlal Chowdhury & Ors. v. Union of India & Ors. MANU/SC/0924/2022, it is held that even if predicate offence is quashed by the Court of competent 1 jurisdiction, there can be no offence of money laundering against the accused.

Appropriate proceedings can be always filed by the concerned parties for challenging the order by which predicate offence was quashed. If the said order is set aside and the case is revived, it will be always open for the petitioner to revive the proceedings under the Prevention of Money Laundering Act, 2002.

The Special Leave Petition is accordingly disposed of.

Pending application also stands disposed of."

3.4. In support of his contentions, learned Senior Counsel drew the attention of this Court to Arun Kumar (supra), wherein it has been held as under:

"74. A "jurisdictional fact" is a fact which must exist before a court, tribunal or an authority assumes jurisdiction over a particular matter. A jurisdictional fact is one on existence or non-existence of which depends jurisdiction of a court, a tribunal or an authority. It is the fact upon which an administrative agency's power to act depends. If the jurisdictional fact does not exist, the court, authority or officer cannot act. If a court or authority wrongly assumes the existence of such fact, the order can be questioned by a writ of certiorari. The underlying principle is that by erroneously assuming existence of such jurisdictional fact, no authority can confer upon itself jurisdiction which it otherwise does not possess.

75. In Halsbury's Laws of England, it has been stated:

"Where the jurisdiction of a tribunal is dependent on the existence of a particular state of affairs, that state of affairs may be described as preliminary to, or collateral to the merits of, the issue. If, at the inception of an inquiry by an inferior tribunal, a challenge is made to its jurisdiction, the tribunal has to make up its mind whether to act or not and can give a ruling on the preliminary or collateral issue; but that ruling is not conclusive."

76. The existence of jurisdictional fact is thus sine qua non or condition precedent for the exercise of power by a court of limited jurisdiction."

Submissions on behalf of Respondent No. 2/Directorate of Enforcement

4. Per contra, learned Special Counsel for the department submitted that on the basis of the complaints filed by the investors of the company, the EOW registered FIRs. no. 16/2018 under Sections 420/406/120B of the IPC against the company and its Directors, including the petitioner. On the basis of the aforesaid FIR, the department recorded ECIR/09/HIU/2019 on 27.06.2019. It was further pointed out that initially, in the FIR, there were 20 complainants/victims, however, at the time of filing of chargesheet, there were 60 more complainants and as per the petitioner, they had settled the dispute only with 61 out of aforesaid 80 complainants. It was pointed out that so far as regarding compounding of offences is concerned, in the order dated 19.11.2019 passed by the learned Magistrate compounding FIR No. 16/2018, it has been recorded that the petitioner had undertaken to settle the dispute with the remaining complainants as well. It was further pointed out that thereafter, fresh complaints were received and the EOW registered another FIR No. 49/2021 dated 12.03.2021 and the said FIR was also taken on record in the existing ECIR/09/HIU/2019. Thereafter, the petitioner approached this Court seeking quashing of FIR No. 49/2021 and the same was allowed by a coordinate bench of this Court vide order dated 22.12.2022 passed in CRL.MC. 7083/2022.

5. It was submitted on behalf of the department that as per the chargesheet dated 14.02.2022, filed by the EOW in FIR No. 49/2021, there were a total of 77 complainants and the petitioner had only settled the dispute with 55 complainants. It was further pointed out that there are 22 more complainants/victims with whom the petitioner has not settled the dispute. It was further submitted that 79 complaints are still pending before RERA, Uttar Pradesh against the company.

6. It was further pointed out that during the pendency of the present petition, on the basis of the complaint received from one Ms. Shobhna Gupta, FIR No. 55/2023 dated 10.07.2023 was registered against the aforesaid company and its Directors under Sections 409/420/120B of the IPC at PS EOW. The said FIR No. 55/2023 is stated to have been made on the basis of similar allegations as in the previous FIRs. It was further pointed that the aforesaid FIR was taken on record for further investigation in the already opened ECIR/09/HIU/2019, which is the subject matter of the present petition.

7. Learned Special Counsel for respondent further submitted that the petitioner was one of the Directors in the companies- M/s UCHDPL, Chadha Infrastructure Developers Pvt. Ltd. and M/s Wave Infratech Pvt. Ltd. An amount of Rs. 175.95 crores is stated to have been transferred to Chadha Infrastructure Developers Pvt. Ltd. and Rs. 87.02 crores has been transferred to M/s Wave Infratech Pvt. Ltd. It was submitted that the petitioner was a director in the companies Chadha Infrastructure Developers Pvt. Ltd. as well as M/s Wave Infratech Pvt Ltd at the time of transfer of funds. It was pointed out that the petitioner is ultimate beneficiary and had a significant role in the activities connected with money laundering including possession and diversion of funds.

8. In support of his contentions, learned Special Counsel placed reliance on Vijay Madanlal Choudhary (supra) and in particular, the following paragraphs thereof:

"461. It is true that the ED Manual may be an internal document for departmental use and in the nature of set of administrative orders. It is equally true that the accused or for that matter common public may not be entitled to have access to such administrative instructions being highly confidential and dealing with complex issues concerning mode and manner of investigation, for internal guidance of officers of ED. It is also correct to say that there is no such requirement under the 2002 Act or for that matter, that there is nothing like investigation of a crime of money-laundering as per the scheme of 2002 Act. The investigation, however, is to track the property being proceeds of crime and to attach the same for being dealt with under the 2002 Act. Stricto sensu, it is in the nature of an inquiry in respect of civil action of attachment. Nevertheless, since the inquiry in due course ends in identifying the offender who is involved in the process or activity connected with the proceeds of crime and then to prosecute him, it is possible for the department to outline the situations in which that course could be adopted in reference to specific provisions of 2002 Act or the Rules framed thereunder; and in which event, what are the options available to such person before the Authority or the Special Court, as the case may be. Such document may come handy and disseminate information to all concerned. At least the feasibility of placing such document on the official website of ED may be explored.

457. Suffice it to observe that being a special legislation providing for special mechanism regarding inquiry/investigation of offence of money- laundering, analogy cannot be drawn from the provisions of 1973 Code, in regard to registration of offence of money- laundering and more so being a complaint procedure prescribed under the 2002 Act. Further, the authorities referred to in Section 48 of the 2002 Act alone are competent to file such complaint. It is a different matter that the materials/evidence collected by the same authorities for the purpose of civil action of attachment of proceeds of crime and confiscation thereof may be used to prosecute the person involved in the process or activity connected with the proceeds of crime for offence of money-laundering. Considering the mechanism of inquiry/investigation for proceeding against the property (being proceeds of crime) under this Act by way of civil action (attachment and confiscation), there is no need to formally register an ECIR, unlike registration of an FIR by the jurisdictional police in respect of cognizable offence under the ordinary law. There is force in the stand taken by the ED that ECIR is an internal document created by the department before initiating penal action or prosecution against the person involved with process or activity connected with proceeds of crime. Thus, ECIR is not a statutory document, nor there is any provision in 2002 Act requiring Authority referred to in Section 48 to record ECIR or to furnish copy thereof to the accused unlike Section 154 of the 1973 Code. The fact that such ECIR has not been recorded, does not come in the way of the authorities referred to in Section 48 of the 2002 Act to commence inquiry/investigation for initiating civil action of attachment of property being proceeds of crime by following prescribed procedure in that regard.

*** *** ***

467. In light of the above analysis, we now proceed to summarise our conclusion on seminal points in issue in the following terms:-

*** *** ***

(xviii)(a) In view of special mechanism envisaged by the 2002 Act, ECIR cannot be equated with an FIR under the 1973 Code. ECIR is an internal document of the ED and the fact that FIR in respect of scheduled offence has not been recorded does not come in the way of the Authorities referred to in Section 48 to commence inquiry/investigation for initiating "civil action" of "provisional attachment" of property being proceeds of crime...."

9. Learned Special Counsel for the department further submitted that since the inquiries/investigation under PMLA culminate into a complaint and the same being a complaint case, at this stage, raising an argument that ECIR is to be quashed because some of the FIRs. are compromised, is pre- mature since the scheduled offence continues to exist. It was submitted that once the inquiry/investigation is concluded and the respondent files a complaint, the petitioner can avail of his remedies under the CrPC.

10. Learned Special Counsel submitted that as on the present day, even if there exists a single complainant, who is aggrieved by the accused company and its directors, the two conditions laid down by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Vijay Madanlal Choudhary (supra) for closing the PMLA proceedings, cannot be satisfied. The said two conditions are as under:

"281. The next question is : whether the offence under Section 3 is a standalone offence? Indeed, it is dependent on the wrongful and illegal gain of property as a result of criminal activity relating to a scheduled offence. Nevertheless, it is concerning the process or activity connected with such property, which constitutes offence of money- laundering. The property must qualify the definition of "proceeds of crime" under Section 2(1)(u) of the 2002 Act. As observed earlier, all or whole of the crime property linked to scheduled offence need not be regarded as proceeds of crime, but all properties qualifying the definition of "proceeds of crime" under Section 2(1)(u) will necessarily be crime properties. Indeed, in the event of acquittal of the person concerned or being absolved from allegation of criminal activity relating to scheduled offence, and if it is established in the court of law that the crime property in the concerned case has been rightfully owned and possessed by him, such a property by no stretch of imagination can be termed as crime property and ex- consequenti proceeds of crime within the meaning of Section 2(1)(u) as it stands today. On the other hand, in the trial in connection with the scheduled offence, the Court would be obliged to direct return of such property as belonging to him. It would be then paradoxical to still regard such property as proceeds of crime despite such adjudication by a Court of competent jurisdiction. It is well within the jurisdiction of the concerned Court trying the scheduled offence to pronounce on that matter."

(emphasis supplied)

11. It was further contended on behalf of the department that it is a well settled principle that the offence of money laundering is an independent offence. Reliance in support of the said contention was placed on:

i. Vijay Madanlal Choudhary & Ors. vs. Union of India & Ors MANU/SC/0924/2022 : 2022:INSC:757.

ii. Judgment dated 12.05.2023 passed by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in ED vs Aditya Tripathi MANU/SC/0571/2023, Criminal Appeal No. 1401/2023.

iii. P. Rajendran vs. Directorate of Enforcement MANU/TN/7667/2022- Judgment dated 14.09.2022 passed by the Hon'ble Madras High Court in Criminal Original Petition No. 19880 of 2022.

iv. J. Sekar vs. Union of India & Ors. MANU/DE/0075/2018.

v. Radha Mohan Lakhotia vs. Directorate of Enforcement MANU/MH/1011/2010.

vi. Dr. Manik Bhattacharaya vs. Ramesh Malik & Ors. MANU/SC/1356/2022- SLP (C) 16325/2022.

12. It was submitted that the petitioner, during the course of arguments has heavily placed reliance on the judgement of Nik Nish Retail (supra), but the same is misplaced, as the facts of the said case were that a full and final settlement was entered between the Bank and Group of Companies, and the same was duly complied with. In the present case, the hard- earned money of innocent home- buyers was at stake, and the company i.e., M/s UCHDPL failed to settle the matter with every complainant, rather new FIRs. by aggrieved home- buyers continued to be filed like the FIR 55/2023.

13. Similarly, it was submitted that in the relied upon judgement of Manturi Shashi Kumar (supra), the Hon'ble Court observed- "In the meanwhile, in view of the settlement arrived at between the de facto complainant and appellant No. 1, the criminal court referred the matter to Lok Adalat and when the matter was settled in Lok Adalat, the criminal court discharged appellant No. 1 vide order dated 20.03.2018 leading to closure of the criminal case as well." However, in the present case it is an admitted fact that the petitioner/accused persons have not settled the matter with all the complainants, which is evident from the facts that on 10.07.2023 the EOW on the basis of a complaint received from one Mrs. Shobhna Gupta registered a FIR bearing No. 55/2023 against M/s Uppal Chadha Hi Tech Developers Ltd (M/s UDCHDPL), Manpreet Singh Chadha, Harmandeep Singh Kandhari, Rajiv Gupta, Ginni Chadha, Sanjeev Jain, Rahul Chauhan and others.

14. Learned Special Counsel further submitted that the petitioner has placed reliance on the judgement of Hon'ble High Court of Karnataka in Mantri Developers and Ors. vs. DOE in Writ Petition 20713 of 2022, however the same has no bearing on the present case as the scheduled offence exists till date. In the present case the scheduled offences took place pursuant to which multiple FIRs. were registered, some of which were settled by the accused. However fresh complaints were filed against the same accused, and on basis of that fresh FIR No. 55/2023 was filed registered qua the same project and same company, which is still in existence.

15. It was further contended on behalf of the department that the argument of the petitioner that FIR No. 55/2023 cannot be added to the existing ECIR, and the department should record an additional ECIR is against the scheme of the PMLA. In this regard it was submitted that the entire PMLA does not mention or define the term 'ECIR' and the same is an internal departmental document for administrative purposes.

16. It was submitted that the scheme of the PMLA is that when a scheduled offence exists, and if there exist prima facie proceeds of crime, the department is statutorily empowered to commence an "inquiry". Further, for inquiry under the Act, neither an FIR nor an ECIR is required.

17. Therefore, it was submitted that the judgements relied upon on behalf of the petitioner are not applicable to the present case, for the reason that in all the cited judgements, either pursuant to a settlement there was a complete quashing of the predicate offence and nothing survived, or there was a clean acquittal in the predicate offence, unlike the peculiar facts of the present case.

Rejoinder on behalf of the Petitioner/Rajinder Singh Chadha

18. In rejoinder, learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that the argument raised by the learned Special Counsel for the department that investigation of the department can be quashed only if a person is finally absolved is not tenable in view of the precedents cited hereinabove, i.e., Nik Nish Retail (supra), which has been confirmed by the Hon'ble Supreme Court vide order dated 14.07.2023 and in Manturi Shashi Kumar (supra) where it has been held in Para 28 that 'it is immaterial for the purpose of PMLA whether acquittal is on merit or composition'.

19. The second limb of arguments raised by the learned Special Counsel for respondent to the effect "that possibility of commission of scheduled offence cannot be ruled out" is also not tenable in view of the observation made by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Vijay Madanlal (supra) at Para 467 (v)(d) that "the authorities under the 2002 act cannot prosecute any person on a notional basis or on the assumption that a scheduled offence has been committed". It was submitted that the stand taken by the department is contrary to the aforesaid proposition since it is seeking to justify continuing an investigation on a notional basis that there exists a possibility of commission of a scheduled offence.

20. It was submitted that the third limb of the department's argument that the investigation in the impugned ECIR must be kept active on the basis of FIR No. 55/2023 dated 10.07.2023 registered at PS EOW is misplaced as a predicate offence is a jurisdictional fact which permits the department to carry out an investigation under the PMLA. Reliance was placed on a judgment dated 14.12.2022 passed by the Hon'ble High Court of Karnataka, Principal Bench at Bengaluru in WP No. 20713/2022 titled 'Mantri Developers Pvt. Ltd. v. Directorate of Enforcement', wherein it was held that because the predicate offence is a jurisdictional fact, if the investigation in the predicate offence is stayed, the investigation in the PMLA offence should also be stayed.

21. Reliance was further placed on Arun Kumar (supra) wherein it has been held that 'a jurisdictional fact is a fact which must exist before a court, tribunal or an authority assumes jurisdiction over a particular matter.'. Similarly, reliance was placed on Badrinath v. Government of Tamil Nadu, MANU/SC/0624/2000 : (2000) 8 SCC 395 and on State of Kerala v. Puthenkavu

N.S.S. Karayogam, MANU/SC/2110/2001 : (2001) 10 SCC 191 wherein the Hon'ble Supreme Court has observed that once the basis of a proceeding is gone, all consequential acts, actions, orders would fall to the ground automatically and this principle is applicable to judicial, quasi-judicial and administrative proceedings equally.

22. Lastly, it was submitted that the final limb of argument of the department that it can commence an investigation is an existing ECIR without the existence of predicate offence is fallacious. Reliance was placed on a judgment of a coordinate bench of this Court in Prakash Industries (supra) wherein it has been held that 'what needs to be emphasized is that while the adoption of peremptory measures by the ED may be justified and are so sanctioned by the Act, it would be incorrect to construe those powers as the ED alone being entitled to adjudge or declare that a predicate offence stands committed'.

23. It was further submitted that the power of the department to investigate/enquire without registration of scheduled offence is an emergency power which can only be exercised at a preliminary stage and that too subject to the respondent ensuring the registration of a scheduled offence.

Analysis and Findings

24. Heard learned counsel for the parties and perused the record.

25. The proposition of law, as advanced by learned Senior Counsel for the petitioner is not in dispute. In absence of a predicate offence, there can be no offence of money laundering and as per the judgment of the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Vijay Madanlal Choudhary & Ors. v. Union of India & Ors., MANU/SC/0924/2022 : 2022:INSC:757, such prosecution will not be maintainable. In absence of a 'scheduled offence', criminal proceedings initiated under the PMLA cannot survive. In the present case, the two FIRs, i.e., FIR No. 16/2018 dated 24.01.2018 and FIR No. 49/2021 dated 12.03.2021 registered at PS EOW, have been compounded and quashed, respectively, on the ground of compromise. It is pertinent to note that the State has not challenged the aforesaid orders on the ground that the matter was not settled with all the complainants. It is also noted that the remaining complainants, if any, have also not challenged the aforesaid orders on the ground that settlement was not arrived at with them.

26. For the purpose of adjudication of the present petition, the following dates are relevant:

i. 24.01.2018- FIR No. 16/2018 under Sections 420/406/120B of the IPC is registered at PS EOW against the accused persons, including the petitioner.

ii. 27.06.2019- Impugned ECIR/09/HIU/2019 is registered by the departments on the basis of the scheduled offences in FIR No. 16/2018.

iii. 19.11.2019- The learned Trial Court allows an application under Section 320 of the CrPC moved on behalf of the accused persons for compounding of FIR No. 16/2018 registered at PS EOW based on an amicable settlement arrived at between the parties and acquitted the accused persons.

iv. 12.03.2021- FIR No. 49/2021 under Sections 420/406/120B of the IPC is registered at PS EOW against the accused persons, including the petitioner. Consequently, the said FIR is taken on record in the existing ECIR/09/HIU/2019.

v. 18.11.2022- The department carries out search and seizure in terms of Section 17(1) of the PMLA.

vi. 19.11.2022, 22.11.2022 and 09.12.2022- The department carries out follow- up searches and seizures.

ix. 15.12.2022- An application under Section 17(4) of the PMLA is moved by the department for retention of records and digital devices seized on 18.11.2022, 19.11.2022, 22.11.2022 and 09.12.2022.

x. 21.12.2022- A show- cause notice under Section 8(1) of the PMLA was issued by the Adjudicating Authority to the petitioner, for filing of a written response to the department's application under Section 17(4) of the PMLA.

vii. 22.12.2022- FIR No. 49/2021 is quashed by a coordinate bench of this Court.

viii. 10.07.2023- FIR No. 55/2023 is registered at PS EOW under Sections 409/420/120B of the IPC and taken on record in impugned ECIR/09/HIU/2019.

27. Thus, in the aforesaid peculiar facts of the case, the issue before this Court is whether the department is justified in continuing with the investigation/proceedings in the impugned ECIR/09/HIU/2019, which was initially registered on the basis of scheduled offences in FIR No. 16/2018 and thereafter continued on the basis of FIR No. 49/2021, by taking on record scheduled offences in FIR No. 55/2023 registered at PS EOW on 10.07.2023 based on similar allegations as in the earlier FIRs, especially in view of the fact that scheduled offences in the first two FIRs. stood compounded/quashed?

28. It is pertinent to note that the aforesaid FIRs. were registered at the instance of investors who were aggrieved by the non- completion of a project by the company. A perusal of the aforesaid list of dates reflect that although the impugned ECIR was registered initially on the basis of scheduled offences registered vide FIR No. 16/2018 dated 24.01.2018 which stood compounded vide order dated 19.11.2019, the second FIR No. 49/2021 which was registered on 12.03.2021 was taken on record in the impugned ECIR by the department and the proceedings continued under the same. The department chose not to register a separate ECIR, but took on record the scheduled offences registered vide FIR No. 49/2021 in the same ECIR, inter- alia, on the ground that it related to the same transaction and involved the same accused persons. The fact that FIR No. 49/2021 was taken on record by the department in the present ECIR despite an order of compounding and acquittal was not challenged by the petitioner.

29. Hon'ble Supreme Court in Vijay Madanlal Choudhary (supra) has held that there is no corresponding provision to Section 154 of the CrPC in the PMLA requiring registration of an offence of money laundering. While observing the same, the Hon'ble Supreme Court held as under:

"457....there is no need to formally register an ECIR, unlike registration of an FIR by the jurisdictional police in respect of cognizable offence under the ordinary law. There is force in the stand taken by the ED that ECIR is an internal document created by the department before initiating penal action or prosecution against the person involved with process or activity connected with proceeds of crime. Thus, ECIR is not a statutory document, nor there is any provision in 2002 Act requiring Authority referred to in Section 48 to record ECIR or to furnish copy thereof to the accused unlike Section 154 of the 1973 Code "

30. In the aforesaid context, it is pertinent to refer to a reference decided by a learned division bench of this Court in State v. Khimji Bhai Jadeja, MANU/DE/2157/2019 : 2019:DHC:3239- DB , wherein, inter- alia, the following question of law was considered:

"a. Whether in a case of inducement, allurement and cheating of large number of investors/depositors in pursuance to a criminal conspiracy, each deposit by an investor constitutes a separate and individual transaction or all such transactions can be amalgamated and clubbed into a single FIR by showing one investor as complainant and others as witnesses?"

Answering the aforesaid question, the learned Division Bench of this Court held as under:

"61. The practice followed by the Delhi Police/State of registering a single FIR on the basis of the complaint of one of the complainants/victims, and of treating the other complainants/victims merely as witnesses, even otherwise, raises very serious issues with regard to deprivation of rights of such complainants/victims to pursue their complaints, and to ensure that the culprits are brought to justice. Firstly, the other complainants/victims cannot be merely cited as witnesses in respect of the complaint of one of the victims on the basis of which the FIR is registered. They may not be witnesses in respect of the transaction forming the basis of the registration of the case. In a situation where hundreds of persons claim that they have been cheated by the same accused at different locations and at different points of time by adoption of the same modus operandi, it is unthinkable and unlikely that all the complainants/victims- who are cited as witnesses, would be witnesses to the single transaction in relation to which FIR is registered. They may, at the most, be witnesses only to establish the conspiracy- which is an allied offence, but unless there is a charge framed in respect of the specific act of cheating- to which each of the Complainant/victim is subjected, it may not be permissible to cite such other complainants/victims as witnesses to prove the act of cheating relating to them. Mere citing a large number of complainants/victims only as witnesses would also deny them the right to file their protest petitions in the eventuality of a closure report being field by the police in respect of the complaint on the basis of which FIR was registered, or the Magistrate not accepting the final report/charge- sheet and discharging the accused. (See Bhagwat Singh v. Commissioner of Police, MANU/SC/0063/1985 : (1985) 2 SCC 537 : AIR 1985 SC 1285). Their right to oppose, or to seek cancellation of bail that the accused may seek in relation to their particular transaction would also be denied. If the accused enters into a settlement/compromise with the complainant on whose complaint the FIR stands registered, and he chooses not to diligently participate in the trial, the complaints of other victims may go unaddressed. Thus, the practice adopted by the State/Delhi Police, and which is sought to be defended by them, is clearly erroneous and not sustainable in law.

63. Thus, our answer to Question (a) is that in a case of inducement, allurement and cheating of large number of investors/depositors in pursuance to a criminal conspiracy, each deposit by an investor constitutes a separate and individual transaction. All such transactions cannot be amalgamated and clubbed into a single FIR by showing one investor as the complainant, and others as witnesses. In respect of each such transaction, it is imperative for the State to register a separate FIR if the complainant discloses commission of a cognizable offence.?"

The aforesaid judgment was challenged before the Hon'ble Supreme Court in SLP (Crl.) No. 9198/2019 titled 'The State (NCT) of Delhi v. Khimji Bhai Jadeja MANU/SCOR/51993/2019' and was stayed vide order dated 25.11.2019.

31. The significance of the aforesaid judgment is with respect to the scheme of the CrPC, and in particular, Section 154 of the said Code. As pointed out hereinabove, Hon'ble Supreme Court, in Vijay Madanlal Choudhary (supra) has clearly carved out a distinction between an ECIR under the PMLA and an FIR under the provisions of the CrPC. The Hon'ble Supreme Court accepted the statement of the department that the ECIR is an 'internal document' created by them. The ECIR in the present case was registered on a prima facie satisfaction for commission of offence under Section 3 of the PMLA. The department, by way of the present ECIR, was not investigating the case of home- buyers/investors in respect of the allegations in the first two FIRs. but with respect to alleged 'proceeds of crime' generated from commission of the alleged scheduled offences in the FIR registered at the instance of the home- buyers/investors. There is no dispute with regard to the fact that the third FIR, i.e., FIR No. 55/2023 also relates to the same project which was the subject matter of the two previous FIRs. In the present factual context, even if separate FIRs. are registered at the instance of separate home- buyers/investors, each of the said FIRs. cannot be considered as a separate cause of action for registration of different ECIRs.

32. The stand taken by the department in the written submissions filed by learned Special Counsel is that 'The argument of the petitioner that FIR 55/2023 cannot be added to the existing ECIR, and ED should record an additional ECIR is against the scheme of the PMLA Act. In this regard it is submitted that the entire PMLA Act does not even mention the term 'ECIR', that ECIR is an internal departmental document for administrative purposes'. In view thereof, as stated hereinbefore, the third FIR in the present case relates to the commission of a 'scheduled offence' in respect of the complainant therein, but for the purposes of an investigation under the PMLA, it would be the part of the same ECIR which related to investigation pertaining to 'proceeds of crime' under the PMLA in the previous FIRs. Needless to state, the Hon'ble Supreme Court, in Vijay Madanlal Choudhary (supra), has categorically held that the offence under PMLA is an independent offence. Since the ECIR has not been equated with an FIR and has been held to be an internal document, there cannot possibly be a restriction to bringing on record on any subsequent 'scheduled offence' registered by way of an FIR alleged to have been committed in respect of the same transaction which was the subject matter of such ECIR.

33. The proposition of law laid down in judicial precedents relied upon by learned Senior Counsel for the petitioner is not in dispute. In the said cases, the 'scheduled offence' was quashed or compounded in all respects. In the present case, 'scheduled offences' by way of the third FIR still exist. It is pertinent to note that even in an FIR being investigated by the local police involving multiple complainants, compounding with some of them will not be a ground for quashing of the said FIR. However, partial compounding/quashing is permissible.

34. In so far as the submission of learned Senior Counsel with respect to the issue of the 'jurisdictional fact' is concerned, it is noted that during the pendency of the impugned ECIR, the registration of a third FIR with respect to 'scheduled offences' gives jurisdiction to the department to investigate by taking the said third FIR on record. The authorities cited by learned Senior Counsel for the petitioner are distinguishable with respect to the facts of the present cases. For the sake of repetition, it is noted that after the third FIR was taken on record, the impugned ECIR cannot be stated to be without a predicate offence. The issue before the Court, as explained hereinabove, is whether the investigation in the impugned ECIR can continue on the basis of registration of the third FIR. It is clarified that since this Court is of the opinion that the ECIR, as explained in Vijay Madanlal Choudhary (supra) cannot be equated with an FIR and as per the stand of the department, the same is only for administrative purposes, there is no impediment in taking the third FIR on record which related to the same project forming the basis for registration of the first two FIRs, resulting in initiation of the impugned ECIR. This, however, cannot ipso facto have any bearing on the legitimacy of the investigation or proceeding in the ECIR with respect to the 'scheduled offences' in the first two FIRs. Reliance is placed on Vijay Madanlal Choudhary (supra), wherein it has been held as under:

"467. In light of the above analysis, we now proceed to summarise our conclusion on seminal points in issue in the following terms:-

*** *** ***

(d) The offence under Section 3 of the 2002 Act is dependent on illegal gain of property as a result of criminal activity relating to a scheduled offence. It is concerning the process or activity connected with such property, which constitutes the offence of money- laundering. The Authorities under the 2002 Act cannot prosecute any person on notional basis or on the assumption that a scheduled offence has been committed, unless it is so registered with the jurisdictional police and/or pending enquiry/trial including by way of criminal complaint before the competent forum. If the person is finally discharged/acquitted of the scheduled offence or the criminal case against him is quashed by the Court of competent jurisdiction, there can be no offence of money- laundering against him or any one claiming such property being the property linked to stated scheduled offence through him."

In light of the aforesaid judgment of the Hon'ble Supreme Court and in view of the judgments relied upon by learned Senior Counsel for the petitioner, the principle that can be culled out is that a 'scheduled offence', after an FIR has been quashed, cannot exist and therefore, if there is no 'scheduled offence', there can be no offence of money laundering with respect to the same. Thus, in the considered opinion of this Court, in the present case, there can be no prosecution under the PMLA with respect to the 'scheduled offences' in the first two FIRs, i.e., FIR No. 16/2018 and FIR No. 49/2021 registered at PS EOW.

35. More recently, a coordinate bench of this Court, in Nayati Healthcare and Research NCR Pvt. Ltd. and Ors. through its Authorised Representative Sh. Satish Kumar Narula & Ors. v. Union of India Ministry of Home Affairs through its Standing Counsel & Anr., MANU/DEOR/123327/2023 : 2023:DHC:7542, while relying upon Vijay Madanlal Choudhary (supra) and Nik Nish Retail (supra)observed and held as under:

"13. The Telangana High Court in Manturi Shashi Kumar (supra) has also quashed a complaint under Section 3 of the PMLA on the grounds of the accused being discharged/acquitted of the scheduled offence. The relevant observations of the said judgment are set out below:-

"28. Thus, according to Supreme Court, the offence under Section 3 of PMLA is dependent on illegal gain of property as a result of criminal activity relating to a scheduled offence. If the person is finally discharged or acquitted of the scheduled offence or the criminal case against him is quashed by the court, there can be no offence of money laundering against him or anyone claiming such property being the property linked to the scheduled offence. It is immaterial for the purpose of PMLA whether acquittal is on merit or on composition."

14. In view of the aforesaid legal position, the present complaint filed by the ED and the proceedings arising therefrom cannot survive. Considering that the FIR has been quashed by this court and that it has not been challenged till date, there can be no offence of money laundering under section 3 of the PMLA against the petitioners.

15. Accordingly, the present petition is allowed and the ECIR bearing No. ECIR/51/DLZO-II/2021 and proceedings arising therefrom are quashed. Consequently, the Look Out Circular issued against the petitioners in respect of the aforesaid ECIR also stands quashed.

36. In view of the aforesaid discussion and in the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, ECIR/09/HIU/2019 dated 27.06.2019 cannot be quashed in view of registration of FIR No. 55/2023 dated 10.07.2023 under Sections 409/420/120B of the IPC at PS EOW as this would constitute 'scheduled offences' legitimizing the existence of the said ECIR. However, since 'scheduled offences' in FIR No. 16/2018 dated 24.01.2018 under Sections 420/406/120B of the IPC and FIR No. 49/2021 dated 12.03.2021 under Sections 420/406/120B of the IPC, registered at PS EOW have been compounded and quashed, respectively, the department cannot initiate or continue any proceeding including investigation in connection with the said two FIRs. Accordingly, the proceedings undertaken with respect to the said two FIRs. qua the present petitioner in the present ECIR stand quashed.

37. The petition is accordingly partly allowed and disposed of.

38. Pending applications, if any, also stand disposed of.

39. Judgment be uploaded on the website of this Court, forthwith.

MANU/SC/0196/2004

Back to Section 482 of Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Criminal Appeal No. 357 of 1997

Decided On: 09.03.2004

Jagdish Ram Vs. State of Rajasthan and Ors.

Hon'ble Judges/Coram:

Y.K. Sabharwal and Dr. Arijit Pasayat, JJ.

JUDGMENT

Y.K. Sabharwal, J.

1. This matter pertains to an incident that took place in the year 1985. The criminal proceedings before the Magistrate have not crossed the stage of taking cognizance. One of the contentions urged in this appeal for quashing the criminal proceedings is long delay of 19 years.

2. The appellant is a District Ayurvedic Officer. The complainant is a Class IV employee in Ayurvedic Aushdhalaya, Fatehgarh. According to the complainant on 7th November, 1985 when the appellant visited the said place several patients were present. The appellant asked the complainant to bring water. When the complainant brought water, he was insulted by the appellant who said to him "I do not want to spoil my religion by drinking water from your hands. How have you dared to give water" and started abusing him. The complainant has filed a complaint in the court of Chief Judicial Magistrate alleging commission of offence punishable under Section 7 of the Protection of Civil Rights Act, 1955 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act').

3. The practice of untouch ability in any form has been forbidden by Article 17 of the Constitution of India which inter alia provides that "untouch ability" is abolished, the enforcement of any disability arising out of "untouch ability" shall be an offence punishable in accordance with law. To comply the mandate of the Constitution, the Act has been enacted inter alia with a view to prescribe punishment for the preaching and practice of "untouch ability", for the enforcement of disability arising therefrom and for matters connected therewith.

4. The aforesaid complaint was sent to the police under Section 156(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Code') for investigation. A case was registered and investigation conducted. The investigating officer examined the complainant and other witnesses and also obtained copies of certain documents. After completing the investigation the police submitted a final reported under Section 173 of the Code stating that the complaint was false and in fact on 7th November the complainant was found absent from duty and, therefore, he was asked to take casual leave for half day and it is on that account a false complaint was lodged by him.

5. After the submission of the above noticed final report by the police the complainant submitted another complaint. The statements of the witnesses who were said to be present at the time of the occurrence were examined by the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate who by order dated 26th June, 1986 found a prima facie case, took cognizance and issued process against the appellant. The order issuing the process was challenged by the appellant in a revision petition filed before the Sessions Judge which was dismissed. On a petition filed under Section 482 of the Code, the orders of the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate taking cognizance as also of the Sessions Judge were set aside by the High Court by judgment dated 26th May, 1988 and the case was remanded to the trial court to proceed according to law keeping in view the observations made in the judgment. The High Court inter alia observed that the trial court should consider the entire material available on record before deciding whether the process should be issued against the accused or not

6. After remand, on consideration of the material on record, the Magistrate again reached the same conclusion and took cognizance by order dated 22nd January, 1990. This led to filing of another petition under Section 482 of the Code by the appellant. Again the High Court by judgment dated 27th May, 1994 set aside the order dated 22nd January, 1990 inter alia noticing that the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate while disagreeing with the final report should have given some reasons for not accepting it and this time also the case was remanded to the Magistrate directing him to consider the material available on record and thereafter pass appropriate order deciding whether the process should be issued or not on the basis of the available material.

7. In this appeal, we are not going into the correctness of the judgments of the High Court dated 26th May, 1988 or 27th May, 1994. These judgments have attained finality. Suffice it to say that as directed by the High Court, the Magistrate again considered the matter for the third time. Again, by order dated 16th December, 1994 the Magistrate reached the same conclusion as had been reached on two earlier occasions and took cognizance of offence under Section 7 of the Act against the appellant and directed that the appellant be summoned.

8. There was a third petition under Section 482 of the Code before the High Court challenging the order taking cognizance. This time the appellant was not lucky. The High Court by the impugned judgment dated 4th May, 1996 rejected the contention that the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate passed the order without considering the entire material on record. The High Court held that no case for exercising inherent powers under Section 482 of the Code was made out.

9. Challenging the judgment of the High Court, the appellant is before this Court on grant of leave. This Court had stayed the proceedings before the Magistrate pending decision of the appeal.

10. The contention urged is that though the trial court was directed to consider the entire material on record including the final report before deciding whether the process should be issued against the appellant or not, yet entire material was not considered. From perusal of order passed by the Magistrate it cannot be said that the entire material was not taken into consideration. The order passed by the Magistrate taking cognizance is a well written order. The order not only refers to the statements recorded by the police during investigation which led to the filing of final report by the police and the statements of witnesses recorded by the Magistrate under Sections 200 and 202 of the Code but also sets out with clarity the principles required to be kept in mind at the stage of taking cognizance and reaching a prima facie view. At this stage, the Magistrate had only to decide whether sufficient ground exists or not for further proceeding in the matter. It is well settled that notwithstanding the opinion of the police, a magistrate is empowered to take cognizance if the material on record makes out a case for the said purpose. The investigation is the exclusive domain of the police. The taking of cognizance of the offence is an area exclusively within the domain of a Magistrate. At this stage, the Magistrate has to be satisfied whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding and not whether there is sufficient ground for conviction. Whether the evidence is adequate for supporting the conviction, can be determined only at the trial and not at the stage of inquiry. At the stage of issuing the process to the accused, the Magistrate is not required to record reasons.

(Dy. Chief Controller of Imports & Exports v. Roshanlal Agarwal and Ors. MANU/SC/0182/2003 : 2003CriLJ1698).

11. The High Court has rightly concluded that the order passed by the Magistrate does not call for any interference in exercise of inherent powers under Section 482 of the Code.

12. Mr. Jain urged an additional ground for quashing the order. Learned counsel contends that the appellant is facing the criminal proceedings for the last 19 years and, therefore, the proceedings deserve to be quashed on the ground of delay. Support is sought from S.G. Nain v. Union of India MANU/SC/0114/1992 : 1992CriLJ560 , Bihar State Electricity Board and Anr. v. Nand Kishore Tamakhuwala MANU/SC/0286/1986 : 1986CriLJ1246 and Ramanand Chaudhary v. State of Bihar and Ors. [2002] 1 SCC 153. In these cases, the criminal proceedings were quashed having regard to peculiar facts involved therein including this Court also entertaining some doubts about the case being made against the accused. In none of these decisions any binding principle has been laid down that the criminal proceedings deserve to be quashed merely on account of delay without anything more and without going into the reasons for delay.

13. It is to be borne in mind that the appellant has been successively approaching the High Court every time when an order taking cognizance was passed by the Magistrate, It is because of the appellant that the criminal proceedings before the Magistrate did not cross the stage of taking cognizance. As earlier noticed, since earlier judgments of the High Court have attained finality, we are not going into correctness of these judgments. When third time the appellant was not successful before the High Court, he has approached this Court and at his instance the proceedings before the trial court were stayed. In fact, from 1986 till date the criminal case has not proceeded further because of the appellant. It would be an abuse of the process of the court if the appellant is now allowed to urge delay as a ground for quashing the criminal proceedings. In considering the question whether criminal proceedings deserve to be quashed on the ground of delay, the first question to be looked into is the reason for delay as also the seriousness of the offence. Regarding the reasons for delay, the appellant has to thank himself. He is responsible for delay. Regarding the seriousness of the offence, we may notice that the ill of untouch ability was abolished under the Constitution and the Act under which the complaint in question has been filed was enacted nearly half a century ago. The plea that the complaint was filed as a result of vindictiveness of the complainant is not relevant at this stage. The appellant would have adequate opportunity to raise all pleas available to him in law before the trial court at an appropriate stage. No case has been made out to quash the criminal proceedings on the ground of delay.

14. Having regard to the enormous delay, we direct the trial court to expedite the trial and dispose of the case within a period of six months. For the reasons aforestated, the appeal is dismissed.

3. The genesis of the FIRs and complaints originates in the broadcasts on Republic TV on 16 April 2020 and R Bharat on 21 April 2020 in relation to an incident which took place in Gadchinchle village of Palghar district in Maharashtra. During the course of the incident which took place on 16 April 2020, three persons including two sadhus were brutally killed by a mob, allegedly in the presence of the police and forest guard personnel. The incident was widely reported in the print and electronic media. The petition states that a video recording of the incident is available in the public domain. In his news show titled "Poochta hai Bharat" on 21 April 2020 on R Bharat, the Petitioner claims to have raised issues in relation to the allegedly tardy investigation of the incident. The segment of the news broadcast is available for public viewing online at:

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=C2i4MMpKu9I

4. The viewpoint which the Petitioner claims to have put across during the course of the broadcast, is described in the following extract from the Writ Petition which has been instituted by the Petitioner before this Court Under Article 32 of the Indian Constitution:

A review of the above debate would show that its thrust was to question the tardy investigation, inconsistent versions of the authorities and the administration and the State Government's silence on the Palghar incident given that the unfortunate incident happened in Maharashtra which is presently Under Rule of an alliance government jointly formed by Shiv Sena, the Congress and the Nationalist Congress Party. The debate highlighted the manner in which the incident was being portrayed by the authorities, including the glaring fact that the incident occurred in the presence of numerous police officials which fact was initially suppressed.

5. The Petitioner claims that following the broadcast, "a well- coordinated, widespread, vindictive and malicious campaign" was launched against him by the Indian National Congress2 and its activists. The campaign, he alleges, was carried out online through news reports and tweets indicating that members of the INC had filed multiple complaints simultaneously against the Petitioner before various police stations seeking the registration of FIRs and an investigation into offences alleged to have been committed by him Under Sections 153, 153A, 153B, 295A, 298, 500, 504, 506 and 120B of the Indian Penal Code 18603. A campaign for the arrest of the Petitioner was allegedly launched on social media, using the hashtag:

#ArrestAntiIndiaArnab

6. The Petitioner submitted, in the course of his pleadings, that all the complaints and FIRs have incidentally been lodged in States where the governments which were formed owe allegiance to the INC and that he believes that the law enforcement machinery was being set in motion with an ulterior motive. To substantiate this, the Petitioner refers to an incident which allegedly took place on 23 April 2020, while he was returning by car from his studio at Worli, Mumbai accompanied by his spouse between 12:30 and 1:00 am. His car was confronted by two individuals on a motor- cycle. Confronted by the security personnel of the Petitioner, the two individuals on the motor- cycle are alleged to have disclosed their identity as members of the INC. An FIR was registered at the behest of the Petitioner at NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai in which the details of the alleged attack on him have been set out.

7. The Petitioner denies that he has propagated views of a communal nature in the course of the news broadcasts which gave rise to the institution of numerous complaints. Asserting his fundamental right to the freedom of speech and expression Under Article 19(1)(a) of the Constitution, the Petitioner has moved this Court Under Article 32 for the protection of those rights. The reliefs which have been sought are:

(i) Quashing all the complaints and FIRs lodged against the Petitioner in multiple States and Union Territories;

(ii) A writ direction that no cognisance should be taken of any complaint or FIR on the basis of the cause of action which forms the basis of the complaints and FIRs which have led to the present writ proceedings; and

(iii) A direction to the Union Government to provide adequate safety and security to the Petitioner and his family as well as to his colleagues at Republic TV and R Bharat.

8. While entertaining the Writ Petition on 24 April 2020, this Court heard submissions by Senior Counsel: on behalf of the Petitioner by Mr. Mukul Rohatgi and Mr. Siddhartha Bhatnagar; on behalf of the State of Maharashtra by Mr. Kapil Sibal; on behalf of the State of Chhattisgarh by Mr. Vivek Tankha; and on behalf of the State of Rajasthan by Dr Abhishek Manu Singhvi. Having heard the rival submissions, this Court noted in its interim order that the order which it intended to pass should strike a balance between the following governing principles:

(i) The need to ensure that the criminal process does not assume the character of a vexatious exercise by the institution of multifarious complaints founded on the same cause in multiple States;

(ii) The need for the law to protect journalistic freedom within the ambit of Article 19(1)(a) of the Constitution;

(iii) The requirement that recourse be taken to the remedies available to every citizen in accordance with the Code of Criminal Procedure 1973;

(iv) Ensuring that in order to enable the citizen to pursue legal remedies, a protection of personal liberty against coercive steps be granted for a limited duration in the meantime;

(v) The investigation of an FIR should be allowed to take place in accordance with law without this Court deploying its jurisdiction Under Article 32 to obstruct the due process of law; and

(vi) Assuaging the apprehension of the Petitioner of a threat to his safety and the safety of his business establishment.

9. Learned Senior Counsel appearing on behalf of the Petitioner apprised this Court, on instructions, that the Petitioner had no objection to the transfer of FIR 238 of 2020 which was lodged at Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai for the purpose of investigation. Mr. Kapil Sibal, learned Senior Counsel appearing on behalf of the State of Maharashtra similarly had no objection to this course of action. This is recorded specifically in the order passed by this Court on 24 April 2020 in the following terms:

9. The Court was apprised by Mr. Mukul Rohatgi, learned senior Counsel, on seeking instructions, that the Petitioner would have no objection if the FIR which has been lodged at Nagpur is transferred for the purpose of investigation to the N.M. Joshi Marg Police Station, Mumbai, where the Petitioner has lodged an FIR on 23 April 2020. The FIR by the Petitioner is in relation to an incident which took place at midnight, during the course of which, he and his spouse were obstructed by two persons and an alleged to have been subjected to an assault, while returning home from the studio.

10. Mr. Sibal has indicated that there should be no objection to the transfer of the FIR which has been lodged at Nagpur to Mumbai.

Consequently, this Court, by its interim order:

(i) Transferred FIR 238 of 2020 lodged at Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai with a clarification that the Petitioner shall cooperate in the investigation;

(ii) Stayed further proceedings arising out of the complaints and FIRs other than the one which had been instituted at Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City and stood transferred;

(iii) Allowed the investigation to proceed in FIR 238 of 2020 which was transferred from Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai;

(iv) Protected the Petitioner against coercive steps arising out of and in relation to the above FIR, in relation to the telecast dated 21 April 2020;

(v) Granted liberty to the Petitioner to move an application for anticipatory bail before the Bombay High Court Under Section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 19734 and to pursue such other remedies as are available in law. It was clarified that any such application shall be considered on its own merits by the competent court;

(vi) Stayed further proceedings in respect of any other FIR, or as the case may be, criminal complaints which have been filed or which may thereafter be filed with respect to the same incident; and

(vii) Directed the Commissioner of Police5, Mumbai to consider the request of the Petitioner for being provided with security at his residence and at the business establishment.

10. Following the interim order of this Court, several interim applications were filed in the course of the proceedings. The details of each of the IAs are necessary to facilitate our eventual analysis of the case:

IA No. 48585 of 2020: filed by the Petitioner

11. The Petitioner submits that:

(i) The Mumbai police is not conducting a fair and impartial investigation in relation to FIR 238 of 20206 which has been transferred from Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai for investigation;

(ii) The manner in which the investigation has been conducted by the Mumbai police leads to the "inescapable conclusion" that the authorities "harbor grave malice and mala fide intention" against the Petitioner;

(iii) The investigation is politically motivated and has been conducted with "a pre- determined and pre- meditated objective" to arm- twist, harass and humiliate the Petitioner and his family and to diminish his right to free speech and expression Under Article 19(1)(a) of the Constitution;

(iv) Since the Petitioner's news channel is questioning the complicity of the Maharashtra police in the Palghar incident and the police fall under the administration and control of the State government (ruled by an alliance government of the INC), there is a clear conflict of interest in the investigation by the Mumbai police; and

(v) It is necessary that the investigation is stayed to prevent any miscarriage of justice. These apprehensions are sought to be established on the basis of the following averments:

(a) On 25 April 2020, the Petitioner was served with a notice Under Section 41(a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure 19737 summoning him to the police station on 26 April 2020;

(b) On 26 April 2020, the Petitioner expressed his willingness to appear before the Investigating Officer8 through Video Conferencing9;

(c) Rejecting the above request, the IO called upon the Petitioner by a summons dated 26 April 2020 to be physically present at NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai on 27 April 2020;

(d) On 27 April 2020, the Petitioner was questioned without a break for nearly twelve hours during which he was not allowed to keep possession of his mobile phone or to wear his personal fitness band;

(e) During the course of the investigation, the Petitioner was informed by the Mumbai police that the complainant Dr Nitin Kashinath Raut, who is a Cabinet Minister in the Maharashtra government and a working President of the INC, had filed a supplementary statement indicating when he had been provided with a clip of the broadcast;

(f) A substantial bulk of the questions during the investigation was in relation to a small segment comprising fifteen seconds out of a total broadcast of fifty- two minutes;

(g) During the course of the investigation, the Petitioner was asked by the IO whether he had defamed or maligned the President of the INC in the course of the broadcast on 21 April 2020;

(h) FIR 164 of 2020 is not based on a complaint by the President of the INC and hence, it is inconceivable as to how the IO could have questioned the Petitioner on an alleged act of defamation which he, in any event, denies;

(i) Tweets made on the social media by members of the INC during and around the time of the investigation indicate that the Mumbai police was relying on real time information during the course of the interrogation by "their political masters";

(j) Questions posed to the Petitioner during the course of the investigation have no nexus to FIR 164 of 2020. The questions which were posed included the following:

(i) Corporate structure of the Petitioner's company, ARG Outlier Media Asianet Private Limited ("ARG") including its board of directors. ARG owns and operates Republic TV and R. Bharat.

(ii) Process of obtaining broadcasting licenses by the news channels of the Petitioner.

(iii) Location of archives of Petitioner's news channels; whether the Hindi channel of the Petitioner, R. Bharat is based outside or inside Maharashtra.

(iv) Does the Petitioner's news channel send recordings of news reports to the Central Government (this question was asked multiple times.)

(v) Process of selecting panelists for debates aired on Petitioner's news channels. Are the panelists paid remuneration by the Petitioner's news channel for this purpose.

(vi) Does the Petitioner own the house in which he is currently staying or pays rent.

(k) The complainant, Dr Nitin Kashinath Raut was interviewed on 29 April 2020 by a reporter of Republic TV in regard to the contradictions between the statement in the FIR and his subsequent supplementary statement as to the place where he had watched the video clip. In response to the query posed to him in the interview, the complainant stated:

There is no need to be confused over this point, whatever I have mentioned in my statement, it is true. After watching at home, I also got a clip, which was sent to me from my party office. When I say that I watched it earlier, it's the truth, and later I watched a clip, which is mentioned in the complaint that I filed in the police station. If you have read Article 19(1) of the Constitution, where freedom of expression and thought is mentioned but nowhere does it allow crossing the limits or making extreme comments. There are restrictions mentioned and Mr. Arnab has violated them. I have a lot of respect of Mr. Arnab, he's a senior journalist, and he has handled the media well till now but what happened lately. I don't know. During his speech, he forgot that he's a citizen of this country and a citizen has to abide by the Constitution. I have always supported freedom of expression for journalists but the question is, these comments involve a clear attempt to incite a riot. Arnab was questioned for along during because he's facing a charge of criminal conspiracy, involving Indian Penal Code 153, Indian Penal Code 153(a) and others. You raise the point of him being questioned for 12 to 12.5 hours, I want to ask you that this country's former home minister and former finance minister P. Chidambaram was made to sit for so many hours, why did that happen? You people never raise questions on the reason behind that interrogation. I have heard that clip and Arnab tried to stoke communal sentiments in that speech. No one gave him that right, not even the Constitution.

(l) On 30 April 2020, the IO issued two notices to the Chief Financial Officer10 of Republic TV Under Sections 91 and 160 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requesting for documents. Pursuant to the notice, the CFO appeared before the Mumbai police with publicly available documents and copies of broadcast licenses. He was interrogated for about 6.5 hours inter alia in regard to the following aspects:

(i) Role of the Petitioner's wife, Mrs. Samyabrata Ray Goswami in the news channels and the corporate structure of company.

(ii) Details of the investors in the Petitioner's company, ARG Outlier Media News Private Limited and whether the Petitioner ran the news channel as a proxy owner for an on behalf of someone else.

(iii) Surprisingly, Mr. Sundaram was also asked whether there was "someone" instructing the Petitioner to pose questions concerning Mrs. Sonia Gandhi and concerning her alleged defamation.

(iv) As with the Petitioner, Mr. Sundaram was also asked if the Petitioner's news channel has any arrangement of sending video recording of news reports to the Central Government.

(v) Details on how the Petitioner's channel selects panelists for news shows and whether any remuneration is paid to them.

(m) It has been allegedly learned that an asymptomatic officer attached to the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai where the CFO was being interrogated had tested positive for Covid-19 a day earlier with the result that all officers at the police station were now being tested. The CFO had been subjected to grave and unnecessary danger; and

(n) While on the one hand, the police had been investigating FIR 164 of 2020, the FIR lodged by the Petitioner following the attack on him11 is not being investigated satisfactorily. Two persons alleged to have been involved in the attack on the Petitioner were enlarged on bail on 27 April 2020 by the Magistrate's Court at Bhoiwada, Mumbai.

12. On the basis of the above averments, the Petitioner seeks the following reliefs by his IA:

(i) A stay of the investigation and all incidental steps by the Mumbai police in connection with FIR 238 of 2020 transferred to the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai (renumbered as FIR 164 of 2020) in pursuance of the order of this Court dated 24 April 2020;

(ii) In the alternative, for a transfer of the investigation to the Central Bureau of Investigation12 with a direction to the CBI to submit reports to this Court from time to time;

(iii) A transfer of the investigation of FIR 148 of 2020 lodged by the Petitioner to the CBI or to an independent investigating agency;

(iv) Permission to the Petitioner to join in the investigation by video conferencing; and

(v) Providing security to the Petitioner and his family at his residence and for the business establishment.

IA 48588 of 202013: filed by the Government of Maharashtra

13. The IA is supported by an affidavit of Abhinash Kumar, Deputy Commissioner of Police, Zone- 3, Mumbai, who is supervising the investigation into Cr. No. 164 of 2020 at the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai. The Mumbai police has sought to highlight the conduct of the Petitioner in obstructing the due course of investigation. The reliefs which have been sought in the IA are as follows:

a. Issue appropriate directions as this Hon'ble Court may deem fit so as to insulate the investigation agency from any pressure, threat or coercion from the Petitioner and to enable the Investigating Agency to carry out its lawful obligations in a fair and transparent manner;

b. Restrain the Petitioner from abusing the interim protection granted to the Petitioner vide the order dated 24th April 2020;

14. The basis of the IA appears from the following averments:

(i) On 27 April 2020, the Petitioner attended the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai at 9 am accompanied by an entourage of his reporters and camerapersons and gave several speeches which were allegedly telecast live;

(ii) After the Petitioner had been interrogated for 4 hours, a tweet was posted on Republic Bharat stating in Hindi that upon coming out of the police station, the Petitioner had claimed that 'truth will prevail';

(iii) Two other tweets posted on Republic Bharat in regard to the conduct of the investigation have sought to create an impression that:

(a) The police is biased;

(b) The FIR lodged by the Petitioner is not being investigated; and

(c) The Petitioner has been unnecessarily questioned over several hours;

(iv) On 28 April 2020, the Petitioner hosted a debate on Republic Bharat in the course of a programme titled "Puchta hai Bharat" where he made allegations against the Commissioner of Police14, Mumbai of his complicity in a scam involving India Bulls. The Petitioner threatened to reveal these details;

(v) The statements against the CP are intended to hinder the course of the investigation and the allegations have surfaced only after the investigation against the Petitioner commenced on 26 April 2020;

(vi) The allegation of the Petitioner that the police were not investigating his FIR is belied by the circumstance that an FIR was registered Under Sections 341 and 504 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code;

(vii) The two Accused in the FIR filed by the Petitioner were arrested and eventually released on bail on 27 April 2020 by the Metropolitan Magistrate at the 13th Court at Dadar Mumbai; and (viii) The Deputy Commissioner of Police15, Mumbai has submitted that Palghar lies beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the Mumbai police and hence the accusations made by the Petitioner are false. It has been submitted that the Petitioner has misused his freedom Under Article 19(1)(a) of the Constitution by casting unfounded allegations on the CP and hence, directions of this Court are necessary to insulate the investigating agency so as to the enable it carry on its function in a smooth and transparent manner.

IA 48532 of 2020: filed by the Petitioner

15. The IA is by the Petitioner to produce on the record an affidavit of Shri S. Sundaram, the CFO of Republic Media Network. The affidavit of the CFO attempts to support the case of the Petitioner that:

(ii) The CFO has been interrogated on the structure of the holding company, shareholding pattern and investors: matters which are extraneous to the investigation of the FIR;

(iii) Questions have been posed during the course of the interrogation about the equity cash transactions, the names of the remaining stakeholders, investment by the key investor and the role of the Petitioner's spouse; and

(iv) The CFO was interrogated on the editorial process of the channel, the editorial teams involved and the process whereby a programme is put together. The IO also inquired about how participants are chosen.

Writ Petition (Crl.) Diary No. 11189 of 2020

18. The Writ Petition has been instituted Under Article 32 of the Constitution following the interim order dated 24 April 2020 passed by this Court in the earlier petition. The subsequent petition has been occasioned by the registration of an FIR17 against the Petitioner on 2 May 2020 at the Pydhonie Police Station, Mumbai. The FIR which has been lodged by the third Respondent, claiming to be the Secretary of an organization called Raza Educational Welfare Society. The FIR states that on 29 April 2020, the Petitioner made certain statements in the course of a programme which was broadcast on R Bharat insinuating (with reference to a place of worship) that the "people belonging to the Muslim religion are responsible for the spread of Covid- 19". According to the FIR:

The statements made by Arnab Goswami on 29/04/2020 on republic Bharat TV Channel in connection with the incident of the public gathered in the area of Bandra railway station on 14/04/2020 clearly show that despite Jama Masjid, Bandra being a holy place of worship and despite having no connection with the incident of the gathering of migrant workers at Bandra railway station, Arnab Goswami gave it a communal colour and blamed the Muslim community of being responsible for the spread of Corona. By making statements such as the aforesaid repeatedly on the show, he has severely hurt the sentiments of the Muslim community. He has tried to create communal tensions, incite riots and deliberately hurt the sentiments of the Muslim community by insulting their place of worship. By directly connecting the gathering of migrant workers at the Bandra railway station on 14/04/2020 with Jama Masjid, Arnab Goswami disrupted communal harmony. His statements further implied that the Muslim community is violent and does not respect the law. Arnab Goswami as the owner and anchor of the said TV show has made these statements with an intention of create a strain/communal disharmony between the Hindu and Muslim communities.

19. Having adverted to the telecast which took place on 29 April 2020, the FIR makes a reference to 14 April 2020 as the date on which the Petitioner as the "anchor and owner" of R Bharat has attempted to connect a place of religious worship with the gathering of migrant workers at Bandra railway station. The FIR has been registered Under Sections 153, 153A, 295A, 500, 505(2), 511, 505(1)(c) and 120B of the Indian Penal Code. Challenging the FIR, the Petitioner seeks to invoke the jurisdiction of this Court for an order quashing the FIR and for a writ directing that no cognisance should be taken on any complaint or FIR on the same cause of action hereafter.

20. Leading the arguments on behalf of the Petitioner, Mr. Harish Salve, learned Senior Counsel submitted that the petition which has been instituted before this Court Under Article 32 raises "wider issues" implicating the freedom of speech and expression of a journalist to air views which fall within the protective ambit of Article 19(1)(a). Mr. Salve submitted that the Petitioner is justified in invoking this jurisdiction since it is necessary for this Court to lay down safeguards which protect the democratic interest in fearless and independent journalism. The submissions which Mr. Salve urges can be formulated for analysis thus:

(i) Both the FIRs which have been lodged against the Petitioner are intended to stifle the free expression of views by an independent journalist which is protected within the ambit of Article 19(1)(a) of the Constitution;

(ii) The investigation by the Mumbai police is mala fide;

(iii) The fact that the lodging of the FIR and the commencement of investigation is mala fide is evident from the following circumstances:

a. All the FIRs, or as the case may be, the complaints are replicas with little variation of language or content and with respect to the same cause of action;

b. The complainants have all chosen states where the government has been formed of or with the support of the INC;

c. The enquiries which were made by the police during the course of interrogating the Petitioner and the CFO bear no nexus with the contents of the FIR and it is evident that the Petitioner is being targeted for expressing views critical of the President of the INC;

d. The involvement of the INC in targeting the Petitioner is evident from the fact that during the course of the investigation, tweets by activists and members of the party appeared on social media bearing on the course of the interrogation;

e. The complainant of the FIR, who is a Cabinet Minister in the State Government of Maharashtra, has gone on record in the course of an interview to target the Petitioner for airing his views;

f. The investigation by the Mumbai police is directed against an alleged act of defamation committed against the President of the INC. The police are trying to implicate the Petitioner in the offence of defamation despite the settled position of law that absent a complaint by the person who is allegedly defamed, no FIR can be lodged; and

g. The Petitioner has, in the course of his programmes on R Bharat and Republic TV, implicated the Maharashtra police and the State Government for their failure to investigate the Palghar incident. He has leveled serious allegations against the CP, Mumbai. Hence, there is an evident conflict of interest in the investigation being conducted by the Mumbai police and the Petitioner apprehends that a fair and impartial process will be denied to him were the investigation to continue; and

(iv) In the circumstances which have been set out above, it is appropriate to protect the constitutional rights of the Petitioner by directing that the investigation be stayed or that, in the alternative, it be handed over to the CBI.

21. Mr. Tushar Mehta, learned Solicitor General has urged that this is a peculiar situation where the Mumbai police, as the investigating agency, has sought the protection of this Court in order to conduct a fair and impartial investigation, complaining that the Petitioner is impeding the process. The Solicitor General submitted that in this backdrop, it would be appropriate if the Court were to decide that an impartial agency conduct the investigation. Mr. Mehta urged that should this Court be inclined to hand over the investigation to the CBI, the agency will conduct the investigation. The Solicitor General urged that:

(i) The conduct of the state police in the present case is 'disturbing';

(ii) The police, as an investigating agency, has sought insulation from the Accused; and

(iii) Investigation by an agency which allays any apprehension of victimisation would be the appropriate course of action.

22. Mr. Kapil Sibal, learned Senior Counsel appearing on behalf of the State of Maharashtra has, while opposing the petitions, urged that:

(i) Both the petitions are an attempt to seek directions from this Court to monitor the course of the investigation which is impermissible in view of the settled legal position;

(ii) The pleadings in the petitions as well as the submissions urged during the hearing indicate that the Petitioner is objecting to the questions which were posed to him during the course of the investigation;

(iii) The Petitioner, as the person against whom the first FIR has been lodged, has absolutely no locus to question the line of investigation or nature of the interrogation;

(iv) The rights of the Petitioner Under Article 19(1)(a) are subject to the limitation stipulated in Article 19(2). The FIRs and the video clips from the programmes posted by the Petitioner (clips of which were played by Mr. Kapil Sibal, learned Senior Counsel over video conferencing during the course of the hearing) indicate that the offences in question are made out;

(v) Contrary to the allegations which have been leveled by the Petitioner against the Maharashtra police, it is the Petitioner who has made a conscious effort to stifle the investigation by an unrestrained use of social media, which is evident from the tweets emanating from the channel during and after the interrogation;

(vi) The Petitioner can have absolutely no grievance with the course of the investigation when he was summoned for interrogation only on one day between the date of the registration of the FIR and the present time;

(vii) Mumbai police has no territorial jurisdiction or connection with the investigation which has been conducted into the Palghar incident;

(viii) The conduct of the Petitioner would indicate that he has made baseless allegations against the CP, Mumbai for the first time after his interrogation took place on 27 April 2020. The attempt by the Petitioner is clearly to use his position as a media journalist to create an environment of ill-feeling towards the investigating agency;

(ix) As regards the second FIR, no investigation has commenced and hence recourse to the jurisdiction of this Court Under Article 32 is premature;

(x) Despite the liberty which was granted to the Petitioner by this Court in its order dated 24 April 2020, the Petitioner has neither moved the Bombay High Court for quashing the FIRs Under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or for the grant of anticipatory bail; and

(xi) In the above circumstances, the petitions filed by the Petitioner Under Article 32 of the Constitution ought not to be entertained.

23. Dr Abhishek Manu Singhvi, learned Senior Counsel appearing on behalf of the investigating agency of the Maharashtra police adduced seven precepts as the foundation of his submission that the petitions ought not to be entertained. Dr Singhvi urged:

(i) The facts of the present case clearly demonstrate that in the garb of an arc of protection, the Accused is attempting to browbeat the police;

(ii) The petitions Under Article 32 constitute an attempt of 'leapfrogging' the normal procedure available under the Code of Criminal Procedure;

(iii) Any interference in the course of an investigation is impermissible;

(iv) What the Petitioner seeks to attempt by the process which has been adopted is to convert the jurisdiction Under Article 32 into one Under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure;

(v) Though the Petitioner is entitled to the fundamental rights Under Article 19(1)(a), their exercise is subject to the limitations stipulated in Article 19(2). The content of the FIRs and the video clips would demonstrate that the restrictions Under Article 19(2) are attracted;

(vi) Applying the sub judice doctrine, the Petitioner is not entitled to seek the intervention of this Court in the course of an investigation; and

(vii) The transfer of an ongoing investigation to the CBI has been held to be an extraordinary power which must be sparingly exercised in exceptional circumstances. The Accused, it is well-settled, can have no locus in regard to the choice of the investigating agency.

24. Elaborating these submissions, Dr Singhvi submitted that:

(i) Despite the protection that was granted by this Court for three weeks, the Petitioner has not moved the competent court for anticipatory bail or for quashing the FIRs;

(ii) No complainant was impleaded when the first petition was filed;

(iii) In respect of the FIR at the Pydhonie Police Station, no investigation has even commenced;

(iv) The transfer of the investigation of the first FIR from Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai was at the request of and with the consent of the Petitioner; and

(v) The conduct of the Petitioner indicates that it is he who is stifling the investigation.

25. Dr Singhvi submitted that an interrogation does not infringe personal liberty. On the basis of the above submissions, it has been urged that no case has been made out for the transfer of the investigation to the CBI. He urged that the second Writ Petition must, in any event, be dismissed.

26. At this stage, it is necessary to note that the attention of Mr. Kapil Sibal and Dr Singhvi, learned Senior Counsel was specifically drawn to the fact that the FIRs which were filed in various states by persons professing allegiance to the INC appear, prima facie, to be reproductions of the same language and content. Responding to this, Mr. Sibal fairly stated that in the exercise of the jurisdiction Under Article 32, this Court may well quash all the other FIRs and allow the investigation into the FIR which has been transferred to the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai to proceed in accordance with law. Mr. Sibal has also urged that there cannot be any dispute in regard to the legal position that a complaint in regard to the offence of defamation can only be at the behest of the person who is aggrieved. Consequently, the FIR which has been presently under investigation at the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai would not cover any offence Under Section 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

27. Mr. K.V. Vishwanathan, learned Senior Counsel appearing on behalf of the complainant in the second FIR submitted that:

(i) The FIR which was lodged on 2 May 2020 pertains to a broadcast which took place on 29 April 2020;

(ii) The maintainability of the Writ Petitions Under Article 32 is questioned; and

(iii) The statements made by the Petitioner in the course of the programmes which were broadcast clearly implicate offences Under Sections 153A, 295A and cognate provisions of the Indian Penal Code.

Analysis

28. The fundamental basis on which the jurisdiction of this Court has been invoked Under Article 32 is the filing of multiple FIRs and complaints in various States arising from the same cause of action. The cause of action was founded on a programme which was telecast on R Bharat on 21 April 2020. FIRs and criminal complaints were lodged against the Petitioner in the States of Maharashtra, Rajasthan, Madhya Pradesh, Telangana and Jharkhand besides the Union Territories of Jammu and Kashmir. The law concerning multiple criminal proceedings on the same cause of action has been analyzed in a judgment of this Court in TT Antony v. State of Kerala MANU/SC/0365/2001 : (2001) 6 SCC 181 ("TT Antony"). Speaking for a two judge Bench, Justice Syed Shah Mohammed Quadri interpreted the provisions of Section 154 and cognate provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure including Section 173 and observed:

20. ...under the scheme of the provisions of Sections 154, 155, 156, 157, 162, 169, 170 and 173 Code of Criminal Procedure, only the earliest or the first information in regard to the commission of a cognizable offence satisfies the requirements of Section 154 Code of Criminal Procedure. Thus, there can be no second FIR and consequently there can be no fresh investigation on receipt of every subsequent information in respect of the same cognizable offence or the same occurrence or incident giving rise to one or more cognizable offences. On receipt of information about a cognizable offence or an incident giving rise to a cognizable offence or offences and on entering the FIR in the station house diary, the officer in charge of a police station has to investigate not merely the cognizable offence reported in the FIR but also other connected offences found to have been committed in the course of the same transaction or the same occurrence and file one or more reports as provided in Section 173 Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Court held that "there can be no second FIR" where the information concerns the same cognisable offence alleged in the first FIR or the same occurrence or incident which gives rise to one or more cognisable offences. This is due to the fact that the investigation covers within its ambit not just the alleged cognisable offence, but also any other connected offences that may be found to have been committed. This Court held that once an FIR postulated by the provisions of Section 154 has been recorded, any information received after the commencement of investigation cannot form the basis of a second FIR as doing so would fail to comport with the scheme of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The court observed:

18. ...All other information made orally or in writing after the commencement of the investigation into the cognizable offence disclosed from the facts mentioned in the first information report and entered in the station house diary by the police officer or such other cognizable offences as may come to his notice during the investigation, will be statements falling Under Section 162 Code of Criminal Procedure. No such information/statement can properly be treated as an FIR and entered in the station house diary again, as it would in effect be a second FIR and the same cannot be in conformity with the scheme of Code of Criminal Procedure.

This Court adverted to the need to strike a just balance between the fundamental rights of citizens Under Articles 19 and 21 and the expansive power of the police to investigate a cognisable offence. Adverting to precedent, this Court held:

27. ...the sweeping power of investigation does not warrant subjecting a citizen each time to fresh investigation by the police in respect of the same incident, giving rise to one or more cognizable offences, consequent upon filing of successive FIRs whether before or after filing the final report Under Section 173(2) Code of Criminal Procedure. It would clearly be beyond the purview of Sections 154 and 156 Code of Criminal Procedure, nay, a case of abuse of the statutory power of investigation in a given case. In our view a case of fresh investigation based on the second or successive FIRs, not being a counter- case, filed in connection with the same or connected cognizable offence alleged to have been committed in the course of the same transaction and in respect of which pursuant to the first FIR either investigation is under way or final report Under Section 173(2) has been forwarded to the Magistrate, may be a fit case for exercise of power Under Section 482 Code of Criminal Procedure or Under Articles 226/227 of the Constitution.

(Emphasis supplied)

The Court held that barring situations in which a counter- case is filed, a fresh investigation or a second FIR on the basis of the same or connected cognisable offence would constitute an "abuse of the statutory power of investigation" and may be a fit case for the exercise of power either Under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or Articles 226/227 of the Constitution.

29. The decision in TT Antony came up for consideration before a three judge Bench in Upkar Singh v. Ved Prakash MANU/SC/0733/2004 : (2004) 13 SCC 292 ("Upkar Singh"). Justice N

Santosh Hegde, speaking for this Court adverted to the earlier decisions of this Court in Ram Lal Narang v. State (Delhi Administration) MANU/SC/0216/1979 : (1979) 2 SCC 322 ("Ram Lal Narang"), Kari Choudhary v. Mst. Sita Devi MANU/SC/0781/2001 : (2002) 1 SCC 714 ("Kari Choudhary") and State of Bihar v. JAC Saldanha MANU/SC/0253/1979 : (1980) 1 SCC 554 ("Saldanha"). The Court noted that in Kari Choudhary, this Court held that:

11. ...Of course the legal position is that there cannot be two FIRs against the same Accused in respect of the same case. But when there are rival versions in respect of the same episode, they would normally take the shape of two different FIRs and investigation can be carried on under both of them by the same investigating agency.

30. In Saldanha, this Court had held that the power conferred upon the Magistrate Under Section 156(3) does not affect the power of the investigating officer to further investigate the case even after submission of the report Under Section 173(8). In Upkar Singh, this Court noted that the decision in Ram Lal Narang is "in the same line" as the judgments in Kari Choudhary and Saldanha and held that the decision in TT Antony does not preclude the filing of a second complaint in regard to the same incident as a counter complaint nor is this course of action prohibited by the Code of Criminal Procedure. In that context, this Court held:

23. Be that as it may, if the law laid down by this Court in T.T. Antony case [MANU/SC/0365/2001 : (2001) 6 SCC 181 : 2001 SCC (Cri.) 1048] is to be accepted as holding that a second complaint in regard to the same incident filed as a counter- complaint is prohibited under the Code then, in our opinion, such conclusion would lead to serious consequences. This will be clear from the hypothetical example given hereinbelow i.e. if in regard to a crime committed by the real Accused he takes the first opportunity to lodge a false complaint and the same is registered by the jurisdictional police then the aggrieved victim of such crime will be precluded from lodging a complaint giving his version of the incident in question, consequently he will be deprived of his legitimate right to bring the real Accused to book. This cannot be the purport of the Code.

These principles were reiterated by a two judge Bench of this Court in Babubhai v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0643/2010 : (2010) 12 SCC 254. Dr. Justice B.S. Chauhan observed:

21. In such a case the court has to examine the facts and circumstances giving rise to both the FIRs and the test of sameness is to be applied to find out whether both the FIRs relate to the same incident in respect of the same occurrence or are in regard to the incidents which are two or more parts of the same transaction. If the answer is in the affirmative, the second FIR is liable to be quashed. However, in case the contrary is proved, where the version in the second FIR is different and they are in respect of the two different incidents/crimes, the second FIR is permissible. In case in respect of the same incident the Accused in the first FIR comes forward with a different version or counterclaim, investigation on both the FIRs has to be conducted.

This Court held that the relevant enquiry is whether two or more FIRs relate to the same incident or relate to incidents which form part of the same transactions. If the Court were to conclude in the affirmative, the subsequent FIRs are liable to be quashed. However, where the subsequent FIR relates to different incidents or crimes or is in the form of a counter- claim, investigation may proceed.

31. In the present case, all the FIRs or complaints which have been lodged in diverse jurisdictions arise out of one and the same incident- the broadcast by the Petitioner on 21 April 2020 on R Bharat. The broadcast is the foundation of the allegation that offences have been committed under the provisions of Sections 153, 153A, 153B, 295A, 298, 500, 504 and 506 of the Indian Penal Code. During the course of the hearing, this Court has had the occasion, with the assistance of the learned Senior Counsel, to peruse the several complaints that were filed in relation to the incident dated 21 April 2020. They are worded in identical terms and leave no manner of doubt that an identity of cause of action underlies the allegations leveled against the Petitioner on the basis of the programme which was broadcast on 21 April 2020. Moreover, the language, content and sequencing of paragraphs and their numbering is identical. It was in this backdrop that Mr. Kapil Sibal, learned Senior Counsel fairly submitted (in our view correctly) that this Court may proceed to quash all the other FIRs and complaints lodged in diverse jurisdictions in the States, leaving open, however, the investigation in respect of the FIR 238 of 2020 dated 22 April 2020 transferred from the Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai.

32. Article 32 of the Constitution constitutes a recognition of the constitutional duty entrusted to this Court to protect the fundamental rights of citizens. The exercise of journalistic freedom lies at the core of speech and expression protected by Article 19(1)(a). The Petitioner is a media journalist. The airing of views on television shows which he hosts is in the exercise of his fundamental right to speech and expression Under Article 19(1)(a). India's freedoms will rest safe as long as journalists can speak truth to power without being chilled by a threat of reprisal. The exercise of that fundamental right is not absolute and is answerable to the legal regime enacted with reference to the provisions of Article 19(2). But to allow a journalist to be subjected to multiple complaints and to the pursuit of remedies traversing multiple states and jurisdictions when faced with successive FIRs and complaints bearing the same foundation has a stifling effect on the exercise of that freedom. This will effectively destroy the freedom of the citizen to know of the affairs of governance in the nation and the right of the journalist to ensure an informed society. Our decisions hold that the right of a journalist Under Article 19(1)(a) is no higher than the right of the citizen to speak and express. But we must as a society never forget that one cannot exist without the other. Free citizens cannot exist when the news media is chained to adhere to one position.

Yuval Noah Harari has put it succinctly in his recent book titled "21 Lessons for the 21st Century": "Questions you cannot answer are usually far better for you than answers you cannot question."

33. A litany of our decisions- to refer to them individually would be a parade of the familiar- has firmly established that any reasonable restriction on fundamental rights must comport with the proportionality standard, of which one component is that the measure adopted must be the least restrictive measure to effectively achieve the legitimate state aim. Subjecting an individual to numerous proceedings arising in different jurisdictions on the basis of the same cause of action cannot be accepted as the least restrictive and effective method of achieving the legitimate state aim in prosecuting crime. The manner in which the Petitioner has been subjected to numerous FIRs in several States, besides the Union Territories of Jammu and Kashmir on the basis of identical allegations arising out of the same television show would leave no manner of doubt that the intervention of this Court is necessary to protect the rights of the Petitioner as a citizen and as a journalist to fair treatment (guaranteed by Article 14) and the liberty to conduct an independent portrayal of views. In such a situation to require the Petitioner to approach the respective High Courts having jurisdiction for quashing would result into a multiplicity of proceedings and unnecessary harassment to the Petitioner, who is a journalist.

34. The issue concerning the registration of numerous FIRs and complaints covering different states is however, as we will explain, distinct from the investigation which arises from FIR 164 of 2020 at NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai. The Petitioner, in the exercise of his right Under Article 19(1)(a), is not immune from an investigation into the FIR which has been transferred from Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai. This balance has to be drawn between the exercise of a fundamental right Under Article 19(1)(a) and the investigation for an offence under the Code of Criminal Procedure. All other FIRs in respect of the same incident constitute a clear abuse of process and must be quashed.

35. The Petitioner has sought, for reasons outlined earlier, the transfer of the investigation to CBI. Before we elucidate the law on the subject, we must emphasize at the outset that the transfer of FIR 238 of 2020 from the Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai was with the consent of the Petitioner and on his request. The reason why the investigation of the FIR was transferred to the NM Joshi Police Station in Mumbai was because that was the police station at which an earlier FIR had been lodged by the Petitioner in respect of the incident when he and his spouse were allegedly obstructed by two political activists on their way home at midnight on 23 April 2020. Having accepted the transfer of the investigation from Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai, the Petitioner now seeks to question that very investigation by the Mumbai police.

36. The transfer of an investigation to the CBI is not a matter of routine. The precedents of this Court emphasise that this is an "extraordinary power" to be used "sparingly" and "in exceptional circumstances". Speaking for a Constitution Bench in State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, West Bengal MANU/SC/0121/2010 : (2010) 3 SCC 571 ("CPDR, West Bengal"), Justice DK Jain observed:

70. ...despite wide powers conferred by Articles 32 and 226 of the Constitution, while passing any order, the Courts must bear in mind certain self- imposed limitations on the exercise of these constitutional powers. The very plenitude of the power under the said articles requires great caution in its exercise. Insofar as the question of issuing a direction to CBI to conduct investigation in a case is concerned, although no inflexible guidelines can be laid down to decide whether or not such power should be exercised but time and again it has been reiterated that such an order is not to be passed as a matter of routine or merely because a party has levelled some allegations against the local police. This extraordinary power must be exercised sparingly, cautiously and in exceptional situations where it becomes necessary to provide credibility and instill confidence in investigations or where the incident may have national and international ramifications or where such an order may be necessary for doing complete justice and enforcing the fundamental rights. Otherwise CBI would be flooded with a large number of cases and with limited resources, may find it difficult to properly investigate even serious cases and in the process lose its credibility and purpose with unsatisfactory investigations.

(Emphasis supplied)

This principle has been reiterated in K.V. Rajendran v. Superintendent of Police, CBCID South Zone, Chennai MANU/SC/0842/2013 : (2013) 12 SCC 480. Dr. Justice B.S. Chauhan, speaking for a three judge Bench of this Court held:

13. ...This Court has time and again dealt with the issue under what circumstances the investigation can be transferred from the State investigating agency to any other independent investigating agency like CBI. It has been held that the power of transferring such investigation must be in rare and exceptional cases where the court finds it necessary in order to do justice between the parties and to instill confidence in the public mind, or where investigation by the State police lacks credibility and it is necessary for having "a fair, honest and complete investigation", and particularly, when it is imperative to retain public confidence in the impartial working of the State agencies.

Elaborating on this principle, this Court observed:

17. ...the Court could exercise its constitutional powers for transferring an investigation from the State investigating agency to any other independent investigating agency like CBI only in rare and exceptional cases. Such as where high officials of State authorities are involved, or the accusation itself is against the top officials of the investigating agency thereby allowing them to influence the investigation, and further that it is so necessary to do justice and to instill confidence in the investigation or where the investigation is prima facie found to be tainted/biased.

The Court reiterated that an investigation may be transferred to the CBI only in "rare and exceptional cases". One factor that courts may consider is that such transfer is "imperative" to retain "public confidence in the impartial working of the State agencies." This observation must be read with the observations by the Constitution Bench in CPDR, West Bengal that mere allegations against the police do not constitute a sufficient basis to transfer the investigation.

37. In Romila Thapar v. Union of India MANU/SC/1098/2018 : (2018) 10 SCC 753, Justice AM Khanwilkar speaking for a three judge Bench of this Court (one of us, Dr Justice DY Chandrachud, dissenting) noted the dictum in a line of precedents laying down the principle that the Accused "does not have a say in the matter of appointment of investigating agency". In reiterating this principle, this Court relied upon its earlier decisions in Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat MANU/SC/0371/2011 : (2011) 5 SCC 79, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India MANU/SC/1156/2015 : (2016) 1 SCC 1, E Sivakumar v. Union of India MANU/SC/0591/2018 : (2018) 7 SCC 365 and Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala MANU/SC/1150/2008 : (2008) 3 SCC 542. This Court observed:

30. ...the consistent view of this Court is that the Accused cannot ask for changing the investigating agency or to do investigation in a particular manner including for court- monitored investigation.

38. The principle of law that emerges from the precedents of this Court is that the power to transfer an investigation must be used "sparingly" and only "in exceptional circumstances". In assessing the plea urged by the Petitioner that the investigation must be transferred to the CBI, we are guided by the parameters laid down by this Court for the exercise of that extraordinary power. It is necessary to address the grounds on which the Petitioner seeks a transfer of the investigation. The grounds urged for transfer are:

(i) The length of the interrogation which took place on 27 April 2020;

(ii) The nature of the inquiries which were addressed to the Petitioner and the CFO and the questions addressed during interrogation;

(iii) The allegations leveled by the Petitioner against the failure of the State government to adequately probe the incident at Palghar involving an alleged lynching of two persons in the presence of police and forest department personnel;

(iv) Allegations which have been made by the Petitioner on 28 April 2020 in regard to CP, Mumbai; and

(v) Tweets on the social media by activists of the INC and the interview by the complainant to a representative of R Bharat.

39. As we have observed earlier, the Petitioner requested for and consented to the transfer of the investigation of the FIR from the Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City to the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai. He did so because an earlier FIR lodged by him at that police station was under investigation. The Petitioner now seeks to preempt an investigation by the Mumbai police. The basis on which the Petitioner seeks to achieve this is untenable. An Accused person does not have a choice in regard to the mode or manner in which the investigation should be carried out or in regard to the investigating agency. The line of interrogation either of the Petitioner or of the CFO cannot be controlled or dictated by the persons under investigation/interrogation. In P Chidambaram v. Directorate of Enforcement MANU/SC/1209/2019 : (2019) 9 SCC 24, Justice R Banumathi speaking for a two judge Bench of this Court held that:

66. ...there is a well- defined and demarcated function in the field of investigation and its subsequent adjudication. It is not the function of the court to monitor the investigation process so long as the investigation does not violate any provision of law. It must be left to the discretion of the investigating agency to decide the course of investigation. If the court is to interfere in each and every stage of the investigation and the interrogation of the Accused, it would affect the normal course of investigation. It must be left to the investigating agency to proceed in its own manner in interrogation of the Accused, nature of questions put to him and the manner of interrogation of the Accused.

This Court held that so long as the investigation does not violate any provision of law, the investigation agency is vested with the discretion in directing the course of investigation, which includes determining the nature of the questions and the manner of interrogation. In adopting this view, this Court relied upon its earlier decisions in State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma MANU/SC/0542/1992 : 1992 Supp. (1) SCC 222 and Dukhishyam Benupani, Asst. Director, Enforcement Directorate (FERA) v. Arun Kumar Bajoria MANU/SC/0872/1998 : (1998) 1 SCC 52 in which it was held that the investigating agency is entitled to decide "the venue, the timings and the questions and the manner of putting such questions" during the course of the investigation.

40. In Director, Central Bureau of Investigation v. Niyamavedi represented by its Member K Nandini, Advocate MANU/SC/2247/1995 : (1995) 3 SCC 601, Justice Sujata V. Manohar, speaking for a three judge Bench of this Court held that the High Court should have:

4. ...refrained from making any comments on the manner in which investigation was being conducted by the CBI, looking to the fact that the investigation was far from complete.

This Court observed that:

4. ...Any observations which may amount to interference in the investigation, should not be made. Ordinarily the Court should refrain from interfering at a premature stage of the investigation as that may derail the investigation and demoralise the investigation. Of late, the tendency to interfere in the investigation is on the increase and courts should be wary of its possible consequences.

This Court adopted the position that courts must refrain from passing comments on an ongoing investigation to extend to the investigating agencies the requisite liberty and protection in conducting a fair, transparent and just investigation.

41. The contention of the Petitioner that the length of the investigation or the nature of the questions addressed to him and the CFO during the interrogation must weigh in transferring the investigation cannot be accepted. The investigating agency is entitled to determine the nature of the questions and the period of questioning. The Petitioner was summoned for investigation on one day. Furthermore, the allegation of the Petitioner that there is a conflict of interest arising out of the criticism by him of the alleged failure of the State government to adequately probe the incident at Palghar is not valid. The investigation of the Palghar incident is beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the Mumbai police.

42. The Petitioner has then sought to rely upon the allegations which he has leveled against the CP, Mumbai. The Petitioner was interrogated on 27 April 2020. The allegations which he leveled against the CP, Mumbai were in the course of a television programme on 28 April 2020 ("Poochta hai Bharat") relayed on R Bharat at 1900 hrs. As we have noted earlier, this Court has, in CPDR, West Bengal held that no transfer of investigation can be ordered "merely because a party has levelled some allegations against the local police." Accordingly, we do not find that leveling such allegations would by and itself constitute a sufficient ground for the transfer of the investigation.

43. The interview given by the complainant to a representative of R Bharat does not furnish a valid basis in law for an inference that the investigation is tainted or as warranting a transfer of investigation to the CBI. The Government of Maharashtra has moved an application before this Court (affirmed by the DCP, Zone- 3) seeking appropriate directions to insulate the investigating agency "from any pressure, threat or coercion from the Petitioner" and to enable it to discharge its lawful duties in a fair and transparent manner. Based on the views tweeted by R Bharat on social media, it is the Maharashtra police which is now claiming a restraining order against the Petitioner. We are unable to accede to the submission of the Solicitor General that the contents of the IA filed by the State would make it necessary to transfer the investigation to the CBI. The investigating agency has placed on the record what it believes is an attempt by the Petitioner to discredit the investigation by taking recourse to the social media and by utilizing the news channels which he operates. Social media has become an overarching presence in society. To accept the tweets by the Petitioner and the interview by the complainant as a justification to displace a lawfully constituted investigation agency of its jurisdiction and duty to investigate would have far- reaching consequences for the federal structure. We are disinclined to do so.

44. In assessing the contention for the transfer of the investigation to the CBI, we have factored into the decision- making calculus the averments on the record and submissions urged on behalf of the Petitioner. We are unable to find any reason that warrants a transfer of the investigation to the CBI. In holding thus, we have applied the tests spelt out in the consistent line of precedent of this Court. They have not been fulfilled. An individual under investigation has a legitimate expectation of a fair process which accords with law. The displeasure of an Accused person about the manner in which the investigation proceeds or an unsubstantiated allegation (as in the present case) of a conflict of interest against the police conducting the investigation must not derail the legitimate course of law and warrant the invocation of the extraordinary power of this Court to transfer an investigation to the CBI. Courts assume the extraordinary jurisdiction to transfer an investigation in exceptional situations to ensure that the sanctity of the administration of criminal justice is preserved. While no inflexible guidelines are laid down, the notion that such a transfer is an "extraordinary power" to be used "sparingly" and "in exceptional circumstances" comports with the idea that routine transfers would belie not just public confidence in the normal course of law but also render meaningless the extraordinary situations that warrant the exercise of the power to transfer the investigation. Having balanced and considered the material on record as well as the averments of and submissions urged by the Petitioner, we find that no case of the nature which falls within the ambit of the tests enunciated in the precedents of this Court has been established for the transfer of the investigation.

45. A final aspect requires elaboration. Section 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure stipulates prosecution for defamation. Sub- section (1) of Section 199 stipulates that no court shall take cognisance of an offence punishable under Chapter XXI of the Penal Code, 1860 except upon a complaint made by some person aggrieved by the offence. However, where such a person is under the age of eighteen years, or suffers from a mental illness or from sickness or infirmity rendering the person unable to make a complaint, or is a woman who, according to the local customs and manners, ought not to be compelled to appear in public, some other person may, with the leave of the court, make a complaint on his or her behalf. Sub- section (2) states that when any offence is alleged against a person who is the President of India, Vice- President of India, Governor of a State, Administrator of a Union Territory or a Minister of the Union or of a State or of a Union Territory, or any other public servant employed in connection with the affairs of the Union or of a State in respect of their conduct in the discharge of public functions, a Court of

Session may take cognisance of such offence, without the case being committed to it, upon a complaint in writing made by the Public Prosecutor. Sub- section (3) states that every complaint referred to in Sub- section (2) shall set forth the facts which constitute the offence alleged, the nature of such offence and such other particulars as are reasonably sufficient to give notice to the Accused of the offence alleged to have been committed. Sub- section (4) mandates that no complaint Under Sub- section (2) shall be made by the Public Prosecutor except with the previous sanction of the State Government, in the case of a person who is or has been the Governor of that State or a Minister of that Government or any other public servant employed in connection with the affairs of the State and of the Central Government, in any other case. Sub- section (5) bars the Court of Sessions from taking cognisance of an offence Under Sub- section (2) unless the complaint is made within six months from the date on which the offence is alleged to have been committed. Sub- section (6) states that nothing in this Section shall affect the right of the person against whom the offence is alleged to have been committed, to make a complaint in respect of that offence before a Magistrate having jurisdiction or the power of such Magistrate to take cognisance of the offence upon such complaint.18

46. Interpreting this provision, a two judge Bench of this Court in Subramanian Swamy v. Union of India, Ministry of Law MANU/SC/0621/2016 : (2016) 7 SCC 221 ("Subramanian Swamy") held that neither can an FIR be filed nor can a direction be issued Under Section 156(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure and it is only a complaint which can be instituted by a person aggrieved. This Court held:

207. Another aspect required to be addressed pertains to issue of summons. Section 199 Code of Criminal Procedure envisages filing of a complaint in court. In case of criminal defamation neither can any FIR be filed nor can any direction be issued Under Section 156(3) Code of Criminal Procedure. The offence has its own gravity and hence, the responsibility of the Magistrate is more. In a way, it is immense at the time of issue of process. Issue of process, as has been held in Rajindra Nath Mahato v. T. Ganguly [Rajindra Nath Mahato v. T. Ganguly, MANU/SC/0167/1971 : (1972) 1 SCC 450 : 1972 SCC (Cri.) 206], is a matter of judicial determination and before issuing a process, the Magistrate has to examine the complainant. In Punjab National Bank v. Surendra Prasad Sinha [Punjab National Bank v. Surendra Prasad Sinha, MANU/SC/0345/1992 : 1993 Supp (1) SCC 499 : 1993 SCC (Cri.) 149] it has been held that judicial process should not be an instrument of oppression or needless harassment. The Court, though in a different context, has observed that there lies responsibility and duty on the Magistracy to find whether the Accused concerned should be legally responsible for the offence charged for. Only on satisfying that the law casts liability or creates offence against the juristic person or the persons impleaded, then only process would be issued. At that stage the court would be circumspect and judicious in exercising discretion and should take all the relevant facts and circumstances into consideration before issuing process lest it would be an instrument in the hands of the private complaint as vendetta to harass the persons needlessly. Vindication of majesty of justice and maintenance of law and order in the society are the prime objects of criminal justice but it would not be the means to wreak personal vengeance. In Pepsi Foods Ltd. v. Special Judicial Magistrate [Pepsi Foods Ltd. v. Special Judicial Magistrate, MANU/SC/1090/1998 : (1998) 5 SCC 749 : 1998 SCC (Cri.) 1400], a two- Judge Bench has held that summoning of an Accused in a criminal case is a serious matter and criminal law cannot be set into motion as a matter of course.

47. In view of the clear legal position, Mr. Kapil Sibal, learned Senior Counsel appearing on behalf of the State of Maharashtra has fairly stated that the FIR which is under investigation at the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai does not and cannot cover any alleged act of criminal defamation. We will clarify this in our final directions.

48. Before we conclude, it is necessary to advert to the interim order of this Court dated 24 April 2020. By the interim order, the Petitioner has been granted liberty to move the competent court in order to espouse the remedies available under the Code of Criminal Procedure. Hence, we clarify that this Court has not in the present judgment expressed any opinion on the FIR which is under investigation at the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai.

49. We hold that it would be inappropriate for the court to exercise its jurisdiction Under Article 32 of the Constitution for the purpose of quashing FIR 164 of 2020 under investigation at the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai. In adopting this view, we are guided by the fact that the checks and balances to ensure the protection of the Petitioner's liberty are governed by the Code of Criminal Procedure. Despite the liberty being granted to the Petitioner on 24 April 2020, it is an admitted position that the Petitioner did not pursue available remedies in the law, but sought instead to invoke the jurisdiction of this Court. Whether the allegations contained in the FIR do or do not make out any offence as alleged will not be decided in pursuance of the jurisdiction of this Court Under Article 32, to quash the FIR. The Petitioner must be relegated to the pursuit of the remedies available under the Code of Criminal Procedure, which we hereby do. The Petitioner has an equally efficacious remedy available before the High Court. We should not be construed as holding that a petition Under Article 32 is not maintainable. But when the High Court has the power Under Section 482, there is no reason to by- pass the procedure under the Code of Criminal Procedure, we see no exceptional grounds or reasons to entertain this petition Under Article 32. There is a clear distinction between the maintainability of a petition and whether it should be entertained. In a situation like this, and for the reasons stated hereinabove, this Court would not like to entertain the petition Under Article 32 for the relief of quashing the FIR being investigated at the NM Joshi Police Station in Mumbai which can be considered by the High Court. Therefore, we are of the opinion that the Petitioner must be relegated to avail of the remedies which are available under the Code of Criminal Procedure before the competent court including the High Court.

50. By the order of this Court dated 24 April 2020, the Petitioner was protected against coercive steps for a period of three weeks. The period which was due to expire on 14 May 2020 was extended, when judgment was reserved on 11 May 2020, pending the decision of this Court. We are inclined to extend that protection for a further period of three weeks, particularly having regard to the outbreak of Covid- 19, so as to leave adequate time to the Petitioner to pursue his remedies before the competent forum.

51. As we have noted earlier, multiple FIRs and complaints have been filed against the Petitioner in several states and in the Union Territories of Jammu and Kashmir. By the interim order of this Court dated 24 April 2020, further steps in regard to all the complaints and FIRs, save and except for the investigation of the FIR lodged at Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City were stayed. The FIR at Police Station Sadar, District Nagpur City has been transferred to NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai. We find merit in the submission of Mr. Kapil Sibal, learned Senior Counsel that fairness in the administration of criminal justice would warrant the exercise of the jurisdiction Under Article 32 to quash all other FIRs (save and except for the one under investigation in Mumbai). However, we do so only having regard to the principles which have been laid down by this Court in TT Antony. The filing of multiple FIRs arising out of the same telecast of the show hosted by the Petitioner is an abuse of the process and impermissible. We clarify that the quashing of those FIRs would not amount to the expression of any opinion by this Court on the merits of the FIR which is being investigated by the NM Joshi Marg Police Station in Mumbai.

52. We find no reason to entertain the subsequent Writ Petition19 which has been filed by the Petitioner in respect of the FIR lodged at Pydhonie Police Station (FIR 137 of 2020 dated 2 May 2020). The basis on which the jurisdiction of this Court was invoked in the first Writ Petition- the filing of multiple FIRs in various states- is absent in the subsequent Writ Petition (Crl.) Diary No. 11189 of 2020. The Petitioner would be at liberty to pursue his remedies under the law in respect of the FIR. Any recourse to such a remedy shall be considered on its own merits by the competent court.
